| Jas. Barrett, | Jas. Phelan, |
| Michael Sloan, | Jas. Phelan, |
| John O. Kelly, | Jas. Phelan, |
| Matthew Mc. Sorley, | Jas. Phelan, |
| John Carroll, | Jas. Phelan, |
| P. D. Wilkins, | Jas. Phelan, |
| John Mc. Carty, | Jas. Phelan, |
| John Kennedy, | Jas. Phelan, |
| P. J. Cassidy, | Jas. Phelan, |
| R. J. Walsh, | Jas. Phelan, |
| Jas. Mc. Mahony, | Jas. Phelan, |
| Jeremiah J. Geary, | Jas. Phelan, |
| John O. Brien, | Jas. Phelan, |
| M. F. Cummings, | Jas. Phelan, |
| John C. Barry, | Jas. Phelan, |

And over nine hundred others.

Reply.

MARYSVILLE, February 8, 1871.

To MESSRS. JOSEPH A. DONOHOE, PHILIP A. HEALY, FRANK MCTHOTEN, JOHN A. MCGLYNN, JAMES H. RYAN, and others:

GENTLEMEN:—I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your respectious, misceneous, $47 50 recently raised, and $5 50 collected by myself, in addition to the city of San Francisco, in aid of the Cathedral of the Diocese of Cloyne, Ireland. If I could presume to express private entirety to myself the compliment conveyed by the splendid communication, I should indeed feel overwhelmed, and I fear that my thankfulness would be seriously felt to expression. But I recognize therein a tribute of respect specially intended for my revered prelate, superior—the Right Rev. Dr. Keane—and in his name I sincerely thank you for it. And he assured, gentlemen, that I will not want in due acknowledgment of the kindness which has prompted you to proffer me such generous assistance in my humble endeavors.

In gratefully acknowledging the intended compliment, and in complying with your requisition, I shall do that I can possibly do to induce the Right Rev. Bishop. I shall, therefore, write, before a Friday evening, a lecture on the Irish Race in America, for the especial benefit of the Church of Mary, for the object above named.

I remain, gentlemen, faithfully yours,
WILLIAM FOLEY

Subscriptions Received.

| | |
|---|---|
| Bernard Daly, P. Dalley | $1 50 |
| Brooklyn, by D. Keefe, $7; by James McInerny, $5 | 12 00 |
| Michigan Bluff, Placer county | 5 00 |
| Michigan Bluff, Placer county | 5 00 |
| Jackson, Amador county, by Rev. P. Manni | 5 00 |
| Jackson, Amador county, by Rev. H. J. Crosby | 5 00 |
| Jackson, Amador county | 5 00 |
| Jackson, Amador county | 5 00 |
| Washington, Yuba county | 5 00 |
| Washington, Yuba county, Patrick Montgomery | 5 00 |
| Jamesonville, Yuba county, James Meagher | 5 00 |
| Timbuctoo, Yuba county | 5 00 |
| Timbuctoo, Yuba county, Mrs. E. H. Campbell | 5 00 |
| Timbuctoo, Yuba county | 5 00 |
| Timbuctoo, by Jas. Burke, $5; Jas. Burke, $5 | 10 00 |
| Timbuctoo, by Jas. Burke, $5; Jas. Burke, $5 | 10 00 |
| Marysville, by Rev. Father Shelton | 5 00 |
| Marysville, by Rev. Father Shelton | 5 00 |
| Marysville, by Rev. Father Shelton, each, $5; H. Hoffman, $5 | 10 00 |
| Marysville, by Rev. Father Shelton | 5 00 |
| Petaluma, by H. Hoffman | 5 00 |

Wholesale Market Report.

MONDAY & TUESDAY, SAN FRANCISCO, }
THURSDAY, February 23, 1871. }

FLOUR—There has been a limited export demand and only a moderate inquiry for local consumption. We quote standard brands of Oregon extra at $7 87½@7, and best brands as follows: Superfine at $7 50@8, and extra at $6 87½@7, to sixty $ 100 lbs.

WHEAT—The market during past week has been remarkably quiet, with a continued tendency. At the close we quote superfine grades at $2 42½@2 47½, and for choice shipping $2 37½@2 42½, and choice milling at $2 40@2 50 lbs.

BARLEY—The market rules quiet at our last quotations. Sales of bay feeding within the range of $1 37½@1 40 lbs.

OATS—Market steady and offerings light. Sale of fair to choice at $1 40@1 75 lbs.

HAY—There is a good demand for cargo lots at the following rates: Timothy $ 20 ordinary still and to choice wheat per ton.

POTATOES—We quote fair to choice Humboldt at $1 75@2, and other descriptions at $1 25@1 50 lbs.

STRAW—We quote cargo lots at $15 per ton.

BRAN—We quote cargo lots at $17 50@18.

BUTTER—We quote California at 35@37½ lbs.

CHEESE—We quote California at 19@20 lbs.

EGGS—We quote ordinary to choice at $1 50@2 per dozen.

ONIONS—We quote ordinary to choice at $1@2 per $ 100 lbs.

BEANS—The mill prices are $7 50 lbs.

MIDDLINGS—The following are the quotations: Feed $20, and Fine $22 $ ton.

RYE—Sales at $2 75@3 00 lbs.

BUCKWHEAT—Nominal at $4 25@4 50 lbs.

SEEDS—We quote Flax at 4c $ lb, and Canary Seed, per Montreal in the market.

HOPS—We quote California at 34@37c $ lb.

WOOL—We quote Fall Clip at 17@18 per lb for fine, 19@20 for choice, and 21@22 for extra choice.

HONEY—Los Angeles, 8 gall cans, $12@18, and Pathero, 5 lb cans, at $1 $ dozen.

BEESWAX—We quote at 27@30 per lb.

TALLOW—Quotable at 7@7½ $ lb.

HIDES—Very few green hides coming to arrive, and are purchased for the local mills at full rates.

DOMESTIC PRODUCE.

BUTTER—California firkin—medium to good, 25@30c; choice, 32½@35c; roll—medium to good, 30@32½c; choice, 35@37½c; Eastern firkin, 30@32½c; roll, 35@37½c; Oregon, 30@32½c; Vermont, 30@32½c; Western, 30@32½.

EGGS—California, 30c $ dos.

CURED MEATS.

HAMS—California, 11 @ 12½c $ lb; Oregon, 10½ @ 11½c.

BACON—California, 11 @ 13½c $ lb; Oregon, 10½ @ 11½c.

LARD—California, 10 @ 11½c $ lb; second grade, 9½ @ 10c; Eastern, 11½ @ 12½c.

LIVE STOCK.

BEEF—First quality, 8@9 10c $ lb; second quality, 7@8c; third quality, 6@7c.

MUTTON—Wethers, grass-fed, 10@11 12c; on feed, grain-fed, 8@9c.

DRY GOODS AND GOODS.

PORK—Hogs, large, at $7 87 50; young Chickens, $6 87; Roosters, $6 @ 6 50; Ducks, $6 @ 6 50; Geese, $6 @ 6 50; Turkeys, $6 @ 6 50; Pigeons, $1 @ 1 50 $ pair.

VEGETABLES—Alfalfa, dressed, 20c.

Quail, $1 50 @ 2 dozen.

Hares, $1 50 @ 2 dozen.

RETAIL PRICES OF PROVISIONS AND GAME.

Hens, large, at 87½@$1 each.

Chickens—large, at 75@87½ each.

Chickens—small, at 50@62½ each.

Rabbits—At $1 dozen.

Quail—At $1 @ 1 25 dozen.

Pigeons—At 50@62½ per dozen.

Geese—large, at $1 75@2 each.

Turkeys—large, at $2 50@3 each.

Ducks—$1 75@2 each.

Hares—$1 50@2 each.

HOTELS.

O'FARRELL HOUSE,

(FORMERLY BROOKLYN)

217 Broadway Street ——San Francisco.

THIS HOUSE, FORMERLY KNOWN AS the Brooklyn House, will continue to keep the same stand.

BOARD AND LODGING per week.....$5 00
BOARD WITHOUT LODGING.....4 00
SINGLE MEALS.....50
LODGING.....25 Tickets for, per night.....2 00

There is a fire-proof safe in the office for money and other valuables, which will be at the risk of the proprietor.

Parties sending for their friends in the States, or who expect any will please notify MICHAEL FARRELL, and he will attend to them on their arrival, and forward them to their friends with due care and attention.

The strictest attention will be paid to the comfort of the patrons of the house.

MICHAEL FARRELL, Proprietor.

SECOND STREET HOUSE,

(Late Branch Hotel, Sutter st.,)

Nos. 227 & 229 Second Street, Between Howard & Folsom.

BOARD (per week).....$4 00
BOARD AND LODGING.....5 00
WITH SINGLE ROOMS.....$1 00 and 5 00
SINGLE MEALS.....50
FIVE TICKETS FOR MEALS.....1 00

Good Accommodations for Families.

ap29 M. O'NEIL, Proprietor.

UNDERTAKERS.

JAMES KELLY,

Late of St. Mary's Hospital, successor to J. S. Sullivan,

Undertaker,

NO. 811 SANSOM STREET,

Nearly opposite Fourth.....San Francisco

Everything kept constantly on hand. From the country will be promptly attended to. Moderate charges. my3

MASSEY & YUNG,

Undertakers.

NAUTICAL FURNISHING UNDERTAKERS, Barclays, Postal Cards always on hand, and Agents for Pink's Metallic Burial Cases.

Everything kept constantly on hand. Orders from the country will receive prompt attention, at moderate charges.

Office—841 Sacramento street, between Kearny and Dupont.

TO MY FRIENDS AND THE PUBLIC.

HAVING DETERMINED TO RETIRE from the Retail Jewelry trade, and devote my time to the Wholesale trade, I offer my entire stock of Watches, Clocks and Jewelry, Silver Ware, Gold Pens, Spectacles, Opera Glasses, Fancy Goods, Gold Rings, Bracelets, Gold Chains, Solid and Plated Ware, as well as Clocks of all kinds, at and under the cost of the same, to CLOSE OUT. If not sooner disposed of. All persons who wish to secure BARGAINS will not have a chance which may not occur again for years. This is a BONA FIDE sale. All goods warranted as represented.

DANIEL A. O'CONNELL,
fe1 13½ Third street.

LOCAN & CO.

.....HAVE.....

REMOVED

.....TO.....

LICK HOUSE BLOCK,

No. 19 Montgomery Street,

AND 107 AND 109 SUTTER STREET.

W. R. MADDEN, 31 MARKET ST.,

Wholesale Agent for the Pacific Coast for the celebrated Pure Rye Whiskies of Messrs. Finch, Dunville & Co., Belfast, Ireland, and Messrs. Thomas Hughes & Co., Londonderry, Ireland, whose Whiskies are recommended by the faculty as the purest and best in the market. Their facilities for shipping enable them to guarantee our patrons against adulteration, and we are prepared to meet all parties in the country who desire to purchase. Orders are respectfully solicited.

W. R. MADDEN, ap1 31 Market st.

SALMON.

SALMON IN HARRELS AND HALVES
Now Smoked Salmon and Herrings.
Hams and Bacon of the celebrated Wiltshire Cure.
And all kinds of Pickles in Bottles.
For sale by.....

L. J. GRIFFITH,

ap1 12 Washington street, below Davis

GROCERIES, WINES AND LIQUORS.

P. H. CANAVAN

IMPORTER OF

WINES, BRANDIES,

ETC., ETC.,

N.W. COR. CALIFORNIA & FRONT STS.

SAN FRANCISCO.

JOHN FLANAGAN & CO.,

Importers and Jobbers of

Fine Brandies, Wines, Liquors, etc.

Fine proof Store, 421 Front street, bet. Clay & Washington.

SAN FRANCISCO.

Foreign Liquors in bond, Fine Brandies, Holland Gin, Port, Claret, etc., sold in quantities to suit the purchaser. Also, Jobbers in native California Wines and Brandies. Cog'd

M. H. KELLY. JOHN EGAN.

Kelly & Egan

IMPORTERS AND DEALERS IN

FINE WINES AND LIQUORS,

No. 604 Battery street,

Near Jackson.....San Francisco

WM. B. DOLAN,

143 THIRD STREET.....SAN FRANCISCO,

Importer and Dealer, Wholesale and Retail, in

FRENCH WINES AND BRANDIES

AND

Irish Whisky.

Imported direct from Ireland.

HE HAS ALSO ON HAND A LARGE ASSORTMENT of California Wines of every description which he will dispose of, in bulk or in case, for the convenience of families.

All orders left at the store, 143 Third street, will be promptly attended to, and delivered free to any part of the city. ap15

E. Combanes & Co.

(Successors to P. Riley & Co.,)

WHOLESALE LIQUOR MERCHANTS,

No. 505 Front street.

SHIPPING.

PACIFIC MAIL STEAMSHIP CO.

FOR NEW YORK, VIA PANAMA.

Cabin.....$100 | Second Class.....$50

LEAVE WHARF, CORNER OF BRANNAN STREET AND THE EMBARCADERO, AT 12 M.

Saturday, March 4th, at 12 M., for NEW YORK, via Panama.

Saturday, March 18th, at 12 M., for NEW YORK, via Panama.

Saturday, April 1st, at 12 M., for NEW YORK, via Panama.

Through tickets sold to and from Liverpool, Queenstown, Southampton, Bremen, Hreinen and Havre.

FOR JAPAN AND CHINA.

Steamships leave on the 1st of every month, at noon, touching at Yokohama with the Company's Branch Line for Shanghai, the following day.

March 1st—Steamship GREAT REPUBLIC, 4,000 tons.

Through tickets sold to and from Liverpool, Queenstown, Southampton, Bremen, Hreinen and Havre.

Apply at the Pacific Mail Steamship Company's office, at their WHARF, CORNER OF FIRST AND BRANNAN STREETS.

ELDRIDGE & IRWIN, Agents.

NATIONAL LINE.

Sailing from LIVERPOOL every WEDNESDAY.

Sailing from QUEENSTOWN every THURSDAY.

Sailing from NEW YORK every SATURDAY.

SPAIN.....EGYPT.....ITALY.
ERIN.....CANADA.....ENGLAND.
ERIN.....VIRGINIA.....PENNSYLVANIA.

Rates of Passage, etc.

From Liverpool, Queenstown, Londonderry or Glasgow to New York.....$60 00
From Hamburg, Antwerp, Rotterdam and Havre.....70 00
From London, Edinburgh and Copenhagen.....75 00
From New York to Liverpool, Queenstown, Londonderry and Glasgow.....$60 00
From New York to London, Antwerp, Hamburg, Rotterdam and Havre.....75 00
From New York to London, Edinburgh and Copenhagen.....75 00

Also, Passage Tickets to California and Australia.

Drafts

For any amount on the Royal Bank of Ireland and the Imperial Bank of London, payable all over Europe. For Drafts or Passage, apply to

E. SHARMAN,
208 Wood street, New York.

Postoffice Box 1,018. ja7

Southern Dispatch Line of Packets.

SAN PEDRO & WILMINGTON.

Connecting of the new clipper Bark

A. S. PERKINS.....Captain Wm H Merton

And the new clipper Brig

CURLEW.....Captain A Christian

For Freight or Passage apply on board at Jackson street wharf, or to N. PIERCE, Southern Packet Office, 204 Sansome street, near Jackson, Telegraph Building, San Francisco. my6 tf

BOOTS AND SHOES.

SELLING OFF
SELLING OFF
SELLING OFF

MY ENTIRE

FALL STOCK OF

BOOTS AND SHOES

BOOTS AND SHOES

I WILL MARK THEM DOWN AT ONE PRICE for the remainder of the season. Those wishing to get bargains in Boots and Shoes will do well to call before buying elsewhere.

JOHN T. HARDY,

NOLAN'S, 23 THIRD STREET.

Ladies' Kid-lined double-soled Balmorals.
Ladies' English Lasting Congress Gaiters.
Ladies' Kid-lined Balmorals.
Ladies' Kid-lined button Congress Gaiters.
Ladies' kid-lined Congress Gaiters, custom made.
Ladies' Kid Slippers, 41 and $1 25; Polka Slippers, $1.
Ladies' and Misses' Toilet Slippers.
Misses' Fine calf Balmorals, only.....$2 00
Misses' kid-lined Congress Gaiters.....2 00
Misses' kid-lined Balmorals.....2 00
Misses' fine calf and kid Balmorals.....2 00
Misses' fine calf Congress Gaiters.....2 00
Children's fine calf Balmorals.....1 75
Children's fine calf and kid Balmorals.....1 75
Children's Lasting Balmorals.....1 50
Infants' Shoes, 25 cts., 50 cts., and 75 cts.
Ladies' hand-sewed Boots.....$5 00
Ladies' double-soled Kip Boots.....3 50
Ladies' double-soled Calf Boots.....3 50
Ladies' sewed Boots, our own make.....3 00
Ladies' Fine calf Boots, sewed Heels.....3 00
Ladies' custom-made Boots, only.....4 00
Misses' fine calf Boots, sewed, 11 to 2.....2 50
Misses' fine calf Boots, sewed, 12 to 2.....2 00
Misses' fine calf, 11 and 12.....2 00
Misses' fine calf, 11 and 12 Sc. Boots, sewed.....2 00
Ladies' Custom-made Boots and Shoes made to order. Repairing neatly done.

NOLAN'S, 23 THIRD STREET.
NOLAN'S, 23 THIRD STREET.
NOLAN'S, 23 THIRD STREET.

MAMMOTH SHOE STORE,

Second Door from Market St.

☞ Don't forget the place. Look for the big boot on top of the store.

PAINTS, OILS, ETC.

SULLIVAN, KELLY & CO.,

Northwest cor. Pine and Front sts.

Where they offer for sale

THE LARGEST STOCK OF

PAINTS, OILS, GLASS,

ETC., ETC., ON THE PACIFIC COAST,

AT THE LOWEST MARKET RATES.

101, 103 and 105 FRONT STREET,

and 102 PINE STREET.

A. KELLY. C. C. BOYD.

WASON & MORRIS,

Successors to J. R. KELLY,

PLAIN AND DECORATIVE

HOUSE AND SIGN PAINTERS,

GILDING AND GLAZING,

Imitations of Wood and Marble.

Banners, Flags and Military Standards a specialty.

ENTRANCE AND DEALER IN

PAINTS, OILS, and TURPENTINE, VARNISHES, BRUSHES, GLASS, WINDOW GLASS, VARNISHES, BRUSHES.

Constantly in store and receiving all the choicest selected from the best manufactories in the East. Orders promptly attended to and contractors supplied at the lowest rates. Nos. 218 to 224 Stewart street, between Mission and Howard, and Fourth and Fifth streets. Opposite the Railroad Depot. San Francisco.

STAINED AND CUT GLASS WORK

MALLON & BOYLE,

No. 308 MISSION STREET.

EVERY DESCRIPTION OF STAINED, EMBOSSED and Cut Glass for Churches, Private Houses, Saloons, etc. Metal Sash work of all kinds. Particular attention paid to Sending for Estimates. We invite the Public to examine our new stock. ja21-3m

CENTRAL PACIFIC RAILROAD.

| DEPART | Express Train | Jan. 22, Accom. Train | ARRIVE |
|---|---|---|---|
| 6:00 p.m. | Sacramento | 8:45 a.m. | 5:00 p.m. |
| 6:00 p.m. | San Jose | 1:45 p.m. | 10:00 a.m. |
| 7:30 p.m. | Niles | 12:00 m. | 8:30 a.m. |
| 7:30 p.m. | Livermore | 12:00 m. | 8:30 a.m. |
| 8:00 a.m. | Sacramento | 11:45 a.m. | 5:00 p.m. |
| 8:00 a.m. | Marysville | 11:45 a.m. | 5:00 p.m. |
| 8:00 a.m. | Oroville | 11:45 a.m. | 5:00 p.m. |
| 8

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

ENGLAND.

A Rigid's Punishment.

Morphy, the itinerant slanderer of Caithness, has been, we observe, beaten in Whitehaven by those on whom he so long has been allowed to vent his venomous insults. We regret that the fellow was not let alone, for he only earns "gentlemanly" fees like sinners when he receives a whip for being beaten. The Catholic clergy have in many places taken the trouble to urge upon their people that it is much better not to be guilty of any violence to the man; but these exhortations are not always obeyed. In an article in the Telegraph, in part of which the attack on Murphy is censured, we find the following passages which his patrons in the following passage him any more of ought to study before paying their money: "He is a hired lecturer, paid to disseminate atrocious libels on Roman Catholic priests and women. He pursues his calling under even in places where there are large numbers of ignorant Irish laborers. Now, however ignorant these men are, they know that their wives and sisters—Irish peasant girls—are remarkable for chastity; and that they alone, but all the world agree with them, whatever be the cause, the fact. Those Irish female virtues is plain enough. Those peculiarly Popish, then, have before their eyes the example of the Holy Family of Nazareth. It is right to let Murphy travel about the country, and to let the people know what the calumniator is—a self-confessed liar. Manhood, their rage is natural enough. Irishmen will be Irishmen in the most chivalrous sense. It is right to let Murphy travel about, and to let him be met by the people, and to let him be ring up sectarian rancour, then he must be pounded at any expense, and severe examples must be made in case the assailants are caught or subsequently detected. But as for the sale of the book from which Murphy quotes, "The Confessional Unmasked," has been stopped as indecent, we do not see why he should be allowed to publish any of the worst passages of a suppressed book. It is at all events clear from the Whitehaven business that the Irish people will not allow Murphy. Could not Murphy be done with under his lustful tax, and suppose a general burden on him as an explosive compound, with a special clause prohibiting his conveyance by railway as "dangerous?"

Paying for the Royal Whistle.

People in England, now that fresh taxes are about to be imposed upon them, are beginning to inquire how the taxes which they have paid are being expended, and the result is rather interesting. The Queen-royale Review throws some light upon one portion of the public expenditure, which at present calls for revision. The Reviewer tells us all about the "Civil List," and how it is distributed. It amounts in round numbers to £30,000 a year, and is at the disposal of the Minister of the day for the purpose of pensioning meritorious public servants. It is not only public servants, however, who are pensioned from the regal and ministerial purse. As the writer says, there are people who, "from their connexion with the heads of the Government and with the heads of departments generally, more frequently than any others receive pensions, and such appointments have been attributed to interest, or favoritism, and have been regarded as the effects of personal intimacy or official connexion." Besides which the most abnormal reasons are alleged for the appointment of the ministerial bounty. For instance, two persons are provided for because their ancestors saved the life of Charles II. after the battle of Worcester; and other side the head of Worcester; and other side the head of a literary man of the Elizabethan period. Time may be enjoyed while on active service. It is no wonder that the English people should grumble, but what would they have? To be sure, George Washington or Abraham Lincoln paid their own tailors' bills, and their dancing masters—if they had any—were not provided for by the Republic; but then that was in America, and the Government of America is republican, and—not ours.—Irish Times.

Mixed Marriages in England.

Several cases have lately come before the courts which show the danger of contracting mixed marriages. No one can tell how the decision may be finally given respecting the religion of the children, but the lawyers are disputing great injury may be done. The following case could not be tried, but many cases where the same facts appear have a different termination. We read in a daily paper that the will of Mr. Hawksworth was instituted to allow the minister the estate of a Roman Catholic gentleman who died intestate eight years ago, leaving a daughter six months of age, whom he had, shortly before his death, had baptized in his own faith with Roman Catholic sponsors. Left to the guardianship of her mother, who is a Protestant, the child has up to this time been brought up in the Protestant faith, and was placed at a Protestant school under the Court of Chancery, as the legally constituted guardian of the child, ought to appertain the matter to the law of the child, or having regard to the religion of the father, to transfer him from the training of the child to some other person of the Roman Catholic faith. Vice-Chancellor Wickens, when the Chancellor of the County Palatine of Lancaster, made an order depriving the mother of control over the religious training of her daughter. The order having been appealed against, was confirmed by their lordships, who approved their entire concurrence both in the decision of the Vice-Chancellor and in the reasoning by which that decision was arrived at. The appeal therefore was dismissed with costs.

An Awful "Spell."

In a village about four miles from Nottingham an eccentric old gentleman, unmarried, and reputed to be worth £10,000, recently made his will. He bequeathed £10,000 to the General Hospital, and a like sum to the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts. To one relative he left £1,000, and legacies to the amount of £500 were numerous. The total amount bequeathed amounted £40,000. The secret leaked out of the testamentary acts of the testator, and the expectant legatees were very demonstrative in their expressions of thankfulness. Presents of wine, game, and other good things were sent in profusion to the unpretending but comfortable cottage in which the recluse resided, attended only by an aged woman. Although extremely reluctant to leave the shelter of his own roof, he was frequently compelled to yield to the solicitations of friends, and pay them long visits. A Nottingham cab and coach proprietor placed his relatives and horses at his service in going to and fro, and had been put down in the will for the handsome sum of £500. The old gentleman was escorted by more than one lady whose early youth had passed, but who had no objection to a widow's portion of a considerable fortune. It is difficult to imagine a more comfortable existence than the generous testator led in his declining years, each of his friends rivalling the others in beating him, and smoothing his descent to the grave. He died at the reverend age eighty-four, only a few days since; and the friend at whose house he breathed his last honored his remains with an expensive funeral. This friend had also the melancholy satisfaction of paying the undertaker's bill, and of receiving the legacies, for the testator died considerably in debt. The large sums he had bequeathed existed only in imagination.—Pall Mall Gazette, April 15.

FRANCE.

The Slaughter at Neuilly and Asnieres.

Since the success of the Government troops at Asnieres, the struggle at Neuilly has gone on with greater ferocity on both sides, and the loss must in the aggregate have been very heavy. The Versailles have gave no quarter at Becon. We are told that it was in vain that their officers attempted to restrain them. The following, from the correspondent of the Standard, refers to the fighting at Neuilly on Wednesday night: "The defeat sustained by the troops of the Commune was the most serious they have yet experienced, as, besides losing ground, they sustained most appalling losses. Four battalions were cut up losing heavily thirty men escaped unscathed. A powder magazine which blew up at Clichy also caused heavy casualties. The firing which slackened about noon, was resumed with great intensity about four o'clock on Thursday, and was going on harder than ever from Neuilly to Clichy, in which, at the present rate of fire, very few houses will be left standing within a few days. When the fire slackened, crowds of people assembled as usual near the Arc de Triomphe, regardless of the numerous shells which fell in the vicinity about the monument. One National guard was wounded in the head while looking right over the east side of the building. A well-dressed man was slightly hit in the leg while doing petty was alighting at No. 10 avenue de l'Hopital, on a shell burst right at the entrance of the avenue, and broke up a small tree. The small trees which adorn the Champs Elysees, rushed after the fragments of the shell and carried them off as trophies of the morning's work. The Versailles, instead of remaining at the Arc de Triomphe, No. 11 Avenue Wagram, in a lady's bedroom, smashed the furniture in pieces, but left her unscathed. The end is supposed to be near. The Versailles army is massing for the assault, and will storm the Porte Maillot, which is now an utter wreck. The gunners of the Commune seek to the guns with admirable courage; and several of their guns are dismounted, but the men hold out with a pertinacity that is worthy of a better cause. The Versailles army will certainly be victorious in the end, but the slaughter will be terrible. Rossbach, in a late number of Virchow's Archiv (Band li.), has given an interesting account of numerous cases of sudden death in the fields of Beaumont and Sedan, in which the bodies of those killed retained the position in which they had fallen, and the face was just before death. In one case a group of six French soldiers were killed by the explosion of a single shell as they were breakfasting in a slight hollow. The shell had struck one of them sitting in the middle of the back, where it was partly buried in the ground. The next by his side, and the fragments had torn away his thighs and buttocks, and killed his comrade on the other side of them. The shell had carried off, while the face still retained the expression of laughter at the joke of a comrade sitting next one to him still held delicately raised to his lips, and was the only unmutilated part of the group which lapse of twenty-four hours. In another case a soldier shot through the breast lay with his arm extended as if in the act of aiming at his wife or lover held up straight before him. Rossbach cannot admit that such instantaneous rigor mortis must have been between the last moment of life and the first of death.—Lancet.

Friendly Feeling between Paris Protestants and Roman Catholics.

A Paris correspondent directs attention to the friendly feeling which exists at the present time between Protestants and Catholics. In England infidelity seldom goes beyond Unitarianism, and in France infidelity is much more than sceptical—it is fiercely dogmatic; and it merely denies the Christian faith—it denies all religion—it is atheistic. In the midst of such a society, Catholic and Protestants are more than ever ready to join hands. Four battalions were sent up long ago by their parishes, and have been ever since fighting side by side. Another example of this kind is afforded by the following extract from the correspondence of Home has reappeared. In a recent sermon, directed against the Commune, he said: "Let us not attempt to make to convert this important city by violence. Let us not attempt to make it submit to the Gospel by force. Let us not seek to bring it to the feet of Jesus Christ by the sword. Let us not seek to bring it to the feet of Jesus Christ by the sword. Let us not seek to bring it to the feet of Jesus Christ by the sword

WEEKLY CALENDAR.

FOR THE WEEK BEGINNING JUNE 1.

May 28—Sunday—St. Petronel, St. Germain, Bishop of Paris, and Confessor.
29—Monday—St. Maximin, Bishop of Treves, Conf.
30—Tuesday—St. Felix, Pope and Martyr.
31—Wednesday—Ember Day. St. Petronilla, Virgin.
June 1—Thursday—St. Pamphilus, Priest and Martyr.
2—Friday—Ember Day. SS. Marcellinus and Peter, Martyrs.
3—Saturday—Ember Day. St. Clotilda, Queen of France. St. Kevin.

THE MONITOR:
THE ONLY
Irish or Catholic Journal in California.
SATURDAY.....MAY 27, 1871.

"THE MONITOR" AND DEMOCRACY.

The daily papers are just now concerned with little else than discussing the complexities of the forthcoming election party politics, and, as a matter of course, see things only in the light favorable to their particular faction. There are, we acknowledge, a few journals that profess independence, but the profession is a mere pretence, and deceives nobody. In reality these independent prints are merely time-servers, waiting the opportunity to offer homage to the successful candidates, no matter from what side they come. We certainly do not claim that THE MONITOR is an independent paper, at least in this sense of the word. It has invariably supported, and will always continue to support, the Democratic party, honestly believing as it believes it the best calculated to promote the happiness and prosperity of the country. But that fact does not, in our humble opinion, at all necessitate our being silent respecting abuses which may spring up from time to time, or compel us to indorse every course of action taken by individuals belonging to that party. Stick to your party through thick and thin, right and wrong," is a motto which may seem very noble and sound very grandiloquent; but, if carried into practice, it would destroy the strongest and most firmly established organization that the ingenuity of man could call into existence. The real way to serve a party, and the only way to make it permanent, is to exercise a sharp supervision over all belonging to it—to call attention to abuses the moment they appear, and to censure those persons who are the cause of them. That is the course which would recommend itself to a true friend, and the man who would act otherwise is an enemy, however loud he may be in his professions of good intentions. For these reasons we have not been slow to condemn certain proceedings in relation to primaries and conventions, which, we were satisfied, were working to the detriment of the Democratic platform. We complained that the primaries were neglected by men of probity, intelligence and respectability, and handed over to the management of a class of persons who, most assuredly, had no title whatever to be considered as representatives of the general body of citizens. We complained that, in consequence of this negligence, individuals got elected to conventions who were grossly incompetent to discharge such an important duty as selecting candidates for a great national party and who, moreover, did not in truth or reality care a row of brass pins for either Democracy or Republicanism, as such, but simply wanted to "turn an honest penny" for themselves at the expense of one party or the other. To those worthy conventionists the highest consideration was, not what man was the truest exponent of Democratic principles, or what man would serve the State most faithfully in office, but what man could afford to scatter the largest number of double eagles among the "boys." It was perfectly scandalous that corrupt and dishonest men like these should practically have the decision as to who were the candidates that should receive the support of the Democratic party. If such malpractices have not resulted in the complete and irreparable disintegration of Democracy the credit must be awarded to the fact that its opponents, the Republicans, were just as badly off, and, we verily believe, a trifle worse. Our endeavors to secure a rectification of those abuses, our attempts to bring about a more wholesome state of affairs, have been misunderstood in some quarters, and treated as though they were attacks upon the very existence of the party. This is the very height of injustice. The only motive actuating us in making these censures was to improve the prospects of Democracy by freeing the party from abuses which were not only disgraceful but dangerous. And we have had good reason for believing that our representations have not been without effect. The next elections will, unless we are very much mistaken, bring out the Democratic party in California better and stronger organized than it has been for many years. Another cause for misunderstanding has been found in our complaint that the Irish, who are the mainstay of the Democratic party, and without whom it would crumble to pieces in twelve months, are usually neglected when those positions and emoluments which are the legitimate property of the victors are being distributed. We advised that our countrymen should organize, mass their strength so as to make it felt, and demand that the party for which they have done so much should do him justice in this particular. Certain as an incitement to a "split" from the Democracy altogether! We need hardly say how far such a thing was from our intention. There never has appeared in THE MONITON one single sentence suggesting or approving, directly or indirectly, such a suicidal course as a desertion of the party to which we have been so long united. Whatever cause of complaint the Irish, as a body, may have against the Democracy, it can be settled within the party and under its jurisdiction. A "split" would merely be an illustration of the old adage, "Out of the frying-pan into the fire;" it could not possibly benefit the Irish, but would be likely to make their position far worse. The daily papers, however, got to discussing the probability of a split and an organization on an independent basis by a certain nationality; and some very sapient and astute politicians would have it that it was our countrymen who were alluded to. There was no evidence whatever of this, but there is unfortunately a class of men who care little about evidence, who will take up the first idea that comes into their head, and stick to it at all costs. One of these brainless individuals wrote to the Chronicle denying that the Irish meditated any revolt, and blaming some articles in THE MONITOR for the alleged misconception. Now this eager correspondent had his trouble all for nothing, because at the time he wrote it was pretty well known that it was the Germans who were supposed to be meditating a secession from the Democratic ranks! It is easy enough to note the error we would wager a little that he is one of those impecunious parasites who hang on to the Democratic party in the hope of getting a crumb from the table when the feast shall be spread—one of those "dummers" who lack brains or industry to make a living by any lawful avocation, and who turn to politics as a last resort. This is the style of individual who sets as a "go-between" for the bribing candidate and the bribed conventionalist, and who contrives to pocket a percentage of the "consideration" for his trouble. No wonder he should be anxious that the contest between Democracy and Republicanism should be carried on in the old fashion, and that corruption should be eternal! It is plain he wants to dupe certain personages into the belief that he is a man of great influence among the Irish people, and hands his letter about, to show the way he can speak on their behalf! If any one be foolish enough to accept him at his own valuation, as exhibited by the tone of his letter, we are rather inclined to think he would put himself in the way of a very sure disappointment! Caveat emptor! But, as we have said before, THE MONITON never counseled a desertion of the Democratic party by the Irish citizens, and, unless some unforeseen change takes place in the principles of that party, it never will. Still, notwithstanding this, we shall continue to cry out against abuses and advocate reforms, no matter how disagreeable such a course may be to individuals who thrive on corruption.

THE DOWNFALL OF THE "REDS."

Every real friend of France will be pleased to hear that the Government forces have at length entered Paris, and that the reign of the Reds is over. Although the loss of life and damage to property which the civil war entailed are to be deplored, there is yet a satisfaction to be derived from the knowledge that the revolutionists have had their trial of strength with the friends of law and order and have got very much the worst of it. An outbreak of these savage bedlamites was a crisis through which France was destined to pass, and which could not be avoided by any human precaution. A firm Government with strength enough at its command might suppress disturbance for a time, short or long, according to chance; but beneath this controlling force the elements of disorder would seethe and ferment until they made some outlet. It is well, too, that the revolt came just as it did. Had it occurred under the regime of NAPOLEON, or after a restoration of the Bourbons, men would be apt to mistake its true meaning. Fly would say that the rebellion was sired by the tyranny of the one, or that the reactionary policy of the other, and thus a certain amount of sympathy would be insured to the Reds, however desperate their cause. But, by assailing a Republican Government, and that while a force enemy was in possession of Fort Valerien, while the Prussian was mowing thousands of its children slain in unsuccessful fight, they have proved most conclusively that it is nonpartisanism or monarchy to which my object so much as any form of organized authority. They have shown to the world that, while the cause free use of the sacred words "freedom" and "Liberty of Conscience," they are themselves heartless tants and relentless persecutors of all who differ from them. So true is the saying "extremes meet" that while the men who deify Freedom, would dethrone the Creator to the Goddess of Liberty, to be adored and most bloodthirsty lynch that ever disgraced human nature by their excesses. Their conduct has deprived them from this event forward of the slightest claim on the respect or sympathies of deity and religious men. The grotesque orgies they perpetrated in the name of Government during their possession of Paris, would be amusing like high-wrought degree if they had not entailed such terrible consequence. The fashion in which they used to thrust up a puppet one day upon him down again the day following, the inflated and high-sounding language in which their proclamations were couched, the extravagance of all their public acts, were so ludicrous that one might lawfully be excused for imagining that they were playing a pantomime on a huge scale, on a great city as their stage and all mankind as their spectators. The vandalism of public buildings, and especially the beautiful Column Vendome, is certainly shocking; but the unmanly and cowardly spirit manifested in its outrages and indignities they have upon the statue of the Emperor whiche crowned this column, is simply revolting. To think of the great reforms of the age, the great champions of liberty, the great advocates of peace and refinement—the men at one bidding tyranny was to fly from the earth and injustice be no more—lifting on a senseless statue and kneeling it to pieces with their muskets! Faugh! The thing is sickening. Even Sea Island cannibals could not more blindly or more barbarously. These wretches are unworthy of the called men, and no human being with a spark of self-respect in it would allow himself to be regarded as kindred to them. But, thank heaven, their reign is over. The best fellows who believe in God and religion, and who recognize the obligation of submission to legitimate authority, have proved altogether too many for them. The Red leaders now skulking in the cellars of Paris endeavoring to make their escape in disguise. And it is really exhilarating what an aptitude these gentlemen have displayed for—these gens de pure, as Hibernia very justly called them—having found themselves out of trouble and turning into their natural element. Nobody knows where they are in a revolution, and nobody on mount where they go afterwards. Like birds of ill-omen, they are only seen just in times of violence and dismay in the country that has the misfortune to give them birth. If they rise well enough to leave their unfortunate dupes to pay the penalty of their deeds. It is earnestly to be hoped that the Versaillists will not be negatory all the advantages of a recent triumph by a illujudged leniency. They have it now in their power to crush rebellion in France, so that it cannot gain rear its head for a century to come. If they do themselves of the opportunity, it will confer an execrable bequest upon their country if they let it go away without trial, they must be held responsible for whatever evils which may in the future outburst of the Reds may occasion. France has now passed through the terrible ordeals to which her thirst for military glory and spirit of irreligion predestined her, and she has emerged from them with great and powerful—so it is to be expected that she will henceforth enjoy an undisturbed season of happiness, prosperity and peace.

THE TREATY OF WASHINGTON.

The covenant agreed to by the Joint High Commission is to be known henceforth as "The Treaty of Washington." It will record for future ages the depth of humiliation into which the Radical politicians, headed by Gen. ULYSSES S. GRANT, President of the United States of America, could deliberately descend in the year of grace 1871! It will tell generations yet unborn the dishonor and degradation these men could inflict upon their country for the sake of a chance to retain the spoils of office for some time longer. The Radical Eugenium imagine they can befool the intelligence of American citizens to such an extent as to make them believe that the Treaty, instead of being a disgrace, is a triumph, and that the men who were instrumental in concluding it ought to be rewarded with four years extension of power. We, hope they will be disappointed, and will find that the people of this country know well enough where their honor is concerned and when it is touched. It certainly will not be the fault of the patriotic men belonging to all parties if this imposture is carried to a successful termination. When we find men differing so widely in politics as SUMNER, BUTLER, TRUMBULL and CASSERLY denouncing the Treaty of Washington, and crying out against any attempt to bind this country to its stipulations, we may rest perfectly satisfied that it is not deserving of the support of any genuine patriot. It must be remembered that nothing but a well founded dislike could induce these gentlemen to unite in condemning it, whereas it does not need much discernment to discover the corrupt motives that may actuate at least the principal of its supporters. Senator CASSERLY in an especial manner has been out poken in his denunciations of this disgraceful Treaty. He views it as, we maintain, every intelligent and patriotic citizen must view it, in a spirit of national honor and national dignity. It has been consummated solely in order that the clique now ruling the country may arrogate to themselves the glory of having put an end to the "unhappy differences" which had so long alienated England and the United States, mother and daughter, from each other. But there is every prospect that these shrewd calculators may find out in the end that they have overreached themselves. There is great opposition to the Treaty in Great Britain because some people imagine this country has not been sufficiently snubbed, and ought to have been treated to a still heavier dose of humble pie! So the document over which the Radicals are so jubilant may yet be contemptuously thrown back in their faces. If it be not, if it be accepted, we now declare, and the event will surely bear us out, that it will be as a piece of condescension on the part of England. We shall have British orators and British journalists telling us very distinctly that the Treaty of Washington was accepted merely because our transatlantic brethren did not like to leave it upon our hands after all the pains we had taken with it, and all the pleasure it had afforded us! If this does not turn out to be case, then we shall freely confess that we are ignorant of the true character of Englishmen and know nothing about the feelings they entertain towards the people of the United States! In Canada, too, the Treaty has been severely criticised, and petitions against it have been pouring into the Dominion Government. We do not know that the Canadians have any substantial grounds for complaint, and we must needs ascribe their outcry to pure prejudice against the people of this Republic. However, their petty malice can never do us much harm, so we can afford to feel rather amused at it even if it be a little inconvenient. So the Treaty of Washington is satisfactory only to General GRANT and his flatterers, together with a certain section of British politicians. We are confident that if the citizens of the United States were allowed to pass their verdict upon it, they would repudiate it by an overwhelming majority. As for the people of England, we believe they are supremely indifferent about the whole matter. They are happy in the consciousness that their diplomatists have completely outwitted the "cursed Yankees;" they believe that if the quarrel be pushed to extremities, they will be in a position to force the fighting, and, therefore, their minds are very easy about the fate of the Treaty of Washington. And it must be admitted that they have, so far at least, the best of the bargain!

A WELCOME TO THE EXILES.

There is not, we are confident, an Irishman within the bounds of California who will not be well pleased to learn that we will shortly have among us here in San Francisco two of the most distinguished of that heroic band of martyrs who have been recently released from British dungeons, THOMAS CLARKE LUBY and General THOMAS F. BOURKE will arrive in this city some time during the course of the ensuing week. The precise date we do not as yet know, but we trust to be in a position to give our readers every information in our next issue. All we can do at present is to make public the fact that a telegram has been received from Dr. Power, Secretary of the Irish Confederation, stating that these two gentlemen will attend the excursion of the Hibernia Rifles, which will take place at the City Gardens on Sunday, June 4th. Consequently it is safe to assume that they will reach San Francisco a day or two before hand. Now, we hope that the Irish Nationalists of our city, we may say indeed of our State, will do the duty that plainly lies before them on this occasion. Everyone is aware of the enthusiastic reception awarded to the liberated patriots in every city and town of the Union in which they have set foot. It is equally well known that addresses and presentations of all kinds have been forwarded to them from places which they were not able to visit. In short, it is a patent and self-evident fact that the Irish Nationalists who are sheltered beneath the flag of this Republic have taken every possible means of testifying their admiration of the principles and their perfect satisfaction at the release from imprisonment, of these gallant and heavily-tried patriots. San Francisco has not been altogether wanting in such demonstrations of sympathy, as is evidenced by the numerous receptions and banquets that have been tendered to individuals who have escaped from the clutches of the British Government; but we think the time has arrived when a more general and enthusiastic display should be made. We are aware that a committee has been appointed to make the necessary arrangements for the reception of the exiles, but we are not aware that any steps have been taken in the matter. We would, therefore, suggest that a meeting be held at the earliest possible date, for the purpose of appointing a committee of citizens to make the necessary arrangements for the reception of the exiles. We are sure that the Irish citizens of San Francisco will not be behind hand in showing their appreciation of the heroic conduct of these gentlemen, and that they will be ready to contribute liberally to the fund which will be required to defray the expenses of the reception. We trust that the matter will be taken in hand at once, and that a meeting will be held without delay.

ST. MARY'S COLLEGE.

The semi-annual examinations of the pupils attending St. Mary's College were brought to a conclusion on Wednesday last. There was a good attendance of clergymen and of parents and friends of the young students, all of whom evinced the greatest interest in the proceedings. Among those present were his Grace the Archbishop, and the Rev. Fathers Kieg, Gallagher, Gibney, Larkin, O'Connor, Deegan, Crone, Bezio, S. J., Serri, S. J., and Gleeson. Among the laity present we noticed Messrs. P. Donahue, J. A. Donohoe, P. McAran, W. T. Lucky, of the State Normal School, J. A. McGlynn, J. D. Oliver, J. Daly, A. Massey, J. T. Darcy, of THE MONITON, H. J. Clinch, C. D. O'Sullivan, John Sullivan, Judge Blake, H. C. Bateman, M. Flood, P. J. Sullivan, Daniel O'Connell, J. Lemon, and others.

The following programme of exercises was carried out:

Music—Quickstep, College Band. French Literature, First Class. Music—Waltz, College Band. Geography.—"Development of Science," by Wm. J. O'Farrell. Latin, Greek, Third Class. Music, "College Tides," Orchestra. English Literature, First and Second Classes. Music—"Gentle Spirit," Choir and Band. Music (vocal), "Lucilia Pure Domestic." College Choir and Orchestra. Latin, Greek, Fourth Class. Chemistry," Joseph D. Fennerty. Applied Mechanics, First Class. Music (orchestra), "Rocked in the Cradle of the Deep." R. Mahony. Greek, Second Class. Music—"Grand Russian Schottische (Debillemont)," College Band.

BAZAARIES AMONG THE CHURCHES.

During the past week a fair has been going in Central Hall, corner of Bush and Polk streets, the proceeds of which are to be devoted to the liquidation of the debt on St. Bridget's Church. The fair, though announced to a certain extent, has not been so to that degree which the friends of the church would like and had a right to expect. It will close this evening, and we trust that even at the last moment those who have not yet paid a visit to the fair will do so. The bazaar has certainly been well managed and nicely carried out, an effort to make it attractive having been spared by the ladies and gentlemen interested in it.

CHURCH FESTIVAL.—To-morrow, Sunday, will be Whit Sunday, a holiday of great importance in the Church—to day, Saturday, being its vigil, is a fast day of strict obligation. The children of St. Mary's parish will make their First Communion at the 7½ o'clock Mass in the morning, and the sacrament of Confirmation will be administered by his Grace the Archbishop after High Mass. The Sodality of Corpus Christi will fall on Thursday, June 8.

Samuel B. Axtell is announced to deliver the Fourth of July oration at Sutter Creek, Amador county.

Secret Societies.

[Boston Monitor: Knowing you to be a true witness of the truth and an opponent of the widespread secret society system which is characterizing the nineteenth century—seeing even the guilty culprit in fair trembling at what the machinations of the Masons will accomplish, and, judging from an exterior view of the truth, think that it is but simple justice for any unbiased newspaper to denounce the secret society spy system that is permeating classes of society.

Rev. Fair, in her interview with the Tribune reporter a few days since, said she spoke in fear from the influence of the Masons. I was always of the same opinion, and found my suspicions verified as the jury were chosen with at least a Past Masters among them, and I don't know how many others of the same principles, professing the same brotherly love, having the esteem of the devil, and trying to appear perfect in the eyes of their fellow men.

Well aware, Mr. Editor, that the Church is at open warfare with all secret societies, and I think that in should be upheld by all Christian men—not alone to warn their congregation, but to assist in blotting from existence the representatives of Hyram Tyrian the shortsighted. In a recent jargon of the community that feels not for the woes of others, but, locked up in the embraces of its mysterious workings, helps but its No matter how debased or villainous appear in the eyes of the community, that take the most abhorrent oaths used for such a purpose) to persecute broken the character of any member any of their tools, and then cover their own acts, no matter how de with the mantled of Christian charity, my mind, so coupled with the craft of the arch-fiend that, in reading of where the culprit is a Mason, I expect him to be acquitted or very nearly punished.

In conclusion, allow me to recommend consideration of every reader that truth of comprehensive title book, the Segur, entitled, "The Freemasons;" every Catholic recollect that that which has been the essential part of order through ages of chaos, and gather the very framework of society men and is the enemy of all secret

SHAUN DHU.

Confirmation at Placerville.

[Diamond Springs Democrat (El Dorado County), May 22, 1871.

Boston Monitor—Sir: You will pardon me, for sending you this communication, but I feel that the English language is very familiar to me, I am obliged to ask it to you written in my mother tongue that you will put it in translation into English.

Sunday last was at Placerville a day of confirming the faithful by the Creator than the four cold bare walls of a Protestant temple can. Accordingly such important ceremony was may of the presence of all those who form the Catholic faith, while it is to see a Catholic rule go to hear a minister preach.

The grand High Mass, which was by the Vigneas and Misses, theorgians at Holy Mother, Parish Priest Holmes, his titrare the Archbishop Confirmation to about forty living previously addressed to children, as his titrare knows how, ing devout of all kinds. Many graces, in each of the intelligence of every feeding the supremacy of the Church, yet taking care to wound the feelings of Jesus Christ, and when his all call him to a more elevated believe behind him the regrets in Catholics, but also of Protestants. Heroes, who have equal esteem help for him. Agrees, mon-

HENRY PROSPER.

Pacific Railroad.—We have assurances that the managers Pacific Road mean business. At a meeting New York yesterday, a Directors was chosen, at the head are Moses Taylor, Marshall O. and other heavy capitalists. It is we are informed, in process of the surveys, preliminary to the of the first section of the road. of unencumbered stockholders Pacific and Texas sides, and forward with vigor. It is expected two hundred miles will done within the next year.

Notice.

The attention of our patrons is an advertisement in another column. Any should be without it; its effect in many families of farmers is fully ascertained. It does what it is.

TELEGRAPHIC.

The Paris Insurrection.

VERSAILLES, May 18.—Members of the Right in the Assembly deem it hopeless to storm the Cemetery, and intend to defend fighting followed, but the report that Dombrowski was killed caused the insurgents to become panic stricken. A pause of a few hours succeeded, when suddenly the batteries on the hill opened on the entrance and the railway, and showers of shell and hail storms of musketry poured in on the insurgents, who essayed a feeble reply, and then fled in confusion. Firing from the wall was heard, and a mad panic followed. The officers urged, and struggled, and threatened, but all ran up the quay in great confusion, shot and shell chasing them. The insurgents to the extremity of the Place de la Concorde, but did not fire. The Column which is below the Arc at the Champs Elysées. The Versailles pressed on from the avenue Friedland to the open space at the top of the Boulevard Haussmann, from thence they could sweep the Boulevard Malesherbes, Rue Monceaux, and the way to the Rue Royale.

St. Denis, May 24.—The has been a most terrible day for Paris. The city is burning in many places, and the destruction of a great part of the central and eastern districts seems inevitable. The Communists hold all the part between the Tuileries and Belleville. The Versaillist troops are massed down by the fire from the Arc de Triomphe to the Bastile, where they steadily gain ground. The slaughter is terrible.

VERSAILLES, May 21.—In the Assembly to-day, Thiers announced that the Hotel de Ville was in flames, and expressed his horror at those acts of vandalism, and declared that it was the determination of the Government to punish the perpetrators without mercy.

EVENING. Paris, May 21.—The dead remain unburied, and the wounded lie unattended in the streets.

Eastern.

FREDERICTON (N. B.), May 19.—The Legislature of New Brunswick has adopted by unanimous vote in both branches, resolutions complimentary of the terms of the Treaty of Washington, in so far as they affect the interests of Canada.

BOSTON (Mass.), May 19.—General Butler appeared before the Legislative Committee on Railroads to-day, and read a letter, making a twenty-four page pamphlet, which he had addressed to his son-in-law, Senator Ames, of Mississippi, in which he elaborately reviews and generally condemns the policy of Washington.

WASHINGTON, May 19.—The Senate was requested to-day to appoint a committee to consider the Treaty of Washington. The request debates concerning the obligation to pay the Alabama claims to-day, and the Senate to-day, adopted the following resolutions:

Resolved, That for the present a sub-committee of eight members be appointed to proceed in accordance with the investigation, and to continue the same as long as they deem expedient, with authority to take testimony in Washington or elsewhere, as they may see fit; such committee of their own number, and to report all testimony by them obtained to the full Committee at a meeting to be held on the 20th day of September next, or such earlier time as the sub-committee shall deem proper. Ten members of the sub-committee shall visit all such localities in the South as the committee first named shall report to be in a disturbed condition, and such other localities as the committee may deem necessary.

Resolved, That the Chairman of Judiciary Committee be authorized to appoint said sub-committee, of which the Chairman of the Senate and House Committee shall be members, and that said two Chairmen be authorized to fill any vacancy in said sub-committee.

The following gentlemen were appointed as the sub-committee: Senator Scott, Chairman; Senator Pool and Blair, and Representatives Poland, Coburn, Stevenson, Beck and Van Trump.

CHICAGO, May 22.—A Tribune Washington special says: It is stated on good authority that the opponents of the Treaty cannot muster more than a dozen votes against it. The ratification of the Treaty course has heretofore been considered doubtful, are now set down as certain to vote for it. The vote on its final ratification, as heretofore stated, will be taken in the Senate on Thursday at 1 o'clock. The discussion of the Treaty in Committee of the Whole has been of the most desultory and confined mostly to members of the Foreign Relations Committee and Sumner; the opinions of Senators not yet fully developed to any extent in the debate. The objections to the Treaty are based on the articles relating to the Alabama claims and the fisheries. Mr. Cassarly took the ground that the Treaty was a disgraceful compromise, both of the national interests and honor; but his ultra views have met with no response from the Democratic side. Other Senators have found defects, but not of such a character as to induce them to reject the Treaty entirely. Advices received here by prominent Senators with regard to the way in which the Treaty are received in England are not very flattering. It is stated that it will be strenuously opposed, both in the Council and in Parliament, and if successful will result in the overthrow of the present British Ministry.

CITY OF MEXICO, May 15.—Complete confirmation of Lerdo's election. The vote extended by a force of four hundred men, who have had several fights with the Federal troops outside the walls. General Rocha, Escobeda's right hand man, has left San Luis Potosi for Tampico, professedly to suppress the revolution, but it is suspected with an intention to organize a revolution in favor of Lerdo, and to obtain recognition of the Federals, and also to aid in the effort now making to corrupt and divide the army.

It is believed there will be an election by the people, and that the choice of President will devolve on Congress, which, it is expected, will be largely composed of partizans of Lerdo. Juarez is using the public funds, and Lerdo his own private money, to accomplish the purpose of the Presidential campaign. Whoever may be elected, his opponent will inaugurate a fair fight by the people, and the Presidency by force of arms."

The friends of Porfirio Diaz are powerless. Zamacona is their leader, and he is handling the party in favor of Lerdo. A rupture between the Lerdo and Porfirio parties is imminent.

---

There is a date palm tree in bearing at the parochial residence in Los Angeles. It is about twelve years off, and has now its first crop of dates, growing in a cluster containing several hundred.

Excursions and Picnics.

Preparations are on foot and will permit no undue encroachment on the Picnic which are to come off in the course of the coming week. To-morrow (Sunday) the Montgomery Guard, Captain Quinn, colonel, will hold their fourth annual excursion to San Rafael. On that day were there the Hibernian Rifles, Capt. W. Sweeney, will give their Picnic at the City Gardens. The liveried marines, Thomas Clarke Luby and General Thomas F. Bourke will be present on the occasion. We have every confidence that the friendliness of the city and vicinity will turn out in all their strength on most them.

The Meagher and White Tent Guards' Joint excursion to Benicia, on the 24th, was the most agreeable we have attended this season. It was a sort of family affair—all seemed to have been previously acquainted, and appeared to have attended for the purpose of talking over old times an occasion. Besides the large number from San Francisco, there must have been fully fifty carriage loads from Suisun Valley and the surrounding country, as well as a number of ladies and gentlemen from the bay. One of the most noticeable features of the picnic was the large number of U. S. Regulars, of Benicia Barracks, who were there by all in force, decorated with sash and from the wagon loaded the dogs of Mexico and Ireland—the latter possessing a most pugilistic appearance. Arms having been stacked, dinner was served on the grass, and a most sumptuous luncheon it appeared to be, it was, indeed, for which fully two hundred people partook, the ladies playing meanwhile. The best praise of the affair was excellent: in consequence of the fact there were assembled a body of divers. The dinner having been well drilled, refreshments were again partaken of. Music when the dinner was over the cars was taken up, and when U-dopt was reached, the whole party were treated to an old, a military salute given to Mr. Rogan, everything passed off to the entire satisfaction of possessed, both at the East and in Europe, I am always enabled to obtain my Goods at as low prices as any one, and can afford to sell them cheaper, as my expenses are less.

Thanks to the Bar, Clergy and Catholic Schools, for their liberal patronage generally, for which I hope they will continue to favor me with the same as my new place of business—

Music Hall, First floor, San Jose, 5th-in A. WALDTEUFEL.

BRIEF CITY ITMS.

The time within which proxals for further ballotings for the sliding of the new City Hall were to be sent in to the Commissioners, has been postponed until Monday, May 29th, at-elve o'clock noon.

The Grand Army of the Republic will celebrate Memorial Day May 30th, in an appropriate manner. The Grand Marshal of the day is Major General Kearney, and his staff and aids will be composed of officers of the Regular Army.

Time for the Stockton and Copperopolis Railroad Company are constantly arriving from San Francisco.

SISTERS OF MERCY.—From the Chico (Butte county) Enterprise of the 19th we extract the following: Nine Sisters of Mercy arrived here by steamer on Sunday, who will take charge of the Academy building and open a school here shortly. Their object is the instruction of girls in every branch of useful education, and the visitation of the sick and destitute. Connected with their school it is probable they will have a "Home of Mercy," where particular attention will be paid to the protection of destitute and homeless females of good character. These Sisters have lately arrived from the East, where, during the late war, their benevolence was made manifest by their visits to the sick and wounded on the battlefields."

MR. P. J. MCMAHON, well known a year or two ago as the urbane proprietor of the Rose House saloon, has just fitted up in good style a saloon at 321 Montgomery street, between California and Pine, where he will be happy to see all friends and the public generally, and promises to treat them to the very best liquors.

MARRIED.

MAGINNIS—DOWLING.—In this city, May 24, at St. Mary's Cathedral, by Rev. Father Prendergast, Mr. Thomas Maginnis, of Vallejo, to Mary Dowling, of Solano county.

O'GRADY—SHANNAN.—In this city, May 23, at St. Mary's Cathedral, by Rev. Father Prendergast, Timothy O'Grady, of Virginia, Nev., to Mary Shannan, of San Francisco.

DIED.

FLYNN.—In this city, May 19, Ellen Flynn, née O'Brien, wife of John Flynn, a native of County Cork, Ireland, aged 32 years.

DUNNE.—In this city, May 18, Dennis, son of Dennis and Mary Dunne, aged 2 years and 7 months.

BRADY.—In this city, May 20th, James, son of Michael and Mary Brady, a native of Ireland, aged 2 years.

KELLY.—In this city, May 20, Mary Kelly, a native of Ireland, aged 23 years.

KELLY.—In this city, at the Sheriff's Office, May 20, Michael Kelly, a native of Ireland, aged 35 years.

DOLAN.—In this city, May 21, Catherine, wife of Michael Dolan, a native of the parish of Killeshandra, county Cavan, Ireland, aged 70 years.

BRADY.—In this city, May 22, Mrs. Ellen Brady, a native of County Cork, Ireland, aged 70 years.

BRIEN.—In Oakland, May 22, Lawrence Brien, a native of County Clare, Ireland, aged 70 years.

DOLLARD.—In Sacramento, May 19, Eugene T. O'Neil, a native of New Brunswick, aged 47 years.

FOLEY.—In Santa Valley-street-a half at 6 o'clock sharp. 21 2d

LAND MORTGAGE UNION

OF CALIFORNIA.

OFFICE, 183 POST STREET, SAN FRANCISCO.

GUARANTEE CAPITAL.....$250,000.

President.....J. H. PIKE.
Vice-President.....DANIEL D. TH. PH.
E. V. Hanaway, J. M. Johnson,
John Morton, Wm. Sherman,
E. D. Sawyer,
Treasurer.....JOHN MORTON.

INVESTMENT CAPITAL.....$207,500

In sending Shares, 1150 each. Entrance fee, 50 cents per Share. Further fully explained. In cases per week. Paid up shares, 1st of Dividends paid Quarterly, at the rate paid Congressional Committee.

Primary Meetings.

Notice is hereby given, That the Democracy of the several election precincts in the City and County of San Francisco, will assemble at the following places on THURSDAY, June 15, 1871, for the purpose of electing delegates to represent them in said General Convention; and that for all primary elections the polls shall be open from 12 o'clock M. to 8 o'clock P. M., and the cities of Gilroy and San José from 12 o'clock, M. to 8 o'clock P. M., at which time the polls of said precincts shall be held between the hours of 5 and 8 o'clock, P. M., of said day.

Apportionment.

It was further Resolved, That the apportionment of delegates to said County Convention shall be as follows:

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Alvarado | 1 | Mountain View | 1 |
| Berryessa | 1 | Mission | 3 |
| Bernal | 1 | Mission Dolores | 3 |
| Gilroy | 3 | San Mateo | 2 |
| Lagunitas | 1 | Spring Valley | 1 |
| Lexington | 1 | San Antonio | 1 |
| Los Gatos | 1 | San José, 1st Ward | 1 |
| Los Pinos | 1 | San José, 2d Ward | 1 |
| Lone Tree | 1 | San José, 3d Ward | 1 |
| Milpitas | 1 | San José, 4th Ward | 1 |

Each Precinct to be entitled to one delegate for every fifty votes cast for the Democratic candidate for Governor at the last election, and one delegate for a fraction of twenty-five votes.

Inspectors of election to receive $5 per day.

Judges of election to receive $5 per day.

Clerks of election to receive $5 per day.

No contracts for printing ballots, tickets, or other election matter, will be recognized by the Committee unless the same be approved by the Chairman and Secretary of the Committee.

No charges for the rental of polling places will be recognized by the Committee unless the same be approved by the Chairman and Secretary of the Committee.

By order of the Committee.

P. B. REYNOLDS, Chairman.

JAMES V. TISDALE, Secretary.

San José, May 20, 1871. 20-27

THE PICNIC

OF THE

SAINT PATRICK'S SCHOOL

WILL BE HELD

AT THE CITY GARDENS,

On Tuesday, May 30th.

Tickets.....Twenty-five Cents.

To be had at the School, and at Messrs. Flood and Batchelder's Bookstores. 20-27

DAY SCHOOLS

FOR

Boys and Girls.

THE SISTERS OF MERCY HAVE JUST COMPLETED a commodious School Building on First street, near Bryant, where they will be happy to receive pupils at the following rates:

A day school will be opened for Misses Pierce, and will be placed in charge of competent teachers.

Terms, per month, payable in advance:

Primary Department.....$ 3 00
Higher Branches.....5 00

FIRE AND MARINE INSURANCE.

Required better accommodations than at present, the undersigned inform the public that they have removed to their new and commodious OFFICE,

No. 436 California St.,

Between Montgomery and Leidesdorff, opposite the Merchants Exchange.

Bacon & Compe

Formerly Towne & Bacon, Have the office

5 Any other 3

5 Printing firm. 6

You can prove it

By giving them a Job

At the well known Office,

536 Clay Street

CLOTHING.

P. J. SULLIVAN & CO.

CUSTOM-MADE CLOTHING

FURNISHING GOODS,

THIRD STREET, 28 THIRD STREET

CLOTHING.

New Advertisements.

THE LADIES' FAIR,

IN AID OF

THE BUILDING FUND

OF THE

ST. BRIDGET'S CHURCH,

IS NOW OPEN AT

CENTRAL HALL,

Corner of Polk and Bush Streets,

And will close THIS (Saturday) EVENING on

The Tables are filled with the choicest articles ornamental as well as useful, and the Ladies solicit the patronage of their friends and the public to aid them in their noble work.

The Refreshment Tables are presided over and attended by gentlemen of ability, who will do their utmost to please. All the delicacies of the season are furnished at market rates.

A splendid band will be in attendance every evening.

The Poster and Polk street or Bush and Larkin Mission cars take passengers to the door. my20-11

GRAND CROWNING EXCURSION

OF THE

Thirteenth Grand Annual Excursion

AND

PICNIC

—OF THE—

MONTGOMERY GUARD,

CAPT. CHAS. QUINN, Commdg.

ON MAY 28th, 1871,

TO SAN RAFAEL.

The Steamer for the round trip, ONE DOLLAR, on sale at Lord, Lent, Lewis, Perrin, Stewart & Co.'s, Second street; Adjutant Tandrum's, Third street; E. C. Knight's, corner of Third and Townsend streets, or from any of the members of the Company.

The Committee of Arrangements, Captain Patrick Costa is engaged for this crowning Excursion. The Steamer Valle-ejo will start at 9 o'clock A. M. sharp. my26

LAND MORTGAGE UNION

OF CALIFORNIA.

OFFICE, 183 POST STREET, SAN FRANCISCO.

GUARANTEE CAPITAL.....$250,000.

President.....J. H. PIKE.
Vice-President.....DANIEL D. TH. PH.
E. V. Hanaway, J. M. Johnson,
John Morton, Wm. Sherman,
E. D. Sawyer,
Treasurer.....JOHN MORTON.

INVESTMENT CAPITAL.....$207,500

In sending Shares, 1150 each. Entrance fee, 50 cents per Share. Further fully explained. In cases per week. Paid up shares, 1st of Dividends paid Quarterly, at the rate paid Congressional Committee.

Primary Meetings.

Notice is hereby given, That the Democracy of the several election precincts in the City and County of San Francisco, will assemble at the following places on THURSDAY, June 15, 1871, for the purpose of electing delegates to represent them in said General Convention; and that for all primary elections the polls shall be open from 12 o'clock M. to 8 o'clock P. M., and the cities of Gilroy and San José from 12 o'clock, M. to 8 o'clock P. M., at which time the polls of said precincts shall be held between the hours of 5 and 8 o'clock, P. M., of said day.

Apportionment.

It was further Resolved, That the apportionment of delegates to said County Convention shall be as follows:

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Alvarado | 1 | Mountain View | 1 |
| Berryessa | 1 | Mission | 3 |
| Bernal | 1 | Mission Dolores | 3 |
| Gilroy | 3 | San Mateo | 2 |
| Lagunitas | 1 | Spring Valley | 1 |
| Lexington | 1 | San Antonio | 1 |
| Los Gatos | 1 | San José, 1st Ward | 1 |
| Los Pinos | 1 | San José, 2d Ward | 1 |
| Lone Tree | 1 | San José, 3d Ward | 1 |
| Milpitas | 1 | San José, 4th Ward | 1 |

Each Precin

OUR TREE.

Lift up your hearts, my brothers, for the time
Brings sign of fruit and flowers of richest hue;
And never deep snows have lain, a topic crime
To see trespass the hidden germ to struggle through
The mellow soil and drink the fragrant dew.

My brothers, did you not mark that this year's sun
Is warmer than the sons of former years?
Though still it shines remote, it does not burn
To take the eyelids and dry up the tears
Of each fresh, loaded primrose that appears.

My brothers, in the farmstead these are times
Of plenteous harvest, when the tree is come!
And as the weary husbandman refreshes home,
At eve, beneath the trees that shade his door,
He seems to hear the busy reapers hum.

But in the land, so fair and bright to see,
A cankerworm from one limb tranquilled root;
From it stands, a strong and stately tree,
Deep in its depths, but held by many a shoot;
But though it blooms, still it is bare of fruit.

Barren it stands, but countless lords are there,
That trembling in the autumn time to yield
Plenty for all the land, if patient care
Be taken now to trample down the field.
And sad young blossoms from the cold to shield.

The never long dreader since the year it bore
Unto the people bud or leaf or flower;
What time, my brothers, it appeared they the more,
Because they loaded more and knew its power,
To range the rankest grief, make sweet the hour.

But nerveless hands assailed it, or no sport
Or wantonness they took—for tender spray
That, unsullied, did the warm sunlight court,
When all the land was blossoming—gay, gay!
And all the birds were singing—"Spring is here!"

And ones were some who, when they saw the tree
Bore fruit the people valued more than all
Counted one length, still "twas for fair to yield;"
Then, shooting to the people, cried—"Behold!"
And when the people trusted and kept, they sold

The fair green bough into the people's foe,
Gaining their shame and endless entire deep.
Most terrible, for they were cursed in woe
Many who sold did shudder, and did leap.
Into the grave, wise-eyed, that they might sleep!

There let them sleep, if peace should to their fate;
But though it should not, still its fruit is free.
Taste not, my brothers, of the vermin prey,
Taste not the poison of the serpent's chimney!
And shake foul deeds aside, a world's display!

Learn and contempt they leave unto their sons;
With tarnished honor and with poverty are grazed—
But let the loathsome reptiles rest in peace—
Man's fate looks heavenward, and their day is past—
Our strength comes to us, and our hope at last.

That we are strong enough to stand at last,
And shake the shadow of long fear to nod.

So, banded round our fair and spreading tree,
We all stand up for what is good for all,
And whether red or blue our colors be
We say by this we stand—by this we fall—
And swear to die for each what's best for all.

And this fair tree, my brothers, hath a name
It's musical to accent when in spring
When high larks fill them with a vast acclaim,
Or woods, when all the cuckoos make shades ring
With echoes of the songs the wild birds sing.

And LIBERTY they call it. And on Goes
The people through weal and woe with it in the night,
That, bright as Bethlehem's star, o'er them appears,
To lay all at beholders with delight,
And be a miracle in all men's sight!

Liberty! Oh, my brothers, how shall I
Express it, that an instrument so weak
As tongue is, though it be tuned a great voice cry,
Can ever be equal to the sound it shot now sent,
If thou seek it good, no labor and no pain
Here run the wise and justice bars the way.

O Liberty! without thee we have sought
But chaff and ashes and as wine gone sour
Of grief! Perpetually have we sung
To win thy blossoms in our wild, sad show,
And now it comes to cheer us evermore!
—Dublin, 19th April.

A Manly Protest.

The following spirited and patriotic letter from the pen of Mr. John P. Prendergast, the distinguished author of the "Cromwellian Settlement," appears in the Dublin Nation of April 17th. We cannot too strongly recommend it to the attention of our readers:

If we were to hear of the Emperor of Russia issuing edicts for the [illegible] or of Poland should have liberty so break into newspaper offices in Warsaw like burglars, and carry away the types and printing presses, that the Polish judges (appointed and paid by Russia) should have power to supersede the last and have recourse to trial by jury, which had remained inviolate for six hundred and ninety-nine years, by removing the trial of a man the Government feared or hated from the natural judges, his neighbors, to any foreign district; if we heard of new corps of rural spies being added to the already existing police; if we heard of Russian soldiers (or Polish, but Russian-officered, and quartered by the Emperor on any district he chooses, and appointed to collect their pay at their own bayonets' point—if we were told of the new Russian and German pastures in Poland now substituted for the transplanted Polish gentry) having power to seize any one and by torture or imprisonment compel him to answer in secret and satisfy their suspicions about some of his friends, relatives or neighbors; and if their having a power to authorize the Russian and Polish police to break into the houses of the farmers of Poland, and stand armed among their terrified wives, mothers and daughters while they awoke from sleep—what would be thought of it and said of it in England? Would it not be denounced as tyrannical, and held up to the world that the Government was a [illegible] despotism?—unless, indeed, people came to the conclusion either that the Poles were deserving of no more sympathy than the Irish"—for such has been the latest, I was going to say manifestation, but with the proceedings of the Westmeath Committee before me that would be incorrect; I must change it to the enactment of the partisans of England to show their love to Ireland. These are the provisions of the Peace Preservation Act of last session. And I would ask myself seriously to reflect why it is tyranny in the one case and not in the other.

I know of only two reasons—one is that it is the act of the people of England, and in judging of it right place themselves in imagination among the enacting parties, which they would not do if it were done by a single despot; the other is, that it is done against "the Queen's Irish enemie," the justification of every cruelty from the days the English first landed here till now.

But all this is not enough! The present Ministry (the Brightand Gladstone Ministry) having brought this precious bill back to the statute book as a set of secret conspirators—for not one word was given to friend or foe, though their foes, the Irish gentry, taunted them for more than a year with the ignoring of their claims for new penal laws—as if they were determined to give no time to "the (queen's Irish enemie" to urge anything against it, and, having "crushed" it through the house, they now demand fresh powers and meet in secret committee on the state of Westmeath. To us Irish it will look of course only looks) like a common sleight of hand to smuggle in through the back door a new edition of the old piece of tinkering and new chains for the Irish. It is not so many ages since the Parliament was but a body of conspirators against the lands, liberties, lives, and good fame of the Irish people. "Gentlemen" have no fears of the police, they therefore are ready to give them arbitrary powers, which they really have already; but the common Irish"—the "natives"—are in quite another case. Suspend the Habeas Corpus Act, and guilty and guiltless alike tremble. There is no poor farmer, no humble but honest peasant that has offended a police constable, but may have his life—and the lives of his wife and sons and daughters—rendered miserable through fear of arrest. It is like the fear of the Lord Lieutenant's warrant being required to authorize an arrest. Any policeman can clap a man in prison, and then get the Lord Lieutenant's authority to detain him; or he can bring him up on suspicion to the magistrate, and get him remanded from week to week almost indefinitely; and, meanwhile, what is the state of his wife's, his daughters' and sons' minds? And our precious "Colonel Sir J. Stewart Wood, Chief of the Constabulary force in Ireland," says that the terror the people of King's county are in at this moment, at the idea of their liberty and character being put into the power of his "police," is the best proof of the value of the suspension of the Habeas Corpus Act. "It is having a very good effect pus. "It is having a very good effect now," says he to the committee. "I was at Clara, etc., and the people asked everywhere, 'what about the bill this morning and the suspension?'" The very notion naturally terrifies them. There is not a man, no matter how honest or innocent, who has an enemy of any kind or in any place, let alone among the police, but is and must be in terror.

During the late suspension of the Habeas Corpus Act (during the Fenian times) there was no man among the Irish that talked, walked or looked like a freeman that was in danger of arrest; and many a one paid the penalty, not only of his liberty but of his life or of his reason, by the prison cruelties he was subject to, merely on suspicion. Are these horrors on the point of being revived? I have sometimes wondered how it is that the people of England (I mean the Irish people not in the pay or under the patronage of England) are so treated. But the solution seems to be that there are two Englands—rural England and trading England—the latter free and powerful, the other (rural England) enslaved as a political power, and given up to the despotic rule of the landed proprietors, who cannot endure the rule of the people and peasantry that still survive should have any will of their own. Trading England, too busy to consider the state of the farmers and peasantry of their own country, are either ignorant of their condition or are content to see them in this state of thraldom, hoping in time to become landlords. They are, therefore, careless of the state of the Irish peasantry, or are desirous to have them reduced to the same degraded level as the peasantry of England. Every opposition the Irish offer seems to them resistance and rebellion to their rule, and they are ready to sanction every attack on the peasantry. I stop, sir, not for want of matter to urge, but from a belief that complaint is idle.

More Coercion.

Another Coercion bill for Ireland. Repressive enactments succeed each other as the wave follows wave on the ocean shore. Thick as sparks from the anvil edicts and fetterings laws fall and who-serial-number-is-the-beast? Public proper can tell how many coercion laws have been passed for Ireland. Short as time is possible, the coercion statute book is filled with new enactments. Change and rechange are publicly rung on the word "coercion," and yet it seems to have proved a failure.

TERMS PER QUARTER IN ADVANCE:
Board, Washing and Tuition ..... $75 00

Classical Course.
Tuition and Use ..... $30 00
Board ..... 45 00
Washing ..... 10 00
Bed and Bedding ..... 5 00
Physician's Fee ..... 5 00
Incidentals ..... 5 00
Piano ..... 10 00
Use of Library ..... 2 00
Use of Philosophical Apparatus ..... 2 00
Use of Chemical Apparatus ..... 2 00
Drawing and Painting, per month ..... 2 00
Use of Globes ..... 2 00
Graduation Fee ..... 10 00

Commercial Course.
Tuition and Use ..... $30 00
Board ..... 45 00
Washing ..... 10 00
Bed and Bedding ..... 5 00
Physician's Fee ..... 5 00
Incidentals ..... 5 00
Graduation Fee ..... 10 00

Preparatory Course.
Tuition and Use ..... $20 00
Board ..... 45 00
Washing ..... 10 00
Bed and Bedding ..... 5 00
Physician's Fee ..... 5 00
Incidentals ..... 5 00

Extra charges in addition to above terms:
Instrumental music and use of instrument, per month ..... $2 00
Harp ..... 3 00
Vocal Music in Class ..... 2 00
Proper Lessons ..... 3 00
Drawing and Painting in Water Colors ..... 2 00
Use of Bed and Bedding ..... 5 00

Second Session at Current Prices.

Each pupil is required to provide with the Academy uniform which is a black merino dress, with the addition in Winter and Spring of a cape of the same material. Any change in uniform will be made only by order of parents. Each pupil must provide two pairs of sheets, two pillow-cases, pair of blankets, counterpane, two towels, four table napkins, a fork and spoon, silver goblet, spoon, fork and napkin-ring; these articles to be marked with the name of the owner. Pupils must also provide a supply of clothing, which will be specified, also, two pairs of white net, and one pair of black lace veils, to be worn on certain occasions.

The Scholastic Year commences on the second Monday in August 15th, the second Jan-uary.

Pupils of any religious denomination will be received, but they will be required to be present at the regular religious services of the Church.

Pupils entering after the commencement of a term will be charged from the date of entrance to the end of the term, no deduction, however, will be made for pupils in case of sickness, absence, or withdrawal before the close of the term.

Parents may rest satisfied that every attention, consistent with the health and comfort of the pupils, will be paid to the comfort of the young ladies placed under their charge.

All correspondence of the young ladies will be subject to the inspection of the Superioress. Letters of inquiry may be addressed to the

MOTHER SUPERIOR.

ST. VINCENT'S COLLEGE,

LOS ANGELES, CAL.

THIS INSTITUTION, CHARTERED ACCORDING to the laws of the State of California, and empowered to confer honors, is situated in the city of Los Angeles, the most southern city of the State, and the CENTRE OF THE CATHOLIC POPULATION OF THE SOUTHERN PART OF THE STATE. In it, we devote ourselves to promote the health and comfort of the pupils, as well as the moral and intellectual advancement of the students entrusted to their care. Parents may rest assured that the young persons who are compelled to enter the primary course, and who are found incapable or unwilling to pursue it, will be duly notified, through either the Professors, Rector, or Prefect, through either the Professors, Rector, or parental.

STUDIES:

The course of studies embraces a full course of Mathematics, Ancient and Modern Languages, Natural Philosophy, Chemistry, Rhetoric, Logic, Moral Philosophy, Book-keeping, Commercial Law, Geography, History, Penmanship, Drawing, Painting in Water Colors and in Oil, Tapestry, Plain and Ornamental Needlework, etc., etc.

TERMS:

Board and Tuition (payable half-yearly) ..... $225
Washing ..... 10
Entrance Fee ..... 10

EXTRAS:

Piano and use of instrument (payable half-yearly) ..... $40
Harp " " " ..... 60
Violin " " " ..... 40
Vocal Music in Class ..... 40
Proper Lessons ..... 40
Drawing and Painting in Water Colors ..... 40
Use of Bed and Bedding ..... 10

School Books at Current Prices.

Each pupil is required to provide with the uniform which is a black merino dress, with the addition in Winter and Spring of a cape of the same material. Any change in uniform will be made only by order of parents. Each pupil must provide two pairs of sheets, two pillow-cases, pair of blankets, counterpane, two towels, four table napkins, a fork and spoon, silver goblet, spoon, fork and napkin-ring; these articles to be marked with the name of the owner. Pupils must also provide a supply of clothing, which will be specified, also, two pairs of white net, and one pair of black lace veils, to be worn on certain occasions.

The Scholastic Year commences on the second Monday in August 15th, the second, January.

Pupils of any religious denomination will be received, but they will be required to be present at the regular religious services of the Church.

Pupils entering after the commencement of a term will be charged from the date of entrance to the end of the term, no deduction, however, will be made for pupils in case of sickness, absence, or withdrawal before the close of the term.

Parents may rest satisfied that every attention, consistent with the health and comfort of the pupils, will be paid to the comfort of the young ladies placed under their charge.

All correspondence of the young ladies will be subject to the inspection of the Superioress. Letters of inquiry may be addressed to the

MOTHER SUPERIOR.

ST. VINCENT'S SCHOOL.

THIS INSTITUTION IS SITUATED IN SANTA Barbara, a short distance from the sea. The grounds are extensive, and the building is large and commodious.

The course of instruction embraces the usual branches of a thorough English education. Spanish is also taught.

TERMS

Invariably half-yearly in advance:

Board, tuition, bed, bedding, washing, etc., per annum ..... $150 00
Use of instrument, per month ..... $4 00
Tuition, per month, 45 cts. to ..... 1 00
No extra charge for Plain Sewing, Fancy Needle Work, etc.
The scholastic year of ten months and a half commences August 15th, and terminates on the last Thursday in June.
For further particulars apply to

SISTERS OF CHARITY,
Santa Barbara, Cal.

FRANCISCAN COLLEGE,

SANTA BARBARA, ..... CALIFORNIA.

THE FOURTH SESSION OF THIS INSTITUTION, conducted by the Fathers of the Order of St. Francis, will commence on August 1st.

The course of instruction will be a good English, Mathematical, Classical and Philosophical education, and thereby constitute a sound basis for all advantageous attainments.

TERMS:

Entrance Fee (to be paid but once) ..... $10 00
Tuition, Board and Washing, per session, of ten and a half months ..... 150 00
Music Classes and Lessons form extra charges.
Those who spend vacation at the college will be charged $50.
Pupils will pay for medical attendance, and supply their clothing, etc.
Money will, on no account be advanced by the college, for the use of pupils, nor will a pupil's clothing be sent to him, except at the expense of the parent or guardian.
For further particulars apply to

REV. J. J. O'KEEFE, O. S. F.
119

EDUCATIONAL.

SAINT MARY'S COLLEGE,

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

Conducted by the Christian Brothers,

Offers every facility for acquiring a thorough Education, viz: Classical, Scientific and Commercial.

Those who comb the Classical Course receive the Degree of Master of Arts, and those who complete the Commercial Course have established for the purpose a Bank, in which they transact business precisely as in a regular banking institution. Short as time is possible, and without neglecting the ordinary branch studies, the pupils are practically exercised in every kind of business transaction. Thus the Commercial Course not only imparts a thorough knowledge of our own language receives

PACIFIC COAST ITEMS.

The first spike of the Pacific division of the North Pacific Railroad was driven on Tuesday at Kalama (Oregon) with appropriate ceremonies.

The dwelling-house and outbuildings on Peterson's ranch, near Williams Landing, Santa Cruz county, were totally destroyed by fire May 19th. The inmates barely escaped with their lives.

Arrangements have been perfected by which passengers from Portland can reach Chicago in nine days. Connection from the Columbia river to Kelton is made by the Northwestern Stage Company.

The boarding house connected with Porter's tannery, near Soquel, Santa Cruz county, was destroyed by fire last week. An Indian boy perished in the flames. Loss about $3,000; uninsured.

The grain crop in the foothills of El Dorado, it is said, will be better than ever before known; and the vineyards in the foothills all over the State never looked better, and give token of a splendid vintage this season.

The Democratic "repeaters" of Colusa county deserve the palm of superior manipulation. They have increased the vote from 699 to 1,367 without an apparent effort, and Haight gets 1,200 out of 1,367!

The Martinez Enterprise of May 20 says: "Barley harvest in the Vicinity of San Pablo will reap abundant harvests this year, notwithstanding the drought. In some instances a yield of sixty bushels to the acre was anticipated—but these instances are few.

At Green's mine, between Auburn and Ophir, two and a half days crushing last week, with four stamps and one Hepburn pan, realized 185½ oz. of retorted gold. This is at the rate of $1,087 per day, and gives a total of about $36,000 within the past month.

The mining interests at San Rafael Valley, Lower California, are improving. During the past week $1,200 in gold were brought into San Diego from the placer mines. Arrangements have been completed for the erection of a quartz mill at the place.

It is said that 10,000 men will be put to work on the California Pacific eastern extension road in sixty days, and that its completion is to be hastened with all possible despatch.

The Castroville Argus of the 10th, says the railroad is finished across the Pajaro river and a construction train will run to Hollister the 1st of June. The crops near San Juan are equally as good as those of last year, but further out in the country they don't show to such advantage. The fruit prospect in this section is excellent. Strawberries in great plenty are in the market.

The Tuolumnian (Santa Cruz county) of May 18 says: "We have lately made many inquiries in regard to crops in this valley and vicinity, and the answers are generally in every instance been most encouraging. Wheat, barley, oats, flax, fruit trees, strawberries, etc., are all in excellent condition, and if we may judge from the appearance of all kinds of crops, there will be an immense yield."

The Arizona Miner (Prescott) of May 15 says: "The original Tiger Company's shaft was down on the lode about thirty-five feet, at which depth the vein of black sulphurets of silver was all about three feet thick. Water was not creeping in very fast. No side walls were visible, although the shaft is pretty wide. The Placer Mines of Hassayampa and other places are doing first rate. From Mojave county we have the most encouraging news. Min'ng is now constantly arriving at Wallapai district. New and rich ledges were constantly being discovered, and the work of developing and erecting furnaces, etc., was progressing favorably."

CATHOLIC ITEMS.

At Saratoga Springs, on the 30th of April, Mrs. Helen De Camp was received into the Catholic Church by profession of faith and conditional baptism, and made her first Communion on the third instant. Miss Helen De Camp was an Episcopalian. Her father-in-law, Dr. De Camp, of the United States Army, was received at the same place a few years since.

Rev. J. O. G. Scanlon, pastor of the Catholic Church at Mansfield, Ohio, died May 9th, at the Marcy Hospital, Pittsburg. Father Scanlon was pastor of the Mansfield Catholic Church for several years, and was widely known and esteemed.

DIED—On May 7th, THOMAS J. KELLY.—On the 10th ult. the mortal remains of the Rev. Thomas J. Kelly, pastor of the Church of the Sacred Heart, Bustleton, Penn., were consigned to the tomb.—Standard.

The Bulls have arrived from Rome appointing Father Fink prior of the Benedictines, Atchison, Kansas, Coadjutor Bishop of Leavenworth; also, that the prior of the Dominican convent at St. Clement's, in Rome, has been raised to the episcopal dignity. Father Fink was born in Pittsburg, Bavaria, July 12, 1834.

THE Most Rev. Dr. O'HEA.—We have been informed on the most reliable authority that it is contemplated transferring the Most Rev. Dr. O'Hea from the diocese of Ross to that of Killaloe. The Most Reverend prelate has been connected with the former diocese for a great number of years, and has always been eminent as a man of deep erudition, great piety and kindness of heart. Should the report be well founded—as we have every reason for supposing it is—the people of his diocese will sustain a great loss in his removal.—York Reporter.

THE Rev. Father Hogan.—We have no doubt that the subjoined extract of a letter recently received from Rome will be read with pleasure by the numerous friends of the Rev. Father Hogan in this country:

ROME, Tuesday, Palm Sunday.

I trust the recent events have not made you uneasy about me. The fact is, I am quite safe under the protection of the British flag. I was arrested on Holy Thursday in the afternoon, and spent the night in prison—but very pleasantly—and getting a grand opportunity of seeing life in quite a new aspect. I fully availed myself of it. The next day (Good Friday) I was claimed by the British embassy and set free. Two several of our priests are still confined, and the others have taken to flight. All the may be over when this reaches you; at all events it calms last long. I have no time to add more to-day. We have no post from Paris, and I await myself of an opportunity to send you a few lines, and set your mind at rest as far as may be needful.

J. HOGAN.

Subscriptions Received.

Per Rev. Father Hogan, Rome:

Per Rev. Father Scanlon, Mansfield, Ohio:

Per Rev. Father Kelly, Bustleton, Penn.:

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

ENGLAND.

Communism in London.

The "London Democrats" are illustrating the curious difference in the treatment which is meted out to the expression of English opinion and tothat of Irish opinion respectively. These gentlemen have during the last ten days held one or two meetings for the purpose of expressing their sympathy with the French Communists and their abhorrence of the cruelties alleged to have been recently practiced by the Versailles troops. They attempted to justify the atrocities of the Commune; but they did not stop at this. One of them went on to declare, amid the hearty applause of his fellows, that the time was not far distant when they would all be called upon to assist in turning Englishmen "in dustlooning" Monarchy, in turning Buckingham Palace into a workshop, and in pulling down the Duke of York's Column, as the noble French people did the 'vendome Column.' It is needless to say what would befall an Irishman who uttered such opinions in Dublin. In London such opinions may be expressed with perfect impunity. In connection with this matter, we are glad to observe that our countrymen in London, who have been recently described as the sawdust of the London Communists, have dissociated themselves, let us hope finally, from those men. The gentlemen who by their church during not one, but both sieges, in spite of shot and shell, famine and disease, and the peril of being arrested as hostages and shot by the Reds.—London Universe, June 17.

Catholic Education.

A public meeting was held on Tuesday afternoon at Willis' Rooms, in order to receive the report of the Committee engaged in promoting Catholic education in Great Britain. The Duke of Norfolk presided. The Hon. Secretary, Mr. Allies, read the report, by which it appeared that £6,000 had been subscribed to the fund during the past year; that the Catholic population of Great Britain is about a million and a half, that 158,000 children are at school, and that 82,000 still require to be provided for. During the last year one hundred and thirty new schools were built, thirty-four were enlarged and sixteen were hired. It was also stated that, in addition to the sum named above, local efforts had produced about £65,000. The Marquis of Bute moved a resolution in favor of continued action, and said that he had hope for the future of Catholicity in England. It embraced many classes, and it was to be remarked that lately, when it was proposed to hold a public meeting in London to express sympathy with the Communists, it was the fear of Irish Catholic opposition that stopped it. This would not have been dreamed of at the time of the Irish riots. He believed that in future Catholics in England would not merely issue protests, but by acts would influence the affairs of the world. Lord Herschell said that the events which had taken place in France ought to cause all to abandon who wished to provide religious education for the young. Several other speakers having addressed the meeting, the report and resolutions were adopted: and the usual vote of thanks having been passed, the proceedings terminated. — London Universe, June 17.

Germany and England.

The Hechingen Gazette of Berlin says that, although the wishes of Germany for the acquisition of Heligoland have not yet been officially stated, "it is impossible not to recognize the great importance of such a measure for the development of the German naval power. The value of the island was very clearly shown in the last war, when, although its neutrality was strictly observed both by Great Britain and its inhabitants, it yet formed an advanced starting-point for the blockade of the enemy. It would have been a very different matter if Germany had been at war with England instead of with France, and Heligoland had served as the headquarters of an English fleet for observing and blockading the mouths of the Elbe, the Weser and the Jahde, and for attacking the towns on the German coast. The question of the acquisition of this island, which, as shown by the above facts, is of much importance to us, must inevitably be taken into consideration sooner or later, however extensive the reports of negotiations for such a purpose may be at present.

The Power of Britain.

What will become of our step mother, England, should she have to go to war? The Government have practically abandoned the idea of keeping up a large army, and the English army as it is, and as it is likely to be for years to come, is barely sufficient to garrison Ireland and furnish escorts for the English Royal family. And England cannot always hope to be at peace with all the world. She has enemies who are watching their opportunity to pounce down upon her, and it is evident that the dear old lady, who is so very watchful over invaders, is woefully guards us from ourselves—who so conscientiously and portinaciously plunders us—in that case will go down to the end of existence without a struggle.—Irishman, June 17.

FRANCE.

The Arrest of Rossel and Courbet.

The Gaulois gives the following account of the discovery and arrest of the ex-military chief of the Commune:—On Wednesday morning the Secretary of Police for the Quartier St. Victor received information that the ex-General of the Commune, Rossel, was in concealment at the Hotel Montebello, upon the Boulvard St. Germain. The Commissary proceeded to the hotel, and upon searching the place found in a room on the third floor a person dressed in the uniform of the 105th Battalion of Paris service. Upon being questioned this person stated that his name was Gaillard, that he was an employé in the line at Metz, but been summoned to Paris by the railroad managers to assist in the pressure of traffic on the line. "Are you sure of that?" asked the Commissary. "Perfectly sure." "Well, in the name of the Republic I arrest you. You are Rossel." "I? not at all." The prisoner then broke into the Prefecture de Police established at the Barracks of the Cité, and there in a boat to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, where the headquarters of the municipal police are established. During the whole journey thither, being closely pressed with questions by the Commissary, the pretended Throbois continued his denials. Upon being further interrogated at the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, he replied, "I have told you all I know about myself. You do not ask me any more." Throbois was then conveyed to the Ministry of War, where in the presence of a number of persons he declared who were detained in custody. Some of these declared that he was Rossel, but others, the majority, denied that he was the Communist ex-General. About ten o'clock at night the prisoner was formally questioned as to his history. When the customary question, "What is the name of your mother?" was put, he became confused, turned red, and, suddenly springing up, exclaimed, "Why carry on this pretence any longer? Of what good is the acting and those lies? Yes, I am Colonel Rossel." After this avowal the prisoner was placed under close custody at the depot of the Prefecture. Upon being searched there was found two loaded revolvers and a dagger in his belt. A political article and a longitudinal section of the different public monuments in Paris, the last day he was to see Versailles and lodged at the Gaulois Pavilion, and a real description of the National Bonds.—M. Brisse (Cotes du Nord), September 9, of Louis and Sarah Campbell. The Figaro and other Paris artist Courbet was [illegible] one of his friends [illegible]

Russia.

M. Francisque Sarcey, in the Gaulois, referring to the terrible events of the era of the Commune, says: "Many of our judgments, and whose words may be unhesitatingly accepted, have related to me scenes which they themselves had witnessed. Among these men, handsome and well dressed, rushing into the street, revolver in hand, and firing into the mass of combatants. Being asked why they exclaimed in fierce tones and laughing accents, they answered that they were about being captured in a house from the windows of which shots had been fired upon the soldiers, was being bound prior to being sent to Versailles for trial, when she cried out, 'Oh, gentlemen, pray, save me from this journey,' and placing herself against a wall, with her arms extended and her bosom bared, she seemed to court the sweet death. All the women who were summarily executed by the infuriated soldiers died with insults on their lips and with a smile of disdain, at anyone who sacrificed their lives as a noble act of duty."

A Young Communist.

The hospital at Vincennes is occupied chiefly by wounded insurgents, including a great number of boys. One of these visited the hospital was attracted by the appearance of a little fellow between fourteen and fifteen years of age who had been wounded by a splinter of a shell while fighting at the barricades. The boy was the son of a cabman, a clever and intelligent expression. The lady moved to his side, asked how he had been involved in the dreadful tragedy. "The communists," replied the lad, with that hoarse and startling accent peculiar to the street gamin. "My father and my mother said to me one day, 'You, who will never do anything, you idler, will now be of use.' And, well, I followed them carrying a heap of cartridges. When my father got killed I took his musket, and did like the others, firing into the lot. As to mother, the last time I saw her she was carrying a big pot containing something, but what has become of her I don't know; no doubt she had her business settled in some corner."

GERMANY.

Germania Rejoicing.

Germania is jubilant this week. Berlin has blossomed into flags, and Unter den Linden gleams with Bengal lights, gilsenlights and illuminations. The trees are full of foliage, while their reflected lustre brightens the darkness of the engraved French cannon that line both sides of the Via Triumphales of the reentering Prussian soldiers. The formal entry of victory took place on Friday, and Sunday is to be observed as a day of thanksgiving, when the pious William will thank the Lord of Hosts from whom all blessings flow that he has been enabled to send many thousand Teutons down below. The old, old story. Men fall out and fight, one is beaten, and the other immediately proceeds to sing hymns to the Creator in celebration of the event, as if God should be propitiated by the slaughter of His creatures which He put here to love one another! This version to the Prussian army has been dearly bought and well deserved; but beneath the shining robe of joy there is a mournful undercurrent. There are two sides to the picture. As the Duke of Wellington said once, there is no such sad sight in the world after a great defeat as a great victory. Germany has had a great victory, and many a household will long remember it in the vacant chair of some loved one, or in the bowed figure of the bread-winner who had once been strong and hearty. There is a sketch by a Polish artist, in the return of the "reform," which will run in our heads in spite of us as we catch the echo of those shouts of German exultation. It represents a room by the open window of which the band of a Hussar regiment is passing. Wreaths are showered on the soldiers' heads by the populace. Within an elderly man in black sits expectantly over a photograph. It is the portrait of his soldier boy, a hussar in the same corps, who has lost his life somewhere on the field of foreign victory. We wonder how many such were missing from the ranks in that pageant, at Berlin. Considered as a mere pageant it was very grand and pompous. At the head of the troops fluttered eighty-one French eagles, flags and standards. The march into the city was heralded by all generals and colonels who were not called to their regiments during the war, led by Field Marshal von Wrangle. They were followed by the officers of Ministry of War, officers of the staff, aide-de-camp attached to the head quarters, Governors-general, and commanding officers and Inspectors-general present. Then came the Grand Duke of Mecklenburg, the Crown Prince of Saxony, Generals Steinmetz and von Manteuffel. The Emperor King was preceded by Prince Bismarck and Generals von Roon and von Moltke, and followed by the Crown Prince Frederick Charles, and foreign Princes. Then came the troops. After the march past the Emperor addressed to Frederick William III, was unveiled, and the ringing of the bells and salutes of one hundred guns and one guns. The feeling throughout was sober for the occasion, for it is plain that Germany's work is just ended will be re-commenced before many years. In fact, this place is but a truce longer than usual. France can never stomach the lowering of her military prestige and the loss of Alsace and the provinces of Lorraine.—London Universe, June 17.

Catholicity in the Principalities.

We learn that the Lieutenant-Colonel of Gendarmerie in Vienna, that Mgr. the Bishop of Bucharest, better known to the faithful in those colonies as the Count Ignatius Paoli, of the order of Passionists, is at present in the Austrian capital on business connected with his mission. His diocese embraces Wallachia and Bulgaria in their entirety. In Bulgaria, and Catholicism in every region spread over it numbers close on 40,000, clustered here and there in nooks and corners of the country. Any where from 18,000 of our brethren with only one church —chapel rather should it be called—and a priest to fitly afford accommodation for a congregation of seven hundred at the utmost; in fact, the edifice is rarely so. As the occurrences are referred by some observers to "accidental" circumstances, and by others to "providential"—although it explained—no one was injured, the Bishop has sent notice to the religious of St. Bernard alle-Terme and to those of Monte-Cassino that their houses are open to all sorts of guests. This is part of the new liberty for which the Romagnas and the Piedmontese rule, and freed themselves from the easy paternal government of the Holy Father.—London Universe, June 17.

Forebodings.

Signor Gallenga, sometime special correspondent of the Times, a distinguished foreigner with peculiar antecedents, is to-day sick at heart, we mean. He has poured out his complaints in the Daily News. He is afraid Henry V. will be presumed in France, and that, he says, means a new crusade undertaken for the restoration of the temporal power of the Pope. Perhaps, Signor, might "set the suit-same thing in attempted under the rose" public? It was an army of the French republic that brought Pio Nono back to his city from exists. The only consolation we can offer the ex-Italian deputy is the melancholy one that France is so rent by recent shocks that she must repair the damages in her own house before she again indicates her right to the proud title of eldest daughter of the Church. Signor Gallenga hopes Italy will fortify herself in preparation for the coming danger. That is, he urges on Italians to get in trim to fight France, to stamp their own Communists out, and, we may, even their existence on the map. And this before bleeding France misdeeds of any movement! This is gratitude of a thoroughly Sub-Alpine cast. — Universe, June 17.

IRISH INTELLIGENCE.

Earl Spencer Speechmaking.

Lord Spencer is "on the stump"—if we may be allowed to take this conveniently ready and most intelligible way of describing to the public his Excellency's employment in the South; and indefatigable truth bids us to say that Lord Spencer is stumping to no great purpose. He might as well, or better, have just quietly taken his ease at his Viceregal Lodge, and patronized the Trinity College Races, for, in the former case, he would have saved himself the terrible worry of making tiresome little speeches in every town—which, in a man of his Excellency's calibre, must be a very trying duty; and in the College Races he would have found some loyal people to cheer him, instead of being chilled and disgusted by the disloyal cheering and the bullet whizzing past the doctor's head, and the skulking away of the would-be assassin in front of the mail. In Cork he went on horseback, looking most graciously and assiduously at the ladies. The good doctor was congratulated on his fortunate escape from the ingenious and daring scribe concluded, that the bullet was aimed at the Lord Lieutenant. They say that a lie with twenty-four hours' start cannot soon be overtaken, but as the world progresses, and the people become wise to this process, for the lie before us, with only a few hours' start of the truth, was overtaken by the "careless indifference" of the great mass of the people, and the "idle-ness" of the rest. In Cork he went on horseback, looking most graciously and assiduously at the ladies. The good doctor was congratulated on his fortunate escape from the ingenious and daring scribe concluded, that the bullet was aimed at the Lord Lieutenant. They say that a lie with twenty-four hours' start cannot soon be overtaken, but as the world progresses, and the people become wise to this process, for the lie before us, with only a few hours' start of the truth, was overtaken by the "careless indifference" of the great mass of the people, and the "idle

WEEKLY CALENDAR.
FOR THE WEEK ENDING JULY 22.
July
16—Sunday—Seventh Sunday after Pentecost. B.V. M. of Mount Carmel.
17—Monday—St. Alexius, Confessor.
18—Tuesday—St. Camillus of Lellis, Confessor.
19—Wednesday—St. Vincent of Paul, Confessor.
20—Thursday—St. Jerome Æmilian, Confessor.
21—Friday—St. Praxedes, Virgin.
22—Saturday—St. Mary Magdalen.

THE MONITOR:
THE ONLY
Irish or Catholic Journal in California.
SATURDAY.....JULY 15, 1871.

A SILLY REPLY.

The Alta of Tuesday last contains a letter, purporting to come from a German, in reply to our article, "Raising Factional Issues." We do not think it is the genuine production of a German at all; and in any case it is a foolish sort of document. Our idea that it does not emanate from a German, but was coined for political purposes by some Yankee Radical, is based upon the circumstances that its style is not that which one might fairly expect from a Teuton, and that the writer speaks of the "expression made use of by one of our fellow-citizens at a late German mass meeting in Pacific Hall." This does not read like the way in which a German would talk of his own countrymen; it much more closely resembles the manner in which a stranger, one sympathizing with but not belonging to these "fellow-citizens," would allude to them. Of course, it matters little whether the communication referred to was penned by a German or an American, the salient points it deals with remain the same; but, in the latter case, the letter is exposed to the odium of having been put forward under false pretenses as a political dodge. We have said it is really a foolish document, and we have properly characterized it. It contains no answer whatsoever to the assertions made in the article published in our issue of July 1st, but a string of nonsense with a number of false issues dragged in for the sake of effect. It says, for instance, the Germans previously supported the Democracy because they were deceived by a "high-sounding title." This is a singular excuse for a German to make in behalf of his fellow-countrymen! We confess we have a much higher and better opinion of the intelligence of the Germans than to suppose them foolish enough to be duped by a mere name. Our belief is that they supported the Democracy because they heliestly thought it the best party for the welfare of the foreign element, and best calculated to advance the interests of this country. If they did so for any other or less creditable reason we imagine a man of their own blood ought to be the very last to disclose that disreputable circumstance. The Alta's correspondent next presents us with his estimate of the Democratic party, saying it is "generally composed of ex-slaveholders, secessionists and Irish Jesuits," and he very boldly challenges THE MONITOR to prove the contrary! When a man condescends to talk arrant nonsense like this there can be no earthly use in arguing with him, and the wisest course is to pass by his ravings with contempt. It is more the duty of respectable and intelligent Germans, when brought into literature by the silly utterances of this correspondent, to refute his unfounded assertions than it is ours. Germans contribute as much proportionately to the strength of the Democratic party as the men of any other nationality, and therefore its fair fame concerns them quite as deeply. So, very probably, we might venture to leave Mr. "F. S." to the tender mercies of his own countrymen—a large number of whom, since they cannot be "Irish Jesuits," must be included among the "ex-slaveholders and secessionists," of whom he speaks so slightingly. The Alta's correspondent, in his anxiety to bring some plausible charge against the Democrats, seizes hold of the financial condition of New York, and attributes the great increase of the debt of that city to Democratic corruption. This is the first and the best argument used by Radical spouters and scribblers whenever they want to cite a "fearful example" of Democratic extravagance. "Only look at New York and—look at New York again"—such is their incessant cry. And yet, "notwithstanding all their gr[illegible]ess, the financial condition[illegible]est and greatest city of [illegible] is no reproach to the pres[illegible] party. If the debt of New York has been increased, the money has been spent in improving and embellishing one of the largest cities in the world. It has been spent upon works of real utility, and the consequence New York is at the present moment the most prosperous and flourishing city on the American continent. Moreover, it must be remembered that New York is by no means the most heavily taxed city in its municipal rates are not as high as those of some minor cities that enjoy the blessing of Radical rule. As another "awful illustration" of Democratic recklessness in money matters, "F. S." mentions the Commissioners which are so frequently created here in San Francisco, the comfortable salaries of which are distributed as rewards for political services. There is no argument in this fact, for Democrats find fault with these unnecessary and expensive Commissions just as vehemently as Republicans do; and Republicans are every bit as fond of snug salaries as the Democrats are. In short, the evils of Commissions are deplored by men of all parties and countenanced by men of all parties. The Alta's correspondent winds up his epistle by an allusion to a conflict between the Irish and Germans. Well, we will have no conflict whatever. If the Germans, or any number of them, wish to pass over to the Republican ranks they are, certainly at full liberty to do so; and their action, foolish though it be, will meet with no opposition from Irishmen as a body. It is only when foolish people like Mr. "F. S." attack us, and propose to change sides for the single purpose of opposing us, that we will even go so far as to remonstrate. The conduct of the Irish during the late war, in sympathizing so warmly with the French, and denouncing so energetically the behavior of the Prussians, may have been wrong, or may have been right; but, whether it was right or wrong, it can have no connection with American politics, and should not influence the course of men of any party. The introduction of European dissensions, of national antipathies, into our electoral campaigns in this country, is a thing to be deprecated and discountenanced by every true and loyal citizen. Equally censurable is the importation of religious intolerance. An "Irish Jesuit" has as much right to run for office or hold a high position in the country. But we can inform "F. S." that "Irish Jesuits" will never trouble him in this way—they have something better to do.

THE ALTA'S "SAUCE."

The Alta varies the monotony of its natural stupidity now and again by a startling fit of insanity. After plodding along for some time in its usual heavy, blundering fashion, it suddenly makes a fling and cuts a series of most extravagant capers, to the intense astonishment of all beholders. This strange paroxysm does not last; it quickly passes away, and the venerable sheet relapses into its pristine sluggishness. A more than ordinarily violent spasm of this temporary insanity manifested itself in the columns of our contemporary on last Sunday morning. In spite of its age and infirmities, nothing in the world would please the Alta but to make believe it was as full of fun and vivacity as any of its young rivals. Accordingly, it presented its readers on the day mentioned with a "squib" and exceedingly "smart" composition headed "Sauce," and attributed to some person styling himself "Ignotus Magnus." As a specimen of what the Alta considers sharp and witty, we give the second paragraph of the precious combination of journalistic literature. Here it is in full:

"The 'Irish Exiles,' we learn, are organizing a 'brotherhood' which is to supersede the Fenian arrangement. The lean kine are going to devour the fat. We do not at this moment remember if the plague of lice succeeded the plague of locusts, or vice versa. It is unimportant."

We beg our readers to study this for a while. We venture to assert that it contains a species of "wit" with which they have been very rarely made acquainted by respectable newspapers. Now the Alta affects to consider itself the very embodiment of staid decorum and serious responsibility; consequently, when it does unbend itself, relax its risible muscles, and indulge in light badinage, we are led to expect something worthy of a great mind at play. We know, or ought to know, that we are doomed to disappointment—that it is sheer folly to hope for anything graceful or spiritual from such a mass of stupid, imbecile old-fogyism—yet we sometimes can't help falling into the trap, and allowing ourselves to be deceived by false pretenses. But, fail as our contemporary is, we hardly think it would attempt to pass off the foregoing paragraph—or anything in the remotest way resembling it—as for wit or fine writing, if it were not laboring under a grievous fit of its chronic aberration of intellect. Every individual in a healthy frame of mind this paragraph will seem to contain nothing but nastiness. No Irishman will complain of the fact that "Ignotus Magnus," whoever he is, does not sympathize with the cause of nationality or think highly of the men engaged in promoting it. This "Great Unknown" is on American soil, and is therefore free to hold and express whatever opinion he pleases respecting Irish national organizations and the men directing them. For our part we should be exceedingly sorry to see any attempt to interfere with his freedom of speech. Yet, we maintain, freedom should never be allowed to degenerate into license; nor should open criticism be allowed to turn into foul abuse. There is such a thing as public decency, and it ought be respected under all circumstances. A well-defined line exists beyond which no contributor to the pages of a newspaper should be suffered to go; and, it seems to us, Mr. "Ignotus Magnus" has passed over it a very long way. Respectable Americans are not likely to tolerate filthy language, no matter against whom it may be used. Billingsgate always reflects more discredit upon the person using it than upon the individual at whose head it is hurled. Comparing a body of men to vermin simply insults good taste, and shows neither wit nor smartness. Indeed the paragraph to which we are referring has no pungency whatever; it is destitute of the redeeming feature of appositeness, and is wholly and purely repulsive. Our contemporary, if it is wise, will treat the public to no more of this "sauce." People may endure inoffensive stupidity for the sake of old associations; they may even put up with a brief fit of recklessness now in awhile, but writing which is only filthy, which is calculated to excite sensations of disgust, they most certainly will not countenance. And any man who disputes the public of California so low as to think they can stomach language like that used by "Ignotus Magnus," will soon find out to his bitter cost that he has made a very serious mistake. Let our venerable contemporary return as quickly as possible to that fine old impressive stupidity which is its natural characteristic, and which it can never totally shake off. Any attempt to ape juvenile manners, to copy the speech and actions of younger and more vigorous journals, is sure to end by making Madame Alta contemptible.

THE ORANGE SOCIETY.

A great deal of misconception exists in the public mind, especially in America, with reference to the origin and nature of the Orange Society. Very many people imagine it to be in some way a defensive association, and therefore entitled to a certain degree of sympathy. Its advocates constantly put forward the idea that it was formed to resist "popish aggression," and persons who would be sorely puzzled to define what is meant by this take it as sufficient justification. But there is not in reality a particle of truth in either of these assertions. From the very day of its inception the Orange Society figured as an aggressive and intolerant body, and so it has continued down to the present time. Its first appearance was made towards the close of the last century. Its members were not then called Orangemen, but Defenders, and Peep o' day Boys. The object they proposed to themselves was to prevent Catholics from holding any land or being accepted as tenants by lords of the soil. About the period we have mentioned the rigor of the penal laws was considerably relaxed. The landlords began to see the bad policy of keeping the Catholics in a position of helotry, and occasionally gave them leases of their farms for short terms. This was taken up as a grievance by the Protestant agriculturalists, or, at all events, by a section of them, and they formed a secret oath-bound league to drive the unfortunate Catholics from the soil and prevent them from occupying even the position of tenants-at-will. We are now making no random statement, or employing the language of prejudice, but simply recording what has been declared to be the case by British Parliamentary inquiries. Protestant ascendancy was then so unquestioned that even men who would indignantly deny being bigots thought it unparalleled presumption for a Catholic farmer to expect a lease of his holding, or for a Catholic townsman to expect to hold lowest learn a handicraft. The Defenders soon became very numerous, and the moment they found themselves strong enough they inaugurated a persecution of the "papists" that seemed like a civil war for their utter extermination. They attacked the houses of their adversaries, not only by night, but also in the open day; they killed their cattle; they rooted up their growing crops; they destroyed their farming implements; they burned their barns and outhouses; they even gave their dwellings to the flames, and not unfrequently massacred all the inhabitants. To such a terrible extent did they carry their fiendish operations that Plowden, a Protestant historian, says in the county of Armagh alone upwards of seven thousand persons were rendered homeless in less than two years, and compelled to fly for their lives. Outrages of the most dreadful kind, and murders appalling in their heartlessness and brutality, were committed by the score. Be it remembered that no authority—Catholic or Protestant, English or Irish—accuses the unfortunate victims of any offense whatsoever; their religion was their first, last and only crime! But the policy of Great Britain was producing discontent even among Irish Protestants, and the principles of freedom were making much progress among the people. The Society of "United Irishmen" was then founded, and its ranks rapidly filled up. How different was this patriotic association from the Orange body! The first article in its constitution will indicate clearly enough the spirit which animated it. It was as follows:

First—This Society is constituted for the purpose of forwarding a brotherhood of affection, a communion of rights, and a union of power among Irishmen of every religious persuasion, and thereby to obtain a complete reform in the Legislature founded on the principles of civil, political and religious liberty.

Our readers will see that there is nothing of republicanism or revolution in this declaration. At first the United Irishmen only proposed to work for what—facetiously perhaps—has been termed "constitutional reform;" but a deeper study of their own rights, and a more thorough acquaintance with the temper of the English Government, convinced them that it was useless to expect satisfactory reform, and that the only salvation for the country lay in complete national independence. Then they became republicans in principle and revolutionary in object. The immense success that greeted the Society of United Irishmen absolutely terrified the foreign Government. The British Ministers knew that union among Irishmen meant the speedy overthrow of foreign usurpation and the establishment of an Irish Republic! They determined then, at all hazards and at every cost, to put an end to the happy fraternization between Catholic and Protestant. They immediately directed their attention to the Defenders in the North, who were still murdering Catholics and wrecking their houses. They deliberately determined to turn this blood-thirsty organization to their own purposes, and give it a political as well as religious and agrarian character. As the name "Defender" was in extremely bad odor with men of all persuasions, and had been made forever infamous by the murderings, wreckings and burnings of which we have spoken, it was resolved to change the name of the organization and accordingly it was called the "Orange Society," and its members dubbed themselves "Orangemen." The first lodge was founded in Armagh, which was the chief scene of the operations of the Defenders, and the first Grand Master was a Mr. THOMAS VERNER. This was in 1795. The oath taken by members, as given in a book called, "A View of the Present State of Ireland," published in 1797, and written by a Protestant, was couched in these terms:

"In the awful presence of Almighty God, I, A. B., do solemnly swear that I will, to the utmost of my power, support the King and the present Government; and I do further swear that I will use my utmost endeavors to extirpate all the Catholics of the kingdom of Ireland."

Oaths of a yet more horrible and truculent nature were taken by the Grand Lodge of the lower orders; but the above was that originally taken by all, sanctioned by the Grand Masters and the aristocratic members of the fraternity. We ask free and intelligent Americans, we ask men of all countries, to compare this test oath with that of the United Irishmen, the only secret society of which Catholics have been members in any strength. We would also ask the friends of the rights of man throughout the world, what wonder is it if counter-organizations soon sprang up among the Irish Catholic peasantry, if violence was met with violence? Could human beings, men of flesh and blood, see themselves wantonly attacked, their crops destroyed, their houses burned, their brothers, wives and sisters butchered in cold blood, without making some attempt at retaliation? At the same time, we wish it particularly to be borne in mind that there is no instance on record of a Catholic of any respectability or social position countenancing—much less supporting—Ribbonism or any other of the organizations which the outraged and harassed peasantry started in self-defence. On the contrary, it is well authenticated fact—one which cannot be questioned—that the Catholic hierarchy and priesthood were the most determined opponents of those secret combinations, and exerted all their power to put them down. Whether they acted wisely or not in this we shall not now discuss; but the fact remains as we have stated, at all events. The Catholic gentry likewise were antagonistic to these secret societies, and used all their endeavors to destroy them. The fiendish maneuver of the British Ministers was attended with immense success. The scoundrels who were "under a cloud" as Defenders or Peep-o'-day boys came boldly out in the glow of sunlight as Orangemen. The organization spread over the land and found its way into all classes of society, from the lowest up to the highest. The militia of the country were almost to a man Orangemen; the officers were Orangemen; the magistrates were Orangemen; all the Government employés and officials of every grade were Orangemen; the judges on the bench who were invested with powers of life and death were Orangemen; the very Cabinet Ministers who carried on the affairs of the country were Orangemen. It is easy to imagine the condition of unhappy Ireland under a regime like this. Catholics had absolutely no protection for life or property, and the administration of justice was nothing but a huge fraud. The enormities of the Government favorites were carefully hushed up, and the complaints of the subjugated race were treated with contempt. The Orangemen of course became the great foes of the Republican brotherhood, and set themselves very heartily to the work of rendering a patriotic fraternity among Irishmen of all creeds mortally impossible. They were availed of for this purpose by the Government, and were patronized and encouraged by the foreign rulers of Ireland as men who were of service to them in keeping the country in subjection. From that day to this they have proved a curse to the land, and been the cause of much bloodshed and disturbance. As times passed on, and the Government felt sure they could hold the country securely without their aid, the Orangemen were gradually repudiated by the authorities, and again came into bad repute among the dominant class. In 1845 the Association was declared illegal, and a sham attempt was made to put it down. But the infernal machine was too useful to be permanently discarded, and, after a brief period of quiescence, it resumed active operations. It is no secret that in 1848 the Orange Lodges received arms from Dublin Castle to be used in case the "Young Ireland" rebellion gained any strength. Since then they have waned in their popularity with the British Ministers, and much of their ancient glory has departed. The time-honored sport of shooting "mere papists," and firing the roof over the heads of slumbering families, has fallen into desuetude, and the most heroic achievement which can now be performed by the partisans of glorious WILLIAM is a parade on 12th July wound up by a riot. To judge of the spirit which has animated the Orange Society ever since its foundation, it is only necessary to recall the fact, that in its corporate capacity, as an organized body, it opposed by petitions, remonstrances, speeches, agitation of every kind, all concessions to the just claims of the Roman Catholics. Every successive abandonment of penal legislation seemed to throw them into paroxysms of rage, and was signalized by the commission of desperate outrages. They petitioned the British and Irish Parliaments in terms which almost amounted to menace, against permitting Catholics to celebrate or assist at Mass, against permitting Catholics to hold leases, against allowing Catholics to hold mortgages, against allowing Catholics enter the liberal professions, against allowing Catholics to exercise the franchise, against allowing Catholics to act as jurors, against permitting Catholics to acquire or inherit real estate, against allowing Catholics to educate their children. Of these things there can be no denial because they are one and all proven by documents extant, and to be seen at the present day. The records of them are preserved in the archives of the British Parliament, and the papers connected therewith have been frequently published to the world.

Now, in the name of common justice, we ask fair-minded men, is it strange or singular that Catholics should cherish feelings of antipathy against a Society the influence of which has always been used to keep them in a state of slavery and degradation in their own land? Is it at all to be wondered at that Irish Catholics should detest an organization whose very first principle is a desire to deprive them of the rights of men and reduce them to the position of helots? But the antipathy to Orangemen is by no means confined to Roman Catholics. All the noble and high-minded men of whom Ireland can boast have frequently denounced and repudiated it. GRATTAN, FLOOD, CLONCURRY, BURKE, PLUNKET, CURRAN, PARSONS, PLOWDEN, POSONBY, Lord EDWARD FITZGERALD, ROBERT EMMET, THEOBALD WOLFE TONE, Sir JOHN MOORE, SHIEL and SMITH O'BRIEN have one and all condemned this pestiferous body, and cried out against its myriad crimes. It remains now for free and enlightened Americans to say whether an Association such as we have described should be allowed to exist on the Republican soil of this great country. Its members are not, and cannot become, according to their oath, citizens of the United States; they swear allegiance to a foreign monarch, and their main object is to degrade and revile a certain section of Christians. No good can possibly come of this detestable organization; it represents no healthy moral principle; it proposes to itself no commendable object; it has no connection with intellectual progress or political reform in any shape. In short, it has nothing whatever to recommend it to any respectable man, or to entitle it to any degree of public support. We therefore call upon every friend of liberty, every lover of peace and good order, every sincere admirer of Republican institutions, to do all that the law will allow him to oppose Orangeism, to prevent its spreading among the American people, to guarantee as far as he can the citizen of the Union against a recurrence of the dreadful scenes which were enacted in New York on Wednesday last, by acting in this manner they will substantially serve their own country, they will advance the cause of human freedom, they will promote a spirit of federation and friendly feeling among the different Christian creeds, and earn for themselves in perpetuity the gratitude of the whole Irish race—that race which has fought so gallantly and shed its blood so freely to found and sustain this American Republic!

THE NEW YORK RIOTS.

The occurrence of that anniversary of evil omen to Ireland, the 12th July, has been signalized by a fearful and sanguinary riot in New York. We confess we did hope that the Orange Festival would go by without any calamitous collision, either in Ireland or America, between men who ought to feel as brothers. Bitter, indeed, has been our disappointment. At home the 12th passed away peaceably enough; but here, in free and Republican America, it has been made infamous by one of the most awful riots it has ever been our lot to record.

It was well known, for three weeks beforehand at least, that the Orangemen intended to have a public parade through the streets of New York. It was also known that a certain section of Irishmen had determined to prevent the procession if possible. Thus for full three weeks the authorities knew that a desperate riot was in course of preparation. They took no precaution against it until the last hour, and then what they did was to insure there would be a slaughter of the misguided men who interfered with or assaulted the processionists.

A short time previous to the 12th, Superintendent KELSO, of the New York Police, issued a proclamation to the effect that the Orangemen would not be allowed to parade, and people who feared the approaching storm felt relieved, thinking there would be no procession and, consequently, no breach of the peace. The reasons adduced for his interference by the Superintendent were those which any sensible man would be likely to assume. Technically speaking, the constitutions grounds, there was no infringement or curtailment of the liberty of subject in this prohibition; but EXELSO saw he had to face one or other of two evils—to prevent the Orangemen or quell a riot. He chose the latter as the lesser evil of the two. The Americans will be inclined to think Governor HOFFMAN appeared on the scene. He revoked Mr. KELSO'S order, and declared that the Orangemen should be protected during the procession by all the military at his disposal of the State if necessary. He was justified in doing this—justified beyond all doubt or question. He would lose all claim to the title of free country if it were for a single moment supposed that men in their right to appear in procession on the streets at the mercy of a body or nationality whatsoever. He is guilty of no concealment in his opinions on this matter. The only constituted authorities are the law and must continue to be, the judges of what processions, rules or demonstrations are to be allowed, and what prohibited. And, as we have pronounced upon the matter, the man who endeavors to evade their decision must do so at his own proper peril.

But Mr. HOFFMAN committed a far grievous mistake for all that—a far which we hope he will be led to strict account. He might have issued his proclamation a week or ten days before, and felt that he strictly known that the right of the Orangemen to parade was recognized and would be enforced. Then would-be rioting rioters would be fully aware of what they had to expect. But his conduct looks like the sudden springing of a mine.

It forcibly reminds one of the famous plot concocted by the Castle authorities to massacre the citizens of Dublin on the plains of Chontarf in 1798. They withheld their prohibition of the intended meeting until the previous night, when, under ordinary circumstances, not one man of every twenty who proposed to be at the rendezvous, would see the proclamation. And, in the meantime, they had surrounded Chontarf plain, by night, with large bodies of cavalry, foot and artillery, and moored men-of-war with double-shotted guns where they could sweep the meeting ground! It was only the almost superhuman exertions of popular leaders that prevented an unparalleled massacre. Mr. HOFFMAN'S proclamation, issued at the eleventh hour, would seem to have been dictated by a similar diabolic spirit, were it not that his character is such as to forbid the imputation of sinister motives.

His Grace the Archbishop and Catholic clergy spared no effort to prevent disturbance. They besought the people to refrain from any attempt to molest the Orangemen, to stop peaceably at home and mind their own business. There was wisdom in the counsel—how well it would have been for all parties had it been obeyed! The rioters disregarded the admonitions of their spiritual guides; they set at naught the warning of their friends, and dearly have they paid the penalty!

The procession started at two o'clock we are told. It was composed of two hundred men! A large body of military preceded them, an equally strong detachment followed, and policemen marched along the flanks. We are bound to acknowledge that, if the telegrams received are correct, there were no flags or banners, no mottoes or badges, carried by the processionists at which the Catholics could fairly take offense. There was, however, something ridiculous about them which cannot be defended. Each man carried a sword and revolver. We are not aware that the municipal regulations of New York, or of any great city in the world, permit its streets to be paraded by bands of armed men other than those sanctioned by the Government of the country. Clearly it was a gross mistake, if nothing worse, to suffer the Orangemen to bear arms. If they demanded the protection of the State they should have relied upon it. And, curious to relate, every man who was not an Orangeman was disarmed the instant he preceded the band a weapon! This must undoubtedly was not fair play.

Now, if this mighty procession of two hundred Williamites had been suffered to pass without molestation it would be probably the last of its kind in America. The thing was so contemptible that the simple force of ridicule would have killed Orangeism, but the insane and criminal assault made upon it has given it a notoriety which can hardly fail to be productive of most disastrous effects in the future.

It is very evident that there was no organized attack upon the procession. The opposition to it came from a mob of senseless and infuriated men who acted without plans, without leaders and without concert. The organized bodies of Irishmen that exist in New York had no participation whatever in the affray, and, apparently, did not come into the streets at all. They had better sense and truer patriotism than the rioters. As very often happens, the primary cause of all the disturbance came off scathless—not a single Orangeman was in the least injured! There was, as a matter of fact, no collision between the processionists and the Catholics. The Orangemen marched along very contentedly, and the soldiers did all the fighting that was necessary for them! So the only lives that have been sacrificed were those of the misguided rioters and a few of the troops guarding the Orangemen.

It now only remains for us to place upon record our most emphatic and unqualified reprobation of the conduct of the rioters. There is no excuse whatever for their behavior, which was criminal in the highest degree. When the authorities had decided that the Orangemen had a right to parade, their decision should have been accepted and respected.

We freely confess to having very little sympathy with those who have suffered from their participation in the riots, for they only got what they richly deserved. Our sympathies go with the innocent and helpless women and children, many of whom, no doubt, will have sad reason to remember the 12th of July, 1871. Our sympathies go, too, to the supporters of law and order who have been injured in the discharge of their duty in quelling an unjustifiable riot.

If any man imagines that this kind of lawlessness, this savage intolerance, will make the position of the Irish in the United States a bit better than what it is, he is egregiously mistaken. If any man imagines that rioting and defying the authorities will cause the name of an Irishman to be held in higher respect in this country, he committs an unpardonable error. And the cause of freedom at home, about which we all have had such glorious hopes lately, how will that be affected by this scandalous and barbarous rowdyism? It will certainly be grievously injured, and the day of our national regeneration will be retarded, God alone knows how long! All that our best and purest men have done to effect a union between our countrymen, Catholic and Protestant, will be utterly destroyed; all the sympathy and moral support from other nations that have been won by the heroism and devotion of our patriots will be withdrawn. The hands of our enemies will be strengthened, for men will say we deserve the slavery and oppression that crush our people at home. What, in the name of Heaven, men say but that the Irish are unfit to be free, seeing that they are totally incapable of the first requisite of a free people—a spirit of toleration. And as an argument that cannot be refuted, they will cite the New York Riots, of 12th July, 1871.

Fair in Aid of St. Joseph's Church.

Next Thursday, a fancy Fair and Bazaar, which promises to be a success, is to be opened in the Academic Hall on Bush street. The Fair will continue for ten days, commencing, as we have said, on Thursday next, 20th instant, and closing on the evening of Saturday, 29th. There will be a large number of tables profusely supplied with rare, costly and beautiful articles of every description, and a curious piece of tapestry worked by the ladies of the Court of Louis XIV., of France, will be placed on exhibition. Altogether, the Fair will have unusual attractions, and we trust it will be properly patronized. The object to which the funds accruing are to be devoted ought of itself to secure a monster attendance all the time.

Obituary.

Died at Oakland, Alameda county, on the 9th inst., from the effects of a fall from the new Catholic church building, Lieutenant [illegible].

It is said that the death of Lieutenant [illegible] was occasioned by an expression of disapprobation which was made by him in reference to the manner in which one of the workmen employed in the construction of the church was conducting himself. The workman referred to, it is said, was intoxicated, and the deceased remonstrated with him in reference to his conduct. The workman resented the remonstrance, and struck the deceased a violent blow, which caused him to fall from the scaffolding to the ground, a distance of about forty feet. He was picked up in a senseless condition, and died in a few hours afterwards.

Deceased was a native of Ireland, and was about 35 years of age. He was a member of the Hibernian Society, and was also connected with the Fenian Brotherhood. He was buried on Sunday last, and his funeral was largely attended by members of the Hibernian Society, who, we are informed, had been specially requested to attend. The funeral procession was headed by a hearse with ostrich plumes, and followed by a number of carriages, in which were the friends and acquaintances of the deceased. The procession was a very large one, and presented a most imposing appearance. The remains were interred in the Catholic cemetery at Mountain View, Alameda county.

It is very evident that there was no organized attack upon the procession. The opposition to it came from a mob of senseless and infuriated men who acted without plans, without leaders and without concert. The organized bodies of Irishmen that exist in New York had no participation whatever in the affray, and, apparently, did not come into the streets at all. They had better sense and truer patriotism than the rioters. As very often happens, the primary cause of all the disturbance came off scathless—not a single Orangeman was in the least injured! There was, as a matter of fact, no collision between the processionists and the Catholics. The Orangemen marched along very contentedly, and the soldiers did all the fighting that was necessary for them! So the only lives that have been sacrificed were those of the misguided rioters and a few of the troops guarding the Orangemen.

It now only remains for us to place upon record our most emphatic and unqualified reprobation of the conduct of the rioters. There is no excuse whatever for their behavior, which was criminal in the highest degree. When the authorities had decided that the Orangemen had a right to parade, their decision should have been accepted and respected.

We freely confess to having very little sympathy with those who have suffered from their participation in the riots, for they only got what they richly deserved. Our sympathies go with the innocent and helpless women and children, many of whom, no doubt, will have sad reason to remember the 12th of July, 1871. Our sympathies go, too, to the supporters of law and order who have been injured in the discharge of their duty in quelling an unjustifiable riot.

If any man imagines that this kind of lawlessness, this savage intolerance, will make the position of the Irish in the United States a bit better than what it is, he is egregiously mistaken. If any man imagines that rioting and defying the authorities will cause the name of an Irishman to be held in higher respect in this country, he committs an unpardonable error. And the cause of freedom at home, about which we all have had such glorious hopes lately, how will that be affected by this scandalous and barbarous rowdyism? It will certainly be grievously injured, and the day of our national regeneration will be retarded, God alone knows how long! All that our best and purest men have done to effect a union between our countrymen, Catholic and Protestant, will be utterly destroyed; all the sympathy and moral support from other nations that have been won by the heroism and devotion of our patriots will be withdrawn. The hands of our enemies will be strengthened, for men will say we deserve the slavery and oppression that crush our people at home. What, in the name of Heaven, men say but that the Irish are unfit to be free, seeing that they are totally incapable of the first requisite of a free people—a spirit of toleration. And as an argument that cannot be refuted, they will cite the New York Riots, of 12th July, 1871.

Fair in Aid of St. Joseph's Church.

Next Thursday, a fancy Fair and Bazaar, which promises to be a success, is to be opened in the Academic Hall on Bush street. The Fair will continue for ten days, commencing, as we have said, on Thursday next, 20th instant, and closing on the evening of Saturday, 29th. There will be a large number of tables profusely supplied with rare, costly and beautiful articles of every description, and a curious piece of tapestry worked by the ladies of the Court of Louis XIV., of France, will be placed on exhibition. Altogether, the Fair will have unusual attractions, and we trust it will be properly patronized. The object to which the funds accruing are to be devoted ought of itself to secure a monster attendance all the time.

Obituary.

Died at Oakland, Alameda county, on the 9th inst., from the effects of a fall from the new Catholic church building, Lieutenant [illegible].

It is said that the death of Lieutenant [illegible] was occasioned by an expression of disapprobation which was made by him in reference to the manner in which one of the workmen employed in the construction of the church was conducting himself. The workman referred to, it is said, was intoxicated, and the deceased remonstrated with him in reference to his conduct. The workman resented the remonstrance, and struck the deceased a violent blow, which caused him to fall from the scaffolding to the ground, a distance of about forty feet. He was picked up in a senseless condition, and died in a few hours afterwards.

Deceased was a native of Ireland, and was about 35 years of age. He was a member of the Hibernian Society, and was also connected with the Fenian Brotherhood. He was buried on Sunday last, and his funeral was largely attended by members of the Hibernian Society, who, we are informed, had been specially requested to attend. The funeral procession was headed by a hearse with ostrich plumes, and followed by a number of carriages, in which were the friends and acquaintances of the deceased. The procession was a very large one, and presented a most imposing appearance. The remains were interred in the Catholic cemetery at Mountain View, Alameda county.

THE NEW YORK RIOT.

NEW YORK, July 16.—Rumors are still rife of an impending riot between the Orangemen and Fenians on Wednesday. It is said a delegation of the Hibernian Society left last night to see the President, and ask the interposition of the Federal authorities to prevent an outbreak.

Mayor Hall this morning asserts that there would be no riot, and that the Orangemen, in case they paraded, would be protected. The impression prevails that the Hibernian Societies will take the advice of the clergy, and not interfere with the Orangemen.

Archbishop McCloskey, in a sermon at the dedication of St. Paul's Church, Harlem, alluded to the threatened demonstration against Orangemen on Wednesday, earnestly entreating and exhorting all Catholics to beware of even acting near the procession, and on no account to make any counter-demonstration.

It is now stated, on good authority, that the Hibernians will parade on Wednesday, headed by a man called Captain Cleary. The number to turn out cannot be ascertained. It is also said that the Seventh, Eighth, Ninth, Twelfth and Seventy-first regiments will be ordered to hold themselves in readiness at their armories to aid the police, if necessary, to quell any signs of riot.

SUPERINTENDENT KELSO'S ORDER.

NEW YORK, July 10—There is reason to believe that the much-dreaded riot on Wednesday will not take place. Superintendent Kelso has this evening issued an order forbidding both the Orangemen's parade and the procession of the Ancient Order of Hibernians. The parties comprising the large force represent that the people of the Irish Catholic element which expresses its determination to oppose the Orange display.

Superintendent Kelso in his order says that through the municipal streets and avenues of New York on the 12th instant in honor of the battle of the Boyne and the treaty of Limerick was in consequence. Its continuance would be fully aware that they had to expect. But his conduct looks like the sudden springing of a mine.

It forcibly reminds one of the famous plot concocted by the Castle authorities to massacre the citizens of Dublin on the plains of Chontarf in 1798. They withheld their prohibition of the intended meeting until the previous night, when, under ordinary circumstances, not one man of every twenty who proposed to be at the rendezvous, would see the proclamation. And, in the meantime, they had surrounded Chontarf plain, by night, with large bodies of cavalry, foot and artillery, and moored men-of-war with double-shotted guns where they could sweep the meeting ground! It was only the almost superhuman exertions of popular leaders that prevented an unparalleled massacre. Mr. HOFFMAN'S proclamation, issued at the eleventh hour, would seem to have been dictated by a similar diabolic spirit, were it not that his character is such as to forbid the imputation of sinister motives.

His Grace the Archbishop and Catholic clergy spared no effort to prevent disturbance. They besought the people to refrain from any attempt to molest the Orangemen, to stop peaceably at home and mind their own business. There was wisdom in the counsel—how well it would have been for all parties had it been obeyed! The rioters disregarded the admonitions of their spiritual guides; they set at naught the warning of their friends, and dearly have they paid the penalty!

The procession started at two o'clock we are told. It was composed of two hundred men! A large body of military preceded them, an equally strong detachment followed, and policemen marched along the flanks. We are bound to acknowledge that, if the telegrams received are correct, there were no flags or banners, no mottoes or badges, carried by the processionists at which the Catholics could fairly take offense. There was, however, something ridiculous about them which cannot be defended. Each man carried a sword and revolver. We are not aware that the municipal regulations of New York, or of any great city in the world, permit its streets to be paraded by bands of armed men other than those sanctioned by the Government of the country. Clearly it was a gross mistake, if nothing worse, to suffer the Orangemen to bear arms. If they demanded the protection of the State they should have relied upon it. And, curious to relate, every man who was not an Orangeman was disarmed the instant he preceded the band a weapon! This must undoubtedly was not fair play.

Now, if this mighty procession of two hundred Williamites had been suffered to pass without molestation it would be probably the last of its kind in America. The thing was so contemptible that the simple force of ridicule would have killed Orangeism,

THE NEW YORK RIOT.

NEW YORK, July 16.—Rumors are still rife of an impending riot between the Orangemen and Fenians on Wednesday. It is said a delegation of the Hibernian Society left last night to see the President, and ask the interposition of the Federal authorities to prevent an outbreak.

Mayor Hall this morning asserts that there would be no riot, and that the Orangemen, in case they paraded, would be protected. The impression prevails that the Hibernian Societies will take the advice of the clergy, and not interfere with the Orangemen.

Archbishop McCloskey, in a sermon at the dedication of St. Paul's Church, Harlem, alluded to the threatened demonstration against Orangemen on Wednesday, earnestly entreating and exhorting all Catholics to beware of even acting near the procession, and on no account to make any counter-demonstration.

It is now stated, on good authority, that the Hibernians will parade on Wednesday, headed by a man called Captain Cleary. The number to turn out cannot be ascertained. It is also said that the Seventh, Eighth, Ninth, Twelfth and Seventy-first regiments will be ordered to hold themselves in readiness at their armories to aid the police, if necessary, to quell any signs of riot.

SUPERINTENDENT KELSO'S ORDER.

NEW YORK, July 10—There is reason to believe that the much-dreaded riot on Wednesday will not take place. Superintendent Kelso has this evening issued an order forbidding both the Orangemen's parade and the procession of the Ancient Order of Hibernians. The parties comprising the large force represent that the people of the Irish Catholic element which expresses its determination to oppose the Orange display.

Superintendent Kelso in his order says that through the municipal streets and avenues of New York on the 12th instant in honor of the battle of the Boyne and the treaty of Limerick was in consequence. Its continuance would be fully aware that they had to expect. But his conduct looks like the sudden springing of a mine.

It forcibly reminds one of the famous plot concocted by the Castle authorities to massacre the citizens of Dublin on the plains of Chontarf in 1798. They withheld their prohibition of the intended meeting until the previous night, when, under ordinary circumstances, not one man of every twenty who proposed to be at the rendezvous, would see the proclamation. And, in the meantime, they had surrounded Chontarf plain, by night, with large bodies of cavalry, foot and artillery, and moored men-of-war with double-shotted guns where they could sweep the meeting ground! It was only the almost superhuman exertions of popular leaders that prevented an unparalleled massacre. Mr. HOFFMAN'S proclamation, issued at the eleventh hour, would seem to have been dictated by a similar diabolic spirit, were it not that his character is such as to forbid the imputation of sinister motives.

His Grace the Archbishop and Catholic clergy spared no effort to prevent disturbance. They besought the people to refrain from any attempt to molest the Orangemen, to stop peaceably at home and mind their own business. There was wisdom in the counsel—how well it would have been for all parties had it been obeyed! The rioters disregarded the admonitions of their spiritual guides; they set at naught the warning of their friends, and dearly have they paid the penalty!

The procession started at two o'clock we are told. It was composed of two hundred men! A large body of military preceded them, an equally strong detach

'THE MARCH OF '51ST-SEVEN.

Onward, march! oh, man of Ireland! Brothers true and strong!
Swell as death, from native sireland sweep the formed throng!
The bloody path our fathers trod to Freedom open near;
Tread it we, as they did, while our battle-song flags clear!

We are they who march for Erin in her hour of sorrow,
Sworn to lift the sword unfearing o'er her fair brow Freed
Of serfdom's gloom, of slavery's mark, of discord's pale and shame—
Sworn to blast the coward tongues that dare revile her name!

We are they who met the train of Ireland's insulting foes,
Pointing to our passed-time slain—to Ireland's cap tivited woes;
While deeds like those of our great warrior-fathers We'll reply—
Deeds for such a triumph, or to Ireland's honor die

We are they whose souls have thrilled at Erin's awful wail;
We are they whose hearts have filled at Erin's bloody tale;
We are they who meet that Erin—land of lands—may be
Queen of the fadeless crown, of song, of joy—of Liberty!

Onward, then! oh men of Ireland! In our strength safe and sure!
On!—I'a hillside or air, and Protestant—to unite!
A foe whose hellish hate would drain our nation's spring of life,
And stifle fallen and creeds, for "ends of State," in blood and strife!

We are they whose hearts have been for Ireland's wrongs a flame;
We are they whose banner green shall bear but Ireland's name;
We are they who swear to keep that banner in the air,
'Till Ireland bows no more in chains to Britain's hoard!

We are they who dare deride the lie, that Ireland's weal
Is ascribed when Ulster's pride meets fiery Munster's zeal;
We are they who come to-day from Lee, and Foyle, and Shannon,
To brand the scornful liars, though they speak from British cannon!

We are they who seek to take on thought of "South" or "North,"
All are brothers who awake to Ireland's cause; heed not that
Jobbing hands, we ask not of our brothers' creed or clan:
Our watchword—All for Ireland, and Christ for every man!

Onward, then, O men of Ireland! Hasten to the battle-field!
Succored by our holy standard—encouraged too long!
Onward! Fall we in the road, or fall we in the rout,
For God and Holy Ireland! let our battle-song rise out,

NOTE.—For the satisfaction of the Attorney-General for Ireland, the writer may as well state that these lines are not intended as an appeal to our Home Rulers. Their matters have been and better said and spoken upon an Irish hillside to Irishmen in Ireland.—[Irishman, 7th June.

St. Catherine's Academy, Benicia.

EDITOR MONITOR: Thursday, 29th ult., will be an ever-memorable day in the history of the ancient capital of the Queen of the Pacific. At an early hour its wonted tranquility was disturbed by the noise of prancing steeds and the rumbling of coach and carriage wheels over its narrow and dusty streets coming in from all sections of the country. Hotels were crowded, and the streets bore a holiday aspect; men, women and children, dressed in their gayest, thronged the public thoroughfares; business seemed to be suspended for the day. The pleasant smile and the merry laugh of the happy young folks foretold that a gala day was in store for them. Never since the time when the walls of the ancient capitol reechoed to the manly voices of the brave and self-sacrificing founders of our State, have the inhabitants of this once promising city manifested more activity and interest than on this occasion. Political animosities and religious differences seemed to be buried—all appeared as one common family bent upon one common purpose—patriotic ardor to celebrate at the seventeenth annual Commencement of St. Catherine's Academy. At nine o'clock A. M. your correspondent might have been observed making his way through one of the fairest and most intelligent gatherings that ever assembled beneath the roof of St. Catherine's, but all to no purpose; every available seat had been taken. Wiping the perspiration from off his face—being too modest to thrust himself forward—he took a seat incognito. After a few minutes the exercises began. Four young ladies gracefully approached the piano and struck up an excellent march (quartette) as if by magic. At this moment over a hundred young ladies, with modest mien, attired in white, wearing wreaths upon their heads, entered the beautiful exhibition hall in couples, keeping time with the fair performers. Next came the reverend clergy and other invited guests, who were to take an active part in examining the young ladies in their respective studies.

The morning's programme was divided into four parts, each of which I will comment upon in regular order without, in the meantime, making any invidious distinction between the youthful aspirants for academic honors and public applause; for suffice it to say, on such occasions each girl, it matters not what her shortcomings might have been prior to this, tries her utmost to please her anxious parents, who, with holy envy, seek to catch every word that drops from their darling's lips.

The following constituted the first part of the morning's programme:

March Quartette.—Misses Fanny Er ichl, Fabina Wright, Mattie and Sophia Burt; Piano Duet—Misses Mooney, Misses Lizzie Sutton and Nona Reynolds; Piano Duet—Misses Lizzie Sutton and Nona Reynolds; Piano Duet—Misses Teresa Casey and Minnie Mamet; Piano Duet—Those not so easy and yet so far," Misses V. Williams and Jennie Smith; Open ed Address: Chorus—Morning," Misses Fanny Ericksen, Josephine Watts," Misses Hosford, Bessie Rodgers; Piano Duet—Impromptu in A flat major, Kuhe," Misses M. Taliaferro and Teresa Lyons; Piano Duet—"Le Troubador" Beyer, Misses Fanny Ericksen and J. Wright.

Examination of studies next came in order. Geography and mental arithmetic formed the theme. I must say, considering the rigid manner in which the girls were examined, that they did themselves and their teachers credit. After traveling over the grand divisions of the world, measuring the heights of the highest mountains and the lengths of the greatest rivers, we were pleasingly entertained by Part II:

Piano Duet—La Traviata" Verdi, Misses Laura Hosford, Minnie Lyons and Nona Reynolds; Piano Duet—"Le Carnival de Venise" Benedict, Misses Jennie Sutton and Fanny Ericksen; Vocal Solo—"Home, Sweet Home" Bishop, Miss Addie Dolger; Piano Duet—Impromptu in A flat major, Kuhe, Misses Josephine and Julia Wildman.

The scholars were now examined in English composition and Physical Geography. We do not exaggerate when we say that we have never listened to a more interesting examination. The questions were critical and searching in the extreme, yet the answers were prompt and intelligent, showing that they had been carefully drilled by able instructors. Delightful music introduced us to Part III of our programme:

Piano Duet—"La Fille du Regiment," Misses K Hoffeman, L. Ryan; Piano Quartette—"Perle Polka," Misses C. Pittman, J. Fagan, F. Enright, F. Wright; Vocal Solo—"Tender and True" Dyke, Miss Virginia Sullivan; Piano Solo—"La Napolitana" Lyn Miss Lena M. Cunningham; Essay—Post Office, Miss Lena M. Cunningham; Piano Duet—"Immortelles Waltz" Gungl, Misses L. Sutton, E. Cook; Vocal Solo—"Mon sano a Dieu, Stradella" Miss Julia Wildman.

Arithmetic and Algebra now occupied our attention for the space of forty-five minutes, and we have had the honor to be present at the examinations of many boarding schools for several years past, but in none have we found young ladies more efficient and prompt. In these studies we must say that St. Catherine's Academy has won an enviable reputation. The dryness and monotony which the majority of people experience in the examination of these most important and useful duties was relieved by Part IV:

Piano Quartette—"Italian Polka" Misses C. Pittman, A. M. Harp, Mary Taliaferro, Clara M. Gary; Piano Duet—"Sally in our Alley" Schmidt, Misses Kate Bateman, Maggie Cavanaugh.

The examination of studies again occupied our attention. Astronomy was the subject. It was a matter of question with us whether the terrestrial stars before us or celestial stars above us, hidden by the brilliancy of the sun's light, shined more brightly. The mathematical precision wherewith they bounded the different heavenly bodies, and the elegant style in which they discoursed their usefulness and beauty, surpassed anything that we have ever listened to. As if to give us a foretaste of the heaven beyond the stars, we were enchanted by the following music, which brought our morning programme to a close:

Piano Quartette—"Thalmon Polka," Kunkel, Misses M. Cavanaugh, M. Matthews, M. A. Enright, F. Enright; Piano Solo—"Lucia" di Lammermoor," Miss Nellie Hoyt; Vocal Quartette—"Tis Music that Whispers" Misses M. Fegan, Fanny Ericksen, J. Wright, Virginia L. Sullivan; Piano Duet—"Le Carnival de Venise" Benedict, Misses Laura Hosford and Nona Reynolds; Piano Duet—"Impromptu Marche" Schmidt, Misses Josephine Watts and Julia Wildman.

Compliment to a Franco-Irish Soldier.

We copy the subjoined report with much pleasure from the Liverpool Catholic Times. The Irishman to whom the compliment it describes has been paid is well worthy of the admiration and respect thus conveyed to him:

On the 9th June, a number of gentlemen availing themselves of the presence in Liverpool of the gallant Captain of the French company which served in the late war, took occasion to pay that gentleman a well-merited compliment. He was invited to meet his friends at Mount's Bay House, Tower Hotel, at dinner. The chair was worthily occupied by M. F. Duffy. Mr. Duffy proposed as a sentiment, suggested by the occasion, "The justice of a cause, not its success." He paid high tribute to the chivalry of France, and to the devoted men who, when all seemed lost—army, generals and every government—mouth after month stemmed the tide of invasion, and, with unprotected hands, held in check the finest army in Europe, flushed with victory as that army was. Not in France alone, out in Italy and in Ireland was the justice of the cause not to be measured by its success. But the immutability of a principle was beyond the influence of facts; and the true greatness of Rome and of Ireland was an evidence of this which no amount of defeats could destroy or counterbalance. The sentiment was warmly applauded.

Mr. Duffy soon after rose to propose the toast of the evening, "Our guest, Captain Kirwan." There were many reasons why he felt proud of the position which the kindness of his friends had called on him to occupy that night. First, of course, and mainly, because they had met to pay a tribute to a worthy Irishman, who, in these days of diplomatic patriotism, had not hesitated to throw his sword into the balance in favor of Ireland's ancient ally, France, and risk his life in defense of a cause, which, for one reason or other, every Irishman regarded as his own. Captain Kirwan, on rising to respond, was received with loud cheers. He said it was a customary remark for those to whom a compliment was paid to say that that was the happiest and proudest moments of their lives, but he would be doing an injustice to the many happy hours he had spent in the company of—in his eyes—one of Ireland's fairest daughters if he said it was the happiest; and he would be guilty of a greater injustice still to his brave companions if, forgetting their heroic constancy, endurance and worth, he admitted it was the proudest. However, of this he might give honest assurance, that there were few occasions to which he could look back with greater gratification. He was not vain enough to imagine that the handsome gathering that night was attended as a compliment to himself merely. He knew that those who cheered the two kind words their chairman had spoken meant thereby to pay a tribute to the brave with whom he had the honor and pride to be associated. Of these men it would be impossible to speak in terms sufficiently commendatory. Brave or better soldiers never faced an enemy, and if the untold sufferings they had endured ever made any man pause in his career, it was sufficient to remind him of where he came from—all back all his nationality, enthusiasm in the cause they had espoused. He spoke advisedly when he said that it was a misfortune for the Irish exiles that they had been cut off from their historian. He felt that if he had told all that he might with truth say, that every man might think that he was "blowing his own trumpet." Now that all was over, he could only say that the honor and the fame of Ireland were in safe keeping. And he bore with him testimonies of the Company's worth and character, of which he was sure they, as Irishmen, would be proud. They might all feel convinced of this, that if any of them went to France they need never be ashamed to claim as countrymen the gallant fellows with whom he had been associated. No Irishman need hang his head for them. And yet they claimed no credit for casting their fortunes with France. There was in the Irish heart a yearning for service in France, and his companions and he had merely answered that feeling its way. He thanked them from his heart for their great kindness, but he begged, with every acknowledgment to them, to accept it as a compliment to his comrades, not merely as one to himself.

Subsequently "The Memory of the Dead" was proposed, associated with the name of Terence Byrne, and Captain Kirwan took occasion to pay a handsome tribute to the deceased soldier.

The company separated after a most enjoyable evening, those among them who had known Captain Kirwan previously were delighted to be with him once more, while those who met him for the first time were charmed with his unpretending demeanor and great information.

Mr. Martin on Ireland and Communism.

The following letter, which appears in the London Echo from the member from Meath, puts forward some facts which are deserving of special recognition at present. Mr. Martin is doing hardly less service by his letters in the English press than by his bold and statesmanlike speeches in the House of Commons:

An article upon the funeral of Dr. Spratt, which I have read to-day in your paper of yesterday, suggests reflections that ought to be taken to heart by all to whom the future of society is a concern. We are just now shuddering with horror at the atrocities and sufferings of the rule of the mob in Paris. The brightest, noblest, most generous people in the world—the leading people of Christian civilization; the people whom we long love the best—have gone mad, some from social and political fanaticism, others from rage at the obstinacy and fierceness of the fanatics, the rest in a fury of retaliation for crimes and malignant intentions that each side in the fratricidal conflict attributed to the other. And the result is the direst city of the world laid in bloodstained ruins by its own population, the martyrdom of saintly men, hideous massacres of Frenchmen and Frenchwomen by French hands, the sowing of a hellish crop of distrust, revenge, hatred and all evil feelings. Such an outbreak of fiendish wickedness and anarchical madness, in the very centre and capital of modern Christian civilization, naturally turns men's thoughts to investigate its causes, and seek safeguards against future dangers of the kind. You will say in commenting on the funeral of Paris had a prominent place in surrounding the striking scene in Whitefriar street with much of the extraordinary and almost startling solemnity noticeable at the office and High Mass of yesterday"—it was impossible to avoid adverting to the contrast which that scene presented with the surroundings of the death of the Archbishop and his brother victims at Paris"—affording with the tribute of love and sorrow to the object of yesterday's melancholy celebration, there was a proclaiming of the popular assurance that here at home such a scene could not occur."

Dear sir, I am happy to feel that I can agree with you in the opinion that such a scene as the judicial murder of Archbishop Darboy could not occur in Ireland by the act of the Irish people. There is in Ireland so great a preponderance of religious faith, so true a reverence for the idea of legitimate authority, so pure and so strong a passion of patriotism, so natural and uncorrupted a feeling of charity, that our country is as yet secure from the dangers of political fanaticism, as in France, and of civilization going to rot, as in England. But if our subjection to England continues how long may we feel secure? It is in vain to tell England that religious faith exists in Ireland, whether among Catholics or among Protestants. The power of England has been steadily exerted to exterminate faith in Catholics and to pervert it into sordid greed and render it odious in Protestants. The power of England still labors by means of its bribes, its dungeons, its bayonets, its laws to prevent our country from realizing the idea of legitimate authority. The power of England is the relentless and unscrupulous enemy of patriotism in Ireland. The power of England, besides making paupers by hundreds of thousands in our teemingly productive country—rich enough to support in prosperity and independence double its actual population—has imposed upon us a vile system of legal pauperism, to kill the spirit of charity, to poison the social and render useless the bodies of our poor, to load our industrial classes with taxation for the nurturing of thieves and harlots. Dr. Spratt was a man whose efforts could, from the loss of religious faith of reverence for legitimate authority of loyalty to country, of charity and humanity—in short, of those traditional virtues of the Irish race which are the salt of our national character, and which English rule, with its diabolical arts, is rapidly destroying. Since I began to write this letter I have received your paper of this day's date, and seen in it the arbitration of the judgment in the case of Captain Nolan and the tenants he evicted in 1864 and 1867. No rational man can despair of a country where such a beautiful moral spectacle as that can be exhibited. And mark well: that act of most noble repentance, rendering the dear name of far higher value than if he had never committed the wrong—that exquisitely Irish appeal and response to justice—is an offense and scorn to English rule and law. Oh, had we but our dear country free of that stupid and brutal tyranny!

EDUCATIONAL.

ST. CATHERINE'S ACADEMY,

CONDUCTED BY

THE SISTERS OF ST. DOMINIC,

BENICIA, CALIFORNIA.

THIS INSTITUTION AFFORDS EVERY FACILITY for the solid and refined education of young ladies. The academy was founded in 1856, and now ranks among the first institutions in the State.

The course of instruction embraces the English, French, Spanish and Latin languages, History, Elocution, Composition, Ancient and Modern History, Biography, Mythology, Chemistry, Geography, Astronomy, and Use of Globes; Vocal Music, Instrumental Music, including the Piano, Guitar and Organ; Writing, Drawing, Painting in Water Colors and in Oil; Tapestry, Plain and Ornamental Needlework, etc., etc.

TERMS.

Board and Tuition payable half-yearly, in advance ..... $150 00
Washing ..... 40 00
Bed and Bedding ..... 15 00

EXTRAS.

Pianoforte and Instrument payable half-yearly ..... $40
Organ ..... 60
Vocal Music ..... 20
Private Lessons ..... 20
Drawing and Painting in Water Colors ..... 20
Painting in Oils ..... 20
Use of Library ..... 2 00
School Books at Current Prices.

Each young lady is required to be provided with four dresses, besides the uniform (which is a black alpaca dress and white apron), for Sundays and holidays; also a blue alpaca dress, six changes of underclothing, six pairs of stockings, six handkerchiefs, four pillow-slips, pair of blankets, mattress, two pillows, four towels, four table-cloths, a white, silver plated, spoon, fork and napkin-ring; towels into straw for mattress, and a work-box. Each article of clothing must be distinctly marked, and a supply of note paper, envelopes and postage stamps.

The Academic Year consists of ten equal terms, the first commencing August 16th, the second, January 1st.

Pupils of any religious denomination will be received. For the sake of uniformity all are required to present at the regular religious services of the Church.

Parents may rest satisfied that every attention, consistent with health and the formation of habits of order, will be paid to the comfort of the young ladies placed under their charge.

All correspondence of the young ladies will be submitted to the inspection of the Superioress. Letters of inquiry may be addressed to the MOTHER SUPERIOR.

GO TO

M. O'CONNOR'S,

Stall No. 1, Grand Central Market,

IF YOU WANT THE BEST BEEF in the market, and also all kinds of seasonable vegetables.

J. COSTIGAN & BRO,

Blacksmiths and Wagon Makers,

804 Jackson Street,

One door from corner Sansome Street, San Francisco.

SHAW'S

PECTORAL COUGH SYRUP,

For the Cure and Relief of all

PULMONARY COMPLAINTS,

For sale at SHAW'S DRUG STORES, corner Second and Folsom, and Sutter and Powell streets, San Francisco.

H. A. CALLENDER,

MANUFACTURER OF

Hair Jewelry,

No. 64 Second Street,

Corner of Mission street ..... San Francisco.

FOR CHEESE,

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL,

GO TO

CLUFF & DE WITT'S,

Corner of Third and Tehama Streets.

JOHN MOLLOY,

PRODUCE COMMISSION MERCHANT

AND DEALER IN

GROCERIES AND PROVISIONS

53 Clay st., bet. Drumm and East,

San Francisco.

HOMŒOPATHIC DISPENSARY,

No. 132 GRANT AVENUE,

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

FREE TO THE SICK, OF ALL NATIONALITIES, from 1 to 2 o'clock every Monday, Wednesday and Friday, with Dr. J. A. Albertson, Monday and Thursday, Dr. J. C. Geary, Wednesday, Dr. P. C. Dowdy, Saturday, Dr. E. Bewley.

Dr. J. A. ALBERTSON, Secretary.

19-2 J. CUMMINS, Saturday, 2 to 3

FOGERTY & MEYER,

CARRIAGE MANUFACTORY,

906 Mission street, corner Sixth,

SAN FRANCISCO.

Manufactory of all kinds of Carriages and Buggy Work. Repairing done with neatness and dispatch. Trimming, Black and Blue Painting, and a general assortment of Carriages always on hand.

Jobbing done with promptness and dispatch.

Removal.

J. Ehow's Photographic Gallery

IS REMOVED TO 317 MONTGOMERY ST., near Sacramento, where he has superior facilities for leading the very best of Photographs at as reasonable prices.

Removal.

C. PALMER HAS REMOVED FROM 638 Clay street to 818 Montgomery st., between Washington and Jackson streets, where he has for sale a large assortment of

BOOTS AND SHOES,

at reduced prices.

DR. JOHN T. McLEAN

HAS RESUMED THE PRACTICE OF HIS Profession as

PHYSICIAN AND SURGEON.

Office and Residence—No. 407 Stockton st., next door north of Bush street.

J. LEMPKE,

Plumber, Glazier and Brazier,

No. 20 GRANT STREET.

Has established works for the manufacture of Iron and Water Fixtures. He has now on hand an

Extensive Stock of Gas Fixtures,

At moderate prices. Old fixtures refinished, and all work guaranteed.

JOHN CURTIS & SON,

322 FIFTH STREET.

Formerly Howard and Folsom and Grand Central Depot.

BEG TO INFORM THE PUBLIC THAT THEY have opened a new and large assortment of the best quality and at the lowest market prices.

WILLIAM KREGER,

Carpenter and Contractor

108 DAVIS STREET,

Between Sacramento and California streets.

Executes all work in his line promptly, cheaply and in good style. Particular attention paid to fitting up offices and stores.

MISCELLANEOUS.

WYNNE, LOWTH & Co

HAVE OPENED THEIR NEW STORE

No. 706 Market Street,

Opposite Third Street,

With a complete Stock of Foreign and Domestic

DRY GOODS,

FURNISHING GOODS, Etc.

N. B.—Being the only house in the trade (in San Francisco) manufactured to order the celebrated BRADLEY SHIRTS, in Black and White, we respectfully solicit orders from the Clergy and Gentlemen of the city.

Great Success! Great Success

ATTENTION THE OPPOSITION TAILORING AND CLOTHING ESTABLISHMENT OF

G. ABRAHAM,

33 and 35 Second Street.

Send the following List of Prices for Fine Custom-Made Clothing:

Beaver Dress Suits ..... $
Beaver Business Suits ..... $
Cassimere Suits ..... $
Fine Dress Coats ..... $
Fine Business Coats ..... $
Fine Cassimere Pants ..... $
Cloth Vests ..... $
Fine Beaver Sack Coats ..... $

A large and complete stock of

READY-MADE CLOTHING,

At lowest rates, always on hand.

G. ABRAHAM,

33 and 35 Second Street.

Removal.

DR. TAZEWELL TYLER,

OFFICE—IS KEARNY STREET.

DR. JOHN R. RICE,

Physician, Surgeon and Accoucheur

To the Ancient Order of Hibernians and Family No. 730 HOWARD STREET, opposite Union Engine House—From 7 to 9 a. m.; 12 to 1 and 6 to 8 p. m. Ordinary visits, $2. Visits to Hibernians and their families $1 and $2.

GO TO

M. O'CONNOR'S,

Stall No. 1, Grand Central Market,

IF YOU WANT THE BEST BEEF in the market, and also all kinds of seasonable vegetables.

J. COSTIGAN & BRO,

Blacksmiths and Wagon Makers,

804 Jackson Street,

One door from corner Sansome Street, San Francisco.

SHAW'S

PECTORAL COUGH SYRUP,

For the Cure and Relief of all

PULMONARY COMPLAINTS,

For sale at SHAW'S DRUG STORES, corner Second and Folsom, and Sutter and Powell streets, San Francisco.

H. A. CALLENDER,

MANUFACTURER OF

Hair Jewelry,

No. 64 Second Street,

Corner of Mission street ..... San Francisco.

FOR CHEESE,

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL,

GO TO

CLUFF & DE WITT'S,

Corner of Third and Tehama Streets.

JOHN MOLLOY,

PRODUCE COMMISSION MERCHANT

AND DEALER IN

GROCERIES AND PROVISIONS

53 Clay st., bet. Drumm and East,

San Francisco.

HOMŒOPATHIC DISPENSARY,

No. 132 GRANT AVENUE,

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

FREE TO THE SICK, OF ALL NATIONALITIES, from 1 to 2 o'clock every Monday, Wednesday and Friday, with Dr. J. A. Albertson, Monday and Thursday, Dr. J. C. Geary, Wednesday, Dr. P. C. Dowdy, Saturday, Dr. E. Bewley.

Dr. J. A. ALBERTSON, Secretary.

19-2 J. CUMMINS, Saturday, 2 to 3

FOGERTY & MEYER,

CARRIAGE MANUFACTORY,

906 Mission street, corner Sixth,

SAN FRANCISCO.

Manufactory of all kinds of Carriages and Buggy Work. Repairing done with neatness and dispatch. Trimming, Black and Blue Painting, and a general assortment of Carriages always on hand.

Jobbing done with promptness and dispatch.

Removal.

J. Ehow's Photographic Gallery

IS REMOVED TO 317 MONTGOMERY ST., near Sacramento, where he has superior facilities for leading the very best of Photographs at as reasonable prices.

Removal.

C. PALMER HAS REMOVED FROM 638 Clay street to 818 Montgomery st., between Washington and Jackson streets, where he has for sale a large assortment of

BOOTS AND SHOES,

at reduced prices.

DR. JOHN T. McLEAN

HAS RESUMED THE PRACTICE OF HIS Profession as

PHYSICIAN AND SURGEON.

Office and Residence—No. 407 Stockton st., next door north of Bush street.

J. LEMPKE,

Plumber, Glazier and Brazier,

No. 20 GRANT STREET.

Has established works for the manufacture of Iron and Water Fixtures. He has now on hand an

Extensive Stock of Gas Fixtures,

At moderate prices. Old fixtures refinished, and all work guaranteed.

JOHN CURTIS & SON,

322 FIFTH STREET.

Formerly Howard and Folsom and Grand Central Depot.

BEG TO INFORM THE PUBLIC THAT THEY have opened a new and large assortment of the best quality and at the lowest market prices.

WILLIAM KREGER,

Carpenter and Contractor

108 DAVIS STREET,

Between Sacramento and California streets.

Executes all work in his line promptly, cheaply and in good style. Particular attention paid to fitting up offices and stores.

EDUCATIONAL.

DAY SCHOOLS

FOR

Boys and Girls.

THE SISTERS OF MERCY HAVE JUST OPENED a commodious School Building on First street, near Bryant, as a free school for all the Catholic children of an English education.

A Day School for young ladies has been opened on Folsom Place, and will be placed in charge of competent teachers. Both Schools will commence on the 31st inst.

SISTER MARY B. RUSSELL,

Superior of Sisters of Mercy.

San Francisco, May 27, 1871.

COLLEGE OF NOTRE DAME,

SAN JOSE, California.

YOUNG LADIES' INSTITUTE.

THIS INSTITUTION, WHICH IS INCORPORated with the usual powers, and authorized to confer academical honors, offers all the advantages of a thorough education. The next session will open on Monday, August 14, 1871. The course of instruction embraces all the branches of a refined education.

TERMS:

Entrance, to be paid but once ..... $15 00
Board and Tuition per quarter ..... 62 50
Washing, per quarter ..... 12 50
Physician's fee, (unless it may be preferred to pay the bill in case of illness) per quarter ..... 1 50

Piano, Vocal Music, Drawing and Painting form extra charges. Instruction in Latin, Extra charge for the French, Spanish or German Language. Use of Bed, Bedding and Furniture, $10 per session.

Payments are required in the month of August, as pupils will find it much to their advantage to be present at the opening of the session.

FRANCISCAN COLLEGE,

SANTA BARBARA.

THE FOURTH SESSION OF THIS INSTITUtion, conducted by the Fathers of the Order of St. Francis, will commence on the 15th of August, 1871. The course of instruction embraces the English, Mathematical, Classical and Philosophical Studies. The discipline is mild, and based on long tried principles, and thereby brings its advantages within the reach of all.

TERMS.

Entrance Fee, to be paid but once ..... $15 00
Board, Tuition and Washing, per session, of ten months ..... 150 00
Music French and German form extra charges.
Physician's Fee, (unless it may be preferred to be charged per visit) ..... 10 00

Patients will pay for medical attendance, and supply their own medicines.

Money will not be advanced by the College, for the pocket money of pupils; a sufficient sum must be deposited.

For further particulars apply to

REV. J. J. GREEFF, O. S. F.

1-26 Superior.

ST. VINCENT'S SCHOOL.

THIS INSTITUTION, SITUATED IN SANTA Barbara, a short distance from the Mission, is the most delightful and healthy part of the city. The grounds are extensive, and afford ample room for recreation.

The course of instruction embraces the usual branches of a thorough English education. Spanish is also taught.

TERMS

(Invariably half yearly in advance).

Board, tuition, bed, bedding, washing, stationery per session ..... $150 00
Physician's fee, (if required) per month, 50 cts. 5 25
Courtesy, per month, 75 cts. 7 50
Use of Harp, charge for Piano Tuning, Lamp Needlework, etc., extra.

For further particulars apply to

SISTERS OF CHARITY,

1-26 Santa Barbara Cal.

SEWING MACHINES.

WM. B. HIGGINS,

No. 210 THIRD STREET, (WEST SIDE),

Bet. Howard & Folsom, San Francisco.

WHO HAS HAD THE ADVANTAGE OF SEVeral years' experience as a Machinist in the first-class Sewing Machine establishments in the city, having come into business on his own account, is now prepared to repair Sewing Machines of all kinds, and will warrant all work done by him with the greatest satisfaction to all who may favor him with their patronage. Repairing and cleaning and oiling Machines on the most reasonable terms, and in the most workmanlike manner.

Wheeler & Wilson Machines adjusted and warranted for one dollar; other Machines in proportion for a year.

Machine always on hand for sale or for rent by the month, three hours a call. 8-28-1f

ACADEMY OF NOTRE DAME,

MARYSVILLE, CAL.

THE TWELFTH ANNUAL SESSION OF THIS Institution will commence on Monday, August 7th. The establishment was founded under the patronage of the Archbishop of San Francisco, and is devoted to education. To instil into the minds of youth a correct and intelligent knowledge of their duties to virtue, this fortifying them to meet with the trials and vicissitudes of life, and to fit them to be the future ornaments of society, is a work to which the Institution has devoted its purpose. Such is the primary object of the Sisters of Notre Dame, and they hope to merit a liberal patronage from the citizens of Marysville. The building is in every respect commodious and healthy.

The pupils of the Academy are divided into two classes, the preparatory and the graduating. The preparatory class is subdivided into three departments. The first is devoted to the rudiments of the English branches, the second to the more advanced English studies, and the third to the higher English branches, with the Languages, Drawing, Painting, Music, Needlework, etc.

The graduating class is composed of those young ladies who have completed the course of the preparatory classes, and who, by their talents and application, have proved themselves worthy of graduating honors.

TERMS.

Board and Tuition, per Scholar ..... $150 00
Washing ..... 40 00
Bed and Bedding ..... 15 00

EXTRAS.

Pianoforte and Instrument, per month ..... $5
Organ ..... 5
Vocal Music ..... 2 50
Private Lessons ..... 2 50
Drawing and Painting ..... 2 50
Use of Library ..... 1 00
Each Scholar must furnish two mattresses, six sheets, six towels, six napkins, six pillow-cases, six quilts, one counterpane, one blanket, one comfortable, one pair of silver plated forks, one pair of silver plated spoons, one silver plated goblet, one gold ring, one napkin-ring, one work-box, one dozen each of knives and forks, one pair of scissors, one pair of gloves, one pair of overshoes, one parasol, one shawl, one dress for Sundays and holidays, and one uniform dress.

Each article of clothing must be distinctly marked with the name of the owner.

Pupils will be received at any time during the session, and charged from the date of their entrance to the end of the session.

Parents will be expected to visit their children at least once a month.

Letters of inquiry may be addressed to the

SISTER SUPERIOR.

ST. VINCENT'S COLLEGE,

LOS ANGELES, CAL.

THIS INSTITUTION, CHARTERED AUGUST, 1865, by the Legislature of California, and conducted by the Christian Brothers, is situated in the city of Los Angeles, the most delightful and healthy part of Southern California. The Faculty of the College is composed of the FATHERS OF THE CONGREGATION OF THE HOLY CROSS, and of the BROTHERS OF THE SAME ORDER. They devote themselves to promote the health and comfort of the students entrusted to their care, and to secure to them the benefits of a thorough and solid education. The system of education pursued in this College is the same that is followed in the other colleges of the Order, which have been established in the United States, and which have been crowned with the most signal success.

STUDIES:

The course of studies embraces a full course of English, Classical, Commercial and Scientific studies, including Ancient and Modern Languages. Those who wish to prepare themselves for the profession of Civil Engineering will find the course of Mathematics complete.

TERMS:

For Board, Lodging and Tuition, per Scholar ..... $50 00
Bed and Bedding ..... 10 00
Piano and use of Instrument, per Month ..... 2 00
Drawing, Vocal Music, each, per Month ..... 1 00
Vacations at the College ..... 40 00
Those who wish to play on any of the above-named instruments will have the privilege of taking a private instrument free of charge, others to them will be a charge of 50 cents per month.

REMARKS:

Each student must supply himself yearly with bedding, clothes, boots and shoes, and all articles of personal use, as the Institution will not furnish them except in cases of sickness or dismissal.

Students leaving the College before the end of the term

Continued from Fifth Page.

the crowd, quietly dispersed. The police took charge of the Orange banners.

THE KILLED AND WOUNDED.

About forty persons were killed during the riot to-day. The total number of wounded is unknown, but fifteen are known to be mortally wounded. At the Sixteenth Precinct there were sixteen dead bodies; the evening they were removed to the Morgue. At the Twenty-ninth Precinct there were four dead bodies. At the Morgue there are at present forty bodies. The only ones thus far identified are, Henry C. Page, of the Ninth Regiment, and advertising agent of the Grand Opera House; Charles Pettit, Charles Buckhin and Mr. Archibald. Among the killed at the Sixteenth Precinct were a woman and child. The remainder are supposed to have been rioters. Colonel Fisk was at the head of his regiment, and was wounded early in the affray. A collision at Twenty-fourth street took place, and while he was in the act of giving an order, he was struck with a club and one of his ankles broken. He was at once removed to a private residence in Fifteenth street. His wound though painful, is not dangerous. Captain Spencer, of the Ninth Regiment, is reported to have been struck at the same time, and seriously, though not fatally, injured.

The Fourteenth Regiment was dismissed early in the evening. All the regiments turned out in full numbers; each had 1,100 men in line.

The locality of the house to which Colonel Fisk was carried is a secret, as the mob have threatened to take the life of any member of the Ninth, especially Fisk. The Hibernians were also under police guard.

THE CITY QUIET AT MIDNIGHT.

NEW YORK, July 12—Midnight.—The city is quiet. Heavy bodies of police are patrolling the streets, and the troops are in their armories, ready to leave at a moment's notice.

THE EXCITEMENT IN BROOKLYN.

NEW YORK, July 12.—In Brooklyn there was as much excitement in regard to the terrible riots in this city, that it was deemed advisable by the Police Commissioner and Chief Campbell to place a reliable force at headquarters during the night.

THE DAY AT JERSEY CITY.

JERSEY CITY, July 12.—The streets this morning present an aspect reminiscent of coming troubles. Thus far no disturbance has occurred, and the indications are that the day will witness scenes of riot and bloodshed. Groups at every street corner and congregated around every liquor store are speaking of Hibernians who maintain a sullen silence, and bundles are lingering around Washington Hall, their headquarters. The police display great energy in their efforts to prevent a row. Squads of persons are armed with pistols, knives and hatchets, have been arrested. They had been drinking freely. At the Orange headquarters everything is quiet, and all present are engaged in preparations for the procession, which will move at 2:30 P. M.

GOVERNOR HOFFMAN'S COURSE APPROVED.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., July 12.—The Common Council this evening passed resolutions by a resolution of thanks to Governor Hoffman for his able assistance in upholding the rights of the people to assemble and parade. The Board is largely Republican.

FISHKILL (N. Y.), July 12.—Thirteen guns were fired, here in honor of the proclamation of Governor Hoffman.

PUBLISHED ORGANIZATION OF A "PROTESTANT LEAGUE OF AMERICA."

NEW YORK, July 12.—The following document is said to be in circulation for signatures:

"In view of recent and probable future events, the immediate organization of a society to be known as the Protestant League of America, with branches in every New York City, and auxiliary societies throughout the United States, is recommended. For this purpose, and properly to consider the immediate event that gives rise to this suggestion, [a public meeting] is called [to this city and elsewhere. The claim of the Roman Catholic religion incompatible with civil and religious liberty."

LATER.

Eighty Killed and Between 300 and 400 Wounded.

NEW YORK, July 13.—The most deliberate estimate gives the number of persons killed during the day as in the vicinity of one hundred. Over two hundred and fifty severely wounded are in the hospitals, where those only helplessly wounded were received, those slightly wounded slipping away and hiding, lest it should become known that they had taken part in the riot. Some approximate idea of the number wounded may be had. Certainly three hundred is the lowest figure to be given. Of course many were killed and wounded who were merely spectators and innocent of disturbance.

Another dispatch says over eighty persons were killed, and between 300 and 400 wounded.

Release of Captain McCafferty.

The following letter from Captain John McCafferty to his friend Mr. William Hogan, of Birmingham, conveys the gratifying intelligence that the prisoner has accepted the conditions of release offered to him by the Government, and is now on his way to America. Captain McCafferty, it will be remembered, was arrested in Dublin on the 23d of February, 1867, on a charge of having been connected in the Fenian rebellion of Chester. His was tried and found guilty, and on May 18, 1867, was sentenced to death. The sentence was afterwards commuted to penal servitude for life:

MILLBANK CONVICT PRISON, June 6, 1871.

MY DEAR HOGAN—Brighton must characterize this note, and, therefore, I will proceed at once to the point. I arrived here last evening, and this morning, under protest, I accepted of the "conditional amnesty" so long and about one hour ago I was informed that I would sail from London to New York city to-morrow. At first I refused to leave on such short notice, but after a moment's consideration I concluded that a sudden departure would be more satisfactory to all parties. You may rest assured, however, that I did everything consistent with my honor to secure the privilege of making you a short visit. As the Government intend to grant me a parole of honor for five days, I would necessarily be obliged to leave the country at some future time on the present conditions. Then, too, I think that I remain longer in a position that subserves no useful end? I know there are many who would like to shake my hand and that me a kind farewell—God be with you!—before my departure. But I have no wish to undergo such an ordeal, for I am perfectly satisfied that it would unman me; in fact, my poor old heart is beginning to feel already. I must confess that I am displeased with the idea of returning by a route which will afford me no opportunity of seeing the iron-bound coast of the island home of my forefathers; still, God may allow me to see that isle again; yes, and then perhaps I may meet some one on its hills! I felt very sorry when I heard that my last letter put you to so much trouble; however, I will say no more about it until I am in a position to make a more suitable return. With love to your family, and kind regards to each and every friend, I will conclude with that awful word—Farewell. As I was, I am and hope to remain, dear Hogan, your sincere friend, JOHN MCCAFFERTY.

CATHOLIC ITEMS.

California.

DEDICATION IN SAN BERNARDINO.—On Sunday last we had the great pleasure of witnessing the largest assembly of people ever collected before in San Bernardino, on the occasion of the dedication of the new Catholic Church. The solemn ceremony of dedication was performed by the Right Rev. Bishop Amat, assisted by the resident and actual pastor, Father Thomas Foran, of the Vicar of St. Vincent's College, and Father Vardagger, of San Gabriel. The people took a deep interest in witnessing the ceremonies, so solemn and impressive, performed by the venerable prelate — ceremonies peculiar only to the Catholic Church. After the ceremony of dedication ended, High Mass was sung by Father Verdagger, Professor Stockhammer performing on the new organ, assisted vocally by the Misses Louise and Sylvia Brown, Emma Hosies and Mr. David George. It is almost needless to say that the music was rendered in an excellent manner, as Professor Stockhammer, whose ability as an instrumental and vocal performer is well known to our community. After the first Gospel, the Right Rev. Bishop delivered an able and eloquent discourse appropriate to the occasion, taking his text from the twenty-eighth chapter of Genesis. He was listened to with the greatest attention. Mass he administered the Sacrament of confirmation to ten children, having confirmed on the day previous, in the Church of Agua Mansa, thirty-five. In the evening solemn vespers and benediction of the blessed Sacrament by the Bishop, when a sermon was preached by Father Tyrin, in which he elucidated the Divine truths as contained from the Apostles and preserved intact by our Holy Mother, the Church. A good collady (Mrs. Quinn) who gave with a good heart the funds necessary for the building of the church, was present on the occasion, and felt happy to be able to kneel, during the offering of the Holy Sacrifice, in a church raised by her, alone and unaided, to the honor and glory of God. Well may she say with the inspired writer, «I Lord, I love the beauty of Thy House and the place where Thy glory dwelleth," and if a cup of cold water given for such a sake shall not go unrewarded, surely she will receive a bright crown in the day of the great work she has contributed in His holy name.—San Bernardino Guardian, July 1.

THE NEW ACADEMY AND SISTERS OF MERCY.—It will be interesting to the young ladies and their parents of this and the adjoining counties to learn that the Sisters of Mercy, in this city established, amongst us is on the way of being beautifully prepared for the reception of pupils, and will open for the first Monday in July. The ladies of the Convent have displayed great energy and exquisite taste in the arrangement and disposition of the study-halls, class-rooms, etc., which are designed for the use of their future pupils. The cost has been spared by them in procuring the splendid piano, parlor desks and other requisites for their institute, and from its appearances it would seem they are determined to excel in the highest grade of efficiency. In a word, Eureka is favored with an institution whose course of studies will comprise all the elementary and higher branches of science taught in the best academies of the country. The institute will in effect afford every facility for the acquisition of a refined and solid education, whose primary object will be to infuse into the minds of young ladies a noble and laudable ambition to place their hearts in virtue and to fit them to be the future ornaments of society. It will be not amiss to state in conclusion, that for the ordinary pupil of $250 per annum for board and tuition, the various branches of science and art will be taught. Foreign languages, music, drawing, painting and lingerie alone, will "cost extras for which additional charges will be made.—Humboldt Times.

Eastern.

CATHOLIC CONCERT IN PORT JERVIS, N. Y.—There was a concert given here in the new church on the evening of June 25th, which, in its attendance, exceeded by almost the most sanguine expectation. All the respectable Protestants in the town were present. The Presbyterian, Methodist and Church Reformed ministers were there. There was a festival that night in the Protestant church, and when all was over they came over as a body, and their minister at their head, to the Catholic concert. There were Irish and Jew and Gentile, all crammed together. Some had to stand up, and a great many could not get in. The church is a model of accommodating two thousand persons. Prejudice, ignorance and bigotry, that has veiled them so long in darkness, is fleeing away in most away from their eyes. The Baptist Dominie was the only one absent of the ministries on the occasion. Every doctor in the town was present but one; the Hon. C. St. John, M. C. Hon. Richard Busteed, of the Assemblyman, and H. H. Farnham, Esq., late District Attorney, and other distinguished persons were present. We also have had three of the Sisters of Charity, or Mercy, in the town; they live in a neighborhood that is teeming with poverty, misery and ignorance, and they are pleasant, loving countenances, and form step gliding along the streets, softly, inaudible mission, instructing the youth by word and example, and healing the broken, hope and consolation to the dying, forsaken, friendless penitent, by their presence. They are angels in human form, though hated and detested by the infidels.

The new Catholic Church of the Immaculate Conception at New Lebanon, N. Y., was consecrated on Sunday, the 18th June, by the Right Rev. Bishop of the Diocese, in the presence of a large and appreciative audience. High Mass was celebrated by Rev. Father Fitzgerald, of Lowville, N. Y., assisted by Rev. Father Brennan, of Vailsale, as Deacon; Sheehan, of West Troy, as Sub-Deacon, and Hoskins, of the Cathedral at Albany, as Master of Ceremonies. A most able, eloquent and impressive sermon was delivered by Father Brennan. After the Mass the Bishop administered the Sacred Rite of Confirmation to one hundred and forty-four candidates, who, during the Mass, had partaken of their first Communion, at which the Rev. Father O'Sullivan, of Hudson, and G. Brennan, of Lee, Mass., assisted the officiating priest. Before pronouncing the Episcopal Benediction, the Bishop paid a deserved tribute to the zeal, devotion and energy displayed by the Pastor, Rev. J. J. Morrisey, by whose untiring exertions the erection of this beautiful, temple is mainly due.

The Sacrament of Confirmation was administered by the Most Rev. Archbishop Hughes on Sunday, the 18th June, in the Church of the Immaculate Conception, Yonkers, to 365 persons. On Tuesday, the 20th June, in the Chapel of the Ursuline Convent, East Morrisania, to 25 pupils of the Academy. On Wednesday, the 21st June, in Saint Anthony's Church, of this city, to 500 persons. On Thursday, the 22d June, in the Church of Holy Cross, to 783 persons. On Sunday, the 25th June, in the Church of St. Jerome, Mott Haven, Westchester county, to 281 persons.—N. Y. Tablet.

BRIEF CITY ITEMS.

An action was commenced in the Twelfth District Court on saturday last by James H. Newby, attorney and counsellor-at-law, against Frederick Marchisich and William A. Woodward, proprietors of the Alta Californian, to recover the sum of $50,000 for the publication of three alleged libellous articles.

The Democratic State Central Committee held an adjourned meeting on the morning of the 8th, in the Supervisors' chambers, and nominated John Rosenfeld for Harbor Commissioner.

A large force of workmen are hard at work remodeling and preparing the Mechanics' Pavilion, on Union Square, for the next Fair of the Mechanics' Institute.

The Coroner's Jury, in the case of Chas. Hitrek, run over and killed by the International Hotel coach, on Saturday last, rendered a verdict of accidental death.

In the case of the injunction against the sale of a portion of Yerba Buena Park by the City Hall Commissioners, the arguments were concluded, and the case taken under advisement by Judge Maybon.

The statement of the Pacific Insurance Company of this city shows an excess of $443,261 58 over the original assets of the Company in the way of capital. Of the assets, over half a million are on call loans secured by collaterals, about the same amount secured by mortgages on real estate, $147,000 are in the Company's building and lot, and the balance is considered cash in hand. The profits of the Company for the year are over $100,000, about the same as for the year closing June 30, 1870.—Call.

A FEW WORDS TO THE LADIES.—Many ladies, particularly those who are compelled to stand for hours in the morning, on the wife and mother devotes the household. Her cares are numerous, and the mental labor she performs is unceasing. Her health is often sacrificed to her children. She often finds her slightest exertion productive of pain, and frequently suffers from some one or other of the many forms of female disease. Health is the most valuable blessing, and should be the first thought. The effects of this point needs no comment. Every one knows that a healthy mother makes a happy family, as with restored health and renewed spirits and energy, she performs her duties with pleasure. Where this friend is not be regularly used, those depressing symptoms which make life a burden, and render every small incident not be experienced but many times magnified, will disappear, and the whole system will be renewed, while its pleasing tonic and invigorating properties will be realized in the form of a healthy appetite, refreshed sleep and buoyant spirits. Ladies will find Hostetter's Stomach Bitters a most valuable friend in time of need. The effects of this potent agent are soon realized in the form of a healthy appetite, refreshed sleep and renewed spirits and energy, she performs her duties with pleasure. Where this friend is not be regularly used, those depressing symptoms which make life a burden, and render every small incident not be experienced but many times magnified, will disappear, and the whole system will be renewed, while its pleasing tonic and invigorating properties will be realized in the form of a healthy appetite, refreshed sleep and buoyant spirits. Ladies will find Hostetter's Stomach Bitters a most valuable friend in time of need. The effects of this potent agent are soon realized in the form of a healthy appetite, refreshed sleep and renewed spirits and energy the crowd, quietly dispersed. The police took charge of the Orange banners.

Continued from Fifth Page.

THE KILLED AND WOUNDED.

About forty persons were killed during the riot to-day. The total number of wounded is unknown, but fifteen are known to be mortally wounded. At the Sixteenth Precinct there were sixteen dead bodies this evening; they were removed to the Morgue. At the Twenty-ninth Precinct there were four dead bodies. At the Morgue there are at present forty bodies. The only ones thus far identified are, Henry C. Page, of the Ninth Regiment, and advertising agent of the Grand Opera House; Charles Pettit, Charles Bucklin and Mr. Archibald. Among the killed at the Seventeenth Precinct were a woman and child. The remainder are supposed to have been rioters. Colonel Fisk was at the head of his regiment, and was wounded early in the affray. A collision at Twenty-four street took place, and while fire was in the act of giving an order, he was struck with a club and one of his sashes broken. He was at once removed to a private residence in Fifteenth street. His wound, though painful, is not dangerous. Captain Spooner, of the Ninth Regiment, is reported to have been struck at the same time, and seriously, though not fatally, injured.

The Fourteenth Regiment was dismissed early in the evening. All the regiments turned out in full numbers; each had 1,100 men in line.

The locality of the house to which Colonel Fisk was taken is kept secret, as the mob have threatened to take the life of any harbor of the South, especially Fisk. The Hibernians say they will have vengeance.

THE CITY QUIET AT MIDNIGHT.

NEW YORK, July 12—Midnight.—The city is quiet. Heavy bodies of Police are patrolling the streets, and the troops are in their armories, ready to leave at a moment's notice.

THE EXCITEMENT IN BROOKLYN.

NEW YORK, July 12. In Brooklyn there was no much excitement in regard to the terrible riots in this city, that it was deemed advisable by the Police Commissioner and Chief Campbell to have all available force at headquarters during the night.

THE DAY AT JERSEY CITY.

JERSEY CITY, July 12.—The streets this morning present an aspect ominous of coming trouble. Thus far no disturbance has occurred, but the indications are that the day will witness scenes of riot and bloodshed. At every street corner and hotel and ground every liquor store are groups of Hibernians who maintain sullen silence, and hundreds are lingering around Washington Hall, their headquarters. The police display great energy in their efforts to preserve order. A number of persons armed with pistols, knives and hatchets, have been arrested. They had been drinking freely. At the Orange headquarters everything is quiet, and all parties are engaged in preparations for the procession, which will move at 2:30 P. M.

THE CHIEF HOFFMAN'S OFFICE ATTROVED.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., July 12.—The Common Council this evening passed unanimously a resolution of thanks to Governor Hoffman for his brave action in upholding the rights of the people to assemble and parade. The Board is largely Democratic.

FISKILL, N. Y., July 12.—Thirteen guns were fired here in honor of the protection of Governor Hoffman.

THE GERMAN ORGANIZATION OF A "PROTESTANT LEAGUE OF AMERICA."

NEW YORK, July 12.—The following document is said to be in circulation for signature:

"In view of recent and probable future events, the immediate organization of a society to be known as the Protestant League of America, with headquarters at New York City, and auxiliary societies throughout the United States, is recommended. For this purpose, and properly to consider the numerous questions that will arise on this suggestion, 1st public meeting is called to this city and elsewhere. The chair of the Roman Catholic archbishop will confront with civil and religious liberty."

LATER.

Eighty Killed and Between 200 and 300 Wounded.

NEW YORK, July 12.—The most definite estimate gives the number of rioters killed during the day as in the vicinity of one hundred. Over one hundred and fifty severely wounded are in the hospitals, where many slightly wounded were also received, those slightly wounded stopping away and hiding, lest it should become known that they had taken part in the riot. Some approximate idea of the number wounded may be had by certainly three hundred is not too high an estimate. Of course many were killed and wounded who were merely spectators, and innocent of disturbance.

Another dispatch says over eighty persons were killed, and between 200 and 300 wounded.

Release of Captain Metafferty.

The following letter from Captain John Mc Cafferty to his friend Mr. William H. Ham, of Hartford, Conn., now on a visit to this city, will serve to tell the general Captain has accepted the conditions of escape offered to him by the Government, and is now on his way to America. Captain McCafferty, it will be remembered, was arrested in Ireland on the 23d of February, 1867, on a charge of having been concerned in the Fenian raid on Chester. He was tried and found guilty, and on May 15, 1867, was sentenced to death. His sentence was afterwards commuted to penal servitude for life.

MOUNTJOY PRISON, DUBLIN, June 30.

MY DEAR HAM:—Business must characterize this letter, therefore, I will proceed at once to the point. I arrived here last evening, and this morning, under protest, I accepted of the conditional amnesty offered in 1869, and about one hour ago I was informed that I would start from Dublin to New York city tomorrow. At first I refused to leave at such short notice, but after a moment's consideration I reconsidered that a sudden departure would be more satisfactory to my friends and myself. After having, however, that I did everything consistent with my honor to secure the privilege of remaining here until the following month, and refused to grant me a period of longer for Dublin, I could not possibly be obliged to leave the country at some future time on the present conditions. Then, why should I remain here longer than is absolutely necessary? I know there are many who say that I like to take no risk at all and but now a friend forewarned me to be wise and not be too sanguine. But I have no wish to impudge such an opinion, for I am perfectly satisfied that it would jeopardize me in no good cause. I therefore beginning to meet the difficulties I have encountered in my life, which I look on as nothing more than a mere bagatelle. I will embark on board a steamer at the north wall, Dublin, to-morrow evening, and so far as I am concerned I will be glad to get away from the north coast of the island before I may hear[illegible] still, God only knows but to see that safe, yes, and then perhaps I may [illegible] may meet with some on the [illegible] pretty sorry when I leave that one active part [illegible] yet to see time favorable, however, I will say [illegible] to quote about it until I am in a position [illegible] make a more suitable return. With love to your family, and kind regards to each and every friend, I will conclude with that awful word—Farewell. As I was, I am, and hope to remain, dear Hogan, your sincere friend, JOHN MCCAFFERTY.

CATHOLIC ITEMS.

California.

DEDICATION IN SAN BERNARDINO.—On Sunday last we had the great pleasure of witnessing the largest assembly of people ever collected before in San Bernardino, on the occasion of the dedication of the new Catholic Church. The solemn ceremony was performed by the Right Rev. Bishop Amat, assisted by the resident and actual pastor, Father Ospitolier, Father Ujena, of St. Vincent's College, and Father Verdaguer, of Santa Barbara. The people took a deep interest in witnessing the ceremonies, which were solemn and impressive, performed by the venerable prelate — remarkable particularly to the Catholic Church. After the ceremony of dedication ended, High Mass was sung by Father Verdaguer, the sermon delivered in the forenoon in the new organ, assisted vocally by the Misses Louise and Sylvia Brown, Emma Huston and Mr. David Granger. It is almost needless to say that the music was rendered in an excellent manner by the able Professor Soenbenner, whose ability as an instrumental and vocal performer is well known in our community. After the fine Gospel, the Right Rev. Bishop delivered an able and eloquent sermon pertaining to the ceremony of dedication, taking his text from the twenty-eighth chapter of Genesis. He was listened to with marked attention. After Mass he administered the Sacrament of confirmation to ten children, and in the evening on the day previous, in the Church of Agua Mansa, thirty-five. In the evening solemn vespers and benediction by the aide

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

ENGLAND.

Bolte Beating.

The household goods and effects of the Rev. J. Selby Watson, of Stockwell, are to be sold by auction, on the premises, on Monday next, by order of the Rev. J. Selby Watson, of Stockwell, who is about to reside abroad. The sale will take place at one o'clock precisely.

Death of Father Furlong.

All Catholics, and especially the Liverpool community, to which he belonged by birth and early training, will be deeply grieved to learn that the distinguished preacher and zealous missioner, Father Moses Furlong, of the Society of Mary, died suddenly on last Sunday morning, October 29th, at Ratcliffe College, Leicestershire, in the 49th year of his beloved priesthood. A fuller notice will be given elsewhere.—Catholic Times, November 4th.

English Pensioners.

The pension list shows still that there are considerable annuities taken from the taxation, ranging which certainly ought to have ceased long ago. It appears by a recent return that the following are payable to pensioners, namely, £4,000 a year in the heirs and descendants of William Pulteney, created Earl of Bath and Baron of Hedington; £2,146 to the Duke of Marlborough; £2,000 to the heirs of the Duke of Schomberg; £1700 to the Earl of Bath; £2000 to the heirs male to whom the title of Lord Rodney shall descend; £3000 to the representatives of Jeffry, Earl Amherst; £5000 to those to whom the title of Earl Nelson shall descend; £5000 to the heirs male on whom the title of Viscount Exmouth shall descend. Now, while admitting that some of these pensions are well earned by the first holders of the respective titles, it does seem unjust that the present possessors and future generations should have to continue to pay in gold and hard cash charities. "Not enough," answered the lady. "It strikes me, sir, as unwise," said the Prussian, "that you are rather exacting. How much do you want with your historians? The property was given to the nobility, if he be a Prussian, for then I could pay the ransom of my country!"

ITALY.

Italian Vandalism.

In consequence of the decision to make use of the Madama Palace for the sittings of the Italian Senate, it became desirable to have the arms of the house of Savoy placed on the principal front. But the unsightly cast monuments of Benedict XIV. hindered the fulfillment of this project. After some deliberation a compromise was hit upon. Said monuments were carved in wood, were placed over the colossal arms of the Popes, and were painted to look like the marmorean statues of the original monument. This, however, is no longer sufficient. At the payment of the war indemnity has made quite an empty chest of France, that the Republic was itself forced to fall back for temporary assistance on the Archconfraternity of the Holy Sacrament, governed by the Chamberlain of the Pope, and which the Bank of France is the principal creditor. Hence, simultaneously with the suspension of sweeping them in comes the announcement that the Pope, indirectly from the Pontiff Sovereign, whom he allows to be despoiled of kingdom, revenue and liberty.

Old Paris.

The most ancient cemetery in Paris is at present being removed and dug up at the cost of the State and under the direction of the Government authorities. Its existence dates back a period anterior to the sixth century, and, as we might expect, the work of exhumation has developed objects of the highest interest to antiquarian interest. This cemetery was attached to the original Church of St. Peter and St. Paul, afterwards known as Ste. Geneviève, and a little book written in the ninth century, and entitled "The Miracles of Ste. Geneviève," describes it as standing all along the road which led to the route to Orleans, up to and including the territory of the Church of St. Marcel. It is at that part of the cemetery that the tombs are now being opened on, and the workmen have come upon a series of coffins, all belonging to the Merovingian epoch. The discovery of numerous skeletons, not in coffins, confirms an interesting point in antiquity connected with the adjoining church. The Church of St. Marcel was founded by Roland Count de Blaye, nephew of Charlemagne, and its, chapter for a long time held the right of administering justice over a large part of the Faubourg St. Marcel. It had its regular officials—its prosecutor (term), its bailiff, and its registrar. The gibbets, the most popular attributes of justice in those days, were permanent institutions, and, in fact, remained standing there till 1674, when a Royal edict removed them to the Croulebi, which had not been created. In the church was the tomb of Peter Lombard, Bishop of Paris, so well known as the "Master des Sentences," and in the cemetery itself were buried many more persons are familiar to Europe.—D'Aguesseau and his Muslin, the famous lawyers and jurisconsults, Le Chevr and Turchaine, the historians, and several members of the princely House of Conti, but the remains of these and other illustrious dead have been already exhumed and removed to the catacombs in 1791. The coffins which the workmen have found as yet are in some cases of very old date, some of stone, some of composition, and some of baked clay. The ornaments upon one piece of it to date from the seventh century, and the heads of the skeletons are all found turned to the East, according to the usage of the Primitive Church.

Presentation to the Count de Chambord.

A number of French legitimists have decided to present a magnificent pembroke to Henri V. on New Year's Day next. It is worth more than 10,000 francs, and is made of the purest gold, and is surmounted by a firmament having above it the regal crown of France surrounded by three fleurs de lis. Beneath the crown are the words Honneur et Patrie. Above the firmament is the flag of Bourbons, of white enamel, and bearing the Semeur de lys as well as the cipher of the Count de Chambord and the Crown of France. Three words are also inscribed on the pembroke in brilliants of the purest water, on a ground of blue enamel, they are —Travail et Home." The whole has been designed by M. Langlois, to whom was given the order for the sword of honor. It remains to be presented to Marshal MacMahon in the early part of the late war.

Reorganization.

The French army is being reorganized, that is to say, the fortunes of the cuirassiers are being lengthened, and those of the dragoons shortened, and those of the infantry are in future to have the numbers of the regiments on their shoulder-straps instead of their buttons. There was a review of some eight thousand men of the garrison of Paris, on Sunday, in the Champ Elysées. The Republican Guard were red; (not tricolor) cockades in their shakos and pipeclayed waist belts. Those were the principal improvements noticeable! Will the French, once more learn lessons from defeat? After they were beaten at Rosbach in the latter century they adopted the queue from the Prussians, and now they say the uniform of their conquerors. But it is not the uniform that makes the soldier, no more than it is the hood which makes the monk. They should borrow discipline and drill from the Germans; learn to obey," as the Bishop of Orleans rightly declares, and devote themselves to the study of military topography. It is nonsense to think that a people capable of this kind or that, whether head-dress of this kind or that, would not be able to win a battle. Such an idea is only worthy of the Romanitans, who had their soldiers clad on the Trajan model previous to the late war, but have since given them spiked helmets.—London Universe, Nov. 11.

French Patriotism.

Alsace and Lorraine show new symptoms of reconcilement to the rule of the Prussian Eagle. They feel that they are conquered, and will not assimilate themselves to their conquerors. Waldeck-Rousseau French they might have exhibited strong signs of kinship with Germany; now that they are German they lose no opportunity of making protest of their French nationality. We have seen some instances of this. About relating his experiences of a recent visit to his property in Alsace, a gentleman, who sought the late war, are made to bear its heaviest burden of the brunt, and to suffer intensely the truth of Montalembert's famous dictum, that the greatest misfortune which could happen to any people was to be governed by another people. The anti-Prussian feeling manifests itself even after committed at Montreuil, and all the bills of indictment had the same date as the first. Two Alsatians were lately in Paris together for this charge; and I trust the day is not far distant when, by a spirited demonstration on the part of the Republican liberality, we shall meet to promote the erection of a new Church to the glory of God, and under the protection of S. Agathia, the patroness of our parish." Mr. A. M. Sullivan proposed the adoption of the report. He expressed the pleasure he felt at seeing around him so many gentlemen who had distinguished themselves in the constant friends and benefactors of Ireland, and who, they knew, had just managed to preserve the sacred spirit of love for the poets and picturesque amid the hearth of battle.—London Universe, Nov. 11.

IRISH INTELLIGENCE.

Irish Intolerance.

A further proof of the form the "bigotry and intolerance of Irish papists" are likely to take in social circles is furnished by the Jewish Chronicle which tells us that "A proof of bigotry of the most virulent kind is to be found in Ireland (the only country, according to the Chief Rabbi, in which Jews have never been persecuted) which has manifested quite recently in a touching manner. While a young lady of the Jewish faith, S. Samuel, of Dublin, laid on what unfortunately proved her deathbed, prayers were offered up for her recovery, not only in synagogues, but in chapels. After the proof of loving sympathy was at an end, and the funeral took place, it found the Jewish residents, and the Christian residents alike, followed the remains to the grave. Cardinal Cullen, Archbishop of Dublin, and Father Duggan will bring to the high office to which he has been called great talents as well as exalted piety—singleness of purpose and an earnestness of spirit, which presage eminently for him for the duties of the episcopacy. In the famous times Father Duggan exerted himself so much in the public cause that his health was broken down for 1200 towards it, together with the £300 which the parish raised him. Father Duggan, several gentlemen promised subscriptions for the same object. Mr. Duffy, T. D., having been called to the second chair, a vote of thanks was accorded to the Rev. Mr. Doran for presiding.

Coercion.

The Dublin Gazette of a recent date contained an order of the Privy Council placing under the special provisions of the Peace Preservation Act the baronies of Upper and Lower Kelly, in the county of Meath, also a portion of the parish of Ballyadams, in the same county. Coercion, not law, rules in Ireland. About twenty-six of the county will soon be subjected to the provisions of the Peace Preservation Act. What it is for, except to irritate public feeling and provoke discontent, no one outside the sacred circle of the Castle can determine. A few days ago Meath was pointed to as being exceptionally free from agrarian crime. To-day it is subjected to the rule of the magistracy and police. There may be some mystery in the matter, if we only knew it, for we cannot doubt that every act of the Castle authorities is inspired by wisdom.

TORQUEMADA.

Trenkle's Wallace Musicale.

After the disappointment produced in our musical circles by Signor Bianchi's failure in securing a season of opera, it is consoling to know that we have in our midst artists such as Sam Franconi may be proud of, who will exert themselves at times and favor all lovers of the beautiful in music with rare treats. This was effected recently by a matinee musicale given at Dodd's Rooms, which, notwithstanding the manifold, and mosquitoes destroyed, were past and gone—that spring-time which is so dear to us all, and our country beginning to lead a new life. Evidences of this fact were visible in every section of the country. North and south new and beautiful churches were being erected; magnificent public buildings, colleges, convents, hospitals, asylums, all institutions necessary for carrying on the works of religion and charity adorned the face of the land. At the conclusion of the unending contributions, Father Duggan, in a few well chosen words, presided, announced that the sum of £300 had been realized, and the meeting was held on the same day of the parishioners of S. Agatha's parish, in the North Williams' district, for the purpose of taking steps towards the liquidation of the debt now upon the church, and for considering the question of further repairs, etc., required by the building. The meeting was numerously attended, and was presided, concluded thus: "I hope that this is the last time that I shall meet you together for this church; and I trust the day may be distant when, by a spirited demonstration on the part of the Catholic liberality, we shall meet to promote the erection of a new church to the glory of God, and under the protection of S. Agatha, the patroness of our parish." Mr. A. M. Sullivan proposed the adoption of the report. He expressed the pleasure he felt at seeing around him so many gentlemen who had distinguished themselves in the constant friends and benefactors of Ireland, and who, they knew, had just managed to preserve the sacred spirit of love for the poets and picturesque amid the hearth of battle.—London Universe, Nov. 11.

We learn incidentally, says the Universe (Dress of Dec. 20, that negotiations are pending for the sale of one of the largest and best mines in the vicinity to a company of San Francisco capitalists. Should the sale be consummated, of which there is little doubt, the new company will immediately erect substantial machinery and set a large force of men to work. This will have a tendency to make things lively in San Andreas, as there is no question about the paying qualities of the mine.

Industrial Condition of the State.

The future prosperity of California will depend to a great extent upon her success in bidding for men. Many millions of people, oppressed in their native countries by unfair political, social and industrial conditions, are looking for new homes, ready to prefer the place which will bid them for—that is, will offer them the highest reward for their labor. Poor immigrants want to know that they will have steady employment, which we cannot now promise them, but which will be provided at some future time with the aid of wise statutes. The amendment of the fence laws, the adoption of a system of land surveys, the reform in the law in regard to real estate, the restriction of the periods of mining claims, which time in possession may be disturbed, the discouragement of litigation, the encouragement of an extensive system of irrigation, the diminution of the expense of importing and exporting merchandise, and the decrease of taxation, are important considerations for poor men thinking of making a home on our coast. When man shall have done as much for our State as Nature has done, California will be an earthly paradise.

The Surveyor General's Report for 1871 has appeared and gives 3,720,729 gallons as

THE AMOUNT OF WINE MADE

Last year; and we are satisfied that the figure is not far wrong. During the past ten months of this year 2,692,210 pounds of fig have been shipped from this coast at ten pounds to the gallon to 169,221 gallons; 1,000,000 lbs in the first 6 months was 370,000 gallons; or for ten months by sea and rail we may say 600,000 gallons. Add to this the fact that the stock of wine on hand of the vintage preceding 1871 is known to be large, and 1,000 tons had been made in 1870 the stock on hand would be large. We cannot allow less than 1,000,000 gallons for human consumption, and our present stock of wine ready for shipment is certainly not 2,000,000 gallons larger than it was a year ago. The same persons who put the estimate of 1,000,000 gallons for the yield of 1871, at 2,000,000 or 10,000,000, and so as far from the truth now as last year. Our estimate is now 3,500,000 gallons for the yield of 1871.

I. J. Rolfe of Nevada, who has been engaged in the experiment of making

MANZANITA BRANDY,

Writes thus to us:

The enterprise is regarded here as a practical success, and I consider it of little importance and many years ago I planted a grove of 1,000 trees, which I intended for timber. The first experiment resulted in the production of a spirit which, though not as smooth as possible, is far better than many brands of brandy now distilled from. 1,750 pounds, or all a trees of the grove, produced 100 gallons.

As to the future, I have decided to go into the business on a large scale, and have purchased a tract of land in the vicinity of San Francisco, and shall commence planting the trees in a few days. The expense (I will say the interest is at least considered) of the first year's planting will be about $1,000. This is estimated, as all who have had experience in planting trees will understand, as all who have had experience in planting trees will understand, as all who have had experience in planting trees will understand

WEEKLY CALENDAR.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING DEC. 24. December.
17—Sunday—Third Sunday of Advent. St. Lazarus Bishop of Marseilles
18—Monday—Expectation of the delivery of the B. V. M.
19—Tuesday—St. Timothy, Deacon and martyr.
20—Wednesday—Ember day. Vigil of St. Thomas Apostle. Fast.
21—Thursday—St. Thomas Apostle.
22—Friday—Ember day. St. Flavius, Martyr.
23—Saturday—Ember day. Vigil of Christmas. Fast of Obligation.

THE MONITOR!
THE ONLY
Irish or Catholic Journal in California.
PUBLISHED BY
SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.
SATURDAY.....DEC. 16, 1871.

HOW WILL THEY DO IT?

We perceive by several of our Protestant exchanges that the good old time-honored alarm at the "growth of Popery" is again making its appearance in this country. The fact does not in the slightest discomfort us, but, on the contrary, affords us a great deal of amusement. Being a periodical affair, coming into prominence at the season when national statistics bloom forth in newspaper columns, we accept it as an annual visitation that cannot be avoided, a little annoying at first, it has now become a source of pleasantry, so we complain no longer. Consequently, our sectarian contemporaries may cry out as loudly as they please against the rapid increase of "Romanism." It would please us very much to be able to administer even a grain of comfort to these distressed journals by which we could find one to bestow. The future looks gloomy for them. "Romanism" is spreading all over America at an astonishing rate, and the day when it will become paramount can almost be calculated as precisely as an eclipse or the return of a comet.

Catholicity is expanding not only in full proportion to the advance of population, but, it is generally admitted, in something more than that. Plainly speaking, it is making unquestionable headway. We do not by any means blame conscientious Protestants for regretting this circumstance, but believe the Catholic faith to be wrong is no perception of Christianity—and every honest man will deplore the extension of that which he thinks is error. If Protestantism showed any vitality, or were gaining ground, we should be exceedingly sorry for it indeed. Then is no call for any sorrow just at present; and we does not seem any probability of there being such for a long time to come, so we are perfectly happy and contented. Surely, our separated brethren will not blame us! It may be a weakness on our part to rejoice that our side is the winning one; yet, it is a weakness we cannot overcome. To err is human, to forgive divine; let our friends of the reformed christianity forgive us. Neither do we find fault with their anxiety seeking to check the growth of "Popery." Viewed charitably, it may be taken as an indication that they are men of strong religious convictions, and we honestly believe men endowed with religious instincts of some kind, to men with no religious belief at all. But, if they want to put a check upon "Romanism," we would to them—as they are going to do it.

There are a good many ways of accomplishing such a design. All of these—

[illegible] advantage of being in conflict with the letter and spirit of the American Constitution. Nevertheless, as Protestants have now the majority, and an overwhelming one, too, throughout the States, they hold the power of altering, or, to use the phraseology most in vogue, of "amending" that once-revered document in whatever manner they wish. We shall enumerate a few plans that could be adopted, and make some remarks upon their relative efficiency.

A law might be passed forbidding any but Protestants coming into this country upon any pretence. A little difficulty might be experienced in finding out what Immigrants were of the reformed faith, and what were "mere Papists!" but that could readily be overcome by using the initiation oath of the Orange Society as a test, and seeing that each man, woman and child took it, without mental reservation, before he or she were permitted to land. Doubtless this would interfere seriously with the spread of Romanism, and give it a heavy blow.

But then what about the Papists already here; how should they be dealt with? The English penal laws would, as we are opinion, do good service against them, although they might not succeed in extirpating the race. Indeed, with the melancholy example of Ireland before our eyes, knowing that those same laws were mercilessly enforced there for centuries, and that "Papists" are still plentiful in the country, one may be excused for doubting the efficiency of such anti-Catholic enactments in the United States. At the same time it cannot be denied that, if a good price were set on the head of a priest, if assisting at Mass were declared a felony, if Catholic education were prohibited under severe penalties, if "Papists" were pronounced incapable of holding real estate, if they were not permitted to keep a horse, worth more than twenty-five dollars, if the son who became a Protestant were legally empowered to oust his Catholic father from his house, if Catholics were not permitted to hold office, or hold commissions in the army or navy, and finally, if they were debarred from voting or taking any share in the government of the nation—much would be done towards the consummation of jesuitry."

Now, if Protestants do not want to violate the Constitution, and indulge in persecution, how is it possible for them to prevent the growth of Catholicity? They cannot prevent men and women of the oldest type from immigrating. They cannot prevent American fathers and mothers from imparting Catholic beliefs to their children. They cannot even prevent Protestants who come to recognize the errors of the "reformed" creeds from transferring their spiritual allegiance to another form of belief. They are, unknown to themselves, helping Catholicity when they multiply schools and diffuse education throughout the community, for it is precisely educated Protestants who are likely to embrace the ancient faith.

If our Church is growing stronger and winning new adherents now, she is doing so without any advantages over other churches, save and except those which she possesses of herself and within herself. Against her stand arrayed all the literature of America, and it is most potential; all the newspapers, with a few comparatively weak exceptions; the entire educational system, which is positively anti-Catholic; and also public opinion so far as any can be said to exist. The Catholic Church uses no weapons to advance herself, which are not equally at the disposal of other agencies. Therefore, if she gains steadily in the face of all this opposition, without favor or encouragement from any party, to what does she owe her success? The conclusion is irresistible. She owes it to the divine truth and beauty of her doctrines and practices, and to the recognition by Americans of the fact that only the principles she professes can make a nation free or a people virtuous.

Now, if the leaders of the separated sects on "check the growth of Popery" by fair, moral and legitimate means, we advise them to begin at once. Our religion is notorious fact that it is not by a new thing for the Gothamite authorities to exhibit anxiety for the preservation of the sacredness of the Sabbath, and were thoroughly well known that they suffer to pass unpublished, every Sunday in the year, descriptions quite as grievous as that intended by the Internationalists. In citing these facts we separated brethren come on with light "checks" as quickly as ever they like; but, if they do not wish to make themselves insufferably tedious, let them cease their nonsensical prate about the terrible consequences to follow when Catholicism shall have obtained dominancy in America.

TWO WEIGHTS AND TWO MEASURES.

The riot in New York on the 12th of last July is not a thing upon which any right-minded man can reflect with pleasure. To Irishmen especially must the remembrance of that occurrence be disagreeable, inasmuch as it is one of the most striking illustrations of cruelty, massacre and fanatical intoleration. Therefore our natural impulse is to let as hideous recollections die out, like those of so many other wrongs which men of our race have had to endure in this and other lands, in days gone by. But the recent prohibition of the intended procession of Internationalists through the streets of the same city, is in such marked contrast with the unrestricted permission of the identical procession to the Orangemen, and the contrast furnishes us with such an illustration that to the end of time will be immortal as the famous Falstaff letter which promulgated Lord Hoffman's famous proclamation, that we feel bound to bring the matter before our readers.

The similitude between the two processions is certainly remarkable, and both were objectionable to particular sections of the community for [illegible] and very differently indeed by the New York authorities. The Orange Society is a secret and oath-bound association of men who believe that Catholics should be deprived of the rights of citizenship on the ground that their faith makes them foes of liberty, who maintain that Ireland ought to be perpetually subject to English dominion, and who are consequently prepared to support any measure or movement, public or private, tending to degrade members of the church of Rome. The history of the Society from the days of its foundation is little else than a record of heroic outrages upon the liveand liberties of Roman Catholics, and desperate efforts to keep in existence the penal enactments of England. Therefore, it must be admitted that Orangeism insults Irishmen in three things most dear and sacred to the human heart: in their religion, in their nationality and in their manhood. The procession of 12th July, ostensibly purporting to celebrate the anniversary of a battle by which, it is alleged, Catholic supremacy in the United Kingdom was entirely destroyed, was really meant to humiliate Irishmen, and could possibly mean nothing else.

The International Society we do not pretend to understand thoroughly; but, so far as we know anything of it, it is an association of workingmen organized for the purpose of changing the present condition of things, redistributing property, and establishing a great system of communism throughout the civilized world. Its aims are essentially irreligious and destructive to all law and order. Nevertheless, it must be borne in mind, that the International Society, unlike the Orange, does not seek to insult men of any particular country or creed. Moreover, so far as long objection-able Americans generally, the International is, we must regret to say, is very freely tolerated by them, if not actually favored. The procession, which was proposed for last Sunday, had for its declared object the utterance of a protest against the execution of the Communistic insurgents condemned to death by the Versailles Government. No sensible man could find serious fault with the design. Beyond question, it was a much more blameless one than that kept in view by the transgressors on the 12th of July last. Yet the demonstration was prohibited, and a strong body of police was held in readiness to crush any attempt at carrying it out. Of course, it had to be abandoned, for the Internationals did not think themselves able to cope for a single moment with the municipal authorities.

Now this question arises, why were these two processions treated so differently? The arrangement were encouraged to parade they were protected by a whole army of horse, foot and artillery; a brutal slaughter was made of unoffending persons on the wretched pretext that they were assailing the processionists. The Internationals were not protected even to assemble on the streets, much less to march in military order, and every preparation was made to shoot them down like dogs in case they dared to defy the prohibitory proclamation! Let us examine the reasons adduced by the New York authorities for their singular behavior. These are neither numerous nor weighty. It is alleged that the assemblage would have been highly distasteful to a large number of citizens. We have not the least doubt that this allegation is perfectly correct. But, we may as well remark, so was the strange parade of the Orangemen. For it was applauded; the international parade was distasteful to a few Sabbatarians, therefore it was suppressed. Who shall say there are not two weights and two measures shown in these decisions?

THE ACQUITTAL OF KELLY.

We have received Irish papers containing detailed accounts of Kelly's trial, and the subsequent proceedings, but our readers pretty well posted upon the progress of the cause celebre, and as the verdict is now a matter of notoriety, we do not think it necessary to enter into a needed reports of the speeches for the defense, and the addresses of the Judges. As might be imagined, the acquittal of the prisoner created the most intense excitement. The utmost his friends exhausted themselves to hope was that there would be a disagreement of the jury; while the partisans of the government confidently expected a conviction. There was, in one sidethere is much rejoicing, and on the other great disgust and mortification. In most of the Irish cities and towns the result of the trial has been celebrated with bon-fires, triumphal processions, and musical displays. If there have been no demonstrations of an opposite character in Liverpool, London and Dublin, it must be attributed for by the number of denunciatory articles which have been published in the newspapers. In all these force anti-Irish diatribes, it is taken for granted that there could be no reasonable doubt entertained of Kelly's being the criminal, and consequently it is mainly asserted that the jury must have either sympathized with him or been afraid to return an honest verdict. Many of the articles attacking the unlucky jurymen were of the most scandalously illiberal nature; but they are only of a piece with those which denounced the acquittal as an assassination and a red-handed murderer while yet he was in the dock standing his trial. Mr. Digby, of the Irishman, was to punished with four months' imprisonment for libelling the Court, but no English editor will be troubled for libelling the prisoner in the jury. Such, however, is British justice. It is worthy of remark that the most scurrilous and abusive articles seem to have been written by men who did not do much as condescend to read the evidence given in the case, and, as a natural consequence, they abound in the most outrageous and inexcusable misrepresentations. In fact, they evidently emanated from persons who knew little more than that a man had been arrested for and was being tried for killing a policeman. It is too much the habit of English writers and their imitators in this country to take it for granted that every individual charged by the Government with any crime, misdemeanor or semi-delict in its nature, must be pitilessly guilty, and hence they are predisposed to regard an acquittal as a lamentable failure of justice. When we find one English paper gravely informing its readers that Kelly was actually caught in the act of shooting Talbot, and that a bullet corresponding to those remaining in the revolver was found in the body of the murdered spy; and when we call to mind, moreover, that Dr. Stokes declared the Constable was shot in the breast by one who stood immediately in front of him—we can hardly wonder that such furious onslaughts upon the jury were indulged in. We confess that, at first, we were of the opinion Kelly did shoot at and wound Talbot; but a careful reading of the evidence has been enough to convince us that he had no hand in the matter. Not the slightest worthy of mention has been adduced by the prosecution to connect the prisoner with the murderous deed, and the only one which would not apply with greater force to the Orange procession. We should attach great weight to the fact that Kelly was left-handed, but that alone would not be conclusive. The utmost his friends endeavored themselves to hope was that there would be a disagreement of the jury; while the partisans of the government confidently expected a conviction. There is, in one sidethere is much rejoicing, and on the other great disgust and mortification. In most of the Irish cities and towns the result of the trial has been celebrated with bon-fires, triumphal processions, and musical displays. If there have been no demonstrations of an opposite character in Liverpool, London and Dublin, it must be attributed for by the number of denunciatory articles which have been published in the newspapers. In all these force anti-Irish diatribes, it is taken for granted that there could be no reasonable doubt entertained of Kelly's being the criminal, and consequently it is mainly asserted that the jury must have either sympathized with him or been afraid to return an honest verdict. Many of the articles attacking the unlucky jurymen were of the most scandalously illiberal nature; but they are only of a piece with those which denounced the acquittal as an assassination and a red-handed murderer while yet he was in the dock standing his trial. Mr. Digby, of the Irishman, was to punished with four months' imprisonment for libelling the Court, but no English editor will be troubled for libelling the prisoner in the jury. Such, however, is British justice. It is worthy of remark that which, it was alleged, destroyed Talbot's life, they were unanimous for acquittal. As they did not immediate the avenue to gratify the British Government, and to revenge the assassination of a contemptible spy, they have been abused and vilified beyond measure. They have no legal redress to obtain, it seems; but, shall events, their defamers cannot deprive them of the consciousness that they performed their duty like honest and God-fearing men.

TO CATHOLIC VOTERS.

It is commonly charged against Catholic prelates that they "meddle in politics." The assertion is not often heard in this country, because our bishops and priests take peculiar care that there shall not even be the semblance of a foundation for it. But in Great Britain and throughout the European continent, it is frequently made by enemies of the Church. For our part we cannot understand why Catholic clergymen should not be at liberty to "meddle" as much as they please in politics, or in any matter connected with the welfare of the State. They are men and they are citizens, and the Government has no justification in depriving them of the rights or privileges belonging to them in either capacity. It does not follow, or at least it ought not, that because a person chooses to enter the Church he has ceased to be a citizen, he should be cut off from, or impeded in the exercise of the duties of citizenship. But our readers must know by this time that the insane appetite of bigotry, and the great champions of "progress and enlightenment," are in reality narrow-minded and bigoted tyrants. The liberty they seek is unlimited license for themselves and persecution for others. Doctors disagree, proscription and persecution for every one who differs in opinion from them on any point. But let us acknowledge, Catholic priests and bishops do "meddle," if by that be the term which must be used, occasionally in politics. They have to do so. They are compelled to it by the proper discharge of their duties to souls in their flocks. Every day questions are rising which intimately concern faith and morals, and they are bound to pass judgment upon them. Statesmen and political economists of all grades who want to remodel society after a fashion repugnant to Christianity, who seek to render the people civilized pagans, threaten the independence and safety of the Church of God, and in those countries where she has not been surpassed in any respect by that displayed at any Fair we have witnessed for a long time. The following is a list of the articles which have entered into, almost always against them and to their detriment.

Prompts have been made to contest the liberty of their associations; the liberty of their schools; the liberty of their pulpit; the liberty of teaching; the liberty of the expression of their faith.

Prejudices of the past age have tried to reappear; under the double names of liberty and progress and other misnomers, they have sought to mask attacks upon means most terrible rights.

The Republican have remained calm, expecting from their fellow citizens and from the public good sense the respect of our rights, the true and practical understanding of religious liberties.

Now more than ever, the Catholics cannot remain idle and forget the obligation of taking part in the ballot.

Let them think of it! they have an imperious duty to perform; every Catholic, when he drops his vote in the ballot-box, does an act for which he is responsible before God and before his country. He cannot, without committing a sin, allow himself to be led by worldly considerations, to be made the blind instrument of politicians who [illegible]

* Scandien fecit nations. (Liber aspient, I. 4.)
† Nisi fundum scithewelt domus. . . . (Psalms 126.)
‡ Justitia elevat gentes (Proverbs XIV, 34); . . . peccatum autem miseros facit nationes.

"Ladies' Enterprise" in aid of St. Ignatius College.

On Monday last, 11th instant, the "Ladies' Enterprise," in aid of St. Ignatius College, was commenced in the large hall attached to the institution, the entrance to which is on Jackson street. The ladies certainly must take considerable interest in the welfare of the College, for the collection of beautiful and useful articles to be sold at the present Fair is one which has not been surpassed in any respect by that displayed at any Fair we have witnessed for a long time. The following is a list of the articles which have entered into, almost always against them and to their detriment.

Table No. 1.—In presided over by Mrs. Carroll, assisted by Misses M. Carroll, Rose Carroll and Kingsley. Among the table are handsome glass baskets, lamp mats, silver salt cups, and various articles, useful and ornamental.

Table No. 2.—Mrs. Rankin, Mrs. McCahill, Mrs. Reese, Mrs. Sullivan, Mrs. Connor, a beautiful Japanese box filled with china carving by Mrs. Rankin, pincushions, a set of vases, tea-urns, and numerous et cetera.

Table No. 3.—Mrs. Fennessy and Mrs. Gordon, assisted by Mrs. Ir. Sweeney and Misses Gordon, a splendid gilt engraving of the Madonna, a gold bouquet holder, silver mounted sugar-bowl and spoon holder, a beautiful specimen of patchwork in the shape of a table-cover, etc.

Table No. 4.—Mrs. Fleming, assisted by her daughter, Miss Ella Flemming, and Miss Clara Thomas. Articles: Solid silver cup, silver mounted pincushion, silver pitcher, and other articles.

Table No. 5.—Mrs. C. Johson and Miss Mary Harrington, assisted by Jr. Dr. Cassin and Mrs. Cassin. Articles: A pair of fire screens, richly embroidered in Elizabethan taste, silver backed and ancient-looking; a beautiful ornament in the shape of a pair of swans of the Irish woods—Brandon, whose ancestors have probably been familiar with the original specimens of the species in their native wilds. The bottle-stoppers were quite gems in their way, being quite guilt from perch to perch. There is a fine rifle also on this table, with other articles.

Table No. 6.—Mrs. Rice, Mrs. Curry and Miss Rice, assisted by Mrs. Dr. Cassin and Miss Buckley. Articles: A fine oil painting of our Lady of Salette, a beautiful silver mounted sugar-bowl made by Mrs. Rice, a statue of the Blessed Virgin, an ivory crucifix, a family Bible, a fine lamp, and other articles.

Table No. 7.—Mrs. Tobin, Mrs. Sullivan, Mrs. Maloney, Miss Nellie Sullivan, and others. Articles: A handsome bride, a large portrait of Pope Pius IX., a gold watch, a statue of the Madonna, and two valuable steel engravings.

Table No. 8.—Mrs. Mrs. Tyden, Mrs. Harvey, Mrs. Gibason, Misses Regan and Walsh. Articles: A chinn tea-set, a handsome silver gilt pitcher and vase, richly charged with the sacred mission of defending the Catholic religion, we remind our flock of duties too often forgotten.

There are not two sorts of morals, one for private life, the other for public life; the Christian is bound by the duties he owes society, as he is bound by the duties he owes God.

GASPARI, Bishop of Hebron, Auxiliary of Sens.

MINING NEWS.

California.

AMADOR COUNTY.—The Ledger states that the new strike recently made in the placer diggings near Drytown, bids fair to be permanative and lasting.

The Alpine Miner says that dialogite is now found in many mountain claims in both the Silver Glance and Schenectady mines on the Tarbish lode. It is rich in gold.

NEVADA COUNTY.—A San Juan correspondent of the Transcript, says the mining claims of Davis, Bower, Beach and others, at San Juan, are paying a good recompense to their owners. At Selsacrapid, the American Mining Company's claims are paying well.

The Grass Valley Republican says two car-loads of rich rock was taken from the Murchie ledge, near the Oriental mill, two miles above Nevada City, a few days since.

The Grass Valley Union has seen some fine specimen of gold-bearing quartz taken from the Knight of Malta ledge, by Frank Farina & Co., the proprietors. The ledge is being worked at a depth of fifty feet, and it is fully three feet in thickness, with gold in the pockets quite liberally. The rock is also rich in sulphurets.

The Declaration Quartz Mining Company have located 3,600 feet of a quartz ledge on Deadman's Flat, near the Independence mine, Grass Valley District.

INYO COUNTY.—Good news is received from the Eclipse mine, owned by an Oregon company. They have reached a depth of 200 feet; width of ledge 7 feet. The ore taken out pays an average of $25 per ton.

SACRAMENTO COUNTY.—Patrick Donovan, says the Folsom Telegraph, of December 9th, is opening a new claim at Willow Spring at an expense of about two thousand dollars. It is situated in a line one half mile long.

MENDOCINO COUNTY.—The editor of the Santa Rosa Democrat has visited the Coast Range of Read Valley, Mendocino county, that extensive beds of coal exist in that locality. Mr. Read, in company with Messrs. Rose and others, of San Francisco, have taken up the lands upon which these coal mines are situated, and have at present a force of men engaged in erecting suitable buildings for the accommodation of the miners. The coal is said to be of good quality, the quantity inexhaustible, the veins in places showing a thickness of five and six feet.

SAN DIEGO COUNTY.—New mines have been struck in the Pia Juanea Valley. The quartz is heavy, and looks well, and the lead is about four feet wide on the surface.

SANTA CRUZ COUNTY.—The Sentinel, of this county, says the Santa Cruz Sentinel, of December 9th, has returned from a prospecting tour to Mt. Simeon, mountain, and reports the discovery of largeand well-defined veins of iron deposits. He supplies of chinabar are very fair, resorting about twelve per cent.

TUOLUMNE COUNTY.—The following items we clip from the Nationnel (Quiney) of the 25th:

Very rich rock is being taken out of the Eureka mine.

The Sonora town ledge in Mohawk valley is still paying. It seems to be an established fact from the results of the assays in which the gold is found, that the ore is richest in that the ledge will pay from $50 to $75 per ton.

Wm. Eiwell & Co. have discovered a valuable quartz lode in Mohawk valley, immediately across the river from Bellevue ranch, and which is supposed to be a continuation of the Bellerton ledge.

Good news is received from the recently discovered McLeary district. The first discovery, on the 15th instant, was made November 25th, was made about a mile and a half from Sonora. The ledge is from 5 feet wide to the millgone and assays from $300 to $400. They are 1,000 feet in the mine.

BRIEF CITY ITEMS.

The contract for the foundation walls of the new City Hall has been awarded to J. Cochrane and George Middlemas, they being the lowest bidders for the same.

Sheriff Adams has appointed Robert A. Mardon, Wm. Martin, Wm. Miller and Henry Bickel deputies; and Martha Little, matron of the County Jail, vice Rose Kelly, removed.

William L. Higgins, ex-Recorder of this county, has become a member of the Stock Exchange Board, of which he was one of the first earliest members. He is associated with Clay M. Greene.

The Water Committee of the Board of Supervisors, at its last meeting, reported against the Lake Tahoe and Clear Lake projects, and think a sufficient supply can be obtained by aggregating the waters of the streams in San Mateo, Santa Clara and San Francisco.

On the evening of Dec. 8th, J. M. Barnett, ex-President of the Board of Education, was presented with a testimonial by a visit from the teachers of the Pine and Larkin street School. They called on him to the number of [illegible]

Table No. 9.—Mrs. Mrs. Lavers, Misses Jordan, Javid, Murphy, Smith, McFadden, and the Misses Bickel. Articles: A gold watch, a set of carvers, a silver butter dish, gold bracelets, and one of the most ingenious machines, if we may so call it, for turning over the leaves of a music-book.

THE SHOE.

Is a novelty and deserves special mention. It is a shoe of enormous dimensions, and is crowded with scores of dolls of all sizes. Among them is a doll of comparatively gigantic proportions. This is "the old woman who lived in a shoe" and who "had so many children she did not know what to do." At another table, but as a part of the same shoe, is a walking doll, probably a grown up daughter of the old woman. The ladies in charge of all these are Miss Nettie Fitzgerald, Miss McElroy, Miss Connell.

THE FLOWER STAND

Is an elaborately built and decorated booth of leaves, moss and blossoms. It is very tastefully arranged for the floral treasures which will be deposited in it, and was last night universally admired. The ladies in charge are Misses Hobbs, Thompson, Roper, Lewis, O'Connor, Sinteler, Harris and Berry.

THE REFRESHMENT TABLE.

A great improvement has been made in this respect upon the usual refreshment counter. A pleasant room, well furnished with tables, has been partitioned off from the main hall, and a complete restaurant, with price checks, etc., organized. The improvement will be noticed by every visitor to the Fair, and will probably become

New Advertisements.

DRY GOODS.
SELLING OUT!
DISSOLUTION OF COPARTNERSHIP
TAAFFE & CO.
No. 9 Montgomery street,
WILL COMMENCE
Wednesday, December 13th,
To sell off their entire Stock of Dry Goods, on account of dissolution of partnership,
REGARDLESS OF COST!
Their stock comprises everything usually kept in a first-class DRY GOODS STORE, all of which must be sold
Before January 15, 1872.
Persons in need of goods in their line will secure
BARGAINS
By giving them a call.
FIXTURES FOR SALE.
Store Open till 9 p. m. dc16 4wks

CATHOLIC GIFTS
FOR THE
HOLIDAYS.
A splendid variety of CATHOLIC ARTICLES, both useful and ornamental, as well as a complete assortment of
CATHOLIC PUBLICATIONS
PRAYER BOOKS, BIBLES, &c., &c.,
Specially adapted for CHRISTMAS & NEW-YEAR'S GIFTS
FOR SALE AT
FLOOD'S CATHOLIC BOOKSTORE
No. 503 MARKET STREET,
Nielsen Hotel Building.

HAIS & POLLARD'S
Manufacturing Jewelers, No. 7 Kearny street, which must and will be sold during the Holidays, at any sacrifice. Purchasers should not pass their store if they want to buy Elegant Jewelry, fine Watches and Chains, Diamonds or Silverware, at their own price.
SALESROOM:
7 Kearny Street, near Market. dc16

A FLYNN'S
CITY OF DUBLIN
BOOT AND SHOE WAREHOUSE,
116 THIRD STREET,
Between Minna and Howard streets, San Francisco.
Manufacturer and dealer in all kinds of Boots and Shoes. Repairing promptly and neatly done. Orders by mail will receive prompt attention. dc16

CATHOLIC BOOKSELLER.
VESTMENTS, HOLY BIBLES,
Ecclesiastical Prayer Books,
Chalices, Pyxes, Missels, Breviaries,
H. C. BATEMAN,
CATHOLIC BOOKSELLER,
503 MARKET STREET, COR. SUTTER,
HAS JUST RECEIVED A FINE STOCK OF the above articles with a splendid assortment of all the Catholic and Irish books published in the United States and Ireland. And a fine selection of Vases, Pearl and Ivory Prayer Books, and all other fine Catholic articles.
BATEMAN is the CHEAPEST Catholic Bookseller on the Coast. All letters and orders from the country promptly attended to. 1y

Bacon & Company
Formerly Towne & Bacon,
Have the largest office
5 Do the best work 5
More promptly
3 Than 3
Any other
6 Printing firm. 6
You can prove it
By giving them a Job
At the well known Office,
536 Clay Street

THE MONITOR—1872.
REDUCTION IN PRICE
New Features—New Attractions.
INDUCEMENTS TO SUBSCRIBERS.
SEWING MACHINES,
GOLD and SILVER WATCHES, STEEL ENGRAVINGS,
CHROMOS, BOOKS,
LITHOGRAPHS, and
OTHER VALUABLE PRESENTS
Given to those who get up Clubs.
WHILE THE PROPRIETORS HAVE EVERY reason to feel gratified at the liberal patronage accorded the MONITOR of late years, and pleased at the satisfaction almost universally expressed with its general management, yet they know that it is far from being in the condition of the widespread circulation which the intelligence, wealth and numbers of the class which it endeavors to conscientiously represent entitled to, and this it should and must have to make it in all respects the worthy exponent of the views of the great Irish and Catholic population on the Pacific Coast.
The MONITOR is the only journal west of the Rocky Mountains specially devoted to the dissemination of sound Catholic and National doctrines, on the principle in whose interest it is presumed it should find a pleasing duty in patronage it in preference to other journals, many of which oppose or take special delight in ridiculing their Country and their Creed.
In order that the object it has in view may be more speedily attained, the Proprietors have determined to reduce the subscription price, on and after January 1, 1872, to
FOUR DOLLARS A YEAR!
(Payable invariably in advance.)
The following inducements are offered to
CLUBS.
To the person sending us $20 for a Club of 5, we shall give any number of the following Books to the value of $5.
Holy Bible, in different styles of binding.....$1 to $8 00
Martin Luther, and Modern History of Ireland, beautifully illustrated.....$12 to $16 00
Our Lady of Lourdes, just published.....3 00
The Vade-mecum Council and its Definitions.....1 25
Dore's Holy Family Pictured and Explained.....1 50
Cobry Gahan's Lives of the Irish saints.....3 00
The Fate and Fortunes O'Neil.....2 00
O'Donnell, Earls of Tyrone & Tyrconnell.....1 50
Life of Archbishop Hughes.....1 50
The Irish Abroad in Germany.....1 50
Lives of Hebert and Thomas Addis Emmet.....1 50
Life of Archbishop Bedini, Papal Nuncio.....1 50
The Battle Fields of Ireland, 1688 to 1691.....1 50
The Battle Fields of Ireland, 1798 to 1803.....1 50
Brennan's Historical Review of Irish Wrongs.....1 50
The Irish Abroad and at Home.....1 50
The Wild Irish Girl, by Lady Morgan.....1 50
Jessica Phaire.....1 50
Catholic Anecdotes, or the Catholicism in Every Day Life.....1 50
Poems of James Clarence Mangan.....2 00
Poems inspired for Ireland.....2 00
Florence Macarthy.....1 50
Sydney Lyra of the Saints, 4 vols.....$6 to 10 00
Lives and Times of the Roman Pontiffs.....2 00
Life of Pius IX., from his birth to the present time.....2 00
History of Christianity in China.....2 00
History of Christianity in Japan, 1549 to 1873.....1 50
Rise and Fall of the Irish Nation.....1 50
Life of Pius IX., by Archbishop Spalding.....1 50
Father Prout's Reliques.....1 50
Michael Fall Gunning.....1 50
Club of 10—Any number of books to the value of $10.
Club of 15—Any number of books to the value of $15.
Club of 20—Any number of books to the value of $20.
Club of 100—A beautiful solid Watch and Chain, worth $100, or any other article of equal value.
Or should the parties organizing Clubs prefer we shall give them cash premiums to the amount of the premiums in Gold Coin.
All the above premiums will be carefully packed and sent by express.
Those who Subscribe between now and January 1st, will be furnished with the MONITOR for the remainder of 1871, and the New Year opened with the New Year.
ADDITIONAL INDUCEMENTS.
Subscribers on preferring will be furnished
Gody's Lady's Magazine and The Monitor for $5 a year.
Peterson's Lady's Magazine and The Monitor for $5 a year.
The Catholic World and The Monitor for $7 a year.
For Several new and attractive features will be introduced during the coming year, the amount of reading matter materially increased, and other important improvements made.
With these improvements THE MONITOR will not only be the best but the cheapest journal printed in California; and it is hoped that those who appreciate its efforts in behalf of Faith and Fatherland, will exert themselves to extend its circulation and usefulness.
SUBSCRIPTION RATES:
Mail Subscribers, per year.....$4 00
Mail Months.....2 25
Delivered by carriers, per month of four weeks.....1 00
Single copies.....10
For Club rates, see above.
It is hoped and expected that our present Subscribers will immediately settle their accounts to the last of the present year.
LYONS & BARRY, Publishers,
511 Clay street, San Francisco.

CLOTHING.
P. J. SULLIVAN & CO.
CUSTOM-MADE CLOTHING
FURNISHING GOODS,
THIRD STREET, 28 THIRD STREET
CLOTHING.

Examination at Santa Clara College.

OF THE Semi-Annual Examination of the Students of Santa Clara College, will be held on the 19th, 20, 20th and 22d inst., in the College hall, each day, from 2:30 to 4:30 p. m. The friends of the Institution, and especially the parents and guardians of its students, are requested to attend.
A. YORKE, S. J., President.

INFORMATION WANTED—OF DAN NORTON. He left Junction City, Kansas county, in 1865. He was a machinist in Alvin, Texas, in 1873. Any information of him will be thankfully received by his sister, Catherine Norton, Petaluma, Sonoma county, California. dc16

WEST TROY FOUNDRY
Established in 1826.
CHURCH, ACADEMY, FACTORY AND OTHER Bells, made of copper and tin, warranted satisfactory, and mounted with our New Patent Rotary Counter-balance Hangings. Illustrated Catalogues sent free. For prices and other particulars apply to
E. A. & G. R. MENEELY,
de16-17 pow West Troy, New York

NOTICE TO POLICY-HOLDERS
OF THE OCCIDENTAL
INSURANCE COMPANY
SAN FRANCISCO, Dec. 13, 1871.
THE OCCIDENTAL INSURANCE COMPANY has this day transferred all its Fire business now in force throughout the Pacific Coast, to the COMMERCIAL UNION ASSURANCE COMPANY OF LONDON, and all persons insured are requested to call at the office of the Commercial Union on the northeast corner of California and Sansome streets, and receive an adjustment with our policies.
B. ROTHSCHILD,
Secretary Occidental Ins. Co.

THE COMMERCIAL UNION
ASSURANCE CO. OF LONDON,
Has purchased the Fire business, and reinsures the outstanding Fire risks of the Occidental Insurance Company throughout the Pacific Coast, as stated in the above notice, and all persons having policies in said Occidental Insurance Company are requested to communicate with this Company in all matters relating to the same, and their future business is respectfully solicited.
G. O'HARA TAAFFE,
General Agent Commercial Union Assurance Company, of London.
Office on the northeast corner California and Sansome streets.

THE EVENING POST,
A DAILY NEWSPAPER.
HENRY GEORGE, EDITOR.
A. B. RAPP, Business Manager.
PRICE, ONE CENT!
Refer to Agents and Dealers, the half cent.
Mail Subscribers, 75 cents per month; $3 per year.
Delivered in the city at 6 cents per week.
An edition of 19,000 copies will be required to supply the demand.
Advertisements 12 cents per line.
Publication Office, 504 Montgomery street, above Clay.
HINTON, RAPP & CO., Publishers.

ST. COLUMBA.

The twilight deepens into night,
Save there, above the gray rock rim,
One fleeting streak of amber light
Shows in the westward, low and dim:
The sober veils are veiled in gloom,
The breakers make a mournful dirge;
But one shrine in the twilight room
That looks across the ready surge.
And traces nicely, line by line,
With soft and tender hand tying pen,
The features of the Mother Divine,
Of Him who died for men.

The west no longer holds a light,
The sea has lost its tender tinge,
The moon uprises, fair and white;
The cloud-rack wear a lighter fringe;
The sea-mists soar across the green
The freshness of the ocean spray;
The ballet hovers by a stunted gray,
Within the ripples' reach to cling.
Pines on the summit ground be low—
The earth a weary vision fled,
And heaven before his eyes.

The sky is one vast block of gloom,
The moonlight thin the sea no more—
It fills past the breakers' roar.
The ashen surges chafe the shore,
But high above the tumult swell,
A Presence in the midnight bright;
Over it, lends but lightsaid heart
Glides through and gives a mystic light,
Shadow of pain or strife, no more
Shall dim thy joy, O holy one.
The calm's pageantry is over,
The starry prayer is won.

—Kate Field.

"That same boor" the boor of Cork, the whole island of him was encompassed with a brightness and all the heart of the isle stood in its true point.—Nation, Nov. 11.

Bishop Hay.

We take the following from a very fair review of the works of Bishop Hay, which appeared last week in the Newcomers' Presbyterian paper. The work have been entirely reprinted by Messrs. Blackwood in an extremely handsome manner, under the editorship of the Right Rev. Bishop Strain, and after a little satirical comment, the 1793 persecution which he made the fortunes of so many Falkirk missioners, and the real persecutions endured by the Catholics of Scotland, the writer continues: The old knight obviously attendant on a little persecution tempt one to be mildly satirical. It is otherwise when one is called on to contemplate men suffering for conscience' sake. In the one we have but little sympathy with the churlish power of a Guthrie, it is impossible to repress pity and indignation at the atrocious usage which the good Bishop, the author of the volumes before us, endured at the hands of his fellow-countrymen. Bishop Hay was one of those who really held to and are suffering in very severe forms for the sake of his religious opinions. It is true he was a Roman Catholic Bishop, and we in Scotland have it so constantly dinned into us that the Romish Church is a persecuting Church that we forget altogether that our own worthy ecclesiastical rulers can take kindly to the work of correcting people's religious opinions by outward, forcible applications when opportunity is given. They, too, can arise like Phinehas and execute judgment. Now-a-days, of course, these claws are cut and they are harmless; but it was otherwise in other days. Papists had no power then of it in Scotland for no centuries after the Reformation. Indeed, until the blessing of the coercive powers of the secular arm was withdrawn from our national Presbyterianism by a back-sliding Government, a Papist hunt was one of those pleasing pastimes which were gratifying to all classes alike, awakening a thrill of satisfaction in the dignitaries of the Church Courts as they saw the good work progressing, and kindling wild enthusiasm in the close and wynds as brickbats and rotten eggs arose to a pæanium. From the modern and well written biography of Bishop Hay prefixed to this edition of his works, we extract the following account of the way in which we did it as late as 1778; and if it should meet the eye of Dr. Begg, we ask him to note how sadly and how soon we have changed for the worse. Barely a century has passed since the event here narrated happened, and yet where in broad Scotland would a similar outrage be tolerated? Not for a length evinced a disposition to repeal some of the most oppressive of the penal laws which had so long been a disgrace to the Legislature, Bishop Hay seized the favorable moment to procure some relief for the Catholics of Scotland, who for even more heavily than their brethren in England and Ireland, the iron rod of persecution. The Insales all over Scotland immediately took the alarm. Declarations and resolutions were everywhere adopted against any mitigation of the penal statutes. The press teemed with misrepresentations and calumnies, the pulpits resounded with fulminations against Catholics. The popular fury was especially directed against the bishop, and a day was fixed for burning the chapel and houses which he had lately built in Chalmers' close, High Street. Handbills were distributed inviting all to aid in the good work, and were copiously termed; and at length, on the 2d of February, 1779, the mob assembled, and, with the assistance of the city guard, sailors from Leith, proceeded to their work of destruction. Repeated applications were made to the Lord Provost for protection against the rioters, but he was deaf to all entreaties. The Duke of Buccleuch and other old nobles, fired with indignation at such daring excesses, hastened with a few troops to the spot, seized the most forward of the incendiaries, and would have dispersed the mob, but the authorities positively refused to allow him to proceed, and the work of destruction went on. The chapel and house were soon reduced to ashes, and the rabble then spread themselves over the city, burning and destroying everything belonging to Catholics which came in their way. At this crisis, Bishop Hay arrived from London, and, unaware of the mode of mission, proceeded on his way home. The unusual crowd in the street, however, attracted his attention, and addressing a woman whom he met near the foot of Blackfriars' Wynd, he asked her what it meant. 'Oh, sir,' she replied, 'we are burning the Popish chapel, and we only wish we had the bishop to throw him into the fire.'"

Plous females! We doubt that race of holy women has gone from us, or, if any specimens still exist, they wear dark contimuations and white chokers, so that the sex loses the credit of them. There is one point, however, in which, amid general right-hand deflections and left-hand backsliding, we have not degenerated, and that is the quality of our style rulers. We would look like "noble fellows" were we at present under the Queen and over us in Auld Reekie to make so handsome a moss of a should occasion offer in 1871 as over did their magnanimous predecessors in 1779. Their doings might be less fiery and more watery than those of their official forbears, but they would be equally absurd.

The Hope mine at Grass Valley, for the month of November, took out $10,000 worth of gold, and the expenses of the mine for the same period amount to only $2,500.

Those who dredge a good article to restore gray hair to its youthful color a word is recommend to purchase Hall's Vegetable Sicilian Hair Renewer. Its wonderful and valuable preparation. Sold by all druggists.

The Press and the Kelly trial.

The Freeman has published an able article upon the strictures of the Times upon the Kelly trial, from which we extract the following:

If the Solicitor-General and Mr. Hutt would only take counsel with the Times, we should have small trouble as to the whereabouts, of the wound inflicted on the late Constable Talbot. A question which for four days has fired the intellect of the foremost men at the bar—to say nothing of sundry miserable squabbles—which yesterday settled in the most apathy simple manner in one sentence of a Times leading article. "Head Constable Talbot was shot about midnight by a man who sprang out of a doorway and fired a revolver into his breast[illegible] ball passing nearly through him, lodging in the back part of the neck." We are quite sure that this news will rather startle the Crown; and will amaze surgeon Stokes and the learned gentlemen who assisted at the now famous operation. The article which contains this disgraceful falsehood is one of the most outrageous we ever remember to have read, even in the columns of the Times. It is an outrage on justice, on most notorious and ascertained facts, and on the humbler classes of the Irish people. Kelly is stigmatised as a "common criminal;" which is a wanton insult, not merely to him, but to the [illegible] upon which he stands. Talbot Twiss we are invited to remember that his guilt is not assumed, and twenty times it is suggested by inference or broadly hinted by innuendo. But the ignorant traducer who has once more been permitted to ply his trade, does not rest content with libelling the accused as a "common criminal;" a man charged with cowardly assassination in the dead of night;" but the whole nation is indicted as believing in and sympathising with murder and its agents. "Bloodthirstiness is still the state of the Irish people, and no one can say that it will be washed out in this generation." This gross and deliberate lying is concluded with a kind of hope that, "until the laboring class works itself clear of the friendship of the Times for Ireland. In its most scandalous period we doubt if it ever printed a column containing less truth than that which occupies the premier place in yesterday's sheet. The wildest slanders are uttered with an immoral recklessness that is positively astounding. Every charge which the precious vilifier can level at the people is flung forth in continued cumulation. We are worse than those who slaughter babes for the meanest hire. We can show a deeper villainy than that people whose jail population is the noblest recreation in universal history. We are stained deeper than Carrickshock, and the Greek Brigands are gentlemen when compared with us. The knife of the Corsican and the rifle of the Spaniard are not more terrible than the weapon of the civilised Irishman; and yet he has been for seven hundred years under the government of the most enlightened nation in the world. Surely to a mind not wholly degraded by ignorance, not corruptly corroded by hate, there was no ground for this foul display of bituminous slander. But there is use even in the adversity which shows us the Times' right hand. If this be our intercessor with the English people our degradation is complete; and if we may longer boast ourselves in this friendship we deserve no higher fate. We can find no language suitable in characteristic to the slanders contained in the article to which we refer. These are gross in their falsehood, in their moral grossness, unparalleled in their insolence, cowardly in their misrepresentation, and disgusting in their unscrupulousness. We, therefore, fling them back on our contemporary as the obscene ravings of a diseased mind, or as the vile emanations of an unprincipled slanderer.

"Only a Child."

The proposal to erect a monument to the [illegible] at Montmartre, at which assassins are to be raised to commemorate all the murders which take place in the metropolis, even only in those cases where the murderer is undiscovered, London will soon present the appearance of a vast cemetery. The victims to whose memory monuments might with propriety be raised are those whose murders attract little or no attention. The little children who are annually slaughtered in countless numbers with a ferocity even less excusable than that of the Herod of Scripture, in Ireland, it gives strength to all those who are averse from giving them justice. The Standard fans the ferocity of these fiends in the feeling in dealing with the demand of the Bishops to remind us of the shortness and uncertainty of life in London. For there is a small sonne might properly be reared in the enclosure of Tavistock square in memory of a little girl, on whose body an inquest was held by Dr. Lankester. This poor child was found with "its deep cut from the mouth to the right ear, severing the lower jaw and carotid artery; also with another cut in the neck, severing the muscles to the spinal cord." As Dr. Lankester truly observed, "if this was done by the act of a grown person, the public would insist on, and the jury would not rest until they had exhausted every means in their power to discover the guilty parties; but because it was done by a child," the public were indifferent, and, after a few inquiries, the police let the matter drop." These remarks give a valuable hint for inscriptions on monuments to murdered infants. "Only a child!" will be the fate of more eloquent tribute to the memory of the departed than a long historical record of the heinous cowards of the little victims whose virtues, unlike those of their elders and betters, are only negative. Dr. Lankester was, however, not quite lost in his observations. The police and the public do occasionally render important justice to the murdered without reference to their age. The young lady so barbarously murdered some time since, and thrown into the Regent's Canal, deserves a monument of some kind to her memory, for the body has never been identified. No inquiries have been made after her by her surviving relatives; no reward has been offered in the apprehension of her murderers, and her case, which attracted little or no attention, is forgotten by all but the few who are weak enough to deplore the sublime resignation displayed by the public under circumstances which in other lands and other ages less civilised and enlightened than our own, might have been considered not only painful, but rather discreditable. It is, however, consoling to reflect that we could not have shown more tender regret for this murdered young lady than if she had been, to use Dr. Lankester's expressive words, 'only a child.'"

The jury before whom had been tried the matter of the condemnation of Point au Pelée, in St. Fifteenth District Court, rendered a verdict for defendants with $1,000, and that defendants sustain no damage in consequence of said condemnation. The suit was brought about by the exemption of ground, claimed by defendants, for light-house purposes.

The Bishop of Orleans Upon Primary Education.

M. Dupanloup, the Bishop of Orleans, has written a letter on the subject of Primary Education to the Impartial du Loiret, in which he says: "I have read in the Impartial du Loiret, of the 29th of this month, the following lines: 'The Conservationist announces that M. Jules Simon has terminated his labors upon the law of gratuitous and compulsory Instruction. The voters of the Councils General being almost everywhere in support of it, that law will, it is said, be brought forward at the reopening of the Chamber.' Permit me to say that I regret those lines. I desire as much as any one that there shall not be a single young Frenchman nor a single young French woman unable to read and write; and I am the successor of a Bishop who, in the seventeenth century, founded at his own expense two hundred gratuitous primary schools in the diocese of Orleans. . . . When the time comes I shall, in the present state of education and morals in France, have some very serious things to say. But the fact remains that the gratuitous system is not in itself favorable to the attendance at the schools and the progress of instruction. Moreover, the gratuitous system will destroy most of our religious schools, for this decision is reason—that they will no longer be able to sustain the competition of the gratuitous schools. And, our religious schools destroyed, all our children will be handed over by compulsion to a system of instruction, which, if we may judge by the efforts recently made in Paris during the Communes and elsewhere at this moment, might become a terrible instrument of irreligious danger. And independently of this danger, nothing would be gained from an educational point of view. For these primary religious schools, which will thus be destroyed, [illegible] to prove by official statistics have the superiority; that is to say, that they produce, relatively, far more eloquent tribute to the memory of the departed than a long historical record of the heinous cowards of the little victims whose virtues, unlike those of their elders and betters, are only negative. Dr. Lankester was, however, not quite lost in his observations. The police and the public do occasionally render important justice to the murdered without reference to their age. The young lady so barbarously murdered some time since, and thrown into the Regent's Canal, deserves a monument of some kind to her memory, for the body has never been identified. No inquiries have been made after her by her surviving relatives; no reward has been offered in the apprehension of her murderers, and her case, which attracted little or no attention, is forgotten by all but the few who are weak enough to deplore the sublime resignation displayed by the public under circumstances which in other lands and other ages less civilised and enlightened than our own, might have been considered not only painful, but rather discreditable. It is, however, consoling to reflect that we could not have shown more tender regret for this murdered young lady than if she had been, to use Dr. Lankester's expressive words, 'only a child.'"

EDUCATIONAL.

SAINT MARY'S COLLEGE
SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.
Conducted by the Christian Brothers.
Offers every facility for acquiring a thorough Education, whether Classical, Scientific or Commercial.

Those who complete the Classical Course receive the degree of A. B., or Bachelor of Arts. The Commercial course has been established for the convenience of those who wish to acquire a good practical education in as short a time as possible.

While proper care is bestowed on every branch taught in the College, one study language receives special attention. The daily exercises of the Students in Grammar, Composition and Rhetoric are publicly discussed and corrected in the Classroom.

TERMS PER SCHOLASTIC YEAR,
(Invariably half payable in advance):

| | |
|---|---|
| Board, Tuition and Washing | $350 00 |
| Entrance Fee | 10 00 |
| Physician's Fee and Medicines | 5 00 |
| Vacation at College | 60 00 |
| Use of Bedding | 10 00 |
| Modern languages, Music and drawing form extra charges. | |

Studies will be resumed on the 1st of August.
[illegible] REV. R. JUSTIN, President.

HOTELS.

Removal.

THE SECOND STREET HOUSE
Has Removed to 115 Second street,
Northeast corner of Minna. Formerly occupied by Gen. Geo. H. Bonnell, as the most reasonable terms.
Call and Examine. M. O'NEIL,
Proprietor.

CENTRAL HOTEL,
615 AND 617 SANSOME STREET,
Between Broadway and Pacific.....San Francisco

THIS NEW, LARGE AND COMMODIOUS HOUSE has recently been thoroughly renovated by the undersigned, formerly proprietor of the Pacific House, proprietor of the Brooklyn House, where he will be happy to receive his former friends and the public in general. Thankful for past favors, he respectfully solicits a continuance of the same patronage.

There is a free hack at the House, where passengers can be taken to any part of the city free of charge.

Central House coach will be at each car depot and steamboat landing for every passenger in the case of change.

Parties sending for their friends to the House, or the depot, may rest assured that only MICHAEL FARRELL, and he will attend to them on their arrival, and conduct them to the House with the care and does save much trouble.

The strictest attention will be paid to the comfort of the patrons of this House.

MICHAEL FARRELL, Proprietor.

FRANKLIN HOTEL,
615 AND 616 PACIFIC STREET,
Between Sansome and Montgomery.....San Francisco.

HUGH CURRAN.....Proprietor.

Board, per week.....$7 00
Board and Lodging, single room.....9 00
Single Meals, 25 cents. Lodging, 25 cents.

Family accommodations at reasonable rates.
Passengers and baggage conveyed to the House free of charge. Coaches will be in attendance at the A City Directory, and at the city cars at the door.

RAILROAD HOUSE,
Corner of Sansome and Pacific streets, San Francisco.
Is now open for the reception of guests.
P. CASSERLY,
Late of the Tremont House, where he will be happy to receive his friends and the public in general.

The House is thoroughly fitted up on the latest plans with all the modern improvements. The Rooms are large and airy, and command a fine view of the Bay and Shipping.

The best attention will be paid to the comfort and convenience of guests.

Board and Lodging per week.....$7 00
Board and Lodging per day.....1 50
There is a free coach at the House, where passengers can be kept at the rate of one dollar per day.

Meals, 25 cents. Lodging, 25 cents.
Single Rooms, 25 cents.
Board and Lodging per week.....$7 00
Board and Lodging per day.....1 50
There is a free coach at the House, where passengers can be kept at the rate of one dollar per day.

TELEGRAPHIC.

Eastern.

NEW YORK, December 11.—A special dispatch from London says that a tremendous excitement prevailed at Madrid on receipt of President Grant's Message, relating to the Cuban difficulty. The Government has resolved to maintain a firm attitude. A reinforcement of 4,000 troops, two additional Generals and four iron-clads will be immediately dispatched to Cuba.

A special dispatch from London says mention of alleged violation of neutrality by the United States with regard to Cuba were discussed by the Council Ministers at Madrid, on the 6th, and as the result of the council, dispatches were sent to the Spanish Minister at Washington which were said to contain important instructions respecting the attitude of the United States towards Spain in Cuba. The course of the United States Government is likely to affect the Alabama claims in the General Conference by furnishing a precedent in favor of the British Government in the cases of the Hornet, the Florida and other privateers.

A special dispatch from Matamoros, Mexico, says that the unconditional surrender of Saltillo, with all the Government troops, arms and ammunition has been announced by General Trivino, commander of the revolutionists. Tabito, another rebel leader, is marching on Mier, and constantly adding to his strength, without any opposition from the forces of Col. Ocerin, had arrived at Matamoras with 100 men, and his arrival created apprehensions of trouble.

John Pettit and Isay Lazarus have been convicted of illegal registration and each fined ——, respectively two and a half and one year in State Prison.

There was a stormy meeting of the Internationals this evening, Theodore H. Banks presiding. After a great deal of talk denouncing the police authorities for preventing the parade and arresting members of the society last Sunday, a motion to parade next Sunday was carried amid the wildest applause. A committee was appointed to wait upon Gov. Hoffman and request him to revoke the police order prohibiting the parade and to ask for State protection. Communication was appointed to inform the Superintendent of Police of their determination to parade. The meeting finally broke up with wild yells of "Vive la Communie" "Vive l'Internationale!"

It is reported that the "Onion Square Bank has suspended, but the officers deny that there is any embarrassment in that institution.

A committee from the Internationals waited on the Police Commissioners this afternoon to ask permission to parade next Sunday in honor of Rossel. Mayor Hall, who is, by virtue of his office, a member of the Board, was not present, but sent a communication to the effect that he would be glad to meet the Internationalists, at public meeting on the subject. This suggestion the committee declined to entertain. The Police Commissioners refused to grant permission for a demonstration on Sunday next, but without expressing any opinion or giving any explanation. A committee of Internationals leave to-night for Albany, and will wait on the Governor to-morrow.

Edward S. Pierrepont volunteers his services to the lately arrested Internationals in the preparation of their case for trial. The action of the authorities in prohibiting a parade on Sunday is bitterly denounced everywhere throughout the city.

Rev. Dr. Gardiner of the Cathedral at Brooklyn, and graduate of the American College at Rome, died this evening, at his residence in Brooklyn.

PROCEEDINGS OF CONGRESS.

WASHINGTON, December 11th.—Senate.—Sumner, at his own request, is relieved from the chairmanship of the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Petitions were presented and referred asking for the repeal of the duty on salt.

The House General Amnesty bill was reported from the Committee, and its passage recommended.

Sumner introduced his bill to abolish the Internal Revenue Commissionership, and asked its reference to the Finance Committee.

Sherman doubted the power of the Senate to originate bills of this character.

Sumner claimed that it had the power, as it was a bill reducing not raising taxes.

The bill was finally referred to the Committee on Finance.

Morton called up the resolution for a final adjournment on the third Monday in May.

Sumner moved that there be no adjournment until the passage of a bill securing equal rights without distinction of race or color.

WASHINGTON, December 11th.—There was quite a long and interesting discussion in the Senate to-day on Senator Trumbull's proposition for a joint Committee to investigate into and propose measures of reform in every department of the Government. The Administration was favorable very generally for taking prompt against such a step, while the Illinois Senator claimed that frauds and corruptions seemed to be hidden in every branch of the service.

House.—Under the call of the States, various petitions and joint resolutions were introduced and referred.

Morgan introduced a bill proposing an amendment to the Constitution so as to make naturalized citizens eligible to the office of President or Vice President of the United States.

King introduced a bill proposing an amendment to the Constitution prohibiting intermarriage of whites and blacks, and prohibiting States by law to make any separate education of white and colored children.

On motion of Mr. Dawes a concurrent resolution for adjournment from December 20th to January 8th, was adopted.

Mr. Campbell asked leave to offer a concurrent resolution requesting the President to cause negotiations to be commenced with Great Britain and Mexico, with the view to ascertain the conditions on which they would consent to the annexation of their possessions on this continent to the United States.

Cuba.

HAVANA, December 12th.—To-day and henceforward, regular troops will garrison Morro, Cabana, and Principe forts. In view of the arrival of reinforcements from Spain, Valmaseda considers it but just to relieve the volunteers from those arduous services. Spain will send to Cuba this month four battalions of troops from the regular army of Spain, besides ten thousand reinforcements which are to follow within one year. Señor Moreno, the new Governor of Havana, has begun the work of suppressing gambling houses.

Foreign.

VERSAILLES, December 7.—A message from Thiers was received in the Assembly to-day and read. It announces that the British Government has been notified of the intention of France to abrogate the Treaty of Commerce at the stipulated time, but France will not discontinue negotiations for the arrangement of her commercial relations with Great Britain. The hopes are earnest never to forget to what depth of wretchedness the Empire has led the country. France should now look for complete resignation to God and time. It was her policy to endure a dignified peace. Should war occur, despite her determination to remain at peace, it should not be her deed. France must resume the position to which she was entitled, not only for her own good, but in the interest of all nations. France sympathises with the Pope in the maintenance of his spiritual independence, and will, in case of need, give the Holy Father vigorous support.

The Assembly, by a vote of 434 to 224, refused to consider the propriety of the Chamber of Deputies, Senate and Ministry, at Versailles. The relations of France with Russia, says the President, are those of reciprocal interest. Thiers deplores the indebtedness of the country, but says it is due to the machinations of the Emperor Napoleon. The President advocates the establishment of general compulsory military service in war time, and proposes a permanent force sufficient to contingent thirty thousand men in time of peace. The message concludes with an expression of confidence in the Constitution as at present framed.

PARIS, December 9.—A change in the French government is imminent. Thiers will relinquish the Presidency in favor of Duke D'Audiffret. He has agreed to this movement with the Duke, and all influential members of the Right approve it. The Orleans princes will not take their seats until the plan is carried out. The change will be made before the 20th, if details have been arranged. The cause of the change is Thiers' inability to withstand the Right, which has been returned from the Provinces, and is very hostile, and his fears of the constantly increasing power of the imperialists in the army.

LONDON, December 9.—The Orleans Princes had an interview with Thiers yesterday, and consented to defer for the present their claims for seats in the Assembly.

PARIS, December 7.—President Thiers has demanded the recall of Prince de Chigalied, the Papal Nuncio in this city.

The Paris Figaro says that orders have been sent to Cherbourg and Brest to have vessels prepared for cruising about the coasts of France, and represents that these naval precautions are taken to prevent what it calls 'mischief' return from Kiba."

LONDON, December 7.—An imposing demonstration was made last evening at Birmingham, in favor of a radical reform in the House of Lords, and liquidation of its power to defeat or suspend beneficial progressive legislation of the House of Commons. Mr. Bike addressed the meeting, and while speaking was frequently interrupted. So great was the confusion he was obliged to desist. Resolutions were adopted protesting against the principle of hereditary legislation, and demanding the abolition of the right of legislative functions from the Bishops.

LONDON, December 12.—The elections in Spain in which the Republicans have been so successful were for municipal councils, and not for the Cortes, as incorrectly stated.

LOS ANGELES, December 10th.—A full report of the Grand Jury concerning the late Chinese riot in this city, and three papers relating thereto, were mailed to Minister Low yesterday.

DENNIS GRAHAM & SON, Lexington, Ky., the publishers of the Kentucky Live Stock Record, have issued a very handsome Holiday number, which is filled with valuable and interesting matters of the season. The present is a very neat publication, and we heartily say that it has our warm approval and support. We hope that the Exhibition will be right well attended on both evenings, and that a handsome amount will be raised for the proposed fund. Moreover we have got the slightest doubt that the entertainment will prove worthy of public patronage entirely on its own merits.

Wholesale Market Report.

MONITOR OFFICE, SAN FRANCISCO, Tuesday, Dec. 12, 1871.

FLOUR.—There continues a fair local demand. For export, however, the market has shown no particular animation, and prices are unchanged since our last weekly review. We quote standard brands of Oregon extra at $7 50 and local brands as follows: superfine, $5 50@5 75; and extras at $7 00, 50 and $ 00 bbl.

WHEAT.—Has been in limited hourly shipment last weekly review, the millers being the only purchasers in the market at present. Quotable at $2 35@2 50 per ctl.

BARLEY.—The Market has remained quiet during the week under review, at a decline in prices. Quotable at the close at $1 80@2 for feed.

OATS.—The demand has remained moderate for this grain during the past week; prices, however, are without especial change. Quotable at the close at $1 75@1 85 for No. 1.

BRAN.—The receipts have been light, and prices have ruled firm at $17 50@18 00 per ton, in bulk and sacks.

STRAW.—Quotable at $5 00@5 50 per ton for range lots.

CORN.—Quotable at $2 @2 10 for yellow and white $ 00 bbl.

CORN MEAL.—Sells at $2 75@3 25 @ 100 lbs from mill.

BEANS.—Following are the current rates: Bayo $3 75; Small Bayo, $3 25; Pea, $3 50; Small White, $3 50; Pink, $3 25.

POTATOES.—The receipts have been free, and demand fair during the past week. At the close we quote Onions at $1 50, and other kinds at 75@$1 25 per 100 lbs.

ONIONS.—Quotable at 75@$1 @ 100 lbs.

HAY.—Sells readily at $ @ 00 ton.

MIDDLINGS.—We quote feed at $42 50 @ ton from the mills.

RYE.—Quotable at $2 @ 2 00 @ 100 lbs.

CHICKEN FEED.—Sells at $3 @ 3 50 @ 100 lbs.

VEGETABLES.—Are in good supply. Artichokes, 4c; Asparagus, 10c; Beets, 2c lb; Cabbage, $1 @ 1 50 @ doz; Carrots, $1 @ 1 50 @ sack; Cauliflower, $1 @ 1 50 @ doz; Celery, 10c @ bunch; Cucumbers, 10c @ doz; Dried Peas, 4c @ lb; Dried Beans, 4c @ lb; Egg Plant, 10c @ lb; Garlic, 10c @ lb; Green Peas, 4c @ lb; Green Corn, 10c @ doz; Green Peppers, 10c @ lb; Horseradish, 10c @ lb; Lettuce, 10c @ doz; Okra, 10c @ lb; Onions, 2c @ lb; Parsley, 10c @ bunch; Parsnips, 5c @ lb; Pumpkins, 2c @ lb; Radishes, 10c @ doz; Rhubarb, 10c @ lb; Sage, 10c @ bunch; Squash, 2c @ lb; Sweet Potatoes, 4c @ lb; Tomatoes, 10c @ lb; Turnips, 2c @ lb; Tomato Sauce, 10c @ bottle.

CURED MEATS.

HAMS—California sugar cured, 17c lb; Oregon, 15@16c; California sugar cured, 17@18c; Eastern do, 19@ 20c.

BACON—California, at 14@14½c lb; Oregon, then 15c; Eastern sugar cured, 16@17c; Eastern do, 18@19c; California, 13@14c lb; Oregon, in skin and 13@14c; Eastern, 15@16c; Eastern do, in canvas 17@18c.

FRESH MEATS.

BEEF.—For first quality, butcher's, 8@9c lb; for second do, 7@8c; third do, 6@7c.

VEAL.—At 7@10c lb.

MUTTON.—At 8@9c lb.

LAMB.—At 9c lb.

PORK.—Dressed, grained, 8@9½c; on foot, grained, 6@6½c lb.

POULTRY AND GAME.

POWLS—Hens, large, at 11@12 50; Spring Chickens, small to medium, $8 @ 9 dozen.

DUCKS—Tame at 12@13 dozen.

GEESE—Tame at 12@13 @ dozen.

TURKEYS—Gobblers, 18c; Hens, 20c.

HARE—At 10@12 dozen.

RABBITS—Tame, at 10@12 dozen.

QUAIL—At 12 @ dozen.

JEWELRY, SILVER WARE and WATCHES are actually selling at less than manufacturers' prices at TUTTLE & CO.'S. They are determined at whatever sacrifice they make to sell for any reasonable price offered that will pay the intrinsic value of the articles purchased. Their stock is so large that it would be useless for any one to quote the amount to advertise it.

GREAT BARGAINS

FOR THE

HOLIDAYS.

GLEESON & FELL

141 FOURTH STREET.

WE ARE DETERMINED TO SELL DURING THE Holidays, the greatest Bargains ever offered in

DRY GOODS.

See our Following Prices:

125 pieces Mixed Striped and figured poplins, 31 cents per yard; regular price, 50 cents.

42 pieces Striped Poplins, 37½ cents; regular price, 37½ cents.

120 pieces French Silk and Wool Serges, 50 cents per yard; regular price, 75 cents.

100 pieces Empress Cloth, 50 cents per yard; worth 75 cents.

74 pieces striped Satin de Chine, 50 cents per yard; worth 75 cents.

75 pieces Silk Mixed Stitch Winceys, 50 cents per yard; well worth $1.

75 pieces Buffalo Black Alpaca, 25 cents, 30 cents and 37½ cents.

50 pieces of Black Brilliantine, 25 cents; worth 37½c.

4 pieces Silk to be sold for 50 cents per yard, worth $1.

50 pieces Alwin Twilled Plaids, 3-yard wide, 50 cents per yard, worth $1; full line of new designs.

28 pieces fluted Black Silk, at $1 25 and $1 50 per yard.

50 pieces Black Velvet, at 50 cents per yard; these are our own importation and warranted not to crock.

50 pieces Black French Cords, very heavy, $1 50.

10 pieces "Bonnet's" best Black Velvet, to be sold for 87½, regular price $1.

72 pieces Irish Poplins, all colors, at 50 per yard, worth 75 cents.

72 pieces Scotch Red Twilled Flannel, 50 cents per yard; are worth $1.

5 bales All Wool and Cotton Flannel, 38 cents per yard; worth 50 cents.

5 bales All Wool and Cotton Flannel at 31½ cents per yard; worth 37½ cents.

25 pieces Red Flannel, 25 cents per yard; worth 37½c.

25 dozen Red Lace Cotton; all hand made, a rare chance to purchase Real Valenciennes Lace.

An endless variety of striped and Plaid Tartan Ribbons.

500 Striped and Plaid Shawls from $1 50 to $10 each.

1,000 pairs Kid Gloves, 4 buttons, all colors, $1 25 per pair.

1,000 pairs Embroidered and Stripped Nainsooks, 25 cents per yard; worth 37½ cents.

100 pieces of Embroidery, from 12 cents per yard, up to 50 cents per yard.

100 pieces of Linen Cambric Handkerchiefs, 25 cents per pair.

We are manufacturers of Kid Gloves, $1 per pair.

1000 Fancy Articles suitable for Christmas presents, from 25 cents to $10.

GLEESON & FELL,

144 FOURTH STREET.

dc9

DR. JULIEN PERRAULT,

MEMBER OF THE MEDICAL FACULTY OF Paris, Graduate of the Universities of Canada and Pennsylvania of the St. John Hospital, Montreal, and Physician of the St. John Hospital, has his office, 615 Clay street, between Dupont and Kearny, San Francisco, where he continues the Specialty of DISEASES AND PHYSICAL DEBILITY OF THE URINARY AND SEXUAL ORGANS. DR. PERRAULT, the subject of minute research and special practice for many years, Dr. Perrault confidently treat those affections successfully by the newest scientific methods, and warrants a perfect cure in all cases. Public Women, Strolling Actors and Bachelors suffering from the effects of early indiscretions, are invited to call at Dr. Perrault's office, 615 Clay street, or Box 871 P. O., San Francisco, and obtain relief as speedily as possible. Cards of Dr. Perrault's Medical Work, The Law of Sexual Relations, given if required. All communications confidential. Correspondence and correspondences in English, French and German.

nov29

MISCELLANEOUS.

GEO. C. SHREVE & Co.

NO. 110 MONTGOMERY STREET,

HAVE RECEIVED FROM THE

GORHAM MANUFACTURING CO.

A SELECTION ASSORTMENT OF

STERLING SILVER WARE,

COMPRISING

Many choice pieces made to their special order for this season. Their arrangements with this celebrated Company are such that they can supply on the most favorable terms every requisite, from the costliest object of luxury to the least expensive article for table ornament or use.

Admirers of Elegant and Artistic Silver are invited to examine this choice selection.

dc2

GEO. C. SHREVE & Co.

110 MONTGOMERY STREET,

ARE OFFERING THEIR FALL STOCK OF

WATCHES, DIAMONDS, JEWELRY, SILVER WARE, CLOCKS, &C.

ST. MARY'S HOSPITAL,

CORNER FIRST AND BRYANT STS.

SAN FRANCISCO.

THIS INSTITUTION IS UNDER THE MAN agement of the Sisters of Mercy.

JAMES MURPHY, M. D. ..... Visiting Physician.
S. C. LEAVY, M. D. ..... Visiting Surgeon.
A. F. BELLINGER, M. D. ..... Resident Physician.

TERMS.

Payable monthly in advance for board, medicine, In the wards ..... $15 per week.
In private rooms, one more ..... 18 " "
Physician's fees ..... 5 " "
Liquors and washing, extra.

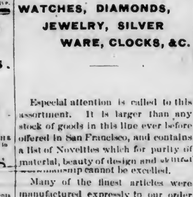
Consultations, $10 extra.

Money always refunded in case a patient leaves the Institution dissatisfied with treatment.

Hospital Notebills are not required to pay in advance.

dc17

Medical Advice.—Dr. Wm. K. Doherty of Medical and Surgical Institute is becoming a "sine qua non" to the welfare of our males and beauty of our regions; and he rapidly spreading reputation, although it may excite surprise, is but the signal of skill, and guarantee of honorable treatment. Dr. Doherty, a gentleman who had suffered for years under chronic cases, and who had taken advantage of every established means that promised relief, but without success, finally applied upon Dr. Doherty, who, to an thereby short space of time, restored him to perfect health. He is suffering to announce that Dr. Doherty is a gentleman who seeks, by delineation of symptoms, to benefit the afflicted, or to rear those superstructures of the sin-spun the ruin of client's fame. The Doctor considers his treatise in such a manner as to be gratifying to all his patients. He examines advises and recommends without charge, and the patient, after having made terms for treatment, can accept or reject at pleasure. In no case does the Doctor make a charge unless he effects a cure. This he is able to do, because he feels confident, from long experience and great success, that he can benefit any patient, after having made such terms as he shall deem reasonable. Such a system of treatment must recommend itself to every one. All of sufferers from the patient places himself under his care. His offices are at 15 Parliament street, corner of Leidesdorff, a few doors below the Whatcheer House. dc9



INFORMATION WANTED.—Of the relations of WM. LINN, a native of the city of Cork, Ireland, who died in the Insane Asylum of California, of consumption. Paul Wm. Linn was reared by a man named Lavalley, who lived in the vicinity of the city of Cork, Ireland. Paul Long came to California in 1851; lived in Philadelphia a few years after coming from Ireland, and before he came to California. If this comes to the eyes of any of the relatives, it will be conferring a favor by writing to the undersigned, or sending information to Box 1,411 P. O., San Francisco, California. Boston Pilot please copy. dc2

PIANOS.

LYNCH & COMIEN,

MANUFACTURERS OF

Overstrung, Grand, Square & Upright

PIANOS.

WAREROOMS,

Nos. 9?4, 9?6, 9?8 and 980 Broadway, NEW YORK.

THESE PIANOS ARE UNSURPASSED FOR Their Pure Tone, Singing Quality, full, round and powerful Tone, Great Durability, and, in short, everything that renders a PIANO PERFECT.

Description and Prices.

The Pianos will be delivered in San Francisco at the same prices as in New York.

No. 1—7 Octaves, Large front, round corners, ?
No. 2—7 Octaves, Large front, round corners, ?
No. 3—7 Octaves, Large front, carved legs and ?
No. 4—7 Octaves, Large front, round corners, ?
No. 5—7 Octaves, Large front, round corners, ?
No. 6—7 Octaves, Large front, round corners, finished back like front, handsomely carved ?
No. 7—7½ Octaves, Grand ..... $ 00
No. 8—7½ Octaves, Grand, with Boston, Steinway, Chickering or Mathushek Scale, beautifully polished.

UPRIGHT PIANOS.

Seven Octaves—Black Walnut case ..... $ 00
Rosewood case ..... $ 00

PARLOR ORGANS AND MELODEONS, of all styles and prices, constantly on hand.

TESTIMONIALS.

Below will be found a few of many letters, out as complimentary to our Pianos:

From Mr. [illegible] W. T. Wharton]

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 12, 1871.

MESSRS. LYNCH & COMIEN—GENTLEMEN: I have much pleased with the Piano you made for me. I really a fine instrument, and the tone is such as to be admired by all who have seen and heard it. Many of my friends have called to see it, and all think it a splendid instrument. I am very much pleased with the manner in which you have conducted the business, and shall have much pleasure in recommending you to any friends who may wish to purchase a Piano. Yours very truly and sincerely, ELLEN R. E. SHERMAN.

The original of the above letter can be seen at this office. Geo. Monroe.

[From the World-renowned Artist, Camilla Urso.]

MESSRS. LYNCH & COMIEN—Gentlemen: After giving you a few months' trial of the Piano you made for me, I take great pleasure in stating that I consider it a very fine instrument, rich and velvet in tone.

Yours very truly,
CAMILLA URSO.

Having Lynch & Comien's Pianos in use we take great pleasure in recommending them as well and superior, to those of any other manufacturer.

From Mrs. Jane Swisshelm, Editor of the Saint Cloud, Minn., Democrat:

MRS. JANE SWISSHELM has much pleasure in certifying to the superior excellence and durability of the Piano purchased of Messrs. LYNCH & COMIEN, of this city. She has had one of them in use in her family for several years, and finds it a really desirable instrument—rich, full and velvet in tone.

From Rev. J. Shea, S. J., President of St. John's College, Fordham.

NEW YORK, June 4, 1870.

MESSRS. LYNCH & COMIEN—Gentlemen: I have much pleasure in stating that the Piano you made for me from you have given entire satisfaction to my friends and myself. Yours very truly,
J. SHEA, S. J., President.

From the sisters of Charity, Academy of Holy Cross, Fordham.

Having Lynch & Comien's Pianos in use we take great pleasure in recommending them as well and superior, to those of any other manufacturer.

From Mrs. Anna Dickinson, the Celebrated Lecturer, New York:

MRS. ANNA DICKINSON has much pleasure in certifying to the superior excellence and durability of the Piano purchased of Messrs. LYNCH & COMIEN, of this city. She has had one of them in use in her family for several years, and finds it a really desirable instrument—rich, full and velvet in tone.

From Rev. Jno. Bapst, S. J., President of St. Ignatius College, San Francisco.

MESSRS. LYNCH & COMIEN—Gentlemen: I have much pleasure in stating that the Piano you made for me from you have given entire satisfaction to my friends and myself. Yours very truly,
JOHN BAPST, S. J.

From the Sisters of Charity, Academy of Holy Cross, Fordham.

Having Lynch & Comien's Pianos in use we take great pleasure in recommending them as well and superior, to those of any other manufacturer.

From Mrs. Jane Swisshelm, Editor of the Saint Cloud, Minn., Democrat:

MRS. JANE SWISSHELM has much pleasure in certifying to the superior excellence and durability of the Piano purchased of Messrs. LYNCH & COMIEN, of this city. She has had one of them in use in her family for several years, and finds it a really desirable instrument—rich, full and velvet in tone.

From Rev. J. Shea, S. J., President of St. John's College, Fordham.

NEW YORK, June 4, 1870.

MESSRS. LYNCH & COMIEN—Gentlemen: I have much pleasure in stating that the Piano you made for me from you have given entire satisfaction to my friends and myself. Yours very truly,
J. SHEA, S. J., President.

From the

TELEGRAPHIC.

Eastern.

NEW YORK, December 11.—A special dispatch from London says that a tremendous excitement prevailed at Madrid on receipt of President Grant's Message, relating to the Cuban difficulty. The Government has resolved to maintain a firm attitude. A reinforcement of 4,000 troops, two additional Generals and four iron clads will be immediately dispatched to Cuba.

A special dispatch from London says mention of alleged violation of neutrality by the United States with regard to Cuba were discussed by the Council Ministers at Madrid, on the 8th, and at the late Council of Council, dispatches were sent to the Spanish Minister at Washington which were said to contain important instructions respecting the attitude of the United States towards Spain in Cuba. The course of the United States Government is likely to affect the Alabama claims in the General Conference by furnishing a precedent in favor of the British Government in the cases of the Florida, the Florida and other privateers.

A special dispatch from Matamoras, Mexico, says that the unconditional surrender of Ialtillo, with all the Government troops, arms and ammunition has been announced by General Trivino, commander of the revolutionists. Ialtito, another rebel leader is marching on Mier, and constantly adding to his strength, without any opposition from the forces of Juares. Cortina has not arrived at Matamoras with 100 men, and his arrival created apprehensions of trouble.

John Pettit and Izay Lazarus have been convicted of illegal registration and sentenced respectively to two and a half and one year in State Prison.

There was a stormy meeting of the International Workingmen's Association, Theodore H. Banks presiding. After a great deal of violent denunciation against the police authorities for suppressing the parade and meeting members of the society on Sunday last, a motion to parade again Sunday was carried amid the wildest applause. A committee was appointed to wait upon Gov. Hoffman and request him to revoke the police order prohibiting the parade and to ask for State protection. Another committee was appointed to inform the Superintendent of Police of their determination to parade. The meeting finally broke up amidst the cries of "Vive la Commune!" "Vive l'International!"

It is reported that the leading reformers have a full understanding with Mayor Hall as to his future political action.

HORACE GREELEY, December 11.—Gaston, Democrat, and Grisdale' candidate, is reelected Mayor by 3,700 majority over Talbot, Republican.

CHICAGO, December 11.—Snow bound passengers on the Union Pacific Railroad, eighteen days from San Francisco, arrived here to-day.

NEW YORK, December 8th.—A meeting of the Board of Police to-day adopted the resolution that the Superintendent be directed to notify the officers of the International societies in this city that the proposed parade of the workingmen on Sunday next, will not be permitted on that day. The parade, or demonstration, if made, must be ed some other day of the week than Sunday. Further, that the Superintendent is directed to take the necessary measures to prevent the parade on Sunday, in case the societies persist in parading.

NEW YORK, December 9th.—At a meeting of the Internationals to-night, a dispatch was read from Governor Hoffman, saying that the law placed the matter of parading in the hands of the Police authorities. The action of the authorities in prohibiting the procession was approved. A long discussion ensued. There was much excitement about changing the day for parade from Sunday to Monday, the principal objection of the Police Commissioners was on account of the day. A committee was carried to wait on the people on Christmas Day, and subscription was decided to raise the matter of the parade. Another meeting was appointed for Monday, when, after delivering a violent oration against the Police authorities, the meeting adjourned.

NEW YORK, December 9th.—The relations of France with Germany, Russia, the Pretender, are those of reciprocal interest. Thiers deplores the indebtedness of the country, but says it is owing to the misconduct of the Empire and Napoleon. The French consider the establishment of general compulsory military service in war time, and proposes a limitation of the annual contingent to Parliament, as desired and seen in favor of peace. The message concludes with an expression of confidence in the patriotism of the Assembly.

PARIS, December 9.—A change in the French gold standard is contemplated. Thiers will relinquish the Presidency in favor of Duke D'Aumale. He has agreed to this movement with the Duke, and all influential members of the Right approve it. The Orleans prince will not take their seats until the plan is carried out. The change will be effected directly. All the details have been arranged. The cause of the change is Thiers' inability to withstand the Right, which has been increased from the Provinces, and is very hostile, and his fears of the constantly increasing power of the Imperialists in the army.

LONDON, December 9.—The Orleans Princes held an interview with Thiers yesterday, and consented to defer their claims to present their claim for seats in the Assembly.

PARIS, December 7.—President Thiers has demanded the recall of Prince de Chambord, the Papal Nuncio in this city.

The Paris Figaro says that orders have been sent to Cherbourg and Brest to have vessels prepared for cruising about the coasts of France, and represents that these naval precautions are taken to prepare what it calls "another return from Elba."

LONDON, December 7.—An imposing demonstration was made last evening at Birmingham, in favored of a radical reform in the House of Lords, the latter being in power to defeat or suspend beneficial propositions of the House of Commons. Mr. Dilke addressed the meeting, and while speaking was frequently interrupted, but great was the confusion he was obliged to desist. Resolutions were adopted protesting against the principle of hereditary legislation and demanding the withdrawal of the legislative functions from the Bishops.

LONDON, December 12.—The elections in Spain in which the Republicans have been successful, were for municipal councils, and not for the Cortes, as incorrectly stated.

LOS ANGELES, December 10th.—A full report of the Grand Jury concerning the late Chinese riot in this city, and other papers relating thereto, were mailed to Minister Low yesterday.

DAGUE DAGUERRE'S SON EXHIBITION.—On the evening of Monday and Tuesday next, 18th and 19th inst., the pupils of the Dominican Grammar School will give an Exhibition at the Mercantile Library Hall, Bush street. The object of the entertainment is to create a fund for the relief and benefit of the invalid and infirm members of the School. The project is in every sense benevolent, and we need hardly say that it has our warm approval and support. We have no doubt the effort will be right well attended by both ornamental and useful. Such a worthy object will be raised for the most generous support, and we hope the highest desire that the entertainment will prove worthy of public patronage entirely on its own merits.

Wholesale Market Report.

MONDAY (SINCE SAN FRANCISCO), THURSDAY, Dec. 14, 1871.

FLOUR—There continues a good local demand. For export, however, the market has shown no particular alteration, and prices are unchanged since our last weekly review. We quote standard brands of Oregon extra at $7 @ 7 50; and local brands as follows: Superfine, $4 @ 4 75, and extra at $7 @ 7 50, in sks & bbls.

WHEAT—Has been to limited to-day since our last weekly review, the sales reaching the only purchasers in the market at present. Quotable at $1 @ 1 65 @ 1 70.

BARLEY—The Market has remained quiet during the week under review, at a decline in prices. Quotable at the close at $1 @ 1 05.

OATS—The demand has continued moderate for this grain during the past week; prices, however, are without especial change. Quotable at the close at $1 @ 1 05 @ 1 10 @ 1 20.

HAY—The receipts have been light, and prices have advanced $1 per ton. Quotable at from $20 per ton any will out to choice wheat $ ton.

STRAW—Quotable at $5 @ 50@7 50 $ ton for cargo lots.

CORN—Quotable at $1 @ 1 @ 25 for yellow and white $ 100 lbs.

BRAN—Sells at $2 75@2 25 $ 100 lbs from mill.

MIDDLINGS—Sells from mill $3 @ 3 50 $ ton from mill.

RYE—Quotable at $2 @ 2 50 $ 100 lbs.

BUCKWHEAT—Quotable at $1 50 @ 2 00 $ 100 lbs.

BEANS—We quote Flat at 3c, Calcary, 6c; Alsike, 10c; and Mammoth, 12c $ lb.

HONEY—We quote Los Angeles Comb at 12 @ 16c; Extracted at 11 @ 12c $ lb.

HIDES—We quote new crop choice at 20@25c $ lb.

TALLOW—We quote California, Oregon and Mexican, at 5@6c $ lb.

WOOL—We quote Fall Clips at 18@20c $ lb.

BEESWAX—We quote at 25@30c $ lb.

DAIRY PRODUCE.

BUTTER—California, choice, 30 @ 35c; fresh roll, assorted; packed, 25@27 1/2c; Eastern firkin, pickled, 25@27c; Canadian, 19@21c; Oregon, 19@21c.

EGGS—California, 32 @ 35c $ dozen.

CHEESE—California, at 14@15c $ lb; Oregon, 15@16c; Eastern sage-cured Hybrid, 16@18c; do cloud, 17@18c.

POTATOES—California, 1 80@1 90 $ lb; Oregon, 1 80@1 90; Eastern, in sacks, 2 25@2 50; do loose, 1 75@1 85.

FRESH MEATS.

BEEF—For first quality, 9@10 cts $ lb; for second do, 7@8c; third do, 5@6c.

VEAL—6@7 cts $ lb.

MUTTON—At 8@9 $ lb.

LAMB—7 @ 8c $ lb.

PORK—Dressed, grain-fed, 8@9c; on foot, grain-fed, 6 @ 6 1/2c $ lb.

POULTRY AND GAME.

FOWLS—Hens, large, at 14@15 50; spring Chickens, $ 12 50 @ 13 50; Roosters, $ 12 50 @ 13 50.

DUCKS—Tame at $7@7 50 $ doz.

GEESE—Tame at $7@7 50 $ doz.

TURKEYS—Live, 18c; dress d 19@ 20 $ lb.

PIGEONS—Old, $1 50 @ 2 00; young, $1 @ 1 50.

RABBITS—Cottontail, $1 50 @ 2 00; Jack, $1 @ 1 50.

JEWELRY, SILVER WARE and WATCHES are actually given away in comparison with former prices at Tucker & Cole's. They are determined at whatever sacrifice they may have to sell for any remaining stock. The entire stock of Jewelry, Silver Ware and Watches must be sold by the holidays. Their stock is large, and said to make room for new goods just about to arrive.

GREAT BARGAINS
FOR THE
HOLIDAYS.
GLEESON & FELL
144 FOURTH STREET.

BE DETERMINED TO SELL, DURING THE Holidays, the greatest Bargains ever offered in
DRY GOODS,
See the Following Prices:

133 pieces Mixed, Striped and figured poplins, 25 cents per yard; original price, 50 cents.

50 pieces Fancy Black Cashmere Poplins, 37½ cents; well worth 75 cents.

100 pieces French Merino and Wool Barege, 50 cents per yard; regular price, $1.

75 pieces American Cloths, 50 cents per yard; worth 87 cents.

75 pieces striped Satin de Chine, 20 cents per yard; cheap at 37½ cents.

75 pieces Silk Mixed Scotch Winceys, 50 cents per yard; worth $1 00.

34 pieces Buffalo Black Alpaca, 25 cents, 30 cents and 37½ cents.

30 pieces of three heavy, double-faced, silk-finished Alpacas, will be sold for 50 cents per yard; worth before sold for less than 75 cents.

50 pieces Black French Merino, full wide, 50 cents per yard; regular price, $1 00.

50 pieces Black French Merino, 37½ cents per yard; 50 pieces Black French Alpaca, 37½ cents; these sales are our own importation and warranted to be all wool or money refunded.

18 pieces Black French Silk, very heavy $2 50.

18 pieces "Bonnet" in Black Silk will be sold for $1 50; regular price $3.

75 pieces Irish Poplins, all colors, $1 50 per yard; original price, $2 25.

75 pieces Black Satin Striped Flannel, 50 cents per yard; worth $1 00 and $1 25.

1 bales of Double Width Cotton Flannel, 25 cents per yard; worth 37½ and 50 cents.

200 pieces Heavy Table Linens at 37½ cents per yard; we will sell 10 pieces of Double Damask Table Linen at 50 cents per yard; cheap at $1.

100 dozen Large Size Heavy Huck Towels, $1 00 per pair.

50 dozen Extra Size Very Fine Huck Towels $1 50 per pair.

50 dozen Extra Fine Linen Napkins, $1 50 per dozen; worth $2 00.

50 pieces Nottingham Lace, from 25 cents per yard.

75 pieces of Embroidery, from 10 cents per yard.

300 dozen Two-button Kid Gloves, 75 cents per pair.

Our own manufactured Kid Gloves, $1 per pair.

Also a large assortment for Christmas presents from 25 cents to $10.

GLEESON & FELL,
144 FOURTH STREET.

DR. JULIEN PERRAULT,
MEMBER OF THE MEDICAL FACULTY OF
Paris, Graduate of the University of Paris, College of Physicians and Surgeons, and late Hospital Surgeon of San Francisco, can be consulted at his residence, No. 414 Kearny street, between Pine and Bush streets, only office over the Post Office, San Francisco. Office hours—From 9 to 11 A. M. and 2 to 4 P. M. Sundays excepted.

SPECIFICS OF SEXUAL DISEASES.—Dr. Perrault's exclusive practice for many years, Dr. Perrault confines himself to those difficulties arising from the Sexual System, and particularly those who are smarting under the effects of mercury poisoning, or other injudicious treatment, Patients, and particularly those who are smarting under the effects of mercury poisoning, or other injudicious treatment, Patients, and particularly those who are smarting, or

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

ENGLAND.

The International Rousing Up.

The great bugbear of Continental Governments, the International Society, is in a fair way towards dissolution, from internal dissensions. A powerful section, embracing nearly all the French members, have taken great advantage at the fiddle-faddle voted by the late Congress of the Society in London to the German workmen in regard to their swindles during the late war, and a formidable schism is regarded as inevitable.

Archbishop Manning on Voluntaryism.

In a sermon preached on Sunday, Nov. 19th, on behalf of a struggling mission in Saffron Hill, Archbishop Manning said: "I for one do not desire that the Catholic Church in England should ever depend on anything except the free alms of her members. Gold corrupts, and poverty keeps pure. We are, and I say this ever of the Catholic people—and I say this ever of the clergy. Voluntary offerings are required, for a priest is not able to earn wages. There is no peril in poverty—though I often wish we had something more, so as to open all clerical charities and schools, especially for our poor. Poverty is the salt that preserves Christianity; and I hope that the Catholic Church in England will continue to be poor and pure."

The London Fifty Home Rule Association.

At the usual weekly meeting of the executive committee of this association, held at the Savoy Palace, Strand, on Saturday, the 9th inst., several gentlemen were proposed as members and their subscriptions paid in. A sub-committee was appointed and instructed to take the Temperance Hall, Dudley street, Seven Dials, and several other places, in order to hold public meetings, enroll members, and open branches of the association. It was also resolved that the secretary be instructed to communicate with Mr. Butt, Q. C., M. P., Mr. Martin, M. P., Mr. Shaw, M. P., Sir George Bowyer, and Sir P. Tait, inviting them to take the chair at the different meetings to be held throughout London.

The subjoined programme has been issued by this association: "The Home Union is for the purpose of aiding the Home Rule Association to obtain for Ireland self-government, declared that members of this organization recognize as man's first temporal duty, fidelity to fatherland, and that our objects are: To obtain for Ireland the management of her domestic affairs by a Parliament in Ireland. To secure to that Parliament the power of legislating for, and regulating all matters relating to the internal affairs of Ireland, and control over Irish resources and revenues. To leave to the Imperial parliament the power of dealing with all questions affecting the Imperial Government. This organization invites the cooperation of all Irishmen, and other nationalities, who prove their general principles. The organization will forward the objects it advocates by influencing public opinion in favor of peaceful and slaveless, and enlisting the sympathy and support of men of all classes. It is declared that this organization adopts the principles of the parent association. That while every member is understood by that fact to be pledged to its objects and plan of action, no person so joining is committed to any political party, and is entitled to support any political self-government for Ireland. The organization shall consist of members who pay not less than one shilling annually. Members' annual subscription on which the Council shall be based."

The Queen's Expensivity.

If lately the name of the Queen is becoming somewhat familiar to the English public. So long as it was confined to those reasonable rogues the Irish, people upon this side of the channel could afford to chuckle at it, but it is easy to "crush ridicule in the bud" by the elements of distance" or to "buy up" the elements of disaffection in the "sister" land. A correspondent writes to the Irish, a few places for their masters for the time, a staff of assistant leaders, and the thing is at an end. A paternal law for the better ordering of the life and poverty in Ireland" has, in the opinion of our English rulers, a most humanizing effect upon the temper of the Irish assassins." In Ireland, indeed, disaffection is unhappily chronic—nobody else may have his grievances to be so—and happily we have the manhood to show it to the world. In England, however, things are different. Until lately people generally professed to be content with the state of affairs, but straws upon the political current show that masses of the English people want a change, and that they themselves are prepared to combat for it. Only for a period is this observable

WEEKLY CALENDAR.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING DEC. 16.
December:
17—Sunday—Fourth Sunday of Advent.
18—Monday—Vigil of our Lord.
19—Tuesday—St. Stephen, first martyr.
20—Wednesday—St. John, Apostle and Evangelist.
21—Thursday—Holy Innocents.
22—Friday—St. Thomas, Bishop of Canterbury, M.
23—Saturday—St. Sabinus, Bishop, and companions, MM.

THE MONITOR:

THE ONLY

Irish or Catholic Journal in California.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

SATURDAY.....DEC. 23, 1871.

CHRISTMAS.

Merry Christmas is with us once again! Its signs and tokens are visible everywhere. In the stores which display their most attractive and expensive goods of every class; in the streets, where, despite the inclement weather, crowds hurry to and fro intent upon making their holiday purchases; in private houses, where all is bustle and preparation for the coming festivities; in places of amusement, where managers betimes themselves how best they can provide entertainment for laughter-loving audiences; lastly and chiefly, in the churches, where altars are decked in costly magnificence for the consummation of the great sacrifice to Almighty God!

Christmas is come! then let us welcome it as of old with praise and thanksgiving. We of and in America have much reason to exult and glorify the Creator and Ruler of the universe for his mercies towards us. The year which has passed since we celebrated the Christmas of 1870 has been one of prosperity throughout the United States. It is true that certain districts have been grievously afflicted by the ravages of fire; but out of the evil has grown a good, for the misfortune of our brethren has given occasion to a display of benevolence and generosity which show how close are the bonds which unite us together. The seasons have on the whole been propitious; the earth has yielded forth its fruits abundantly; trade and commerce have increased; progress in all directions has been marked and rapid. These are worldly blessings for which nations, as well as individuals, ought to be grateful.

And if we look at things of a higher and nobler order, those matters which pertain to the spread of truth and knowledge unto life everlasting, the retrospect is even more than proportionately pleasing. The growth of the Catholic Church during the past year has been such as to attract attention from friends and foes. Churches, convents, colleges and schools have multiplied over the face of the country in an almost miraculous manner, and now stand forth as those the witness and the proof of the piety and generosity of the children of the ancient faith. The number of worshippers, of those who approached the Holy Sacraments, was we believe, never greater than it was during 1871. This will serve as a refutation to the absurd fictions of the self-sufficient apostate, who [illegible] [illegible] being the allegiance of its citizens.

Looking into the future, we see no reason for discouragement; on the contrary, we can perceive much reason for joyful anticipation. We can see no obstacle to the spread of the true and saving faith. The hierarchy is composed of learned, zealous and pious men, who are fully alive to the wants of their respective flocks, and will strain every nerve to supply them. The number of priests will soon be largely increased, and missions are sure to be established in many places heretofore unprovided with such spiritual surroundings of any kind. Of course, the irreligious system of education which unhappily is established in the anti-Catholic tone of the press, and the want of religious instruction in certain small but powerful sections of the population, are, to a certain extent, obstacles in our way; but they are such as can be overcome readily enough by calmness and perseverance, and these we are assured will not be wanting.

From a national point of view, too, the future seems bright and promising. The sacrifices which right so much required of the European populations, and make them look upon the coming year with dread, can have no terrors for free Americans. We are in the full and unrestricted enjoyment of all the rights and liberties that rational God-fearing men can desire. We have no throne to overthrow, no caste privileges to abolish, no oppressed serfs the class to keep in subjection. There is, in short, no revolution to be wrought among us. The vast conspiracies which have undermined the whole social fabric in Europe, the deep mutterings of discontented peoples, do not concern us; they simply interest us because they are connected with the fate and fortunes of men who are our brethren. We can watch their workings in security, if not with indifference.

Such being our past, such our present and such our future, we can enjoy our Christmas thoroughly. Let us, then, give ourselves up freely to the joyful and wise emotions which this holy season is so well calculated to produce! This is the time to draw closer the bonds of affection, to renew old friendships, to cultivate kindly relations with all our neighbors. How pleasing are the reunions which many a home will witness this week. What a hearty welcome, what fond embraces will meet the wanderer, whose happiness it is to pay a Christmas visit to the paternal roof! What soft and tender memories will throng around those whose paths are among strangers and whose childhood's home can know them no more! This is the season when all hearts rejoice; the poor and lowly as well as the rich and proud, for unto all alike was the Redeemer born. Charity and benevolence, at all times a duty, become now doubly so. Out of their abundance let the wealthy give to those who have met misfortune, not with a grudging heart or unwillingly hand, but cheerfully, lovingly and generously, as God wills that alms should always be given. Let the widow and orphan be remembered by those in whose houses the table of plenty is spread. Let angry jealousies subside, let animosities be forgotten, and love and forgiveness reign throughout the land. No Christian should think of passing this holy time without making peace with his God and with his neighbor; that peace which can neither be made nor restored, but within the precincts of the temple.

For our own part, we send hearty greetings to all our friends far and near. We return them many thanks for the liberal support and encouragement which they have bestowed on us during the past year. Fourteen times this season has come and gone since first we tendered them our good wishes in the columns of THE MONITOR, and every succeeding year we have only found additional cause for bidding our friends rejoice and wishing them from our heart

A MERRY CHRISTMAS.

The same friendly greeting, with the olden warmth and sincerity do we send them, one and all; to-day.

THE INTERNATIONALS.

The Internationals did have their parade after all. The police authorities withdrew their prohibition after much deliberation, and the procession took place on last Sunday, as advertised. This fact does not, in the least, weaken any argument contained in our article of last week, inasmuch as the police claimed the right to prohibit, and allowed the parade purely as a concession which would do no harm. If they had acted correctly by this right, and not granted the concession to the Orangemen, since it was absolutely certain to do a great deal of harm, there would have been no bloodshed, and no massacre on the 12th of last July. However, we are glad the concession was made in the present case. The regenerators of mankind were permitted to display themselves, and they made a most pitiful exhibition. Those who expected to see an imposing array of that terrible and mysterious society must have been woefully disappointed and been filled with feelings of disgust and contempt.

Knowing this to be so, our regret that the Orange parade was not suffered to pass off without opposition, since permission had been granted for it, becomes all the more keen and the more intense. Because we are now perfectly convinced that the parade would have irretrievably damned the Willianites in the estimation of all sensible Americans. The ridicule and laughter with which their miserable turnout would have been greeted from all parts of the Union, would have simply overwhelmed them, and they would never venture to face the like again. But opposition make heroes of them, by identifying them with a principle—false, no doubt—but still a principle for which men should be ready to suffer if they will not fight. Consequently, so that it is more than probable we shall be plagued with Orange or any processions for many years to come.

But to return to the Internationals. Their parade has done them more injury, than that which we suppose they had in contemplation when they the press could thunder forth in twelve months, could effect. They, of their own choice, lifted the veil which secrecy placed over their mighty machine, and they must not be surprised to find the masses, whom they hoped to strike dumb with terror, burst out into uproarious laughter. The foolish ass has brayed, has yet unduly exhausted itself on this Spanish difficulty, and therefore it may succeed in removing it. For this reason, we are not without hope that war may still be avoided. However, should peaceable counsels be of no avail, and the ultima ratio regum be appealed to, may the righteous cause be triumphant, say we heartily!

Justice compels us to admit that considerable suspicion attaches to these Cuban claims. Torre is, to say the least, ground for presuming that the conduct of some American citizens residing on the island has not been altogether above reproach. Cuba is enormously rich and fertile, so the annexation to the United States has been a favorite scheme with a certain class of adventurers and politicians. Many individuals, looking upon its absorption into the Union as a predestined and unavoidable contingency, have set themselves to the work of acquiring property in Cuba, knowing well that it must be immensely enhanced in value if the change of government takes place. In other words, there has been a "Cuban ring" formed just like the "San Domingo ring" whose hopes of profit were so ruthlessly destroyed by Mr. Sumner.

What share this "ring" may have had in fomenting the rebellion to what extent its members may have favored the new-born piracy proper to them—are questions that cannot be answered without some reflection. Enough is known, however, to satisfy any impartial man that the Spanish authorities were not wholly without cause for this severity towards some of the American residents. These had speculated upon the annexation of the island to the United States, and they were resolved to bring it about by fair means or foul. The success of the rebellion, of course, means the realization of their scheme, for Cuba annexed would hardly maintain its independence, and the force of circumstances would inevitably drive it into the Union. What more natural, therefore, than that the "ring" should aid the insurgents in trying to oust the Spaniards? It would take much proof to convince us that this has not been the case. And, if it has been so, where, we would ask, is the justification for a war with Spain?

We have not the least objection in the world to the Government of the United States, the International pretends to advance any, should subject foreign nations to revolutionists, are endowed with too much intelligence to be duped by the fantastic theories may be locating; but we have a very few of a lunacy or so wholly criminal character as to be deserving of the name of assassins. While the plunged into war, and forced to levelling scheme is not needed here, where blood and treasure, simply to forall men are already on a level, and the only the avaricious schemes of a small distinctions between them are those whichever of unprincipled speculators. Let God has made. In this country there is no good evidence that the ultimity barrier between the artisan and the very basis has been brought about by highest offices or honors of State, at least machinations of such people; that inmore which human passion and industry encounter has been distinctly peaceful and basurmount. ling citizens; that richness has been ob-

Communism, with its periodical distur- tained and that no small warmbances of property, may be very acceptable to some of whatever measures the idle, the worthless and the dissipated—shington Government may think proper but the last. No Christian should think of passing this holy time without making peace with his God and with his neighbor; that peace which can neither be made nor restored, but within the precincts of the temple.

TROUBLE WITH SPAIN.

There appears to be reasonable grounds for apprehending a breach of the friendly relations at present existing between this country and Spain. The causes of dissension are to be found in connection with the miserable rebellion which is now harassing the inhabitants of Cuba. It is asserted that in endeavoring to quell the revolt, the Spanish authorities have frequently disregarded the rights of peaceful foreigners, and have dealt in a very high-handed and arbitrary manner with the property of American citizens. Remonstrance has proved fruitless, and compensation for damages inflicted has been denied. Other claims arising out of different disturbances, which have been acknowledged as just, remain unpaid, and there appears no prospect of their being liquidated within any specified time. The consequence, of course, is that our Government feels bound to take up these complaints and demand satisfaction, and if that be not quickly accorded war must follow.

We do not by any means indorse the correctness of all these statements; but merely enumerate them as the grounds upon which hostilities are declared imminent. It will be remembered that President Grant alluded to them in his annual message. His language was dignified, temperate and very coolly understood. The Madrid officials had, at any rate, no difficulty in grasping the import of his words, and they were not slow in taking action with reference thereunto. Additional reinforcements to the military engaged in putting down the rebellion were ordered to be dispatched, and four large ironclad men-of-war were sent to cruise off the coast of Cuba. Thus the quarrel stands at the present time, but new developments must be manifested themselves, because it is scarcely credible that the Spanish Government would be allowed to remain at it for any great length of time. The national honor of the United States is as good as pledged to it, and that must be redeemed at all hazards.

War is one of the most terrible scourges that can afflict any nation. Victor and vanquished alike suffer from its effects, though not, perhaps, in an equal degree. The fearful ordeal through which this country has passed should teach Americans a never-to-be-forgotten lesson, and the mere means of settling an international dispute should be tried and found wanting before the arbitrament of arms ought to be appealed to. We, therefore, hope that Spain has not utterly exhausted itself on this Spanish difficulty, and therefore it may succeed in removing it. For this reason, we are not without hope that war may still be avoided. However, should peaceable counsels be of no avail, and the ultima ratio regum be appealed to, may the righteous cause be triumphant, say we heartily!

Justice compels us to admit that considerable suspicion attaches to these Cuban claims. Torre is, to say the least, ground for presuming that the conduct of some American citizens residing on the island has not been altogether above reproach. Cuba is enormously rich and fertile, so the annexation to the United States has been a favorite scheme with a certain class of adventurers and politicians. Many individuals, looking upon its absorption into the Union as a predestined and unavoidable contingency, have set themselves to the work of acquiring property in Cuba, knowing well that it must be immensely enhanced in value if the change of government takes place. In other words, there has been a "Cuban ring" formed just like the "San Domingo ring" whose hopes of profit were so ruthlessly destroyed by Mr. Sumner.

What share this "ring" may have had in fomenting the rebellion to what extent its members may have favored the new-born piracy proper to them—are questions that cannot be answered without some reflection. Enough is known, however, to satisfy any impartial man that the Spanish authorities were not wholly without cause for this severity towards some of the American residents. These had speculated upon the annexation of the island to the United States, and they were resolved to bring it about by fair means or foul. The success of the rebellion, of course, means the realization of their scheme, for Cuba annexed would hardly maintain its independence, and the force of circumstances would inevitably drive it into the Union. What more natural, therefore, than that the "ring" should aid the insurgents in trying to oust the Spaniards? It would take much proof to convince us that this has not been the case. And, if it has been so, where, we would ask, is the justification for a war with Spain?

THE INTERNATIONALS.

The Internationals did have their parade after all. The police authorities withdrew their prohibition after much deliberation, and the procession took place on last Sunday, as advertised. This fact does not, in the least, weaken any argument contained in our article of last week, inasmuch as the police claimed the right to prohibit, and allowed the parade purely as a concession which would do no harm. If they had acted correctly by this right, and not granted the concession to the Orangemen, since it was absolutely certain to do a great deal of harm, there would have been no bloodshed, and no massacre on the 12th of last July. However, we are glad the concession was made in the present case. The regenerators of mankind were permitted to display themselves, and they made a most pitiful exhibition. Those who expected to see an imposing array of that terrible and mysterious society must have been woefully disappointed and been filled with feelings of disgust and contempt.

Knowing this to be so, our regret that the Orange parade was not suffered to pass off without opposition, since permission had been granted for it, becomes all the more keen and the more intense. Because we are now perfectly convinced that the parade would have irretrievably damned the Willianites in the estimation of all sensible Americans. The ridicule and laughter with which their miserable turnout would have been greeted from all parts of the Union, would have simply overwhelmed them, and they would never venture to face the like again. But opposition make heroes of them, by identifying them with a principle—false, no doubt—but still a principle for which men should be ready to suffer if they will not fight. Consequently, so that it is more than probable we shall be plagued with Orange or any processions for many years to come.

But to return to the Internationals. Their parade has done them more injury, than that which we suppose they had in contemplation when they the press could thunder forth in twelve months, could effect. They, of their own choice, lifted the veil which secrecy placed over their mighty machine, and they must not be surprised to find the masses, whom they hoped to strike dumb with terror, burst out into uproarious laughter. The foolish ass has brayed, has yet unduly exhausted itself on this Spanish difficulty, and therefore it may succeed in removing it. For this reason, we are not without hope that war may still be avoided. However, should peaceable counsels be of no avail, and the ultima ratio regum be appealed to, may the righteous cause be triumphant, say we heartily!

Justice compels us to admit that considerable suspicion attaches to these Cuban claims. Torre is, to say the least, ground for presuming that the conduct of some American citizens residing on the island has not been altogether above reproach. Cuba is enormously rich and fertile, so the annexation to the United States has been a favorite scheme with a certain class of adventurers and politicians. Many individuals, looking upon its absorption into the Union as a predestined and unavoidable contingency, have set themselves to the work of acquiring property in Cuba, knowing well that it must be immensely enhanced in value if the change of government takes place. In other words, there has been a "Cuban ring" formed just like the "San Domingo ring" whose hopes of profit were so ruthlessly destroyed by Mr. Sumner.

What share this "ring" may have had in fomenting the rebellion to what extent its members may have favored the new-born piracy proper to them—are questions that cannot be answered without some reflection. Enough is known, however, to satisfy any impartial man that the Spanish authorities were not wholly without cause for this severity towards some of the American residents. These had speculated upon the annexation of the island to the United States, and they were resolved to bring it about by fair means or foul. The success of the rebellion, of course, means the realization of their scheme, for Cuba annexed would hardly maintain its independence, and the force of circumstances would inevitably drive it into the Union. What more natural, therefore, than that the "ring" should aid the insurgents in trying to oust the Spaniards? It would take much proof to convince us that this has not been the case. And, if it has been so, where, we would ask, is the justification for a war with Spain?

A FOOLISH PROCEEDING.

We have been both pained and surprised to learn from recent telegrams, corroborated by our files of Eastern papers, that two of the Irish exiles have been made or less mixed up with the recent doings of the Internationals in New York. We allude to Devoy, who is Secretary of the Governing Council of the Irish Confederation, to represent the New York Herald, in a report published December 5th, as having acted as Chairman at a meeting of one section of the Internationalists which nearly broke up in a disgraceful row; and Mr. Jeremiah O'Donovan Rossa, is enumerated in the telegrams as one of the notables present at the procession of Sunday last.

Now, we can hardly bring ourselves to believe that either of these gentlemen is at heart an Internationalist or has any admiration for the principles of that wicked organization. They cannot possibly be ignorant of the fact that its Supreme Committee in setting forth the programme of the Association declared its aims to be the abolition of religion, the substitution of science for faith, the substitution of human justice for divine, and the suppression of marriage. These are the very words of the document itself, and they amply prove that the Society is essentially infidel and diabolic in its nature. Therefore we are at a loss to understand how two gentlemen who have shown themselves true patriots, ready to sacrifice life itself for their country, can for any countenance whatever.

We have not the least desire to interfere with Mr. Devoy's or O'Donovan Rossa's liberty of action or freedom of thought. It is perfectly open to them to be Internationalists if they like, and they are accountable to God alone. Therefore, if they acted purely in their individual capacity, and if the consequences of their action rested altogether with themselves, we should not take the trouble of censuring them. But it is an undoubted fact that any fanatical demonstration of these gentlemen is looked upon exclusively from their connection with the Irish Republican movement. As an unavoidable consequence, then, no small share of the glory or shame proper to their leaders or public men will fall to the lot of the political enterprise with which they are so closely identified. For this reason, they are bound in honor, to their comrades and to their country, to keep aloof from all well calculating its probable effects upon the Irish cause. They are both intelligent men and educated, at all events to a certain degree, so they could not but know that in associating themselves with the International, even indirectly, would materially injure the Republican movement at home.

Mr. Devoy and Mr. O'Donovan are both well aware that it has been the incessant effort of the foes of Irish freedom to identify its friends with the principles of the sentimental revolutionists. To serve this purpose the Fenian leaders were denounced as infidels, communists, plunderers, assassins, etc. All this furious misrepresentation was of little avail as long as the people knew that the only design of the slanderers' individuals was to overthrow the British Government and establish a Republic in Ireland. Not now, at this critical juncture of affairs, will the foes of Irish liberty be playing into the hands of their enemies, and wilfully adorning them a justification for their calumnies! Does either Mr. O'Donovan or Mr. Devoy imagine for a single moment that the sensible and respectable men in Ireland would show any favor to a revolution, the leaders of which were notoriously tainted with Communism or the Paris Commune?

We can assure them that the men who joined the Irish Confederation in this country have just as little love for the International as their brothers at home, and they would instantly abandon the organization rather than be identified with it in the slightest degree. Therefore, we would implore them, for the sake of the cause which they have so much at heart, to withdraw from the Association, and thus give the lie to the calumnies which have been so persistently circulated against them. Their presence can only be productive of evil to the cause which they have espoused, and which is dear to the hearts of every true Irishman.

A SUGGESTION FOR THE "ALTA."

The Alta of late occupies an exceedingly anomalous position among the city journals. It has ceased to be in any sense of the word an American newspaper. It has gone over bodily to the Communists, and its columns are now at the service of any contemptible scribbler who may choose to write a letter in favor of the Commune. Mr. Sumner, to his credit be it told, insisted this patent injustice, and wanted to know why the gentleman to whom the resolutions calling for the Committee were mainly due, was not a member of the Committee. But his indignation was altogether profitless, because the rules were arbitrary and the proceedings in the case of the Committee ought take notice. We have no doubt whatever that the reelection of the present delegation of the Pacific coast would be a misfortune for the whole Union. We do not regard it as a question between two political parties, who, in the main, are both in favor of the same kind of Government, but between the lovers of republicanism and the adherents of military despotism. It is no wonder that the Times and the British railroad are in favor of Grant's reelection, because they know very well that it must destroy the Constitution of the United States.

A FOOLISH PROCEEDING.

We have been both pained and surprised to learn from recent telegrams, corroborated by our files of Eastern papers, that two of the Irish exiles have been made or less mixed up with the recent doings of the Internationals in New York. We allude to Devoy, who is Secretary of the Governing Council of the Irish Confederation, to represent the New York Herald, in a report published December 5th, as having acted as Chairman at a meeting of one section of the Internationalists which nearly broke up in a disgraceful row; and Mr. Jeremiah O'Donovan Rossa, is enumerated in the telegrams as one of the notables present at the procession of Sunday last.

Now, we can hardly bring ourselves to believe that either of these gentlemen is at heart an Internationalist or has any admiration for the principles of that wicked organization. They cannot possibly be ignorant of the fact that its Supreme Committee in setting forth the programme of the Association declared its aims to be the abolition of religion, the substitution of science for faith, the substitution of human justice for divine, and the suppression of marriage. These are the very words of the document itself, and they amply prove that the Society is essentially infidel and diabolic in its nature. Therefore we are at a loss to understand how two gentlemen who have shown themselves true patriots, ready to sacrifice life itself for their country, can for any countenance whatever.

We have not the least desire to interfere with Mr. Devoy's or O'Donovan Rossa's liberty of action or freedom of thought. It is perfectly open to them to be Internationalists if they like, and they are accountable to God alone. Therefore, if they acted purely in their individual capacity, and if the consequences of their action rested altogether with themselves, we should not take the trouble of censuring them. But it is an undoubted fact that any fanatical demonstration of these gentlemen is looked upon exclusively from their connection with the Irish Republican movement. As an unavoidable consequence, then, no small share of the glory or shame proper to their leaders or public men will fall to the lot of the political enterprise with which they are so closely identified. For this reason, they are bound in honor, to their comrades and to their country, to keep aloof from all well calculating its probable effects upon the Irish cause. They are both intelligent men and educated, at all events to a certain degree, so they could not but know that in associating themselves with the International, even indirectly, would materially injure the Republican movement at home.

Mr. Devoy and Mr. O'Donovan are both well aware that it has been the incessant effort of the foes of Irish freedom to identify its friends with the principles of the sentimental revolutionists. To serve this purpose the Fenian leaders were denounced as infidels, communists, plunderers, assassins, etc. All this furious misrepresentation was of little avail as long as the people knew that the only design of the slanderers' individuals was to overthrow the British Government and establish a Republic in Ireland. Not now, at this critical juncture of affairs, will the foes of Irish liberty be playing into the hands of their enemies, and wilfully adorning them a justification for their calumnies! Does either Mr. O'Donovan or Mr. Devoy imagine for a single moment that the sensible and respectable men in Ireland would show any favor to a revolution, the leaders of which were notoriously tainted with Communism or the Paris Commune?

We can assure them that the men who joined the Irish Confederation in this country have just as little love for the International as their brothers at home, and they would instantly abandon the organization rather than be identified with it in the slightest degree. Therefore, we would implore them, for the sake of the cause which they have so much at heart, to withdraw from the Association, and thus give the lie to the calumnies which have been so persistently circulated against them. Their presence can only be productive of evil to the cause which they have espoused, and which is dear to the hearts of every true Irishman.

SENATOR TRUMBULL AND RE-TRANSCENDENT.

Senator Trumbull does not receive the thanks of the whole Union for his manly efforts to secure retrenchment and reform in the civil service. He and other Senators of equally noble mould have been horrified at the corruption, dishonesty and incompetency which exist in all departments of the Federal Government, and are now making determined efforts to remove them. But unfortunately for the success of their plan, the Republican party has chosen to make this question a party one, and will go into the contest on the 1st January, 1872. So far is good. The recommendations are not all that could be desired, but they will do away with many abuses. General Grant then asserts that under recent law, according to his interpretation of it, the Executive has power to enforce these regulations, and full power to hold, abridge or push them at his option. The incumbent of course is General Grant, so the wide thing comes to this that a very important reform measure has been adopted, and then left wholly and unreservedly at the mercy of the President. This is the way in which Republicans do business, and has they serve the country. General Grantism, if he be so disposed, and he will be if it tend to his reelection, render nugatory all the labors of the civil service Commissioners. A little further on in the communication to the House he makes more important disclosures. The report, he says, is submitted for the consideration of the House, to whether further investigation may be necessary to carry out effective and beneficial civil service reform. Remembering that the rules and regulations recommended by the Commissioners will be faithfully carried out. From this it is plain that a Congress is altogether a superfluity. In no case need it do anything. Let Commissioners recommend reforms and give the President full power to carry them out, alter them, or ignore them altogether, and then the affairs of the nation will be most successfully managed. Of course the fact that under this method of doing business the President becomes a dictator, and the Republic is transformed into a despotism, is not worthy of notice. Where is the use of quarrelling about trifles, and of what avail is it to preserve the mere name of a Republic when the substance of it and all that it embodies are gone? Then General Grant informs the House that he has full authorization to enforce the rules laid down by the Commission, but that they will not be binding upon his successors without further legislation. This being so it would be unkind as well as imprudent to trouble him with any meddlesome Congressional action, or to leave any work to be performed by his successor, unless, indeed, that person be Ulysses S. Grant. The report of a Civil Service commission may be a very unimportant matter of itself, but, when it furnishes a pretext for General Grant to ignore, and shows how he is allowing a despotic powers, it becomes something of which the country ought take notice. We have no doubt whatever that the reelection of the present delegation of the Pacific coast would be a misfortune for the whole Union. We do not regard it as a question between two political parties, who, in the main, are both in favor of the same kind of Government, but between the lovers of republicanism and the adherents of military despotism. It is no wonder that the Times and the British railroad are in favor of Grant's reelection, because they know very well that it must destroy the Constitution of the United States.

A FOOLISH PROCEEDING.

We have been both pained and surprised to learn from recent telegrams, corroborated by our files of Eastern papers, that two of the Irish exiles have been made or less mixed up with the recent doings of the Internationals in New York. We allude to Devoy, who is Secretary of the Governing Council of the Irish Confederation, to represent the New York Herald, in a report published December 5th, as having acted as Chairman at a meeting of one section of the Internationalists which nearly broke up in a disgraceful row; and Mr. Jeremiah O'Donovan Rossa, is enumerated in the telegrams as one of the notables present at the procession of Sunday last.

Now, we can hardly bring ourselves to believe that either of these gentlemen is at heart an Internationalist or has any admiration for the principles of that wicked organization. They cannot possibly be ignorant of the fact that its Supreme Committee in setting forth the programme of the Association declared its aims to be the abolition of religion, the substitution of science for faith, the substitution of human justice for divine, and the suppression of marriage. These are the very words of the document itself, and they amply prove that the Society is essentially infidel and diabolic in its nature. Therefore we are at a loss to understand how two gentlemen who have shown themselves true patriots, ready to sacrifice life itself for their country, can for any countenance whatever.

We have not the least desire to interfere with Mr. Devoy's or O'Donovan Rossa's liberty of action or freedom of thought. It is perfectly open to them to be Internationalists if they like, and they are accountable to God alone. Therefore, if they acted purely in their individual capacity, and if the consequences of their action rested altogether with themselves, we should not take the trouble of censuring them. But it is an undoubted fact that any fanatical demonstration of these gentlemen is looked upon exclusively from their connection with the Irish Republican movement. As an unavoidable consequence, then, no small share of the glory or shame proper to their leaders or public men will fall to the lot of the political enterprise with which they are so closely identified. For this reason, they are bound in honor, to their comrades and to their country, to keep aloof from all well calculating its probable effects upon the Irish cause. They are both intelligent men and educated, at all events to a certain degree, so they could not but know that in associating themselves with the International, even indirectly, would materially injure the Republican movement at home.

Mr. Devoy and Mr. O'Donovan are both well aware that it has been the incessant effort of the foes of Irish freedom to identify its friends with the principles of the sentimental revolutionists. To serve this purpose the Fenian leaders were denounced as infidels, communists, plunderers, assassins, etc. All this furious misrepresentation was of little avail as long as the people knew that the only design of the slanderers' individuals was to overthrow the British Government and establish a Republic in Ireland. Not now, at this critical juncture of affairs, will the foes of Irish liberty be playing into the hands of their enemies, and wilfully adorning them a justification for their calumnies! Does either Mr. O'Donovan or Mr. Devoy imagine for a single moment that the sensible and respectable men in Ireland would show any favor to a revolution, the leaders of which were notoriously tainted with Communism or the Paris Commune?

We can assure them that the men who joined the Irish Confederation in this country have just as little love for the International as their brothers at home, and they would instantly abandon the organization rather than be identified with it in the slightest degree. Therefore, we would implore them, for the sake of the cause which they have so much at heart, to withdraw from the Association, and thus give the lie to the calumnies which have been so persistently circulated against them. Their presence can only be productive of evil to the cause which they have espoused, and which is dear to the hearts of every true Irishman.

...ne must accomplish our purpose. We ...suggest, then, that henceforward the ...be printed in German. It is a long ...ge to keep publishing it in a language ...which the majority of its patrons are ...differently acquainted. Why should ...odium its principal friends to inherit ...spell out column after column, and ...get a faint bliss of their meaning in ...ish? Its high-toned panegyrics on ...ding German lose more than half ...force by being published in English; ...ould look much better in the mellifluous language of Fatherland.

Masses Christmas Day.

MARYS CATHEDRAL.—There will be no Midnight Mass this year. First Mass will commence at five o'clock, and Mass be said every half hour thereafter until half-past ten o'clock, when there will be a grand Pontifical High Mass with grand band and orchestra. The Papal Benediction with Plenary Indulgence will be imparted by the Most Rev. Archbishop immediately after High Mass.

ST. IGNATIUS' CHURCH.—Low Mass at four o'clock. High Mass at five, at which Masses will be continued to half past ten o'clock. Then a solemn High

PATRICK'S CHURCH.—Low Mass at 6 o'clock, which will be continued to half past ten; then a Solemn High Mass thirteen pieces of music besides the usual choir.

JOSEPH'S CHURCH.—High Mass at 10 o'clock. Masses continuous to half-past one. Evening service—Vespers and Benediction at seven o'clock.

BRIDGET'S CHURCH.—High Mass at 10 o'clock. A. M. Low Mass at seven, and nine o'clock. Grand High Mass at half past ten.

MICHAEL'S CHURCH.—Solemn High Mass at five and half-past ten o'clock. Mass at six, half-past six, eight, half-eight, and nine. Italian sermon at half nine. Evening service—Vespers and Benediction at seven o'clock.

Metropolitan Theatre.

The Metropolitan Theatre has been deservedly fair business during the week, and, of course, it, like every other of amusement, has been somewhat easily affected by the indolency of weather. The piece put upon the stage on Monday evening, the Sewing Machine or Death at the Wheel," a dramatization of a sensational story originally published in a New York periodical, and which in its numerous incidents were to be referred. The causes of which we have spoken took upon itself the task of selecting this Committee, so as to have it ready for presentation to the House. Of course their party, having a large majority, could appoint the nominees without any difficulty. But when the Committee was formed, Senator Trumbull was completely ignored! The rascality of Republicanism was fated to undergo an investigation, and it would never answer to have such a disgracefully inquisitive individual upon the Committee.

Mr. Sumner, to his credit be it told, insisted this patent injustice, and wanted to know why the gentleman to whom the resolutions calling for the Committee were mainly due, was not a member of the Committee. But his indignation was altogether profitless, because the rules were arbitrary and the proceedings in the case of the Committee ought take notice. We have no doubt whatever that the reelection of the present delegation of the Pacific coast would be a misfortune for the whole Union. We do not regard it as a question between two political parties, who, in the main, are both in favor of the same kind of Government, but between the lovers of republicanism and the adherents of military despotism. It is no wonder that the Times and the British railroad are in favor of Grant's reelection, because they know very well that it must destroy the Constitution of the United States.

BRIEF CITY ITEMS.

Sunday morning last John Purcell ...suddenly in his room, ...was notified and will inquire into ...his death.

...according to the People's Insurance Company's charter cease with December 31st, 1871.

The building of the Pacific Insurance Company, together with the fine assortment of goods, will be sold on the 28th inst., at 10 o'clock, A. M., by W. P. Babcock. The list is on the counting of California thirty feet, fronting on California thirty feet, to a depth of eighty feet.

Following is a list of the Directors and Officers of the North Pacific Coast Railroad Company: James McM. Shafter, President; H. B. Platt, Vice President; W. Billinghurst, Treasurer; James T. Boyd, Secretary. The Directors are: A. D. Moody, W. H. Tadd, Lewis Hirsche, J. P. Moore, John Walsh Howard, S. P. Taylor, Tyler Henry, S. R. Throckmorton and W. H. Bell.

On Friday last the contractors for grading, ...ing piles, etc., commenced work at ...they put on the Potrero. A space of ...hundred feet wide is to be graded parallel with the present street-railroad. This work will give employment to a very large number of men, and its announcement is gratifying event.

...ELAT.—People ought to ...as much as ...know about the circumstance of the late ...terrorism, an undoubted fact that the ...personal abhorrence is becoming more prevalent ...here intense. Jewelry was never more fashionable ...never more generally worn than it is at ...Indeed, the gentleman who does not set down as ...or a snob, and the lady who does not wear ...or shoulder knots would not know if they ...Public regulations and well known rules of ...ing long established and well known also by ...ers and Commercial. A multitude of articles ...suitable for Christmas presents will be found ...

MINING NEWS.

California.

A list of rich rock strike at the Kennedy mine, on the 10th inst., says the Dispatch, assayed $150 per ton.

CALAVERAS COUNTY.

The Chronicle says: The French claim, near the Pyramid, has developed some good rock; the condition of the Petticoat is kept secret; the Pine is idle; the Hard Luck is yielding rich rock, and the Big Mine is growing richer. All these mines are on Railroad Flat.

INYO COUNTY.

The Independent of the 9th instant reports a strike of rich ore in the Whitlekind, one of the leading mines on the Buena Vista Hill, Cerro Gordo. The Belmont is taking out good rock.

EL DORADO COUNTY.

J. M. Anderson, says the Folsom Telegraph of November 19th, has an iron mine near the crossing of Webber Creek, El Dorado county, which is becoming valuable.

NEVADA COUNTY.

The Enterprise Company, says the Union, is working in gravel at Buena Vista Hill. The ...mine promises some large ...run—one ...values at $16 per ton. Parties who have leased the Houston mine are taking out good rock. Mining is brisk at Sucker Flat, and all the companies engaged are doing well.

PLACER COUNTY.

On Iowa Hill are located some of the richest gravel deposits in the State, but the scarcity water prevents successful operations; still, some extensive projects are in contemplation, and the prospects were never better for having a speedy operation a number of canals, which will supply a scarcity well-favored country abundantly. Preliminary surveys have been made upon several of the most practicable routes from Lake Valley to the county seat, also for other canals of lesser importance, to be filled out of the Lake Valley canal.

SAN DIEGO COUNTY.

Bullion amounting to $4,130 was shipped to San Francisco from the Julian and Cuyamaca districts, on the 24 inst. The Union has sent some of the rich silver ore discovered near Santa Ysabel, to California.

TUOLUMNE COUNTY.

The Sonora Democrat of the 9th inst. says the Grizzly mine has good prospects for large yields in the future. A vein six feet in width is now exposed.

The Erie mine, near Eureka, has been paying well for the last two months.

Black & Young's mill is paying dividends regularly.

The Belcher Mining Company are erecting new works.

The body of ore in the breast of the Noonday mine is increasing. A crushing at the mill averaged $111 per ton.

The Gold Hill News says the Lemon river has so far increased that all the mills are able to run all or nearly the whole of their batteries.

Last week the Savage mine yielded 768 tons of ore, the average assays of which were $31 41 per ton. Receipts for November, $72,425.

During the month of November says the Reno (Nev.) Crossville, Wells, Fargo & Co. shipped 235 bars of bullion, valued at $122,869 19.

The Record of the 6th instant says that the lowest level of the Lightner shaft (225 ...feet has been ...driving a cross cut to the ...vein distance.

A tunnel 200 feet in length, in the Pennsylvania coal mine, 20 miles northeast of Reno, has struck a fine vein of coal. The c al is of excellent quality.

The Elko Independent ...his prospects ...mine, for a State Miners' Convention, to ratify and remonstrate against the ...conferring laws and legislation.

A correspondent of the Humboldt Register, writing from Unionville, under date of November 9th, says that the mines of the district never looked so well as they do at present. Two new discoveries are actively being made.

The White Pine News says that the ...mine, on the south end of the Eberhardt ...has been again interfered with by the ...weather. The Keyes ...Hutton, Upson ...Hutchins ...also acquisitive themselves ...Probably the best thing about the ...is the rare ...with which it is put up ...ge. The scenery, properties, etc., are ...good and well calculated to illustrate ...form. Take this, of course, as the man...ist to be thanked. "Bertha" will ...ated at the mutinous ...day, Saturday, ...ing evening it will be replaced ...Sok and Neck," a thrilling drama in ...Mr. T. Sampson will make ...ance. And it is announced that after ...Scam" frets his hour" on the ...ensuing, Mr. Lingham ...ambalie" Lotta." We augur a pros...season for the Metropolitan, because ...people will appreciate such ...endeavors to please.

BRIEF CITY ITEMS.

Sunday morning last John Purcell ...suddenly in his room, ...was notified and will inquire into ...his death.

...according to the People's Insurance Company's charter cease with December 31st, 1871.

The building of the Pacific Insurance Company, together with the fine assortment of goods, will be sold on the 28th inst., at 10 o'clock, A. M., by W. P. Babcock. The list is on the counting of California thirty feet, fronting on California thirty feet, to a depth of eighty feet.

Following is a list of the Directors and Officers of the North Pacific Coast Railroad Company: James McM. Shafter, President; H. B. Platt, Vice President; W. Billinghurst, Treasurer; James T. Boyd, Secretary. The Directors are: A. D. Moody, W. H. Tadd, Lewis Hirsche, J. P. Moore, John Walsh Howard, S. P. Taylor, Tyler Henry, S. R. Throckmorton and W.

TO THE IRISH CONFEDERATION.

The following lines were recited by Miss K. Allen at the hall given by the Irish Confederation on the evening of Nov. 30. We insert them rather more on account of the patriotic spirit they breathe than of the exact measure of their merits.]

On Tara's hall hangs a silent harp,
Which for ages has rested there;
With its chords scattered, and its tones silled,
In the gloom of the darkened air;
And a maiden sighs, as she glances back
To the days of long ago,
When the silvery lines of that olden harp
Made the patriot's life-blood glow.

II.

She leans her head back wearily,
While her dark hair sweeps her breast,
And closer those dreamy, deep, dark eyes,
As she sinks to quiet rest.
An army steals over her sorrowful form,
And soothes that harrowed life,
While Tara's fanes remain her room,
And conquer the woeful strife.

III.

She dreams, and each fancy comes flitting back
And frightens that tearful face,
As she seems to live in days gone by,
When sorrow could find no place;
And a smile appears which goes to fight
Each shadow that lingers to depart,
And her fingers move, as she seems to touch
The chords of old Tara's harp.

IV.

She sees the green flag soaring high,
With its wondrous, luminous sun,
While each flutter seems waiting to the breeze
The fields it has lately won;
As the inward bell to the floccy clouds
The fancies, she hopes, the dreams
Of each proud heart that beat beneath
The spirit of Freedom's beams.

V.

But the smile has changed, and now she sees
That "true flag" trodden down,
While o'er it soars, in its gentle breeze,
The cloud of the British crown;
And those proud hearts, now, alas! they're bound,
Their limbs are fettered close,
While the grief-tipped crowbar, in the ground,
Supplied by the hands a power.

VI.

Yet never, aye never, she sees a sight
Which freezes her very heart,
As in the gloom of a darksome night
She beholds each life depart;
Her aged mother, with wrinkled frame,
Dashed with a curse aside,
And with a hate from a demon's sword,
Pale to the earth—and dies.

VII.

Then as she lives in another day,
She sees on the scaffold high,
The martyrs of Freedom's and Erin's name,
With eyes lifted towards the sky;
While with uplifted hands and prayer
We the martyr bloodbrothers,
Who refused in the light of heaven's broad glare,
"God save your Ireland."

VIII.

And on the prison-floor she sees,
On no cot, but irregular pallet,
A victim praying on bended knees
For the freedom of Erin's line;
And as he wasted frame gives way,
And heavy grows his eye,
He breathes a prayer for Ireland's sake,
Pale slowly back—and dies.

IX.

And on a foreign shore she sees,
In gaols of convict dresses,
Her brothers, borne across the main,
From their native land of the West;
And over the end of a British hoe,
Slowly rai their hearts with a silver gush,
Yet they'd never be England's slave.

X.

And as the time goes rolling on,
New wonders greet her view,
As she sees each faithful patriot son
Borne under the Red, White and Blue;
And bound for America's noble land,
Where, freed from each British bond,
They swear to avenge with unfaltering hand
The wrongs of each murdered son.

XI.

And she sees with in this land of liberty
A band of brothers joined,
Who are ever unflinchingly striving to free
The true cause for which they combined.
And even in sight, as the silvery strand
Of the Emerald Isle appears,
She feels the Confederation's hand
Grasp those of her children's dears.

XII.

And she sees with a glance in the future's trend
Looking up to the nations of earth,
Ireland freed by a conquering race,
A flash—a sunset of Victory's blaze,
And as in morning new slowly appears,
She takes down the old harp once more,
And waving the banners aloft in the breeze,
She wakes—to find sorrow no more.

CATHOLIC ITEMS.

Domestic.

On Sunday, October 29th, the new church at Waverly, was solemnly dedicated to the service of God by Rt. Rev. Bishop Ryan, of Buffalo.

Brother Jerome, who was a professed member of the Congregation of the Holy Cross and among the pioneer Brothers of Notre Dame, died at Notre Dame, Indiana, on the 11th of November.

At the same place, on the 22d of the same month, died Brother Agathange, also a professed member of the Congregation of the Holy Cross.

His Grace Archbishop Blanchet has appointed Rev. T. DeVerose, permanent pastor of the Church of the Sacred Heart, Oregon city.

We notice with regret the death of Sister M. Catherine de Ricca (Miss Ellen Tierney) which took place at the Convent of Mercy, Pittsburgh, November 23d.

On Sunday, Nov. 12th, the Most Rev. Archbishop of New York administered the Sacrament of Confirmation to over one thousand children.

The benevolent societies (colored) connected with St. Martin's Church, Washington, D. C, have perfected arrangements to build a commodious hall. In this they set an example worthy of imitation by some of the richer Catholic congregations.

It is announced that Miss Bertha Geroll, eldest daughter of Baron Geroll, for many year Minister from Prussia to this country, who was set from a short own requisition and her parents returned to Prussia, entered the convent in Washington on Tuesday, November 28.

Rev. Father Grandmougin, formerly pastor of St. Augustine's church on the heights, Cleveland, Ohio, departed this life on the 20th November. He was a young man of good promise, an active untiring priest, and his loss is deeply felt.

The laying of the corner-stone of the new Catholic church of St. Stephen's new Irish quarter, has took place on Sunday, Nov. 19th, in the presence of three thousand people. The ceremony was performed by his Grace the Most Rev. Archbishop Perche, assisted by Bishop Quinlan.

The new church of St. Patrick, Indianapolis, Ind., was solemnly dedicated on Sunday, November 29th, by Right Rev. Bishop St. Palais. Rev. J. F. O'Callaghan, of Cincinnati, preached an eloquent discourse on the interesting occasion, and in the evening other visitors delivered a lecture in behalf of the church.

A Catholic Union has been organized in the city of New York, under the auspices of Archbishop McCloskey, to invite the whole Catholic world to unite in the effort to reinstate the Holy Father; also to contravene the spirit of the age to materialism, and to neutralize the spirit of the daily press.

RELIGIOUS PROFESSION.—It is with real joy that we announce the solemn profession of Miss Mary Quigley (in religion Sister de Sales), and her companion Miss Elizabeth Baker (in religion Sister Gertrude), in the Visitation Convent, at Abingdon, Va. Right Rev. Bishop Whelan received the vows and preached on the occasion.

CLERICAL REMOVAL.—Father Brennan of St. Michael's is appointed to take charge of Lebanon, Missouri. Father O'Hanlon, newly arrived from Carlow College, Ireland, takes his place at St. Michael's. Two other clergymen from the above named college have also arrived, one named Ryan and the other Phelan, who will receive appointments immediately.—Western Watchman.

CONFIRMATION.—A letter from Mineral Point, Wis., says: "On Sunday morning Nov. 19th, Rt. Rev. Bishop Henni administered the Sacrament of Confirmation to over two hundred and twenty-five children and adults, at St. Paul's church, Mineral Point. In the afternoon, of the same day, the Rt. Rev. Bishop, together with the priests, repaired to the German Church over which Rev. F. Weinbart presides, and there confirmed about one hundred. And soothes that harrowed life,
While Tara's fanes remain her room,
And conquer the woeful strife.

The Right Rev. Bishop confirmed fourteen persons at Mt. Washington, Ohio, on Monday, Dec. 3d. At Taylorville, Spencer county, the number of those confirmed per county, the number of those confirmed was thirty-seven. A pastoral residence has been built there the past year. At Fairfield, the Right Rev. Bishop confirmed forty-nine persons. This congregation has lately purchased a beautiful piece of property near the church, and a residence for their devoted pastor.

By private information from New York we learn that Father McNierny, Secretary of Archbishop McCloskey, has been chosen to fill the new See lately erected in the State of New York. The three names of nominees sent to Rome for this bishopric were rejected. It is probable that the newly-appointed bishop will be consecrator coadjutor of another bishop, and another appointment for the See thus made vacant.

Rev. Father Smarius, of Cincinnati.—Richard Kelly, Esq., Fleetfield, in the county Kilkenny has been recently received into the Catholic Church, and baptized by the Rev. J. O'Hanlon and P. P. Brown. Mr. Kelly is a gentleman of considerable literary attainments, and his conversion is the result of a long course of reading and investigation of the doctrines of Catholicity.

Foreign.

Eleven hundred dollars were raised in the Catholic churches of Halifax, for the Chicago Catholics.

The Free Feriia, a journal published in Rome, states that the ex-Queen of Hanover is about to enter the Catholic Church.

The death is announced in the Convent of the Visitation, Mary, Birr, Ireland, of Miss Bodkin, a native of Limerick.

CLERICAL APPOINTMENT.—Secretary to Cardinal Cullen, Coadjutor Bishop of the Most Reverend Dr. Walsh, Bishop of Ossory.

CLERICAL APPOINTMENT.—The Most Reverend Dr. Conay has been pleased to appoint the Rev. Thomas Clark curate of the parish of Monaghan.

In the Convent of Mercy, Ennis, the death is announced of Mrs. Mary Ann, in religion, Sister Mary Aloysius, very deeply and deservedly regretted.

At his residence, Loughgh House, Cork, aged 78, Charles Mathew, Esq., only surviving brother of the late Very Rev. Father Mathew, Apostle of Temperance, died on the 2d of November.

The death is announced in the Convent of the Sisters of Mercy, Birr, of Miss Bodkin, a native of Limerick, whose profession was announced about two years ago, by the Most Reverend Dr. Power, Lord Bishop of Killaloe.

ORDINATION.—In the Cathedral, Cavan, on Sunday, November 5th, the Most Reverend Dr. County, Lord Bishop of the Diocese, conferred the holy order of Priesthood, on the Rev. Patrick Brady, a distinguished Roman student of the Irish College, Rome.

CATHEDRAL OF THURLES.—The grand intermediate for the noble cathedral of Thurles has arrived from Rome to his Grace the Most Reverend Dr. Leahy, Lord Archbishop of Cashel and Emly, and has been conveyed into the cathedral to be placed in its proper position.

The new peal of bells in the Catholic Cathedral in the city of Cork were rung for the first time, on the 12th, by professional performers. The bells yield rich and clear tones, and the peal is a really noble one. Nearly three centuries has elapsed since the present peal were heard before from a Catholic church in Cork.

CONVERSION.—Richard Kelly, Esq., Fleetfield, in the county Kilkenny has been recently received into the Catholic Church, and baptized by the Rev. J. O'Hanlon and P. P. Brown. Mr. Kelly is a gentleman of considerable literary attainments, and his conversion is the result of a long course of reading and investigation of the doctrines of Catholicity.

DEDICATION OF A CHURCH.—On the 22d of October, the Most Rev. Francis Kelly, D. D., Lord Bishop of Derry, solemnly dedicated the new Catholic Church at Altinure, county Derry. The building, which is a stately structure, and perhaps the most elegant and commodious in the diocese, was erected mainly through the exertions of the Rev. Edward Lindsay, a talented and energetic young clergyman. The ceremonial attracted to Altinure several thousand people.

The ceremonies of laying the corner-stone of St. Colman's Chapel took place on the 15th of October, in Dromore, and were performed by Most Reverend Dr. Leahy, Bishop of the diocese. The sermon was preached by the Most Reverend Dr. McGettigan, Primate of all Ireland, in the old chapel which adjoins the edifice. The congregation was very large, and embraced the leading Catholic families of county Down. At the conclusion of the sermon a collection was taken up in aid of the building fund, and £643 17s. 6d. was realized.

CLERICAL CHANGES.—The esteemed and amiable Bishop of Raphoe, the Most Rev. Dr. Meilwitt, has made the following changes among the clergy of the diocese. The Rev. Bernard Kelly, for many years administrator in Letterkenny, under the Archbishop of Armagh, goes with the deepest regret of us all, to Rathmelton to succeed the Rev. John Flanigan, lately deceased, priest of that important charge. Rev. N. W. Gallagher succeeds Father Kelly in Letterkenny.

DEATH OF REV. EDWARD HYLANDS, C.—It is our sad duty to chronicle the demise of the Rev. E. Hyland, at the archival age of ninety-five years. He carried this life on Sunday, Nov. 12, the convent of his order, St. Teresa's, Clarendon street, Dublin.

A letter dated Hiogo, Japan, Oct. brings the news of the death of Rev. E Meunieon, Vicar General of the Mission Apostolique in Japan, who has been for twenty-seven years in the East, of which great portion has been devoted to kindness, charity and unostentatious extension of religion in Japan. With self-sacrificing zeal and the assistance of a convert built and handsomely ornamented a church, with only ordinary aid from Europe laborers.

The solemn and imposing ceremony of profession and reception took place in the Convent of Mercy, Dungarvan, on the 1st inst. The young ladies professed were Miss Ellen O'Connor, daughter of Mr. Tha. O'Connor, of Waterford; Miss Ellen Devin, of Garrenbawn. The young lady who received the white veil was Miss Mahey, daughter of Mr. Maher, of Bagarry, County Tipperary. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. R. Fleming, of Dungarvan, in the absence of His Lordship.

A telegram from Constantinople announces that Monsignor Franchi, the delegated to the Porte to settle the religious difficulties in Armenia, arrived there on Nov. 1st. He was received in the most friendly manner by the Sultan, who let him some very handsome presents for the members of his suite. The Sultan gave him an autograph letter to the Pope, which he thanks his Holiness for the presents Monsignor Franchi brought from Rome. The Papal Nuncio and accompanying the steamer by several Catholic nobilities.

Two brothers lately ordained—the Rev. Francis Gallagher and the Rev. Hugh Gallagher—has been entrusted by his Lordship, the Bishop of Raphoe, with the care of Gartan and the latter with that of Glen Colmkille. Another clever young gentleman, the Rev. Father Gibbons—is in charge of the parish of Mevagh, in the absence of the Rev. John Doherty, whose zealous and energetic prompt him to undertake a very long and perilous voyage to procure funds for the work of his heart—the erection of a house to the worship of God.—Belfast Weekly Examiner.

DEATH OF REV. E.J. MCDONALD.—On the 2d inst. the mortal remains of Rev. Edward J. McDonald were consigned to their last resting-place. Father McDonald was one of the very many young men whom the parish of Crossgarlogh took sent to spread Catholicity among American homes. But having entered upon his glorious career, he felt the hand of death upon him, and hastened back to mingle his ashes with those of his kindred. On Thursday last the procession proceeded to the parish chapel, where, after the usual ceremonies, it passed to the adjacent burial ground of Kill.

DEATH OF THE VERY REV. DR. O'HANLON, MAYNOOTH COLLEGE.—This much-respected priest died on Sunday evening, Nov. 12th, in the college of Maynooth, in the 70th year of his age, and after nearly fifty years in the sacred ministry. By his many acquaintances and friends in the Irish priesthood that the death of Dr. O'Hanlon will produce a deep and most painful impression. By those among the more advanced in years he was cherished as a type of the union of zeal that up to and remembered with a reverential love, as one who was kindly to them when ever his duties as professor of saintly authority on whose ruling they might rest with safety.

JESUITS IN GERMANY.—The Archbishop of Gnesn and Posen and of Cologne, as well as the Bishops of Breslau, Limburg, Paderborn, Treves and Munster, have published a collective declaration, testifying to the immense good done in their respective dioceses by the members of the Society of Jesus. To add even greater weight to the energetic pastors of the German episcopacy, and to prove the concurrence of the whole body of the German Catholics in the address in defence of the Jesuits, signed at Maynooe, on the 16th October, by two hundred and sixty leading Germans, it has been determined to submit that address to the German Catholic public for signature; already satisfactory results have flowed from this course of action. In the intensely Protestant city of Hannoge, no less than four hundred signatures were attached to the declaration.

A. WALDTEUFEL,
IMPORTER AND DEALER IN BOOKS, STATIONERY
AND MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS,
No. 317 MUSIC HALL,
THIRD STREET, SAN JOSE.
AGENT FOR
STEINWAY & SONS' PIANOS,
CHICKERING & SONS' PIANOS,
BURDETT CELESTE ORGANS.
AND
MASON & HAMLIN ORGANS.
Agent for the CATHOLIC PUBLICATION SOCIETY
CATHOLIC WORLD,
YOUNG MISSION,
BIBLIOGRAPHIA CATHOLICA AMERICANA.
NEW CATHOLIC BOOKS
Received once a week, both from England and the United States.
CHURCH ORNAMENTS,
Crucifixes, Rosaries, Scapulars, Water Pots, Sacred Pictures, Chromos, Lithographs, and Steel Engravings—all sold at Prices to Defy Competition.
Orders from the East or Europe, to
French, Spanish, Italian and German
BOOKS
Imported to order, at mail's list or any other language, at short notice, and but small remuneration to myself.
Any correspondents on the Continent as well as in the Eastern States, the undersigned can fill Wholesale orders for the Clergy of Catholic Societies and Schools on liberal terms.
A. WALDTEUFEL.

RIFLES, SHOT-GUNS, REVOLVERS,
AND MATERIAL. Write for Price-List. In the GREAT WESTERN GUN WORKS, Philadelphia. Army Guns, Hunters, etc., bought or traded for. Agents wanted. 1871 Address
JAMES VICK, Rochester, N. Y.

SAINT MARY'S COLLEGE,
SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.
Conducted by the Christian Brothers
Offers every facility for acquiring a thorough Education, a further Classical, Scientific or Commercial.
Those who complete the Classical Course receive the degree of B. L. (the Scholastic), B. S. (the Commercial), Master of Accounts.
The Commercial course has been established for the convenience of those who wish to acquire a good practical education in as short a time as possible.
Whole proper care is bestowed on every branch taught in the College, but my language receives special attention. The daily exercises of the Students are interspersed with the French tongue.
The Classes are conducted in the class-room.
TERMS PER SCHOLASTIC YEAR.
Payable half yearly in advance.
Board, Tuition and Washing.....$250 00
Entrance Fee.....5 00
Entrance Fee and Medicines.....6 00
Vacation at College.....50 00
Day Scholars.....40 00
Languages, Music and drawing extra rates.
Studies will be resumed on the 1st of August.
BRO. B. JUSTIN, President.

HOTELS.
Removal.
THE SECOND STREET HOUSE
Has Removed to 115 Second street,
Northeast corner of Mission street, where he will be pleased to see his old friends and customers.
M. DAVIS,
Proprietor.
CENTRAL HOTEL,
816 AND 818 SANSOME STREET,
Between Broadway and Pacific.....San Francisco
THIS NEW, LARGE AND COMMODIOUS HOUSE has been thoroughly renovated by the present proprietor, late of the FARMERS' HOTEL, opposite the Post Office, where he will be happy to welcome his friends and the public in general. Thankful for past favors, he respectfully solicits a continuance of their patronage.
There is a free-proof safe in the House, where valuables may be deposited, kept at the risk of the proprietor.
The Central House Coach will be at each car depot and steamboat landing, to convey passengers to the House free of charge.
Prices of board and lodging as follows:
Per week.....$5 00
Per day.....1 00
Single meals, 25 cents. Lodging, 25 cents.
Passengers and baggage conveyed to and from the cars free of charge. Coaches always in waiting.
Passengers and baggage conveyed to and from steamboats and cars.
A Map, Directory, and all the city matters taken.
RAILROAD HOUSE,
Corner of Sansome and Pacific streets, San Francisco,
IS NOW OPENED BY
P. CASSELLY,
Late of the Tremont House, where he will be happy to receive his friends and the public in general.
The House is thoroughly fitted up in modern improvements. The Rooms are large and airy, and can be had either single or en suite for families.
The best attention will be paid to the comfort and convenience of guests.
Board and Lodging per week.....$5 to $7
Board and Lodging per day.....1 00
There is a free-proof safe in the House, where money and valuables can be kept at the risk of the proprietor.
P. CASSELLY, Proprietor.

ALL THE LATEST STYLES
IN VELVET, SILK AND CLOTH
CLOAKS ARE NOW READY,
AT SULLIVAN, FRATINGER & CO.
11 MONTGOMERY STREET.

QUITE AN ATTRACTION
AT
MRS. RIORDAN'S
MILLINERY EMPORIUM,
121 Kearny Street,
One door from the Corner of Sutter street.
The latest assortment of EUROPEAN AND NEW YORK STYLES—selling at the lowest figure. Ladies, please call and examine for yourselves. tf

VICK'S
GUIDE FOR 1872
OVER ONE HUNDRED PAGES—PRINTED IN FINE COLORS on superb Tinted Paper. Four Hundred Engravings of Flowers, Plants and Vegetables, with descriptions, and TWO COLORED PLATES. Instructions and Plans for making Walks, Lawns, Flower-garden, etc. The handsomest and best Floral Guide in the World. All for Ten Cents to those who think of having Seeds. Not a quarter Deceived. 100,000 sold in 1871. Address
JAMES VICK, Rochester, N. Y.

EDUCATIONAL.
ST. CATHERINE'S ACADEMY,
CONDUCTED BY
THE SISTERS OF ST. DOMINIC,
BENICIA, CALIFORNIA.
THIS INSTITUTION AFFORDS EVERY FACILITY for the acquisition of a refined and solid education. The Academy was founded in 1856, and now ranks among the most successful Educational Institutions in the State.
The course of instruction embraces the English, French, Spanish, Ancient and Modern History, Elocution, Composition, Arithmetic and Mental Philosophy, Chemistry, Chemistry, Geography, Astronomy, Natural Philosophy, Botany, Music, Instrumental and Vocal (Modern and Gregorian), Drawing, Painting in Water Colors and in Oil, Tapestry, Plain and Ornamental Needlework, etc., etc.
TERMS.
Board and Tuition (payable half-yearly, in advance).....$125
Washing.....50
EXTRAS.
Piano and use of Instrument (payable half-yearly).....$40
Harp.....40
Use of Music in Class.....10
Private Lessons.....20
Drawing and Painting in Water Colors.....20
Painting in Oil.....20
School Books at Current Prices.
Each pupil is required to be provided with two suits of uniform, which is also kept for sale at the Academy, with cutlooks, for Winter, and for Summer; a set of Bed Clothes, viz: 3 pairs of sheets, 2 pillow-cases, 2 counterpanes, dressing-case, four towels, four table-napkins, a silver spoon, fork and goblet, all marked with the name of the pupil, one trimmed with white, the other with scarlet, one ordinary pair of boots, a supply of note paper, envelopes and postage stamps.
Pupils are received at any time of the year, but the first commencing August 1st.
No Extra Charge.—Instruction will be given in Plain Sewing, Fancy Needlework, Drawing, Painting in Water Colors, Tapestry, Plain and Ornamental Needlework, Guitar, Violin, Harp, Piano, Organ, Vocal Music, Elocution, Composition, Rhetoric, Astronomy, Chemistry, Natural Philosophy, Botany, Mental Philosophy, Ancient and Modern History, Geography, Arithmetic, Grammar, Spelling, Reading, Writing, Use of the Globes, Physiology, Use of Maps, Embroidering in Silk, Worsted, Cotton and Gold, Crochet, Tatting, Shell Work, Wax Flowers, Hair Work, Bead Work, Leather Work, Fancy Work, Lace Work

TELEGRAPHIC.

Eastern.

NEW YORK, December 16.—The excitement was great around the City Hall and among the local politicians over the action of the Grand Jury and the arrest of Tweed.

It is understood that indictments have been found against twenty or more persons, among whom, it is said, there are men not heretofore publicly known as having been connected with the city frauds and ballot-box stuffing.

An indictment is said to have been found against one notorious fellow who rented 600 tenements at the last election. A well-known Police Judge has also been indicted for his connection with the ballot-box stuffing.

NEW YORK, December 17.—The parade of the Internationals to-day was a success. A large number of spectators were attracted to the vicinity of the Cooper Institute where the procession formed about 2:30 P. M., Hawkins' Zouave band playing a dirge and leading the column. The band was followed by a platoon of the Skidmore Guards (colored). Next came Messrs. Banks and Fleurens, and then came a number of women on foot, among them Yvonie L. Claflin and Mrs. Woodhull, the former carrying a red flag, inscribed "I. A. M.; section one, social and political equality for the sexes." Then came the Cuban League, and another crowd of females, and some sailors, the sailors carrying three coffins and drawn by six horses, and Messrs. Deveaux and Megy. The latter was a member of Fort Sumter. The French Legions, the Printers' Union, the Bricklayers' Union, and the Cabinet makers' Union brought up the rear. Among the notabilities in the procession were General Ryan, the Cuban patriot, Colonel Jones, and Mr. Fran o Rom McKinley.

There was a profusion of red, white and blue, rosettes and scarves. The banner captured by the Police last Sunday was one of the most conspicuous. The inscription: "The Commune expands as the ax of the executioner falls upon the necks of its martyrs;" on another banner was, "The world is our country, to do good our religion;" and another, "Could the Dead all things in common."

NEW YORK, December 14.—A Herald's special dispatch from Washington says that it now appears to have been discovered that the British Government completely outwitted the administration on that part of the Treaty of Washington providing for the appointment of arbitrators, and that the decision waiver to the position and interests of the United States will be the result of the Geneva Conference. Only two of the five arbitrators are friendly to a Republican form of government.

A report was presented to the South Carolina House of Representatives, last Thursday, by the Committee of Investigation, headed by C. C. Bowen, to the effect that the state has been defrauded by the over issue of bonds to the amount of $6,314,000, and recommends the House to take the necessary steps to hold accountable those persons who violated the law and ruined the credit of the State.

NEW YORK, December 14.—The Executive Committee of the Union Pacific Railroad Company, at a meeting held in this city to-day, in consideration of the decision of Douglas county bonds to the amount of eight hundred thousand dollars, known as the decision waiver to the position and interests of the United States will be the result of the Geneva Conference. Only two of the five arbitrators are friendly to a Republican form of government.

A report was presented to the South Carolina House of Representatives, last Thursday, by the Committee of Investigation, headed by C. C. Bowen, to the effect that the state has been defrauded by the over issue of bonds to the amount of $6,314,000, and recommends the House to take the necessary steps to hold accountable those persons who violated the law and ruined the credit of the State.

An indictment is said to have been found against one notorious fellow who rented 600 tenements at the last election. A well-known Police Judge has also been indicted for his connection with the ballot-box stuffing.

NEW YORK, December 16.—The Executive Committee of the Union Pacific Railroad Company, at a meeting held in this city to-day, in consideration of the decision of Douglas county bonds to the amount of eight hundred thousand dollars, known as the decision waiver to the position and interests of the United States will be the result of the Geneva Conference. Only two of the five arbitrators are friendly to a Republican form of government.

A report was presented to the South Carolina House of Representatives, last Thursday, by the Committee of Investigation, headed by C. C. Bowen, to the effect that the state has been defrauded by the over issue of bonds to the amount of $6,314,000, and recommends the House to take the necessary steps to hold accountable those persons who violated the law and ruined the credit of the State.

An indictment is said to have been found against one notorious fellow who rented 600 tenements at the last election. A well-known Police Judge has also been indicted for his connection with the ballot-box stuffing.

NEW YORK, December 15.—James Waldron, who was shot in the head in the back of the store of Owen Gardner, No. 491 Third Avenue, having just returned from California by the Overland route, on account of misery, died at 5:45 o'clock this morning at Bellevue Hospital from the effect of a self-inflicted wound.

NEW YORK, December 18.—A Herald's City of Mexico special of the 11th, states that the backbone of the rebellion is broken and that Juan is making his way to the United States.

Many military commanders considered doubtful have recognized Juarez and pledged themselves to him.

WASHINGTON, December 19.—Morrill, of Vermont, reported House bill appropriating $4,000,000 for public buildings in Chicago, and asked its consideration.

Sumner gave notice that he would propose an amendment to the Constitution providing that the President shall be ineligible to re-election.

On motion of Schurz, the President was requested to give information of the relations of the United States with Spain, and the treatment of Americans in Cuba.

Corbett's resolution passed, directing the Retrenchment Committee to inquire into the recent Treasury defalcations.

The President, in his communication to the House transmitting the report of the Civil Service Commission, after reciting the fact of their appointment refers to their report, and says: "Some plan like theirs should be adopted, and will go into effect on the first of January, 1872." Under the law referred to, as I interpret it, authority is already invested in the Executive to enforce these regulations, with full power to abridge also or amend them at his option."

He adds that the report of the Commissioners is submitted for the consideration of the House as to whether further investigation may be necessary to carry out effective and beneficial civil service reform.

If left to him, without further Congressional action, he rules proscribed by the Commissioners under the reservation mentioned, will be faithfully executed, but they are not binding upon his successors without further legislation, but asks for all the strength Congress can give him to enable him to carry out the reforms recommended.

The following appointments have been made by the President: S. Ayers, Register of the Land Office at Marysville, California; Adolphus Wade, Register of the Land Office at Carson, Nevada, Edward P. Sims, Receiver of public moneys at Belmont, Nevada.

NEW YORK, December 19.—The last city swindler exposed is S ark swather, Collector of Assessments, who has pocketed half a million in four years. He was appointed by Tweed in 1867.

It is rumored that the Grand Jury have found indictments against three or four news-paper editors, for false vouchers.

The indictments presented yesterday were against Ingall, who will be rearraigned, also against Hank Smith and James M. Swaney, brother of Peter B. Hoosac, Cook and Dougherty, editor Tammany thieves, have left for Europe; warrants have been sent for their arrest.

The Immigration officers at Castle Garden have called the attention of the Secretary of State to the fact that parties in England are sending out criminals to this country.

European.

A special dispatch from Paris says that on Thursday another interview was held between Thiers and the Orleans Princes, which was of an unfriendly character. They complained that the line d'Aumale had not strictly observed the previous agreement, inasmuch as he had endeavored to get interest itinerals in his favor. The Duc d'Aumale denied this. Thiers said: "I know that you have visited many Generals who are members of the Assembly, with a view to obtain their support. I doubt not your action is patriotic. I was particularly surprised on discovering that you also made similar visits to many of the subordinate Generals." The Duke answered evasively, and terminated the interview with a declaration that he would now take the advice of his friends, not as to whether he shall take his seat, but only with reference to the proper time for doing so.

General Ilourbaki told the Duc D'Aumale, in the presence of General Ducrot, that only a Republic or Empire was competent to restore France. He should serve no other regime. The Orleans plan is for the Right to take advantage of Thiers' impatience and at the first opportunity to force his resignation and make the Duc d'Aumale President, and follow it with a declaration proclaiming the Count de Chambord King, the Count de Paris heir to the throne, and the Duc d'Aumale Lieutenant-General.

PARIS, Dec. 14.—It is reported that the Orleans Princes have determined to take their seats in the Assembly on the 26th inst., and when there they will act with the party of the Centre.

PARIS, Dec. 18.—Meetings of members of the Republican of the Left and of Union Republicans of the Assembly were held yesterday, in opposition in the entry of the Orleans Princes into the Assembly. Gambetta was the chief speaker of the latter meeting.

LONDON, Dec. 13.—The Lord Lieutenant has issued a proclamation forbidding all processions or assemblies in Londonderry. No trouble is anticipated from the Catholics, but the intention of the "Boys of Derry" is unknown, and it is feared that they will attempt offensive demonstrations.

LONDON, Dec. 14.—The Government intends to suppress all outdoor demonstrations at Londonderry, and troops have been dispatched to that place to suppress all disorders that may arise.

PARIS, December 16.—There was a long and animated debate in the Assembly yesterday, upon the right of the Orleans Princes to sit in the body. Thiers was present, but Casimier Perrier, who represented him said that while Thiers does not insist that the Orleans Princes are under any binding engagement not to sit in the Assembly, he cannot at present release them from their promise not to do so. To this proposition deputies of the Left objected, and did so during the comparison between the Orleanists and Napoleon. A motion by the supporters of Thiers, that the Assembly pass a resolution of the order of the day, and the motion of Desjardins, were both rejected by a considerable majority. Subsequently a motion, which still fully avoids all advice and responsibility on the subject, was passed with but two dissenting votes.

LONDON, December 19.—The progress of the Prince of Wales in convalescence is satisfactory. It is announced that he will probably be able to go out of the house in three or four days.

A Herald special says the Bishop of Londonderry denounced the proclamation forbidding processions, in his sermon on Sunday. A procession was formed, and on attempting to march to the cathedral was attacked by the military. A fight ensued, during which several were fatally dispersed. There is great excitement, and more fighting is anticipated.

Wholesale Market Report.

MORTON DENIS, SAN FRANCISCO, } THURSDAY, Dec. 21, 1871.

FLOUR—The local demand continues fair, with only a moderate inquiry for export, and prices show a decline since our last weekly review. We quote extra superfine at $4 75@5 00; extra at $5 25, and local brands as follows: Superfine, $4@4 50, and extra at $5 12½@5 50 per bbl.

WHEAT—Has been in limited demand, about the only inquiry being for milling purposes, and at a decline in rates, owing to the favorable crop prospects ahead. Quotable at $1 30@1 40 per 100 lbs.

BARLEY—Is in fair demand for shipping and feed at the week under review, at a decline in prices. Quotable at the close at $1 05@1 30, p 100 lbs.

OATS—Are in limited demand and moderate for this grain during the past week; prices, however, are without especial change. Quotable at the close at $1 70@1 90 per 100 lbs.

HAY—The receipts have been light during the past week, and prices remain as given for ordinary wild oat.

STRAW—Quotable at $75@$ 90 ton for cargo lots.

BRAN—Quotable at $1 in bags; $ 20 for prices and white $ 20 lbs.

CHICK FEED—Sells at $1 30@1 35 p 100 lbs from mill.

BEANS—Following are the current rates: Bayo, $ 75 @$; Butter, $2@2 25; Pea, $2 25; Small White, $ 25; Lima, $ 50@5 75.

POTATOES—The receipts have been free, and demand for good stock moderate. We note the following quotations: Carolinas at 75@$, and other kinds at 50@60c per sack.

ONIONS—Quotable at $2 50@3 00 p 100 lbs.

BRAN—Quotable at $19@20 p 100 lbs.

MIDDLINGS—Quotable at $22 50@24 50 p ton from the mills.

HAY—Quotable at $2 00 p 100 lbs.

BUCKWHEAT—Sells at $1 50@1 60 lbs.

RICE—Sells at 6@7½c for Chinese; Canary, 8c; Alaffa, 10c; and Mexican, 7½@8c p lb.

DRIED FRUITS—Are in fair demand and $12 @$15, and Prunes, 9@12c; Figs, 12@15c; Peaches, 6@8c; Pears, 6@8c; Apricots, 10@12c p lb.

CANNED GOODS—Are in moderate supply and sailed, at 85@$ p d.

TALLOW—Quotable at 6@6½c p lb.

WOOL—The market has been inactive. We quote good shipping fleeces at 23@24c p lb.

DAIRY PRODUCE.

BUTTER—California fresh, 37½@38c; fresh roll, 40@42½c; pickled, 30@32½c; Eastern fresh, 30@32½c; Canada—of selection, 30@32; Eastern, 30@32c.

CURED MEATS.

HAMS—California, 13@13½c; S. Louis fresh, 13@ 14c. California sugar cured, 13@13½; Eastern do, 13@ 14c.

BACON—California, 10@10½c; S. Louis, 10@10½c; Eastern sugar-cured breakfast, 12@13c, do clear, 10½@11c.

LARD—California, 10@10½c p lb; Oregon, in bbls and kegs, 11@11½c; Eastern do, 11@11½c; do in cases 12½@13c.

EGGS—For Ranch, 40@43½c p d.; for second do, 35@37½c; Eastern, 26@30c.

MUTTON—At $6@6 50 p head.

LAMB—Sells at $2 50@3 00 p head.

CALVES—Dressed, grass-fed, 6@6½c per foot, grain-fed, 7@7½c p lb.

POULTRY AND GAME.

FOWLS—Sells, large, at $7@8 per dozen; Spring Chickens $6@7; Roosters, $7@8 p dozen.

DUCKS—Sell at $7@8 p dozen.

TURKS—Sell at $1 50@2 p lb.

GEESE—Sell at $1 50@2 50 p dozen.

PIGEONS—Sell at $1 50@2 p dozen.

RABBITS—Sell at $1 50@2 p dozen.

QUAIL—Sell at $1 50@2 p dozen.

MISCELLANEOUS.

GEO. C. SHREVE & Co.

NO. 110 MONTGOMERY STREET,

HAVE ARCHIED FROM THE

GORHAM MANUFACTURING CO.

A BEAUTIFUL ASSORTMENT OF

STERLING SILVER WARE,

CONSISTING

Many choice pieces made to their special order for this season. Their arrangements with this celebrated Company are such that they can supply on the most favorable terms every requisite, from the costliest object of luxury to the least expensive article or table ornament or use.

Admirers of Elegant and Artistic silver are invited to examine this choice selection.

do

THE NEW PROSECUTING ATTORNEY of THE POLICE COURT.—We are much pleased to be able to announce the fact that Mr. John Henry Phillips has been appointed Prosecuting Attorney in the Police Court. He is beyond all question the right man in the right place, and the Supervisors ought to be congratulated upon his selection. Mr. Phillips is a good lawyer; but he is more than that, he is a man of kindly feelings, who will honestly do his best to discriminate between the innocent and guilty. We are convinced that he will perform his duty entirely to the satisfaction of the public.

Died, at the Convent of St. Clara, in the district of Mission Dolores, on Wednesday, of St. Francis (Genevieve Reich), Postulant of the congregation of the Sisters of St. Francis.

Died, October 27, 1871, at St. Mary's Convent, St. Joseph Co., Ind., Sister Mary of the Holy Innocents, (formerly Miss Josephine Dwyer), in the 19th year of her age and second of her religious profession.

JEWELRY, SILVER WARE and WATCHES are actually given away in comparison with former prices at TUCKER & CO'S. They are determined at whatever sacrifice to close out their entire stock before the year, offered that will pay the intrinsic value of the articles purchased. Their stock is so large that it will be sold to make room for new goods just about to arrive.

Newsdealers who may want THE MONITOR after Saturday evening, will please send messages, the single copies at office rates at MR. PETER F. KEANE, No. 11 Montgomery street, and no complaint that the rest be kept warm and free from dampness. This cannot possibly be done unless monthly instalments are remitted in advance for the work. Very often a severe penalty is put for neglecting a subscription of a dollar or two. Letters and King, of 12 Third street, on receipt of first number, will be sold for 50 cents per dozen, and should be sent in cases from all over the country, and be comfortable to wear at the same time.

THE GREAT PICTORIAL ANNUAL.—Illustrated United States Almanac for 1872, in German-English throughout the United States, and all civilized countries. Agents wanted everywhere. Will be published about the 1st of January, in the English, French, German, Norwegian, Welch, Swedish, Holland, Spanish and Bohemian languages, and all who wish to know or stand the true philosophy of health should read and ponder the valuable suggestions it contains. It will be also an admirable medical treatise on the causes, prevention and cure of a large variety of diseases. It embraces a large amount of information interesting to the merchant, the mechanic, the miner, the farmer, the planter, and professional man; and the rates at which sales have been made for such merchants and tradesmen as are most available for a correct and complete list of prices current. Also, a complete table of the various governmental systems of the world, with the duties, the single rates and alternative of more than half the civilized world, are fully set forth in its pages, which are also interspersed with pictorial illustrations of the principal cities of the United States, humorous anecdotes, and other attractive and interesting reading matter. Regular subscribers, who have 4 dollars to appear with the opening of the year. Price $1 per copy. Address, Pictorial Annual, box 1,973, San Francisco, Cal.

Very Rev. Father Sears, Mission Apostolic, waiting to us from the scene of his labors in the mission, and informs us that he has to ask for members of Congress, Senators, among those intents there are some from an Indian tribe who travelled some two hundred miles there the fearless forest to the Mission to be Masses said for departed relatives. In this year's Indian teach a lesson to us. Those who are enjoying the blessings of civilized life, and the blush of shame to it the fruits of the industry and toil of departed relatives, yet never think of having Masses said for them.—San Francisco Herald.

THE NEW PROSECUTING ATTORNEY of THE POLICE COURT.—We are much pleased to be able to announce the fact that Mr. John Henry Phillips has been appointed Prosecuting Attorney in the Police Court. He is beyond all question the right man in the right place, and the Supervisors ought to be congratulated upon his selection. Mr. Phillips is a good lawyer; but he is more than that, he is a man of kindly feelings, who will honestly do his best to discriminate between the innocent and guilty. We are convinced that he will perform his duty entirely to the satisfaction of the public.

Died, at the Convent of St. Clara, in the district of Mission Dolores, on Wednesday, of St. Francis (Genevieve Reich), Postulant of the congregation of the Sisters of St. Francis.

Died, October 27, 1871, at St. Mary's Convent, St. Joseph Co., Ind., Sister Mary of the Holy Innocents, (formerly Miss Josephine Dwyer), in the 19th year of her age and second of her religious profession.

ST. MARY'S HOSPITAL,

CORNER FIRST AND BRYANT STS.

SAN FRANCISCO.

THIS INSTITUTION IS UNDER THE MANAGEMENT OF THE SISTERS OF MERCY.

JAMES MURPHY, M. D. ..... Visiting Physician
S. C. LANE, M. D. ..... Visiting Surgeon
C. F. BELINDER, M. D. ..... Resident Physician

TERMS:

Payable monthly in advance for board, including medical attendance:

In the wards ..... $10 per week
In private rooms ..... $12 per week
Consultation rates, $10 extra.
Ordinary private patients will not be taken under the expiration of the month.
Patients from the country must be provided with bedding and clothing.

Medical Advice.—Dr. Wm. K. Doherty's Medical and Surgical Institute is becoming a "sure cure" to the welfare of our State and health of our people. Thousands of cases have been treated, and it may excite surprise, in but the signal of skill, and patience with the most unfortunate of men, as they are personally acquainted with gentlemen who had suffered for years under chronic disease, and who had taken advantage of every available means that promised relief, but without success, until they called upon Dr. Doherty, who, in an incredibly short space of time, banished entire relief. It is gratifying to announce to the public that Dr. Doherty is a gentleman who seeks, and by the profession of which he considers his first duty to heal the sufferers—to this end he has spared no time and no expense in procuring such remedies as in his estimation are the most efficacious in the treatment of the various diseases that afflict humanity. He makes no pretensions to cure all diseases, but does claim to be able to cure a large number of cases that are considered incurable by other physicians. This cannot possibly be done unless he is supplied with the proper remedies for the purpose. He is able to do, because he feels confidence which long experience has given, and to such the consolation which pertains to that sentiment. Persons afflicted with either acute or chronic diseases, would do well to consult the Doctor, and the refinements of modern science enables him to do so; but one does he insist on obedience to his advice unless his patient places himself under his care. His offices are at 118 Sacramento street, Pottery Block, and his hours are from 9 to 12 A. M. and from 2 to 4 P. M.

THE GREAT PICTORIAL ANNUAL.—Illustrated United States Almanac for 1872, in German-English throughout the United States, and all civilized countries. Agents wanted everywhere. Will be published about the 1st of January, in the English, French, German, Norwegian, Welch, Swedish, Holland, Spanish and Bohemian languages, and all who wish to know or stand the true philosophy of health should read and ponder the valuable suggestions it contains. It will be also an admirable medical treatise on the causes, prevention and cure of a large variety of diseases. It embraces a large amount of information interesting to the merchant, the mechanic, the miner, the farmer, the planter, and professional man; and the rates at which sales have been made for such merchants and tradesmen as are most available for a correct and complete list of prices current. Also, a complete table of the various governmental systems of the world, with the duties, the single rates and alternative of more than half the civilized world, are fully set forth in its pages, which are also interspersed with pictorial illustrations of the principal cities of the United States, humorous anecdotes, and other attractive and interesting reading matter. Regular subscribers, who have 4 dollars to appear with the opening of the year. Price $1 per copy. Address, Pictorial Annual, box 1,973, San Francisco, Cal.

Very Rev. Father Sears, Mission Apostolic, waiting to us from the scene of his labors in the mission, and informs us that he has to ask for members of Congress, Senators, among those intents there are some from an Indian tribe who travelled some two hundred miles there the fearless forest to the Mission to be Masses said for departed relatives. In this year's Indian teach a lesson to us. Those who are enjoying the blessings of civilized life, and the blush of shame to it the fruits of the industry and toil of departed relatives, yet never think of having Masses said for them.—San Francisco Herald.

INFORMATION WANTED.

INFORMATION WANTED.—Of the residence of WM. LOCK, a native of the city of Lisle, France, who died in the Insane Asylum of California, of consumption. Said Wm. Lock was related by a man named Lavallee, who lived in the vicinity of the city of Paris, Ireland. Said Lock came to California in 1853; lived in Philadelphia a few years after coming from Ireland, and before he came to California. All this comes to the care of any of his relatives, if he be their advantage to write to WM. LOCK, care of guardian of said Wm. Lock, No. 133 Fifth street, San Francisco, California. Boston Pilot please copy. dec9

INFORMATION WANTED.—OF JOHN TION. He left Jamison City, Plumas county, in July, 1868. He was in San Francisco in April, 1870. Any information of him will be thankfully received by WILSON UNION, Jamison City, Plumas county, California. dec16

PIANOS.

OFFICIAL.

This will certify that the

HALLET, DAVIS & CO'S

PIANOS

EXHIBITED BY

WM. G. BADGER

At the Mechanics' Industrial Fair of the Mechanics' Institute, held at San Francisco, 1871, received

THE FIRST PREMIUM

AND THE

ONLY MEDAL AWARDED

For Eastern-made Pianos.

A. B. HALLIOT,
W. H. WILLIAMS, Secretary. Manager.

GEORGE WOODS & CO'S

VESTRY & PARLOR ORGANS,

THE FINEST IN THE WORLD.

GREAT BARGAINS

FOR THE

HOLIDAYS.

GLEESON & FELL,

111 FOURTH STREET.

BE DETERMINED TO SELL DURING THE Holidays, the greatest Bargains ever offered in

Dry Goods.

See the Following Prices:

135 pieces Mixed, Striped and Spotted poplins, 25 cents per yard; cheap at 37½ cents.
45 pieces Heavy Black Cashmeres, 37½ cents; worth 50 cents per yard.
Heavy Black Cashmeres, 50 cents per yard; worth 62½ cents.
Heavy Black Cashmeres, 50 cents per yard; worth 75 cents.
25 pieces Striped Satin de Chine, 50 cents per yard; worth 62½ cents.
25 pieces Silk Mixed Scotch Winceys, 50 cents per yard; worth 62½ cents.
25 pieces Reliable Black Alpacas, 25 cents, 30 cents and 37½ cents.
45 pieces of Home Linsey, double faced, with finished edges, will be sold for 50 cents per yard, and have been sold for less than 75 cents.
75 pieces Black and Colored Plaids and wide, for cents per yard, worth $1; entirely new designs.
10 pieces Black Cloth Wincey, 30 cents per yard; sell worth $1.
75 pieces of Black Alpaca, 25 cents, 30 cents and 37½ cents.
50 pieces of Home Linsey, double faced, with finished edges, 50 cents per yard; worth 75 cents.
Alpacas, 50 cents per yard, worth $1.
Alpacas, 50 cents per yard, worth $1; entirely new designs.
10 pieces Black Silks, at $1 00 and $1 25 per yard.
10 pieces Black French Silk, $1 per yard; these silks are not worth importation, and warranted all wool.
10 pieces Black Brocade Silk, $1 per yard.
10 pieces Black Brocade Silk, $1 25 per yard.
Black Satins, $1 25 per yard.
Black Satins, $1 50 per yard.
Black Satins, $1 75 per yard.
Black Satins, $2 per yard.
Black Satins, $2 50 per yard.
Black Satins, $3 per yard.
Black Satins, $3 50 per yard.
Black Satins, $4 per yard.
Black Satins, $4 50 per yard.
Black Satins,

IRISH INTELLIGENCE.

Cardinal Cullen on Education.

Speaking at a meeting held in Dublin, on Saturday, Nov. 26, for the purpose of subscribing funds towards the repairing of the sacristy of St. Francis, Cardinal Cullen said: While they were assisting for keeping up the churches, putting them in proper order, and increasing their number, they should also look to the schools, for unless they maintained the schools they could have no churches. The school was the preparation for the Church. If their schools passed into the hands of infidels, or atheists, or pantheists, or any of those numerous sects who are now prowling through the world, the Church would soon be lost—religion Catholicity would soon be lost—religion Catholicity would soon pass away, and they should be looked upon as unworthy children of St. Patrick unworthy successors of those who shed their blood for the faith. Those who shed their blood for their country, and devila would never come upon them, because they all had determined to have Catholic education—they were all determined not to allow their children to be ruined not to allow their children to be poisoned by Presbyterians, or by Protestants, or by sectaries of any kind. They pronounced for Catholic schools, Catholic teachers, Catholic books, everything Catholic. Catholic books, everything Catholic in the education of their children. The great fight of the present day was about non-sectarian schools. They called them mixed schools here, in England they have adopted the words "sectarian" and "non-sectarian." They wished to have those schools not "sectarian schools." Schools in which the children of every religion and of no religion were all put together, and there was nothing to be taught in the school which would be calculated to offend the religious feelings of those classes. In all religious, all Catholic teaching, should be banished from those schools. They could not speak there of the Catholic church—of the Pope—of the glory of the Cross—of the religious orders—of the Blessed Sacrament of confessions, etc. And that was the education which their supposed Liberal friends and those connected with them were desirous of forcing upon this country! But as long as the priests and the people were united in their determination to have Catholic education determination to have Catholic education for this Catholic country, they would be sure were calculated to spread infidelity more and more through the land. They would never be introduced into Ireland. They would never be introduced into Ireland. Education was made intolerable to them. Education was made intolerable to them, and they knew from the history of the last year what was the effects. It was useless to repeat them. They all knew about the Communists and those who had been the head and the infidel system of education, welcomed in that infidel system of education. Unfortunately, the fruits of that system, unfortunately, every centre of civilization in England there was a great spread of infidelity, a great tendency to this same education, a great tendency to make education infidel. They must learn from what is happening in other countries—knowing the evils of that system of education—to shun it. If their children were once brought up infidels it would be were once brought up infidels it would be useless to think of repairing this or any useless to think of repairing this or any other Catholic Church; for they might insure an infidel race for their children to succeed the church, but that, if an occasion offered, they would pull down the edifice.

Anniversary of the Manchester Martyrs.

The Irish people all the always honored the patriotic dead. The funeral of Terence Bellew McManus was the occasion of a demonstration of unparalleled mourning. The streets of Dublin had been filled with people from an early hour in the morning, up to that period of our history. If it were possible to eclipse that great national demonstration, it was overshadowed by the magnificent procession which, in the face of every difficulty, marched on the day in question through the streets of Dublin to honor the brave who perished on the scaffold at Manchester on the 23rd November, 1867. The memory of that execution, carried out in obedience to a fixed principle of antagonism to English sentiment, is as living to-day as it was four years ago. And we are right in asserting that the anniversary of those murderous deeds would be perpetuated with due solemnity and reverence by Irishmen, wherever they might be. The blood of Allen, Larkin and O'Brien was sacrificed upon the altar of English vengeance to appease the zeal, the indignant feeling of flagging, grown more absorbing and devotional. No preparations were made for the pilgrimage to the scaffold of the martyrs on Sunday last. No trumpet was sounded to call the people together. No humble cross which marks the spot in Glasnevin sacred to their heroism and patriotic devotion. The multitude assembled there without order or organization. It was a spontaneous gathering of the people at the shrine of noble purpose and unselfish devotion. Sunday last was a dull, sombre, miserable day, and the "roads of the line" was dirty then usual, and the road to Glasnevin was covered with mud three inches deep. Still, before mid-day, an unbroken stream of people flowed in at the gates of the cemetery, and ascended the steps to where the memorial cross, upon which is inscribed the names of Allen, Larkin, and O'Brien, and on the other side of the Michael Barrett, whose memory is as sacred as the other three. A dense crowd came on, they looked upon that cross and knelt with uncovered heads in prayer for the soul of the martyred dead, and then turned away from foreign rule for the living. The men wore green leaves in their caps, and bunches of crape upon their arms. As soon a green silk banner of finest texture with mournful border was unrolled beside the cross. It bore the inscription in gold letters, "Pray for our Martyred Brothers," and veiled Save Ireland." It matters not whether the English Government had these departed spirits guilty of murder, the Irish people, as they prayed for the judgment of their eternal mother for the heroic deeds, justly esteem them the heroic defenders of the principles of Irish liberty, and will never cease to feel honored by their noble deed. Wreaths of immortelles, exquisite emblems of ivy, berries, and evergreens were profusely strewn at the base of the cross and pendant from the "cross." Among the crosses and pendant from the "cross." Among the crosses offered for the dead was the cross offered for the dead was the cross presented by the Irishman, which was represented by the Irishman, which was represented by the kneeling multitudes. The pilgrims then wended their way to the resting-places of the other martyrs and many of those who sanctified their faith by death in the prison or on the field. The tomb of Terence Bellew McManus was visited after that of the martyrs, and the grave of the faithful Anne Devlin was not forgotten. At one o'clock the number of persons in the cemetery was not under twenty thousand. They were mostly men, though the fair sex, undeterred by the inclement weather and the almost impassable roads, were largely represented among the pious throng. Towards three o'clock the people began to move homeward, perfectly satisfied with the sacred duty they had performed. Every face wore an expression of conscious reverence and solemnity. Silence, order, and decorum prevailed throughout. Irishman, Dec. 2.

The Firing at Sub-Inspector Reilly.

This individual, writing from Sligo to a local newspaper, says: "You seem to have doubled the truthfulness of the attempt on my life on the night of the 11th inst., as the statement is termed.—Alleged firing at Sub-Inspector Kelly!' I hope you have since been satisfied to ascertain the true facts since been satisfied to ascertain the true facts and a meeting held in Dublin, on Saturday, Nov. 26, for the purpose of subscribing funds towards the repairing of the scribing funds towards the repairing of the Chapel of St. Francis, Cardinal Cullen said: While they were assisting for keeping up the churches, putting them in proper order, and increasing their number, they should also look to the schools, for unless they maintained the schools they could have no churches. The school was the preparation for the Church. If their schools passed into the hands of infidels, or atheists, or pantheists, or any of those numerous sects who are now prowling through the world, who are now prowling through the world, would soon pass away, and they should be looked upon as unworthy children of St. Patrick unworthy successors of those who shed their blood for the faith. Those who shed their blood for their country, and devila would never come upon them, because they all had determined to have Catholic education—they were all determined not to allow their children to be ruined not to allow their children to be poisoned by Presbyterians, or by Protestants, or by sectaries of any kind. They pronounced for Catholic schools, Catholic teachers, Catholic books, everything Catholic. Catholic books, everything Catholic in the education of their children. The great fight of the present day was about non-sectarian schools. They called them mixed schools here, in England they have adopted the words "sectarian" and "non-sectarian." They wished to have those schools not "sectarian schools." Schools in which the children of every religion and of no religion were all put together, and there was nothing to be taught in the school which would be calculated to offend the religious feelings of those classes. In all religious, all Catholic teaching, should be banished from those schools. They could not speak there of the Catholic church—of the Pope—of the glory of the Cross—of the religious orders—of the Blessed Sacrament of confessions, etc. And that was the education which their supposed Liberal friends and those connected with them were desirous of forcing upon this country! But as long as the priests and the people were united in their determination to have Catholic education for this Catholic country, they would be sure were calculated to spread infidelity more and more through the land. They would never be introduced into Ireland. They would never be introduced into Ireland. Education was made intolerable to them. Education was made intolerable to them, and they knew from the history of the last year what was the effects. It was useless to repeat them. They all knew about the Communists and those who had been the head and the infidel system of education, welcomed in that infidel system of education. Unfortunately, the fruits of that system, unfortunately, every centre of civilization in England there was a great spread of infidelity, a great tendency to this same education, a great tendency to make education infidel. They must learn from what is happening in other countries—knowing the evils of that system of education—to shun it. If their children were once brought up infidels it would be useless to think of repairing this or any other Catholic Church; for they might insure an infidel race for their children to succeed the church, but that, if an occasion offered, they would pull down the edifice.

Anniversary of the Manchester Martyrs.

The Irish people all the always honored the patriotic dead. The funeral of Terence Bellew McManus was the occasion of a demonstration of unparalleled mourning. The streets of Dublin had been filled with people from an early hour in the morning, up to that period of our history. If it were possible to eclipse that great national demonstration, it was overshadowed by the magnificent procession which, in the face of every difficulty, marched on the day in question through the streets of Dublin to honor the brave who perished on the scaffold at Manchester on the 23rd November, 1867. The memory of that execution, carried out in obedience to a fixed principle of antagonism to English sentiment, is as living to-day as it was four years ago. And we are right in asserting that the anniversary of those murderous deeds would be perpetuated with due solemnity and reverence by Irishmen, wherever they might be. The blood of Allen, Larkin and O'Brien were sacrificed upon the altar of English vengeance to appease the zeal, the indignant feeling of flagging, grown more absorbing and devotional. No preparations were made for the pilgrimage to the scaffold of the martyrs on Sunday last. No trumpet was sounded to call the people together. No humble cross which marks the spot in Glasnevin sacred to their heroism and patriotic devotion. The multitude assembled there without order or organization. It was a spontaneous gathering of the people at the shrine of noble purpose and unselfish devotion. Sunday last was a dull, sombre, miserable day, and the "roads of the line" was dirty then usual, and the road to Glasnevin was covered with mud three inches deep. Still, before mid-day, an unbroken stream of people flowed in at the gates of the cemetery, and ascended the steps to where the memorial cross, upon which is inscribed the names of Allen, Larkin, and O'Brien, and on the other side of the Michael Barrett, whose memory is as sacred as the other three. A dense crowd came on, they looked upon that cross and knelt with uncovered heads in prayer for the soul of the martyred dead, and then turned away from foreign rule for the living. The men wore green leaves in their caps, and bunches of crape upon their arms. As soon a green silk banner of finest texture with mournful border was unrolled beside the cross. It bore the inscription in gold letters, "Pray for our Martyred Brothers," and veiled Save Ireland." It matters not whether the English Government had these departed spirits guilty of murder, the Irish people, as they prayed for the judgment of their eternal mother for the heroic deeds, justly esteem them the heroic defenders of the principles of Irish liberty, and will never cease to feel honored by their noble deed. Wreaths of immortelles, exquisite emblems of ivy, berries, and evergreens were profusely strewn at the base of the cross and pendant from the "cross." Among the crosses offered for the dead was the cross presented by the Irishman, which was represented by the kneeling multitudes. The pilgrims then wended their way to the resting-places of the other martyrs and many of those who sanctified their faith by death in the prison or on the field. The tomb of Terence Bellew McManus was visited after that of the martyrs, and the grave of the faithful Anne Devlin was not forgotten. At one o'clock the number of persons in the cemetery was not under twenty thousand. They were mostly men, though the fair sex, undeterred by the inclement weather and the almost impassable roads, were largely represented among the pious throng. Towards three o'clock the people began to move homeward, perfectly satisfied with the sacred duty they had performed. Every face wore an expression of conscious reverence and solemnity. Silence, order, and decorum prevailed throughout. Irishman, Dec. 2.

The Firing at Sub-Inspector Reilly.

This individual, writing from Sligo to a local newspaper, says: "You seem to have doubled the truthfulness of the attempt on my life on the night of the 11th inst., as the statement is termed.—Alleged firing at Sub-Inspector Kelly!' I hope you have since been satisfied to ascertain the true facts since been satisfied to ascertain the true facts and a meeting held in Dublin, on Saturday, Nov. 26, for the purpose of subscribing funds towards the repairing of the scribing funds towards the repairing of the Chapel of St. Francis, Cardinal Cullen said: While they were assisting for keeping up the churches, putting them in proper order, and increasing their number, they should also look to the schools, for unless they maintained the schools they could have no churches. The school was the preparation for the Church. If their schools passed into the hands of infidels, or atheists, or pantheists, or any of those numerous sects who are now prowling through the world, who are now prowling through the world, would soon pass away, and they should be looked upon as unworthy children of St. Patrick unworthy successors of those who shed their blood for the faith. Those who shed their blood for their country, and devila would never come upon them, because they all had determined to have Catholic education—they were all determined not to allow their children to be ruined not to allow their children to be poisoned by Presbyterians, or by Protestants, or by sectaries of any kind. They pronounced for Catholic schools, Catholic teachers, Catholic books, everything Catholic. Catholic books, everything Catholic in the education of their children. The great fight of the present day was about non-sectarian schools. They called them mixed schools here, in England they have adopted the words "sectarian" and "non-sectarian." They wished to have those schools not "sectarian schools." Schools in which the children of every religion and of no religion were all put together, and there was nothing to be taught in the school which would be calculated to offend the religious feelings of those classes. In all religious, all Catholic teaching, should be banished from those schools. They could not speak there of the Catholic church—of the Pope—of the glory of the Cross—of the religious orders—of the Blessed Sacrament of confessions, etc. And that was the education which their supposed Liberal friends and those connected with them were desirous of forcing upon this country! But as long as the priests and the people were united in their determination to have Catholic education for this Catholic country, they would be sure were calculated to spread infidelity more and more through the land. They would never be introduced into Ireland. They would never be introduced into Ireland. Education was made intolerable to them. Education was made intolerable to them, and they knew from the history of the last year what was the effects. It was useless to repeat them. They all knew about the Communists and those who had been the head and the infidel system of education, welcomed in that infidel system of education. Unfortunately, the fruits of that system, unfortunately, every centre of civilization in England there was a great spread of infidelity, a great tendency to this same education, a great tendency to make education infidel. They must learn from what is happening in other countries—knowing the evils of that system of education—to shun it. If their children were once brought up infidels it would be useless to think of repairing this or any other Catholic Church; for they might insure an infidel race for their children to succeed the church, but that, if an occasion offered, they would pull down the edifice.

The Day in Cork.

CORK, Nov. 21.—Thursday was the anniversary of the execution of William Philip Allen, Michael Larkin and Michael O'Brien at Manchester, and the customary demonstration in honor of their memory was held in the city. Whether any public notice, or anything apparently on private arrangements, a large crowd assembled at about half-past eight o'clock on the Western road, and having been placed in such order as circumstances allowed, they marched along the Western road, the Grand Parade, down the South Mall, into Parliament street over Parliament bridge and down to the Grand Parade, where the funeral Parade was being formed. Hundreds of persons were on the move from all directions. As the immense crowd assembled it was gradually marshalled into the form of procession, fine bands being stationed at intervals among the processionists, and the whole presented a splendid appearance. Six of those bands played during the procession, fine bands being stationed at intervals among the processionists, and the whole presented a splendid appearance. As the procession moved along the circuitous route it was constantly reinforced by the accession of that establishment, and by the time it reached the Grand Parade it was a large number turned out to see the procession. When the Grand Parade was being formed, there could not have been less than from eight to ten thousand people in the procession and in the street at either side. The windows and balconies were profusely strewn at the base of the cross and pendant from the "cross." Among the crosses offered for the dead was the cross presented by the Irishman, which was represented by the kneeling multitudes. The pilgrims then wended their way to the resting-places of the other martyrs and many of those who sanctified their faith by death in the prison or on the field. The tomb of Terence Bellew McManus was visited after that of the martyrs, and the grave of the faithful Anne Devlin was not forgotten. At one o'clock the number of persons in the cemetery was not under twenty thousand. They were mostly men, though the fair sex, undeterred by the inclement weather and the almost impassable roads, were largely represented among the pious throng. Towards three o'clock the people began to move homeward, perfectly satisfied with the sacred duty they had performed. Every face wore an expression of conscious reverence and solemnity. Silence, order, and decorum prevailed throughout. Irishman, Dec. 2.

What is Irish Loyalty?

We can understand the loyalty of England to the English Government—that is, to the English Government in so far as it represents their interests, and in a certain sense of their honor; we can understand the loyalty of the people of France to any one who for the word of French rulers; we can understand the loyalty of the Spanish and the Italian. What we cannot understand is the ignorance people of the Irish principle of loyalty. What, we ask, is the Irish standard, what, we demand, is the very dregs of the English standard, that can elevate and elevate the stuff that does not make a soldier of the mind, but makes men drunk and stupid, and sets them creeping at the feet of the Castle, grovelling but the feet of the power they worship, and deaf to everything but its basest appetites? It is not by loyalty, plainly and distinctly, that is effected by this wretched loyalty," which is not loyalty in England, but the spirit of it. We are all brotherly. We are all loyal, and we are all loyal to loyalty, manly feeling; how it makes men insensible to their own dishonor, or teaches insensible to their own dishonor, or teaches one to hearing the report of firearms out on the night of the 11th inst., as well as at naught the teachings of humanity, the rules of honor and the maxims of the gospel, that through what logs, and quagmires, and filthy pools, does this spurious principle, which is the life blood of loyalty, drag those who hold on by it in Ireland.

Notes in Humboldt County.

EUREKA, Humboldt Co., Cal.

EDITOR MONITOR:—Sir: Have you ever visited this locality? If you have not, you should. True, we have no stirred cars yet, nor need we look out for the locomotive when the bell rings, for bells here summon when the bell rings, for bells here summon us but to Divine worship, to school or to meals, excepting an occasional call to extinguish a fire in some foul edifice, or unsuccessful attempt at a heartless, or malicious incendiary. I have visited many of the cities and towns of this State within the past few months, but this is the only place, in my humble opinion, fit to make a home in, and progressive I have yet met so much as a village.

It is, indeed, a pity that its only outlet and inlet should have any bar or impediment to retard its proper and rapid development. Humboldt Bay, on the shores of which Eureka is built, is extremely pretty, and the hills all around with towns of rising importance. There are several large saw mills in full operation, and several more mills in full operation, and several more mills in full operation, and several more

WEEKLY CALENDAR.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING JAN. 6.
December:
31—Sunday—Sunday within the Octave of the Nativity.
Jan. 31—Sunday—Octave of St. Stephen.
1—Wednesday—Octave of St. John.
2—Thursday—Octave of the Holy Innocents.
3—Friday—Vigil of the Epiphany.
4—Saturday—Epiphany of our Lord.
5—Sunday—Octave of the Epiphany.
6—Monday—Epiphany of our Lord. Holiday of obligation.

THE MONITOR:
THE ONLY
Irish or Catholic Journal in California.
SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.
SATURDAY.....DEC. 30, 1871.

1871.

The year of grace 1871, is fast drawing to a close. Its days are numbered, and four and twenty hours are now all it can call its own. A custom well worth maintaining exists of using the last hours of the waning year in making a retrospect of its most important occurrences, thus striking a balance, as it were, between the good and evil which it brought upon the world. We shall ask our readers to give us their attention whilst we enumerate a few of those incidents which will make the year 1871 forever memorable in the annals of mankind.

When 1870 passed away the Prussian armies were investing the French capital, maintaining a rigorous siege, drawing their lines closer and closer still around the doomed city. All hope had passed away for unfortunate France, and nothing was left her but to drain the cup of humiliation to the very dregs.

The latter end of January, 1871, witnessed the capitulation of Paris, and crowning triumph of German military skill and valor. In England the government made a half-hearted attempt to conciliate the Irish people by an amnesty bill to some of the political prisoners, who had been for years enduring the horrors of imprisonment in her Most Gracious Majesty's bastiles. Of course the attempt could not possibly succeed. Our countrymen will never accept British rule upon any terms, and whatever gratitude might be considered due for an act of "royal clemency," was altogether neutralized by the grudging spirit in which the concession was made.

March witnessed a grand triumphal entry of the Prussian troops into Paris. The world perhaps be hard to decide whether it was fear or moderation which made the Prussian monarch look so very much like a stolen visit. Only a few troops entered and they remained no time in the city. The compatriots of the victors who are settled among us displayed their exultation at the success of the German arms by a parade through the streets of San Francisco. The rapidly gaining strength, so there is no use affair passed off peaceably enough, although its good taste and propriety were freely canvassed at the time. In this month, also the Communists took possession of Paris, and the consequences are known to all. That career of violence and crime which subsequently led to such disastrous results. Happily for France their reign did not last long.

In May Marshal MacMahon forced his way into the city, after encountering a terrible resistance, and put an end to Communistic mock-government. Scenes by Communistic mock-government. Scenes by which the "Red" fanatics marked their career, the murder of the Archbishop and other hostages, the desperate endeavor to burn down Paris, are things which made too deep an impression on the civilized world to be readily forgotten. Turning from great things to little, we may remark that Senator Sumner's celebrated philippic against Grant's San Domingo scheme was pronounced in this month.

The month of May was signalized by the arrival of Messrs. Burke and Luby in this city. The magnificent ovation with which these patriotic gentlemen were welcomed was one of which their countrymen at home and abroad might lawfully feel proud. The establishment of a branch of the Irish Confederation in San Francisco was the chief re. sult of their visit, and it is one which has already borne good fruits. The Burke and Luby Clubs of this city are now, we believe, among the strongest and most efficient offshoots of the Confederation. Our columns have contained full accounts of the progress made by them from time to time.

The grand demonstration in honor of our Holy Father's Jubilee came off on the second of July. Every authority agrees in admitting that it was the most imposing, best conducted and most numerously attended procession that was ever witnessed west of the Rocky Mountains. It will long be remembered with pride by those who took part in it. Ten days afterwards there was a demonstration of a very different kind in New York, which resulted in a most deplorable massacre. We allude to the strange procession and its attendant riots. Upwards of fifty corpses weltering in blood; more than a hundred men, women and children grievously wounded—such was the sacrifice offered up by Governor Hoffman to the insatiable demon of religious bigotry. Truly, both processions bore fruit each after its kind!

The 6th of August was rendered notable by another so-called riot which happened in Dublin, Ireland. The riot was simply the consequence of an ecclesiastical mandate by the police against a number of peaceably disposed citizens who had met, in pursuance of what they deemed a constitutional right, to draw up a petition to the Queen of England asking that an amnesty be extended to the Fenian prisoners yet in penal servitude. The ruffianism and barbarity exhibited by the police towards even women and children created an intense feeling of horror throughout the entire country. It has taught many people who previously would not believe it, that there is no such thing as a constitution in force in Ireland, and that the policeman's club is the supreme law-giver. The lesson has had its good effect already in a vast increase in the strength and solidity of the Republican movement.

On the 6th of September were held the elections which resulted in the signal defeat of the Democratic party throughout California. It was not generally expected that the Radicals would be as completely successful as they proved; but shrewd politicians had foreseen that the negligence and want of organization exhibited by Democrats would ensall disaster upon the party. The summing up of the situation appears to be that the vanquished lacked not despair, and that with a little better management they may turn the tables upon their adversaries next time.

The succeeding month, October, was rendered truly memorable by the terrible fire described by us at length, and also the extensive conflagrations in Michigan and Wisconsin. These distressing calamities were outdone in their importance. The generosity and spirit of brotherhood exhibited in the readiness with which every state in the Union came to the succor of the afflicted populations, were spoken as to almost convert the great affliction into a blessing. The liberal contributions forwarded from Ireland, France, England and other countries, showed too that Christian charity knew no distinction of race or nationality. Shortly after the fire, the awful scourge of Chinamen at Los Angeles caused a thrill of horror throughout America. It was a lamentable illustration of the excesses to which a mob, fired with rage and hate, and impelled by love of pillage, will go when able to defy the law even for a few hours. There is some reason to hope that the perpetrators of the Atlantic States will be brought to justice will duly be meted out to the other Justice will duly be meted out to the other murder and robbery.

In the end of November, we got intelligence that Robert Kelly, who had been placed on trial in Dublin, for the murder of Chief Constable Talbot, was acquitted. Those who are not acquainted with the unscrupulous manner in which political trials are conducted in Ireland, may wonder at the popular exultation with which the verdict was announced: joking with which the verdict was announced: but Dublonians who know very well the terrible ordeal through which the unfortunate accused had to pass, who know how seldom it happens that justice has anything to do with deciding the fate of a man accused of an offense against the Government, can understand the motives which led to these manifestations, and excuse them too. Early in December, the telegrams reported the departure of the Prince of Wales, The general opinion was that he would never recover, and many were the speculations indulged in as to what would be the effect of his death upon England and the British Empire. Most people thought it would bring about the freedom of the former and the disintegration of the latter. However, the latest accounts say that his Royal Highness is pursuing the only course which can save his life, viz., to submit to patient endurance.

The succeeding month, December, was rendered truly memorable by the terrible fire described by us at length, and also the extensive conflagrations in Michigan and Wisconsin. These distressing calamities were outdone in their importance. The generosity and spirit of brotherhood exhibited in the readiness with which every state in the Union came to the succor of the afflicted populations, were spoken as to almost convert the great affliction into a blessing. The liberal contributions forwarded from Ireland, France, England and other countries, showed too that Christian charity knew no distinction of race or nationality. Shortly after the fire, the awful scourge of Chinamen at Los Angeles caused a thrill of horror throughout America. It was a lamentable illustration of the excesses to which a mob, fired with rage and hate, and impelled by love of pillage, will go when able to defy the law even for a few hours. There is some reason to hope that the perpetrators of the Atlantic States will be brought to justice will duly be meted out to the other murder and robbery.

In the end of November, we got intelligence that Robert Kelly, who had been placed on trial in Dublin, for the murder of Chief Constable Talbot, was acquitted. Those who are not acquainted with the unscrupulous manner in which political trials are conducted in Ireland, may wonder at the popular exultation with which the verdict was announced: joking with which the verdict was announced; but Dublonians who know very well the terrible ordeal through which the unfortunate accused had to pass, who know how seldom it happens that justice has anything to do with deciding the fate of a man accused of an offense against the Government, can understand the motives which led to these manifestations, and excuse them too. Early in December, the telegrams reported the departure of the Prince of Wales, The general opinion was that he would never recover, and many were the speculations indulged in as to what would be the effect of his death upon England and the British Empire. Most people thought it would bring about the freedom of the former and the disintegration of the latter. However, the latest accounts say that his Royal Highness is pursuing the only course which can save his life, viz., to submit to patient endurance.

"THE MONITOR" IN 1872.

Our readers are, we presume, all aware of the terms upon which the MONITOR will be supplied to them during the coming year. They are also, no doubt, acquainted with the many advantages to be gained by the formation of Clubs. We hope, therefore, that our efforts to produce a truly Catholic and Irish journal at a low annual subscription will meet with satisfactory encouragement from the people for whom it is intended. Our promises shall be faithfully kept, both in letter and spirit. We shall do our utmost to make this paper a creditable and trustworthy exponent of Irish opinion; and we shall constantly defend the sacred cause of Faith and Fatherland.

The reduction in the price of THE MONITOR brings it within the reach of the poorest of our countrymen, in this quarter of the world. Four dollars a year is certainly not an extravagant payment for a journal like ours. Some of the Eastern papers are double as cheap, but a fair examination of the circumstances under which they are published will convince any reasoning man that THE MONITOR is really produced at a lower rate. All the expenses attaching to a newspaper are much heavier here than they are in the East. We pay more for compositors, paper, ink, press work, etc., than our contemporaries in the Atlantic States do; and the disproportion between the prices is much greater than most people would imagine. All things considered, it is not possible to produce a weekly newspaper of any merit for less than four dollars a year. There are many individuals who are receiving the paper who are prompt enough in notifying us of any default in its transmission, but who have not made remittances since the early part of a long period of time. We should feel much obliged if these persons would let us know distinctly whether they mean to pay us at all. We certainly cannot afford to keep sending papers which will not be paid for. There is no offence meant in these little hints. Each individual will know in how far they apply to himself.

THE SPANIARDS IN CUBA.

The Cuban insurrection is a disgrace to the entire Spanish nation. It has been going on, nobody can tell how, for more than two years, and its end now appears as far off as ever. It would seem as though the kind of fighting which is practised by both sides, with the name of warfare. It is simply an irregular and guerrilla contest in which the vanquished have no quarter, and the victors recognize no law. The savageness and ferocity that have marked the progress of this miserable civil war would actually shame the most barbarous African tribe, and therefore we need hardly allude to that sort of lustre they shed upon the name and fame of the once gallant and chivalrous Spaniards. Summary executions, massacres of prisoners, wholesale imprisonments, despotic enactments have been resorted to by the military authorities and their only effect seems to have been the provocation of terrible reprisals from the insurgents.

Time after time the world has been assured that the rebellion was crushed, that order was completely restored, that the Government was recognized and obeyed from one end of the island to the other. But each and every one of these statements has been flatly contradicted, and, indeed, proved a ridiculous assumption by subsequent information. It is by no means easy to estimate the true strength and importance of the insurrectionary movement, so as to decide what amount of sympathy should be given to those engaged in it. According to some accounts it is a bona fide rising of the whole population against Spanish rule and for the establishment of a free and independent government. If this were undeniably the case, of course our good wishes would altogether go with the rebels. But, on the other hand, some say that it is simply a disturbance fomented by filibusters, adventurers and desperate men who love disorder and bloodshed better than peace and industry. It is also said that the actual residents in and around Cuba are confined to wild and almost impassible parts of the island, where the roads are bad and military movements difficult. If this view were correct in all particulars, the lovers of order and good government could not, with propriety, keep their sympathies from the Spaniards. Still, whatever party may be in the right, or be in the wrong, the insurrection itself is concerned, it cannot be denied that the conduct of the military authorities has recently been such as to deprive the government of all claim to support or sympathy.

The shooting of the six medical students for the alleged desecration of the grave of Castadon, the martyr of Key West, was an act of barbarism that could hardly be surpassed. It is asserted that the desecration consisted in scratching with a diamond the plate of glass on the coffin of the dead man and replacing the wreath of immortelles by one of radish. The act was execrably stupid and foolish, perhaps it was even criminal, and deserved punishment; but the shooting of five or six young lads and the imprisonment of nearly twenty others was a penalty out of all proportion to the offence. In truth it cannot be defended or excused. The Spaniards attempt an excuse by saying that the Volunteers, to whom the execution was entrusted, were excited upon hearing that a funeral, connected with the desecration had belonged to a comrade. But immediately following upon that, no regular troops were allowed to maintain order, and that the shooting was suffered only to proceed on outbreak on the part of the enraged soldiers. But this excuse is not worth much consideration, and it does not change the barbarity of the masse.

This affair of the students is bad enough, but a proclamation of Valmaseda, lately issued, is even worse. It says that the summarily offered to insurgents upon laying down their arms cannot be made perpetual and must come to an end. Accordingly he declares that every rebel captured after January 15th, will be shot, and those surrendering after that date will be imprisoned for life. Negroes and white men are to receive the same treatment. This is a sort of equality with which our African brethren will not be very much elated. Valmaseda continues that all negro women captured in the woods will be restored to their owners, and compelled to wear a chain for four years. White women similarly seized are to be banished from the country. This is the summary of the proclamation as reported in the telegrams.

We are aware that there are parties in New York who, being interested in the Cuban business, are engaged in the concoction of false news, and we do not think they would stop short of forging even a proclamation if it served their purpose. For this reason we are somewhat inclined to suspect the genuineness of this precisament authentic, it puts quite a new aspect upon the insurrection, and opens up a prospect of foreign intervention. No one will deny that the document in question is sufficiently atrocious to be extreme. It is such as should emanate from no civilized or Christian government under any circumstances whatever. And any government that could attempt seriously to carry into effect would stand convicted before the world of treason against humanity. There are bounds to the severity with which punishment, even of rebellion, may properly be inflicted, and if those bounds are undoubtedly passed by the proclamation purporting to come from Valmaseda.

It remains then for the Christian nations to consider upon which of them rests the responsibility of interfering on behalf of outraged humanity. The brotherhood of man, properly understood, fully authorizes the radical senators from the very idea of a seeming into these matters as if it were an attack upon the existence of their party. They do not want any investigation into anything, and are quite convinced that the country should continue to be defrauded out of untold millions every year. Their conduct in this pattern-like manner is not very pleasing contrast with that pursued by the New York Democrats with reference to the Tammany ring. The latter can at all events say that if discovered much disgraceful thieving, there was mercy shown to them from the moment its existence became apparent. The Radicals, on the other hand, or a great portion of them, are straining every nerve to screen their rogues from the risk of detection!

Mr. Anthony's original resolution was such a meaningless affair that we can

SOMETHING BREWING.

The telegrams received from Washington during the last fortnight or three weeks have been more than usually interesting. From the stormy light which has been shed upon Mr. Anthony's attempt to institute a Congressional inquiry, and Mr. Trumbull's amendment thereunto, it is evident that trouble of some kind or another is in store for the Grant administration. Any further unnecessary opposition by the Radical senators which is indicative of an impending attack upon the party that may result in its complete destruction. The scramble for honor and flummery of the country are preparing for rise in revolt against the corruption and thievery prevalent in official quarters, and, beyond all question, it is high time that they should. Those things have now gone beyond the limits of party and affect the whole nation. They have ceased to be subjects for joking or for purely partizan warfare. They have in fact become a disgrace to republican government. And this has been used as reproaches against America by the press of monarchical countries. At length people here have begun to find it understandable that a position of trust, or service, a situation under the government, should in so many instances be sought because of the opportunities it affords for peculation on a large scale. Congressmen and senators whose plunderings of the public treasury have been brought to light within the last three years is remarkable, and the total amount of their stealings is simply incalculable. It must be kept in mind that, as Mr. Schurz remarked, all these defaulters were discovered not by any vigilance or any investigation, but merely by accident from one party pulling down the other, and if those bounds are undoubtedly passed by the proclamation purporting to come from Valmaseda.

It remains then for the Christian nations to consider upon which of them rests the responsibility of interfering on behalf of outraged humanity. The brotherhood of man, properly understood, fully authorizes the radical senators from the very idea of a seeming into these matters as if it were an attack upon the existence of their party. They do not want any investigation into anything, and are quite convinced that the country should continue to be defrauded out of untold millions every year. Their conduct in this pattern-like manner is not very pleasing contrast with that pursued by the New York Democrats with reference to the Tammany ring. The latter can at all events say that if discovered much disgraceful thieving, there was mercy shown to them from the moment its existence became apparent. The Radicals, on the other hand, or a great portion of them, are straining every nerve to screen their rogues from the risk of detection!

Mr. Anthony's original resolution was such a meaningless affair that we can

THE THEATRES.

California Theatre.

On Christmas evening, a new Irish drama was put upon the boards of the California theatre, like so many others of the same class, the play was imported from London. It is singular, to say the least, that the inhabitants of the British metropolis always have such a liking for dramas founded upon Irish life, inasmuch as they never have any sympathy with the Irish people. They are suspected of harboring ever-kindly feelings towards our countrymen. But, explain how we may, the fact remains that no attractiveness draw such crowded houses, or return such golden profits to theatrical managers, as those plays the scene of which are laid among the green hills of "holy Ireland." And, notwithstanding the absurdities and the utter want of truth to nature which generally characterize such productions, they are very much gratified in making merry at their own expense. Consequently, few, an overcrowded house was only the most natural thing in the world when "Eileen Oge" was first put upon the stage in San Francisco. Mr. Ryer, either is much the inferior of Mr. Boucicault or the latter has taken charge of his piece, for it is nearly as artistic a production as "The Colleen Bawn" or "Arrah-na-Pogue." The scenery is first-class, nearly, except in two or three scenes, exceedingly tame. The slow movement of the piece is relieved by the rival of one of his tenants; a grasping Scotch middleman, who by means of an agent, a broad-shouldered, brave and ingenuous peasant, who is the foster-brother and playmate of the heroine, and finally the hero himself, Patrick O'Connell, who is described as a fine, handsome farmer. The characters are: Eileen Moriarty, generally known as Eileen Oge, the heroine; Shamus Magnire, a pretty, coquettish servant to Moriarty's, and others of the lower grades of life; who is about to be married. Edeen, is arrested, tried, and sentenced to be hung for the murder of Moriarty's threatening letter, which really had been forged through the instrumentality of the York Road, crowned with a short encounter between Senators Casserly and Morton, in which the latter was signally routed.

This Retrenchment Committee fiddle, the probing questions asked about the Sonoma Bay job, and the general rallying upon it on the President's policy, are so many indications that we are on the eve of a most important crisis in the affairs of the party of the present political parties. Everything seems to point to a formation of a new organization, into which will come all the true and honorable men who have been the sound and sensible bones which are now dead and buried. The Radical party, as it now stands, is wedded to corruption and insubordinancy, and will not hear of a divorce on the part of the several schools, etc., after which there will be no landmarks in the church.

St. Vincent de Paul Society.—On the evening of Thursday, December 28th, a grand entertainment was given in aid of the St. Vincent de Paul Society, by the Christian Doctrine and Literary Associations, at St. Francis' Church, Vallejo street. The affair, was, we believe, tolerably successful, though the inclemency of the weather prevented the attendance from being as numerous as it could be desired.

SENATOR CASSERLY.—We have to thank the courtesy of Senator Casserly for the presentation of the "Report of the Committee on Agriculture for the year 1870," published by authority of the Senate. It is a well bound volume, handsomely illustrated, and containing an immense amount of information connected with its subject matter.

DEATH OF PADRE NERRA—Aug. 28, 1784.

[illegible] and saved the mighty waters sang
[illegible] that Angels sang,
[illegible] with silkney waves of sound the air
[illegible] Monterey!

[illegible] the graves of the wonded hills
[illegible] the green trees again,
[illegible] and cypress blended in one valley
[illegible] nowhere to be seen!

[illegible] in the azure line the summer waves
[illegible] white golden dyes,
[illegible] the sweetest beauty seemed [illegible] nowhere to be alien.

[illegible]'s fragrance drifted down the sleeps,
[illegible] as though an angel's hand
[illegible] had shaken the bosoms in passing, and had flung [illegible] their freshness o'er the land.

[illegible] the pulsing echoes of the waves
[illegible] seemed but the beating wings
[illegible]ophena, wailing till a peerless soul
[illegible] World burst earth's fetterings.

[illegible] the Mission, worn with days of pain,
[illegible] all gall, and sorrowings lone,
[illegible] Padre stern heard to accents clear
[illegible] the dear death-angel's song:

[illegible] his flaming sword divide life's clouds,
[illegible] and his glorious ray
[illegible] the pain whose course doth upland lead
[illegible] of fadeless day."

[illegible] his spirit fell as shade of dread
To fear of death's grim power;
[illegible] a calm and holy feeling
For the angel's call his soul had fled
[illegible] the Padre's hour.

[illegible] with loosen lay his hoar hands,
Clasping the cross [illegible]
The staff of army he [illegible]
[illegible] his failing sight!

[illegible] lay, unclasp their hold caught the sounds
Of flying o'er the waters,
The strains of victory and triumph sang
[illegible] Padre's ear.

[illegible] the sweet [illegible] which would crown
His life's labor to believe
[illegible] he pleaded midst the pagan tribe's
A star of joyous glow.

And Padre Serra welcomed him with joy,
Rising to clasp his hand,
Rising to honor which a child-like angel
To his wild western land.

Just questioned of the voyage he made,
The countries he had seen,
And the [illegible] whose kindling stories filled
The years that came between.

And then he said: "Dear friend, I truly know
Which soul these here, that I might see thy face
Once more before I die.

For it is sweet to know the friends of years
Will hear not to my rest,
And kindly place the holy church-yard clay
Above my [illegible] breast."

Then turned to Father Francis, "mid the tears
Of those who gathered 'round,
[illegible] the sacred rites of holy church
His spotless soul found.

And so said: "I crave one little boon of thee,
Let no cross when I have passed away
Of Padre Crespi's be,
Upon [illegible] that quivered in his voice,
Upon [illegible] then.

"In the dear darkness of the Pagan night
Thousands are born and die,
Fe the heathend waters's beating grave
Of many a [illegible]

"They wait thy coming; shall they wait in vain?
Gorrage, my noble friend!
Bear the blessed cross to on this errand,
The cannot be the end.

"Sun set, and yet till this fair land shall glow
With Catholic virtues' light,
Sun rise on Paganism's night which glowed and grew
Up to the stars of night."

So Padre were only calmly smiled
At Catherines' scarf
And [illegible] the warmth of joys
God's chosen servants feel.

And while his words prophetic filled with pain
Of [illegible] fate,
Each fearing of the work he had for
Before the angel's call he's in his cell,
Saying: Lauds rest.

At hour aged by, then Father Francis sought
Padre's little native,
And found the [illegible] of his brother's grief,
Before the [illegible]

At a child's reading on its mother's breast,
Or [illegible] calm sea,
Before the angel's call his soul had fled
To the [illegible]

At his still bosom lay his hoar hands,
Clasping the cross [illegible]
The staff of army he [illegible]
[illegible] his failing sight!

[illegible] lay, unclasp their hold caught the sounds
Of flying o'er the waters,
The strains of victory and triumph sang
[illegible] Padre's ear.

[illegible] the sweet [illegible] which would crown
His life's labor to believe
[illegible] he pleaded midst the pagan tribe's
A star of joyous glow.

And Padre Serra welcomed him with joy,
Rising to clasp his hand,
Rising to honor which a child-like angel
To his wild western land.

Just questioned of the voyage he made,
The countries he had seen,
And the [illegible] whose kindling stories filled
The years that came between.

And then he said: "Dear friend, I truly know
Which soul these here, that I might see thy face
Once more before I die.

For it is sweet to know the friends of years
Will hear not to my rest,
And kindly place the holy church-yard clay
Above my [illegible] breast."

Then turned to Father Francis, "mid the tears
Of those who gathered 'round,
[illegible] the sacred rites of holy church
His spotless soul found.

And so said: "I crave one little boon of thee,
Let no cross when I have passed away
Of Padre Crespi's be,
Upon [illegible] that quivered in his voice,
Upon [illegible] then.

"In the dear darkness of the Pagan night
Thousands are born and die,
Fe the heathend waters's beating grave
Of many a [illegible]

"They wait thy coming; shall they wait in vain?
Gorrage, my noble friend!
Bear the blessed cross to on this errand,
The cannot be the end.

"Sun set, and yet till this fair land shall glow
With Catholic virtues' light,
Sun rise on Paganism's night which glowed and grew
Up to the stars of night."

So Padre were only calmly smiled
At Catherines' scarf
And [illegible] the warmth of joys
God's chosen servants feel.

And while his words prophetic filled with pain
Of [illegible] fate,
Each fearing of the work he had for
Before the angel's call he's in his cell,
Saying: Lauds rest.

At hour aged by, then Father Francis sought
Padre's little native,
And found the [illegible] of his brother's grief,
Before the [illegible]

At a child's reading on its mother's breast,
Or [illegible] calm sea,
Before the angel's call his soul had fled
To the [illegible]

BRIEF CITY ITEMS.

The Unbeworlders' Agency Fire Insurance office has been removed to No. 316 California street. After paying their Chicago losses, the company will have nearly $1,000,000 cash assets remaining.

On Saturday last, in the Twelfth District Court, the jury in the case of The People vs. Michael Connolly, charged with the murder of a Greek named Nicholas, returned a verdict of voluntary manslaughter.

Wm. Donovan, charged with the murder of Geo. Mitchell, at Santa Clara county, was found guilty of manslaughter by Judge Dunnells on Saturday night, and sentenced to five years in the State Prison.

George Waters, a Barbary Coast ruffian, pleaded guilty to the charge of knocking into the lower of F. Duffy, in order to effect the robbery of the latter's person. Waters was sentenced by Judge Dunnells to two years in the State Prison.

Another of the 24th, says the funeral of Michael Morrison took place that morning from the Catholic Church of St. Ignatius. The ceremonies at the house were very solemn and impressive. The procession was one of the largest ever seen in this city.

A Los Angeles telegram of Dec. 21, says: Last night one of the pioneer American residents of this place, Don Abel Stearns, died at his residence, aged 69. He was formerly President of the Common Council, and was the first mayor, after a short interval.

The Bank of California will go into the business of manufacturing sugar on a large scale. Claus Spreckels, of Baltimore, is the principal owner, in whose stock the bank has purchased one hundred and one thousand nine per month.

A Sacramento telegram of Dec. 21, says: The Legislature met at noon on Monday, and organized. The Senate was composed of 27 members, 24 of whom were present. The Assembly was composed of 80 members, 77 of whom were present.

The gross earnings of the Central Pacific for the month of October were $1,095,671, and for the same month of November, 1871, $1,214,000. The gross earnings of the road as reported by the Commissioners to Congress, for the year ending June 30, 1871, were $7,398,877, being an increase of $1,216,000 over the preceding year, and a net profit of $1,216,000.

A Sacramento telegram of Dec. 21, says: Both Leeds appointed Louis Lonas Collector of Internal Revenue for the Second District, and C. S. Stratton, of Trinity as Tide Land Commissioner, vice E. F. Woodward, resigned, and Rod Gibbons, present incumbent.

The Governor has also removed Adjutant General Kelton, and appointed him an inspector of the general canvass, and appointed John Edwards, Adjutant General State Edwards.

The Anaheim Gazette has the following: It is a matter of surprise to many that we have among us such a number of persons who are willing to sell articles of report, that they can be had for a mere song. The selling of land at the Newhall sale, on the 1st of December, 1871, yet there have already been 20 deeds executed, and 1,200 acres sold, and many more sellers are already on the track, and, if the present rate of sales continues, by the end of the year 1872 the entire tract will be sold. Such is the rapidity with which the country is settled.

The Los Angeles Star says: The Union of San Diego says the news from the mines in that county is very encouraging. Nearly all the claims are paying well, and the yield is increasing as depth is attained. The mills are kept steadily employed, and the owners are realizing handsomely. The Union says that the mines are attracting considerable attention with the miners in that the facilities for taking out the gold are so much greater than in the early days.

Nevada.

The Elko Independent says: During the season just closed there has been a decided change in the mining interests of the county, and the attention of the public has been directed to the quartz mines, as well as of England is being attracted to the advantages of this field for successful mining. Capital pours in more freely, and the coming season will be a busy one.

Our Idaho exchanges from the 9th to the 16th inst., before us, contain the subjoined mining items: Boulder Valley rich strikes have been made in the Rocky Bar district, and the rock is said to be better than it ever was before. Considerable rock is being taken out and crushed. Dunsmore, the stock agent, has from $150 to $200 per day in his office. Idaho World.

A few days since John Grand took seven pounds of coal to the assay office, and from the same got $13, after paying for $10 in fees. Grand is a miner, and will try for another trip.

Colorado.

The Colorado Miner of Dec. 7th says: The International mill, Argentine, has shipped since last December 1st, 1,000 tons of ore. Parent & Nichols have shipped in the same time two tons of bullion, and $7,327.27.

The mines in all portions of the county are yielding large returns, and the miners and millmen are in abundance.

From reliable information we learn that the coming summer is always a dull season before the opening of the railroad. The production will be of the very first rank.

Lish.

The Salt Lake Telegram of Dec. 12 has the following: Wells, Fargo & Co. received 24 packages of treasure, containing $200,000, by the train which left here on the 10th for connection with the train from New York on the 11th they received $200,000 more for shipment to New York.

M. L. Holman has on exhibition in his assay office a sample of silver found ore, that yields sixty ozs. of silver to the ton. It is said to be the richest specimen from the present level of the mine, which is about 1,000 feet below the surface.

MINING NEWS.

California.

NEVADA COUNTY.—The Paxton of Grass Valley says that the mines belonging to Forman & Co. are yielding a very handsome return. The company has a steam hoisting and pumping engine of 40 horse power, and a 10-stamp mill. The company is also running a tunnel to the Bloomfield Ridge, which will cut the ledge at a depth of 1,000 feet, and after that can be worked out, to advantage, with cars, which will do away with the present costly system of hoisting.

A Nevada paper says: It is rumored that the old Gilbert mine, in Grizzly Flat, which has recently been struck upon a rich body of ore, is owned by parties in this locality. The ore is said to be of a character that will yield handsomely, and the mine is opened to a considerable depth. The discovery of the ledge has given a new impetus to mining operations in that locality.

PLACER COUNTY.—The Auburn Herald of the 23d says: Work on the St. Patrick mine, on Canada Hill, is being pushed forward with the most satisfactory results, and a large amount of rock is now on the dump.

The stream mine, located on the head of Canada Hill, is also being worked with success. The owners of shares of the rock. This mine has been worked for a number of years, and is now in better working order than ever before.

The Sand Ridge Company.—The Union of San Diego says the work from the mines of the Sand Ridge Company is progressing very favorably. Nearly all the claims are paying well, and the yield is increasing as depth is attained. The mills are kept steadily employed, and the owners are realizing handsomely. The company has also a 10-stamp mill. The company is also running a tunnel to the Bloomfield Ridge, which will cut the ledge at a depth of 1,000 feet, and after that can be worked out, to advantage, with cars, which will do away with the present costly system of hoisting.

SHASTA COUNTY.—The Shasta Courier of the 16th inst. says: A number of strangers from the Hitchcock mine, on Middle Creek, passed through town on Monday with a view of locating quartz claims in the surrounding mineral land line.

Nevada.

The Elko Independent says: During the season just closed there has been a decided change in the mining interests of the county, and the attention of the public has been directed to the quartz mines, as well as of England is being attracted to the advantages of this field for successful mining. Capital pours in more freely, and the coming season will be a busy one.

PACIFIC COAST ITEMS.

California.

The pulpit in the new site of Grass Valley has been received from Washington and fixed in its place. Costly Redwood is used.

An assessment is being formed in Santa Cruz county to levy a tax of one dollar per year on all dogs, and for doubling it up with small farms.

Lodi, Cherokee, on Wednesday, made over to his successor, Major L. B. Foster, everything appertaining to the office of the Alcalde's Court.

A company of San Francisco capitalists have purchased a large area of land in the vicinity of Lathrop, in the northeastern end of San Joaquin county, and will put down artesian wells.

The Bank of California will go into the business of manufacturing sugar on a large scale. Claus Spreckels, of Baltimore, is the principal owner, in whose stock the bank has purchased one hundred and one thousand nine per month.

A Los Angeles telegram of Dec. 21, says: Last night one of the pioneer American residents of this place, Don Abel Stearns, died at his residence, aged 69. He was formerly President of the Common Council, and was the first mayor, after a short interval.

Another of the 24th, says the funeral of Michael Morrison took place that morning from the Catholic Church of St. Ignatius. The ceremonies at the house were very solemn and impressive. The procession was one of the largest ever seen in this city.

A Sacramento telegram of Dec. 21, says: Both Leeds appointed Louis Lonas Collector of Internal Revenue for the Second District, and C. S. Stratton, of Trinity as Tide Land Commissioner, vice E. F. Woodward, resigned, and Rod Gibbons, present incumbent.

The Governor has also removed Adjutant General Kelton, and appointed him an inspector of the general canvass, and appointed John Edwards, Adjutant General State Edwards.

The Anaheim Gazette has the following: It is a matter of surprise to many that we have among us such a number of persons who are willing to sell articles of report, that they can be had for a mere song. The selling of land at the Newhall sale, on the 1st of December, 1871, yet there have already been 20 deeds executed, and 1,200 acres sold, and many more sellers are already on the track, and, if the present rate of sales continues, by the end of the year 1872 the entire tract will be sold. Such is the rapidity with which the country is settled.

The Los Angeles Star says: The Union of San Diego says the news from the mines in that county is very encouraging. Nearly all the claims are paying well, and the yield is increasing as depth is attained. The mills are kept steadily employed, and the owners are realizing handsomely. The company has also a 10-stamp mill. The company is also running a tunnel to the Bloomfield Ridge, which will cut the ledge at a depth of 1,000 feet, and after that can be worked out, to advantage, with cars, which will do away with the present costly system of hoisting.

SHASTA COUNTY.—The Shasta Courier of the 16th inst. says: A number of strangers from the Hitchcock mine, on Middle Creek, passed through town on Monday with a view of locating quartz claims in the surrounding mineral land line.

Radicals Afraid of an Investigation.

An Interesting Debate in the Senate.

WASHINGTON, December 13.—In the Senate to-day Mr. ANTHONY (Rad., R. I.) offered a resolution providing for a standing Committee of Investigation and Retrenchment, to consist of seven members, to be elected by the Senate, and to have power to investigate and report upon such subjects as may be referred to it by the Senate.

Mr. Trumbull moved to amend by a provision directing the committee to inquire into the expenditures in all branches of the Government service, whether any, and if so what, offices could be abolished, and what salaries or allowances ought to be reduced, etc.; also giving it power to administer oaths, and send for persons or papers.

Mr. Sherman (Rad., Ohio), favored the original resolution. If any Senator knew of any abuse he could easily have them referred to the committee.

Mr. Thurman (Dem., Mass.) was in favor of both propositions, as they both looked to the same end, the

REFORMING OF THE PUBLIC TREASURY.

Mr. Thurman (Dem.; Ohio) favored the amendment, and said that the original resolution should have been referred to the committee. The committee ought to get information of the committee, why, then, little would be done. If the Senate was sincere in their desire to correct the abuses in the public service, they would not hesitate to create a committee with adequate powers.

Mr. Edmunds (Rad., Vt.) said that the question of reform in the civil service had been discussed by some Senators as if they wished to impress the people with the idea that the Senate was pondered in every direction by the officers of the Government, and that it was a mass of corruption which could only be met by reviving a committee whose existence had ceased with the 42d Congress. The Senator from Illinois (Mr. Trumbull) has drawn a

VERY DARK PICTURE OF THE PUBLIC SERVICE.

At this time, yet he undoubtedly knew that, considering the number of persons employed in the service and their duties, the administration of the Government for the last three years would compare favorably in efficiency and purity with any previous administration whatever—not excepting that of Washington himself. There was, therefore, no need of a committee with extraordinary powers.

Mr. Sherman said that there were a great many persons throughout the country who would be glad to give information.

Mr. Casserly pointed out that there was a committee already in existence—the Committee on Retrenchment, armed with the powers that made the old committee so useful and so efficient. The Senator from Vermont (Edmunds), had told the Senate that the civil service had improved greatly under the existing administration, and undoubtedly it had; yet in the whole history of the country it would be difficult or impossible to find four consecutive months during which so many by public servants had been brought to light as in the last four months. Most of those cases had been discovered too, without careful searching or investigation, had been almost stumbled upon, and therefore it was fair to infer that careful investigation would expose a great many more hidden.

ATTACHMENTS AND EMBEZZLEMENTS

Now, gentlemen, I tell you that whatever may be said of the improvements that have taken place, the people of the United States are startled at the frequency and enormity of the disclosures which are made from day to day. They do not give themselves up to any delusions on the subject. The American people are on the point of demanding

HONEST GOVERNMENT,

And they want to have all the means used for that object that are compatible with the laws of the country. They demand the expensive and

OSTENTATIOUS OF CORRUPTION,

Regardless of the interests of any party or person. It seems to me we are standing on the threshold of a moral revolution that is fairly to go beyond the overthrow of Tammany Hall, and in the case of the Custom-House of New York it has already done so. I, for my part, will cheerfully declare against corruption in the abstract or against any manifestation of the sin in general, and the sinfulness of the sin in particular. We have had beauty of virtue avail much. We have had examples of all that. The people will not much longer take that worthless currency as a legal tender.

Mr. Conkling replied to Mr. Schurz, declaring that any one at the White House had improper connection with the Custom-house business.

Mr. Morton (Rad., Ind.) declared himself in favor of Mr. Anthony's resolution. He also spoke of the extraordinary purity of the present administration (of which he took part in punishing dereliction of duty in its officers, and cited the case of Hoge as an illustration.

Mr. Casserly asked whether the Senator from Indiana (Mr. Morton) could point to any other case of the prompt punishment of a defaulter.

Mr. Morton said he did not remember any at the moment, but he would venture the assertion that when the facts in relation to defalcation brought to the knowledge of the Administration the defaulter had been punished.

Mr. Casserly—How about Pension Agent Lawrence and Collector Hallowell?

Mr. Morton—They ran away before they were found

Monsignor Capel on the Poor.

At the Kensington Pro-Cathedral, the eloquent preacher just named gave the first of two sermons on our duty to and treatment of the poor. His discourse was founded on the words, "He that hath the substance of this world and seeth his brother in need, and shall shut up his bowels of compassion from him, how doth the charity of God abide in him?" Kindness to the poor was the barometer or the thermometer whereby we might measure our love of God, and might estimate on the other hand the amount of favor we had in the service. And if that charity mentioned in the text was needed in the days of St. John, how much more was it needed in our own day. Poverty was thickening about us, the poorer classes were increasing in numbers, the question had become serious, so far as legislation was concerned, and this, too, at a time when wealth had increased and was increasing. It would be as well, therefore, to understand what was our duty as citizens and as Christians. Poverty, though it might be the result of criminal procedure or of vice, was not crime, and was frequently caused by unforeseen disease or accidental affliction. Yet, in effect, poverty in England was regarded as a crime, for we treated with greater severity the criminals in our jails than we did the beggars in the streets. This, too, at a time when ing the moral obligation put upon us by natural law, and the incidental circumstances of our position. God has made man the common inheritor of all produce on the face of the earth, and there was enough in the world to be starved to death. It was a disgrace, then, on humanity that there should be one man in their midst or one street of death from want of food. Ninth of the poverty that was around us was not generated by the luxuriousness of the rich. We encouraged poverty by the indiscriminate way we gave our alms. We saw persons in the streets, and were touched by their looks or by their appeals, and in order to get rid of their importunity we used to give what we had got about us. What could be more unjust than to act in that way to a person of whom we knew naught, a person who might be a squanderer in his home, or who, if not a squanderer, declined to labor for his living—and yet indiscriminate generosity would contribute to his idleness and squandering. In contrast to this, Monsignor Capel remarked upon deserving cases of distressed families, whose misery was known only to those who visited them. Even in this he remarked with great pain that attempts were being made by those who bestowed charity to pervert the recipients from their faith, without thinking that those who in this way became unfaithful to their consciences and to God in that could hardly be faithful to man. Whenever his means permitted it—he spoke for every Catholic priest—he tried to aid any deserving person, whether Catholic or Protestant, who showed real want, but never had he attempted to play with the conscience of any person who came to him for assistance, believing that such indulgence must be influenced not by God, but by the evil one. He next remarked upon the necessity of treating the poor with sympathy rather than with patronage or pride, remarking that, however exact the poor law might be, and however assiduous might be the inspectors, those means did not appeal to the soul, whereas a penny kindly given would be more highly appreciated than a pound bestowed ostentatiously. Noticing the luxury of the higher classes, who for the sake of position felt bound to display their wealth, he contrasted the house of that man with that of the baker of a family in the poorer parts of London, where a whole family would sit shivering in one room, lighted only by a rush light and the illumination of the fire. How many young men of our day who were dressed in the best possible fashion had done nothing for the poor; how many young girls dressed in all that millinery could do, while others were suffering in the cold and rags, would sacrifice a portion of their trinkets to help Jesus Christ in the person of the poor? One portion of our fortune was necessary for the support of life; it was necessary to be clothed, it was necessary to be fed; then it was necessary to give thought to the education of our children, and in keeping up the position which God had placed us in. Then came that portion over and above that abundance, out of which we are bound to give to meet the wants of the poor. If superfluities were what we were bound to give up what was required for our position and, in case of extreme necessity, we should deprive ourselves still more to attend to the necessities of our neighbors. In the parish, where in such places as Cooper's Buildings, Jenning's Buildings, and Earl's Court, a father and mother and five or six children might be found living in one room, he had been permitted by Father Lockhart to establish a society to give assistance to the poor. He would be delighted if any of the people of Kensington would come and join with him in the work, and would be glad to receive gifts, whether in money or in clothing, which would be of service to relief. He should, in the first place, help those who were deserving, and then if there were funds to spare, he would endeavor to assist those who had fallen by their own viciousness, to recover their places in the world. Nothing would be spent for expenses in distributing, but every shilling contributed would be given to the poor. A collection in furtherance of the objects of the society was made, and it was announced that on next Sunday morning Monsignor Capel will lecture on "Our Treatment of the Poor."

A London Tragedy.

One of the saddest stories we have ever heard of weary life struggles against poverty and sickness, ending in death at the workhouse gate, may be gathered from the returns of the Bethnal Green Workhouse. Twelve years ago a sailor, named Lardelord, perished at sea, leaving, unfriended and without means, his widow and an idiot son. She faced her trouble bravely, and by incessant work earned six shillings a week at shirt making. Her idiot boy soon learned to sew slippers, and in some weeks actually earned five shillings. These were prosperous and glorious times; but their were too happy to endure. The son became commonplace, and his barking cough became so cruelly incessant that he could not sew. Still, the widow carried on the fight with want. But unbending toil broke down her strength at last, and only with the utmost difficulty could she earn four shillings weekly. Then one little article of furniture went one after the other, then went her clothing, save the scantiest and shabbiest covering. Food and medicine were very dear; she knew how dear they were daily, but at last she could buy no more. Some neighbors then called in the "parish people," the bailiff and relieving officer, and the rich giardians graciously ordered two loaves of bread, one shilling's worth of meat, and two quarts of milk to be given to the widow and her son to nourish them for a week. They tried to live on this. They eked out the bread piece through the seven days, but how could they portion out the three farthings worth of meat a day? But the London parish would not afford to lavish such expensive diet on an old widow and her idiot son. For one month only did they revel in this abundance. Then the relief tokens, the milk and meat were "stopped." When the mother asked for the usual, she was ordered "to come into the house, herself and her son." She had for twelve long weary years watched by her senseless boy. He was very dear to her because of his infirmity, and because of his drowned father. "Go into the house!" That meant the separation of mother and child. She knew his ways, could humor him, and quiet him in his angry mood. What would become of him away from her in a workhouse with hard people over him? So she determined to stand by him to the last—it could not be long now—and then the lonely and relieving officer departed, having done their duty. But, then, there came to the door of the widow what left her on the most terrible of a parish bealde. The widow's face fell in, and the neighbors said that death had marked her. There was a stir in Bradlebone now. They had refused relief and now she had the audacity to die.

A doctor—the parish doctor—came and ordered her removal to the workhouse. They say that when the dying woman—unfussed a shilling's worth of meat—saw the order, "she was filled with fright," and said, "It is very cold. Let me remain until to-morrow." Next day three men came to remove her to the work-house in a chair. When the widow saw them she trembled, and begged to be allowed to remain one quarter of an hour in her old home. The poor are kindly to each other and considerate. She asked her fellow-lodgers for a few halfpence, "to give her to the men to induce them to grant her request," and give her fifteen minutes respite. Ah! she seems to have measured out her time for her long her heart would live her. All the time, while she was entreating for the stranger to spare her, and the respite of fifteen minutes in her wretched but familiar room, the grip of death was tightening on her life. For when the fifteen minutes had expired, and they lifted her into the chair, "Oh! oh!" she cried, and lay back motionless. In the three men carried her—

Rattling her bones
Over the stones.

Until at the workhouse gate one looked back and cried: "She is gone!"—Irish Times.

Vagaries of a Spiritualistic Table.

On another occasion, in the same house, I (Mr. Coleman) witnessed the following long dinner table rise up, supported only by its two end legs, and remain steadily poised at an angle of forty to fifty degrees. The gentleman of the house then said to me, "I will show you my confidence in the spirit's intelligence and power." He then placed his hand flat upon the floor, and said, "Now, spirits, I know you will not hurt me. Bring the table gently down upon my hand." This was done, and he hand, though pinned fast to the floor by the weight of the table, was not in the least hurt. The table was then slightly eased, and he removed his hand. Some years subsequently to the time of the above narrated, I was staying at Malvern with my wife and daughter. We had apartments at the house of Mr. Wilsmore, who had a wife and daughter likewise in the house; the daughter, a young woman about twenty-three years of age. There were also in the house two visitors—Miss Lee, of Worcester, and Mr. Moore, of Halifax. In consequence of the statements made by me respecting the phenomena I had witnessed, the visitors at Mr. Wilson's establishment subscribed to bring to Malvern the Marshalls from London (mediumistic and two or three séances were given at Malvern with them with more or less satisfaction. Wilsmore, who had been a Jack-in-the-box with Lady Gully, asked me if I would be good enough to allow him to see something of spiritualism before the medium left the house. I accordingly requested the Marshalls to spend an hour or two on the following day (Sunday) with Wilsmore's family. He invited some of their neighbors to form a circle. I and my family spent the day out, and returned home between ten and eleven o'clock at night, when my wife and daughter retired to bed, and left me in our sitting-room. Shortly after came Wilsmore, in great excitement, came to me, and begged that I would come down stairs immediately, for he did not know what to do. He said his wife, his daughter, and Miss Lee were all in hysterics. I followed him at once, and upon entering the room a small three legged table met me at the door, no one touching it, and made me a graceful bow, as if to say, "How do you do?" Then the table went to the most centre part of a parish beadle. The widow's face fell in, and the neighbors said that death had marked her. There was a stir in Bradlebone now. They had refused relief and now she had the audacity to die.

A doctor—the parish doctor—came and ordered her removal to the workhouse. They say that when the dying woman—unfussed a shilling's worth of meat—saw the order, "she was filled with fright," and said, "It is very cold. Let me remain until to-morrow." Next day three men came to remove her to the work-house in a chair. When the widow saw them she trembled, and begged to be allowed to remain one quarter of an hour in her old home. The poor are kindly to each other and considerate. She asked her fellow-lodgers for a few halfpence, "to give her to the men to induce them to grant her request," and give her fifteen minutes respite. Ah! she seems to have measured out her time for her long her heart would live her. All the time, while she was entreating for the stranger to spare, and the respite of fifteen minutes in her wretched but familiar room, the grip of death was tightening on her life. For when the fifteen minutes had expired, and they lifted her into the chair, "Oh! oh!" she cried, and lay back motionless. In the three men carried her—

Rattling her bones
Over the stones.

Until at the workhouse gate one looked back and cried: "She is gone!"—Irish Times.

A. WALDTEUFEL,

IMPORTER AND DEALER IN

BOOKS, STATIONERY

AND

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS,

287 MUSIC HALL,

FIRST STREET ..... SAN JOSE.

AGENT FOR

STEINWAY & SONS' PIANOS,

CHICKERING & SONS' PIANOS,

BURDETT CELESTE ORGANS.

AND

MASON & HAMLIN ORGANS.

Agent for the CATHOLIC PUBLICATION SOCIETY
CATHOLIC WORLD.
YOUNG CATHOLIC.
BIBLIOGRAPHIA CATHOLICA AMERICANA.

NEW CATHOLIC BOOKS

Received once a week, both from England and the United States.

CHURCH ORNAMENTS,

Crucifixes, Rosaries, Scapulars, Water Fonts, Sacred Pictures, Chromos, Lithographs, and Steel Engravings—all sold at Prices to Defy Competition.

Orders from the East or Europe,

French, Spanish, Italian and German

BOOKS

Imported to order, as well as Latin or any other language, at short notice, and but small commission charged.

Having correspondents on the Continent as well as in the Eastern states, the undersigned can fill what ever order the Rev. Clergy or Catholic societies may wish to be filled.

A. WALDTEUFEL.

CATHOLIC GIFTS

FOR THE

HOLIDAYS.

A splendid variety of CATHOLIC ARTICLES, both useful and ornamental, as well as a complete assortment of

CATHOLIC PUBLICATIONS,

PRAYER BOOKS, BIBLES, &c., &c.,

Specially adapted for

CHRISTMAS & NEW-YEAR'S

GIFTS.

FOR SALE AT

FLOOD'S CATHOLIC BOOKSTORE,

683 MARKET STREET,

dc16 National Hotel Building.

$50,000

TO MEET STOCK AT

HAIN & POLLARD'S,

Manufacturing Jewelers, No. 7 Kearny street, which must and will be sold during the Holidays, at any sacrifice. Purchasers should not pass their store if they want to buy Elegant Jewelry, fine Watches and Chains, Diamonds or Silverware, at their own price.

SALESROOM

7 Kearny Street, near Market.

dc16

The Learned Murderer.

You will have seen it stated in some of the London papers that at the Central Criminal Court an application will be made to postpone the trial of Mr. Watson till the next commission. I have reason to believe that no substantial opposition will be made to the application. The interesting gentleman has been visited in prison by several "mad doctors," and as the result of the opinions of some of them, insanity will be the defense. Even should that plea be successful, Mr. Watson's fate will be a melancholy one, because for the future criminal lunatics will have but a poor chance of obtaining a discharge from custody. The example of poor Mr. Smith, who shot himself about a year ago, is a caution to the authorities which is not likely to be lost on them. Some seventeen or eighteen years ago, Mr. Smith, a very accomplished scholar and political writer, shot his wife dead. He was tried for the offence, but the plea of insanity having been successfully set up, he was acquitted, and committed to Bethelham Lunatic Asylum "during her Majesty's pleasure." During a period of fourteen years he remained in the Asylum, doing literary work and so conducting himself that year after year the inspectors reported that he manifested no symptoms of insanity. Strong efforts were from time to time made to procure his discharge. One of our leading newsmen urged the matter very strongly on the late Sir George Lewis, who was Home Secretary; but Sir George could not order Mr. Smith's discharge, and in the Bethelham Hospital he remained till two or three years ago, when certain friends of his procured his discharge. Not long after that and the date on which he shot his wife, he had written a pamphlet on the pleasure of mesmerising and conversing with Mr. Smith, and carefully if I had not known his history I should have never suspected him to be other than a homicidal or suicidal mania. But, alas! Mr. Smith, poor fellow, was a living statistical work, which he (Mr. Smith) published, he entered a tavern, called for a cup of tea and some bread and butter, took a seat at the table and remained until the tea was brought, and then, when the waiter had left the room, blew out his brains with the head. When the waiter rushed into the room, which he did on hearing the report, Mr. Smith was a dead man. After this it is believed that no one confined in a lunatic asylum after the commission of a murder will ever be discharged till the day of his or her death.—Liverpool Albion.

EDUCATIONAL.

SAINT MARY'S COLLEGE,

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

Conducted by the Christian Brothers

Offers every facility for acquiring a thorough Education, either Classical, Scientific or Commercial.

Those who complete the Classical Course receive the Diploma of A. B.; the Scientific, B. S.; the Commercial Master of Accounts.

The Collegiate Course may be re-established for the convenience of those who wish to prepare for the Catholic University of Ireland.

While proper care is bestowed on every branch taught in the College, on the Languages we devote special attention. The daily exercises of the Students in Composition and Elocution are carefully discussed and corrected in the class room.

TERMS PER SCHOLASTIC YEAR.

Payable half yearly in advance.

Board, Tuition and Washing ..... $150 00
Entrance Fee ..... 5 00
Physician's Fee and Medicines ..... 5 00
Vocation at College ..... 40 00
Use of Bed ..... 8 00
Modern languages, Music and drawing form extra charges.

Studies will be resumed on the 1st of August, 1871.

REV. B. JUSTIN, President.

ST. JOSEPH'S COLLEGE,

Belmontlle, Mendocini County, Cal.

CONDUCTED BY THE TRUSTEES OF THE CORPORATION OF THE MOST PRECIOUS BLOOD.

THIS INSTITUTION, SITUATED IN A PICTURESQUE elevation at the confluence of Van Emon and Sel Rivers, and near the base of Robertine Mountain, is easily accessible by the Petaluma and Healdsburg railroad, and overlooks the Pacific Ocean.

With grandeur and beauty of location, it also enjoys the most healthful climate, and is free from the fogs which prevail near the coast. The surroundings are favorable to the establishment—fairly acting as guardian angels—of that moral purity, peace, and the repose and hallowed serenity of studies pursued in the College. A classical, scientific and commercial, and is designed to thoroughly educate the pupils in the English, French, Spanish, Latin, Greek, and especially of the English language, Mathematics, Geography, History, Rhetoric, Astronomy, Natural Philosophy, Natural History, Chemistry, and the Science of which splendid apparatuses have been procured from the most celebrated makers in the United States.

Special cares paid to the commercial course, which is conducted by a Professor of Book-keeping, who is fitted to make business practical profession.

Every reasonable facility will be given to the intellectual and moral culture of the students. The discipline will be mild, but firm, and the most vigilant supervision will be exercised over the pupils. Strict rules and regulations recommended to non-Catholic pupils will be enforced, and the parents of such pupils may rest assured that they will be free to attend the religious services of their own church, and will not be required to attend those of any other.

Students are received at any time during the year, but no extra charge for absence, except in cases of protracted sickness. No deduction will be made from regular charges for absence, unless occasioned by protracted illness.

No pupil money shall be deposited with the treasurer. No leave of absence will be granted to the students except by the President, and no pupil will be allowed to receive visits from strangers.

Each student on entering should be provided with sufficient sheets and pillow cases for his bed, towels, a supply of shirts, socks, pocket handkerchiefs, towels, and clothes brushes, and shoes. Each article should be furnished by the College, unless at the express request of the parents or guardians, and the price of the same deposited with the treasurer.

Payments are to be made half-yearly, in advance.

TERMS.

For board, bedding, tuition, washing and mending, including library and scholastic use ..... $225 00
Entrance Fee ..... 10 00
Use of bed ..... 10 00

Music, vocal and instrumental, drawing, painting, and the use of the piano, will be charged extra.

Physicians fees and medicines to be paid by parents or guardians.

Washing, per month ..... $0 50
Mending ..... 0 50
Number class ..... 0 50
Blacking class ..... 0 50

The scholastic year consists of two sessions, each comprising a period of five months. The first session commences on the 15th of August and the second on the 15th of January. The latter will be opened for the reception of students after the first week of January, and not before the first week of July.

All communications regarding the College to be addressed to the REV. PRESIDENT, Belmontlle, Sonoma County, Cal.

REV. H. P. HENNEBERY,
Superior.

HOTELS.

Removal.

THE SECOND STREET HOUSE

Has Removed to 115 Second street,

Northeast corner of Minna. Furnished Rooms to let with or without board, on the most reasonable terms.

M. HOLLAND,
Proprietor.

CENTRAL HOTEL,

815 AND 815 ANNAONE STREET,

Between Broadway and Pacific.....San Francisco.

THIS NEW, LARGE AND COMMODIOUS Hotel has been thoroughly renovated by the well known proprietor, M. FARRELL, late proprietor of the Brooklyn House, where he will be happy to receive the numerous friends of the public in general. Thankful for past favors, he respectfully solicits a continuance of their future patronage.

There is a first-rate safe in the House, where money and valuables are to be kept at the risk of the proprietor.

Special rooms will be set aside for the comfort of the patrons of this House.

M. FARRELL.

FRANKLIN HOTEL,

814 AND 816 PACIFIC STREET,

Between Sansome and Montgomery.....San Francisco.

HUGH CURRAN.....Proprietor.

Board, per week ..... $4 00
Board and Lodging, single room ..... 5 00
Single Meals, 25 cents. Lodging, 25 cents.

Family parties taken on reasonable rates.

Passengers and baggage conveyed to the House free of charge. Stages pass the door every five minutes.

A Fine Billiard, and all the city papers taken.

RAILROAD HOUSE,

Corner of Sansome and Pacific streets, San Francisco

IS NOW OPENED BY

P. CASSERLY,

Late of the Tremont House, where he will be happy to receive his friends and the public in general.

The House is thoroughly fitted up in the latest style, with Elevator, Baths and all other modern improvements. The Rooms are large and airy, and can be had either single or in suites of rooms.

The best attention will be paid to the comfort and convenience of guests.

Board and Lodging per week ..... $5 to $7

There is a first-rate safe in the House, where money and valuables can be kept at the risk of the proprietor.

Free Coach to the House.

P. CASSERLY, Proprietor.

EBERHART & LACHMAN,

Corner of First and Market Streets,

SAN FRANCISCO,

HAVE ALWAYS ON HAND AND for sale CALIFORNIA WHITE, Rhine, Hock, Mosel, Sherry, Port, Madeira, Claret, Champagne, Sparkling Hock, Mosel, Vin Santo, Angelica and Muscat WINES. Also, the finest Cognac brandies, Jamaica rums, Holland gin, Scotch and Irish whiskies, Arrack, Batavia, etc., etc. Constantly on hand, the celebrated California OLD STALK, from pure Grape brandy.

TERMS.

Entrance Fee, to be paid at once ..... $15 00
Board and Tuition, per month ..... 8 00
Washing, per quarter ..... 12 50

Payments must be made semi-annually in advance. Parents will pay for medical attendance, and supply toilet articles, etc.

Music will not be considered in the charges for the purchase of necessary articles, a sufficient sum must be deposited.

For further particulars apply to the REV. J. O'KEEFE, S. J.

President.

ST. VINCENT'S SCHOOL.

THIS INSTITUTION IS SITUATED IN SANTA Cruz Barbara, a short distance from the sea, in the most delightful and healthy part of the city. The grounds are extensive, and the building is large and well ventilated.

The course of instruction embraces the usual branches of a thorough English education, Spanish is also taught.

TERMS.

Payable invariably half yearly in advance:

Board, tuition, bed, bedding, washing, use of piano, per annum ..... $200 00

The scholastic year of ten months and a half commences on the first Monday in August, and ends the first Thursday in June.

For further particulars apply to

SISTERS OF CHARITY.

Santa Barbara Cal.

ST. VINCENT'S COLLEGE,

LOS ANGELES, CAL.

THIS INSTITUTION, CHARTERED AUGUST, 1865, by the Legislature of California, is now prepared to confer honors, is situated in the city of Los Angeles, the Queen City of the Pacific, and unsurpassed for the beauty of its scenery. The Faculty is composed of the Clergy and Lay Brothers of the ORDER OF THE MISSION OF ST. VINCENT DE PAUL, who devote their whole time to the mental and moral improvement of the pupils. The system of education is based upon the principle that the development of the moral faculties must be manifested in the purity of every action, and that the intellectual must be subordinate to the moral. Strong efforts were from time to time made to procure his discharge. One of our leading newsmen urged the matter very strongly on the late Sir George Lewis, who was Home Secretary; but Sir George could not order Mr. Smith's discharge, and in the Bethelham Hospital he remained till two or three years ago, when certain friends of his procured his discharge. Not long after that and the date on which he shot his wife, he had written a pamphlet on the pleasure of mesmerising and conversing with Mr. Smith, and carefully if I had not known his history I should have never suspected him to be other than a homicidal or suicidal mania. But, alas! Mr. Smith, poor fellow, was a living statistical work, which he (Mr. Smith) published, he entered a tavern, called for a cup of tea and some bread and butter, took a seat at the table and remained until the tea was brought, and then, when the waiter had left the room, blew out his brains with the head. When the waiter rushed into the room, which he did on hearing the report, Mr. Smith was a dead man. After this it is believed that no one confined in a lunatic asylum after the commission of a murder will ever be discharged till the day of his or her death.—Liverpool Albion.

EDUCATIONAL.

ST. CATHERINE'S ACADEMY,

CONDUCTED BY

THE SISTERS OF ST. DOMINIC,

BENICIA, CALIFORNIA.

THIS INSTITUTION AFFORDS EVERY FACility for the acquisition of a refined and solid education. The Academy was founded in 1850, and now ranks among the most successful Educational Institutions in the State.

The course of instruction embraces the English, French, Spanish and Latin languages, Rhetoric, Elocution, Composition, Ancient and Modern History, Philosophy, Chemistry, Geography, Astronomy, Natural Philosophy, and the Use of Globes, Arithmetic, Algebra, Geometry, Music, including the Piano, Guitar, Violin and Vocal Music in Classes, Drawing, Painting in Water Colors and Oil, Tapestry, Plain and Ornamental Needlework, etc., etc.

TERMS.

Board and Tuition (payable half-yearly), in advance..... $175
Washing..... 15
Entrance Fee..... 10

EXTRAS.

Piano and use of Instrument (payable half-yearly)..... $40
Guitar..... 30
Violin..... 30
Vocal Music in Class..... 20
Private Lessons..... 40
Drawing and Painting in Water Colors..... 40
Painting in Oils..... 60
Use of Bed and Bedding..... 10
Books and Stationery, as per Current Prices.

Each young lady is required to be provided with two dresses of the uniform (which is black with mottled thread stripe), one for morning and one for evening wear; also, the usual changes of under clothing, two stocking dresses, three pairs of shoes, two pairs of sheets, pillow cases, six towels, four napkins, four towels, four table napkins; a table, silver fork and spoon, a gold ring, and napkin ring for each pupil, also, one dressed with white, the other with green; also, a gold pen and pencil case, a lead pencil, paper, pen-holders and postage stamps.

The scholastic year consists of two equal terms, the first commencing August 16th, the second, January 1st.

Pupils of any religious persuasion will be received, but for the sake of uniformity all are required to attend the Catholic services celebrated in the Institution.

Parents may at any time withdraw their children after the commencement of a term after one month's notice, or by paying for one month in advance. Pupils will be sent for at the commencement of the vacation, unless otherwise directed by parents or guardians.

Parents may visit their children at the Academy, but not on the week days, except in case of sickness or other urgent reasons.

Letters addressed to pupils will be carefully delivered, and those written by them will be forwarded to the post office.

Pupils receiving packages from the city will be subject to the inspection of the Superiors. Letters and packages will be delivered unopened.

Pupils receiving passengers to Benicia have Breakfast at 7 o'clock, Dinner at 12 o'clock, Tea at 6 P. M., and On Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday at 10 P. M. Tea. Breakfast will be served to those who arrive at Benicia by Capital on her arrival at Vallejo every morning.

REV. J. O'KEEFE, S. J.
President.

COLLEGE OF NOTRE DAME,

SAN JOSE, CALIFORNIA.

YOUNG LADIES' INSTITUTE.

THIS INSTITUTION, WHICH IS INCORPORated according to the laws of the State of California, is under the direction of the Sisters of Notre Dame, the Twenty-first Annual session of which will commence on the 1st of August, 1871. The system of education embraces in all the branches of a thorough education.

TERMS.

Entrance, to be paid but once..... $15 00
Board and Tuition, per month..... 32 50
Washing, per quarter..... 12 50
Physician's fees, unless it may be preferred to pay the bill in case of sickness (no quarter) 5 00

Extra charges will be made for Music, Drawing, Painting, Use of Piano, Spanish, German and Italian languages, for Plain Sewing and Fancy Needlework.

Pupils will be received at any time and make a session in advance. Pupils will find it much to their advantage to be present at the opening of the session.

Bed, bedding, washing, mending, use of spoon, knife, fork, napkin, napkin ring, one dozen of Plain, and one of Ornamental, per month, $4 50 @ $5 25

No extra charge for Plain Sewing, Fancy Needlework, or Drawing.

The scholastic year of ten months and a half commences on the first Monday in August, and ends the first Thursday in June.

For further particulars apply to

SISTERS OF CHARITY.

Santa Barbara Cal.

ST. VINCENT'S COLLEGE,

LOS ANGELES, CAL.

THIS INSTITUTION, CHARTERED AUGUST, 1865, by the Legislature of California, is now prepared to confer honors, is situated in the city of Los Angeles, the Queen City of the Pacific, and unsurpassed for the beauty of its scenery. The Faculty is composed of the Clergy and Lay Brothers of the ORDER OF THE MISSION OF ST. VINCENT DE PAUL, who devote their whole time to the mental and moral improvement of the pupils. The system of education is based upon the principle that the development of the moral faculties must be manifested in the purity of every action, and that the intellectual must be subordinate to the moral. Strong efforts were from time to time made to procure his discharge. One of our leading newsmen urged the matter very strongly on the late Sir George Lewis, who was Home Secretary; but Sir George could not order Mr. Smith's discharge, and in the Bethelham Hospital he remained till two or three years ago, when certain friends of his procured his discharge. Not long after that and the date on which he shot his wife, he had written a pamphlet on the pleasure of mesmerising and conversing with Mr. Smith, and carefully if I had not known his history I should have never suspected him to be other than a homicidal or suicidal mania. But, alas! Mr. Smith, poor fellow, was a living statistical work, which he (Mr. Smith) published, he entered a tavern, called for a cup of tea and some bread and butter, took a seat at the table and remained until the tea was brought, and then, when the waiter had left the room, blew out his brains with the head. When the waiter rushed into the room, which he did on hearing the report, Mr. Smith was a dead man. After this it is believed that no one confined in a lunatic asylum after the commission of a murder will ever be discharged till the day of his or her death.—Liverpool Albion.

GROCERIES, WINES AND L

WILLIAM B. DOLA

143 Third Street ..... San Fra

Importer and Dealer, Wholesale and Re

French Wines and Bra

AND

Irish Whisk

Imported direct from Ireland.

HE HAS ALSO ON HAND A La assortment of California Wines of pure which he will undertake to supply at the convenience of families.

All orders left at the store, 143 Third street promptly attended to, and delivered free of any part of the city.

JOHN FLANAGAN & C

Importers and Jobbers of

Fine Brandies, Wines, Liquo

Fire-proof Store, 421 Front street, bet. Clay & W

SAN FRANCISCO.

Foreign Liquors in bond. Fine Brandies, Sh Port, Claret, etc., sold in quantities to suit the

Also, dealers in native California Wine

oc8 17

M. H. KELLY.

Kelly & Bu

IMPORTERS AND DEALERS IN

FINE WINES AND LIQ

No. 604 Battery stree

San Francisco.

B. Commins & C

(Successors to P. Riley & Co.)

WHOLESALE LIQUOR MERCH

No. 808 FRONT STRE

F. & P. J. CASSI

Importers and Wholesale Dealers

Wines & Liquo

NO. 523 FRONT STREET,

SAN FRANCISCO.

Sole Proprietors of CASSIN'S CE BRANDY BITTERS.

PAINTS, OILS, ETC.

A. VANCE. P. J. RYAN.

WASON & MORRI

Successors to J. R. KELLY.

PLAIN AND DECORATIV

HOUSE AND SIGN PAINT

GILDING AND GLAZING.

Imitations of Wood and M

Banners, Flags and Military Standards

to order.

IMPORTERS AND DEALERS IN

PAINTS, OILS,

TURPENTINE, VARNISHES

BRUSHES, GLASS,

No. 20 CALIFORNIA ST.,

Two doors below Davis street, San Fra

SULLIVAN, KELLY & B

Northwest corner Pine and Fros

Where they offer for sale

THE LARGEST STOCK

PAINTS,

OILS,

GLASS

ETC., ETC., ON THE PACIFIC CO

AT THE LOWEST MARKET RA

101, 103 and 105 FRONT STRE

110 PINE STREET.

CHANCE'S

CRYSTAL METAL GLA

To Architects, Builders and Own

BIRMINGHAM, England.

Sole Manufacturers of Metallic Sashes, Bars, Ro KELLY & CO., of San Francisco, are sole Agents for the Pacific States and Territories.

CHANCE BROTHERS & CO.

Birmingham, England.

STAINED AND CUT

GLASS WORK

JOHN MALLON,

Fremont Street, Near Market

EVERY DESCRIPTION OF STAINED GLASS, EMBOSSED and Cut Glass

Churches, Private Houses, Saloons, Fan Railroad Cars, etc. Metal Sash work of all

Terms, Patterns and Estimates paid to Residence

Will visit the Public to examine our new fall

T. CANTY,

Merchant Tailo

27 Sutter street, near Montgomer

San Francisco.

Sales of California clothes made in the latest

SEWING MACHIN

WM. B. HIGGINS,

No. 242 THIRD STREET, (WEST SID

Bet. Howard & Folsom, San Francisco

WE HAVE HAD THE ADVANTAGE OF over FIFTY EXPERIENCE as a Machine Sewing Machine establishment in United States and the Pacific, having gone into it soon for himself, guarantees entire satisfaction to purchasers. Also, Needles, Oil, Shuttles, Belting and Drawing Sewing Machines on the most reasonable terms and short notice.

Sewing Machines adjusted to order.

San Francisco.

Machines always on hand for sale or for rent by month. Give him a call.

TROY BELLS

Old Established Troy Bell Foun

1804. N. Y. Established 1812.

A LARGE ASSORTMENT OF CHURCH Bells, Academy, Factory and Other Bells, of any size and pattern, made of genuine Bell Metal, and warranted. Made of genuine Bell Metal copper and tin. Hung with Improved Fixtures. The best and most durable now in use. Catalogues (containing information sent free upon application. Address

JONES & ANY, Troy, N. Y.

Or to 109 Duane street, New York.

my27 1y

THE MONITOR. SATURDAY, DEC. 30, 1871. 7

St. Joseph's College, Mill Hill.

The Imprisonment of Mr. Pigott.

On Monday evening, Nov. 13th, shortly after the conveyance of Mr. Pigott in custody to Richmond Bridewell, his attorney, Mr. Jones, came to the prison and inquired if Mr. Pigott was to be treated, in accordance, as to mattress, diet, etc., as an ordinary convict. The Governor of the prison stated that, in the absence of any specific authority, he would be obliged to treat Mr. Pigott in accordance with the Prisoners' Act of 19 and 20 Victoria, but that he would communicate with the authorities upon the matter. In the meanwhile Mr. Pigott was detained in the reception room of the prison, no interference was made with his apparel, and no arrangement was entered into as to the prison diet. Mr. Lawless asked to see the warrant under which Mr. Pigott was detained, but the warrant, a lengthy document, the making out of which was a matter of considerable time, was not yet in the possession of the Governor, of the prison, and he thereupon demanded the release of his client. Mr. Pigott himself, by the advice of Mr. Lawless, repeated the demand, which was of course refused. Captain Boyd then communicated with the law officers of the Crown, asking for instructions how to act, and the result was the announcement by the Right Hon. Justice, that the ordinary rules were to apply. Yesterday morning Mr. Lawless served a notice on the Governor of the prison demanding the release of his client, on the ground that there was no warrant to detain him in custody. The warrant in question was to be served upon the court arrived, however, in the course of the forenoon, and, as there was no fire in the room, and a fire, instead of a coal, and will be set likely to provide his own food from his friends outside, the necessary steps being made with his dress; and he will be able to see his friends at all reasonable times during the day.

MR. PIGOTT'S TREATMENT.

The Board of Superintendence of Richmond Bridewell met last night, and passed a resolution that Mr. Pigott should be treated during his incarceration in accordance with the rules established in yesterday's Irish Times. They also passed a resolution to request that his Excellency would permit Mr. Pigott to wear his usual dress. Mr. Pigott is placed in a private cell, with fire, etc., and will be allowed to supply his own provisions. We believe that the security of the prisoner is not thought to be as great as possible by kindly and considerate treatment.—Irish Times.

A French infidel, a man of some learning, was dying in Paris. He made the confession of the "Great Sahara," in company with an Arab guide. He noticed, with a sneer, that his guide, every time he passed a graveyard, or its gate arise, raise his eyes to heaven, and, kneeling on the burning sands, called on his God. Day after day passed, and still the Arab never failed to do this, till, at last, the curiosity of the infidel arose from his knees, the worship-ful pilgrim said: "How do you know there is a God?" The guide dead his eyes on the sceptic for a time in wonder, and then said, in reply: "Fellow dog! know that a man, and not a camel, passed my door last night in the desert. Was it not by the print of his feet in the sand? Even so," said he, looking up to the stars, "O! O! O! the print of God's footsteps is on all these!" And, pointing and flashing over the lonely desert, "that footprint is not of man."

T. J. BRODERICK

Late Broderick & Kelly,

CLOTHIER AND FURNISHER AT

NO. 24 THIRD STREET,

West side, two doors below Stevenson.

T. J. B. begs to acquaint his old friends and the public that he keeps a large stock of

Fashionable Boots and Shoes,

At lower rates than any other house in the city. Gents', Ladies' and Children's Boots and Shoes made to order, of the best material and workmanship. A fit guaranteed. Please call and judge for yourself, at no25 1f No. 24 Third Street.

HOLIDAY PRESENTS

YOUNG AND OLD.

Toys, Toy Books, Prayer Books, and Fancy Goods, at very low prices, at the old stand of

RYAN'S OLD STAND,

No. 40 Fourth street, near Jessie.

The largest stock of Toys ever offered for sale in San Francisco. Call and see the immense assortment, to which I would respectfully invite the attention of the Rev. Clergy and others.

A large assortment of Catholic Books for the Young just received.

de7 ☞ The Monitor always on hand.—☜

THE

MODEL MAGAZINE OF AMERICA.

The Largest in point, the Largest in Circulation, and the only original

FASHION MAGAZINE

DEMOREST'S ILLUSTRATED MONTHLY

Contains Original Stories, New Music, Household Matters, Practical and Correct Fashions, and Model Bebidee Fashions, with full size Patterns. Yearly (at $3, with the splendid Chromo, "Lady with the Fan," size 24x27, accurately copied from the original painting, and sent to every subscriber, or Mammoth Oil Chromo, "Washington Crossing the Delaware," size 24x30, for $3 extra, or both Chromos with the Magazine for $4, post-free). Address

W. JENNINGS DEMOREST,

473 Broadway, New York.

☞ A Splendid Offer to Our Subscribers. We will send the above popular and valuable Magazine for one year, with the splendid Jackknife, Scissors and Corkscrew, for $3 50; or for one dollar extra (that is $4 50), Household Wonders (or for $5 50 we will send the Magazine and Demorest's Monthly for one year), and both Chromos.

Send the amount in Postage Stamps, and THE MONITOR, Magazine and the Chromos will be promptly forwarded.

de9

THE EVENING POST,

A DAILY NEWSPAPER.

HENRY CEORCE, EDITOR.

A. H. RAPP, Business Manager.

PRICE, ONE CENT!

Price to Agents and Dealers, One-half Cent.

Mail Subscribers, 75 cents per month, 1 per year.

Delivered in the city at 6 cents per week.

An edition of 15,000 copies will be printed for Free circulation.

Publication Office, 405 Montgomery street, above Clay.

HINTON, RAPP & CO.,

de9 Publishers.

MEDICAL, ETC.

HALE'S VEGETABLE SICILIAN HAIR RENEWER.

Every year increases the popularity of this valuable Hair Preparation; which is due to merit alone. We can assure our old patrons that it is kept fully up to its high standard; and it is the only reliable and perfected preparation for restoring GRAY OR FADED HAIR to its youthful color, making it soft, l

TELEGRAPHIC.

Eastern.

WASHINGTON, December 21.—The joint resolution introduced in the Senate by Sumner, for an amendment to the Constitution to confine the President to one term, has a long and elaborate preamble reciting the growing feeling among the people, without regard to party, in favor of the one-term principle, and quoting the message of Jackson, the letter of acceptance of Harrison and his speech during that campaign, and from speeches and letters of Henry Clay, to show that all strongly favored this principle. It also cites the action of Hon. Wade Hampton on an amendment to the same effect, and quotes De Tocqueville, where he speaks of the danger apprehended to Republican Government by permitting the President to hold more than one term. The present amendment is as follows: Article 1, Section 1.—No person who has held the office of President of the United States once, shall be thereafter eligible to hold that office a second time. This amendment shall not take effect till after the 4th of March, 1873.

Davis offered a resolution instructing the Committee on Retrenchment to inquire and report concerning the President's interests in public contracts, the appointment of his relatives to office, and appointments to office of those who have made him presents.

Sumner offered a resolution, which was adopted, directing the Committee on Retrenchment to inquire whether any money had been paid for the lease of Samana Bay to the United States, by whom, and out of what fund; if by private individuals, if they were interested in land grants and other speculations, etc. Also, concerning the San Domingo treaty, and as to the President and heads of Departments absenting themselves from Washington.

Sumner moved to take up the resolution offered last March, asking the Secretary of the Navy for information as to the number of ships employed in Southern waters on the cost of sending and keeping them there, etc.

Conkling objected, and then Sumner offered it as a new resolution. Conkling objected, and then the resolution went over.

Blair offered a resolution, which was adopted, directing the Committee on Retrenchment to inquire whether any Minister of the United States in any foreign country is engaged in any mining company and using his official position for the promotion of its interests.

MEMPHIS, December 25.—A negro mob invaded Little Village, Chicot county, Arkansas, on the night of the 19th, took three of the murderers of the negro lawyer out of jail, shot them, took possession of the town and inaugurated a reign of terror. The latest reports are that every white citizen able to obtain a conveyance has left the county. The Governor had applied for regular troops to quell the disturbance, fearing that the militia, being colored, would fraternize with the rioters.

NEW YORK, December 25.—August Belmont has published a card in reply to certain articles in the Herald insinuating that he had been connected with the Tammany Ring. He pronounces all such insinuations entirely false and unfounded, without the slightest foundation.

ATLANTA, (Ga.,) December 25.—Smith, Democrat, has been elected to fill the unexpired term of Bullock, without opposition, the Republicans taking no part in the election, which was the quietest ever held in the State.

COLUMBIA (S. C.), December 25.—The report of the Legislative Investigating Committee, which has been sitting in New York, is published. It gives an elaborate review of the election frauds of the State framed up by the present State Government. In regard to the State debt they declare that the fearful truth stares them in the face that bonds and stocks printed by the American Bank Note Company, to the amount of $22,540,000, represent liabilities of the State for which the faith or credit of the State, however unlawfully procured, has been pledged for payment. The contingent liability incurred by railroad endorsements swells the total to $30,000,000. The Committee declare that this condition of things is chargeable to a ring composed of leading officers of the present State Government, and that they can be left responsible only by the Republican party, and every means used to bring them to punishment.

NEW YORK, December 26.—A Tribune special from Sedalia (Mo.), says Christmas day witnessed a presumptuous outbreak of Ku-Kluxers at Marshall, Saline county, and vicinity. A large number of armed men turned out in great force, and a reign of terror was placed near the town and every traveler was halted and questioned. All business was suspended and mob violence reigned supreme. It is not known how many negroes were killed. Sheriff Edward Jones, the left Marshall at eleven o'clock, saw the dead bodies of five—two hanging by the neck and three lying on the ground—and was terribly wounded, having his shoulder shot away. At the latest accounts a party of armed men were staring out, swearing they would clean out every negro in the county.

NEW YORK, December 27.—At a late hour this morning the Sheriff still failed to discover the whereabouts of Tweed, though a large number of deputies are in active search for him. His son-in-law says the father is in the city, and that he did an interview with him to day. A warrant for his arrest was put in the hands of a Deputy Sheriff by Farley. The Sheriff holds Farley to his bonds as surety for Tweed until the latter is produced or Farley's place on the bond made good.

CINCINNATI, Dec. 27.—A special to the Gazette says the Confederate General, John T. Brackenridge, died at 5 o'clock this evening at his home in Danville, Ky., after a protracted illness.

Foreign.

PARIS, December 25.—The Germans have seized prominent citizens of the town of Revin, in the Department of Ardennes, because of the trouble between the Italian troops quartered there and the French people. It is announced that the Germans are taking a census of the private fortunes of the wealthier citizens of the invaded Departments.

There is delivered a powerful speech in the National Assembly to-day in opposition to levying an income tax.

BERLIN, Dec. 21.—Bismarck sent a dispatch to the German Representative at Paris, setting forth the feeling of exasperation caused in Germany by the outrages perpetrated upon German soldiers in France, and threatening to occupy those provinces unless the assassins in future in those and other neighboring provinces are delivered up to German officers by the French authorities. He declares that unless these threatening outrages shall cease, the army of occupation shall reoccupy such provinces, and the expense and burden of its support, which is to be paid by France, shall be doubled.

HASTE, Dec. 22.—The Catholic Bishops of the country have united in a memorial to the King against a discontinuance of the Dutch Legation at the Vatican.

LISBON, Dec. 25.—The press of this city shows much anxiety over the largely increased emigration of workmen to the United States, and recommends remedial measures.

PARIS, Dec. 25.—The Duke d'Aumale and Prince de Joinville took seats in the Assembly on the 18th. They sat in the centre of the members of the Right. Their appearance created no sensation.

LONDON, Dec. 25.—In a speech last week, Elgin advocated perseverance in the commercial policy of Gobden, and treated the Internationalists with unsparing ridicule.

John U. Rheran, who is here, pronounces as untrue the charges published in New York implicating him in the voucher rabbet. He threatens the News Company which enabled the report to Europe with a libel suit.

CATHOLIC ITEMS.

Eastern.

Right Rev. M. Heuni of Milwaukee, administered the Sacrament of Confirmation at Benton, Wis., on the 25th ult, to 142 children, and on Sunday, 26, at Sankteburgh, Wis., to 200.

On the morning of Nov. 26th, Right Rev. Bishop Laughlin conferred the holy order of Priesthood on Rev. Michael Ritcher, C. M., in the church attached to the College of St. John the Baptist, Brooklyn.

The new Church of the Immaculate Conception, erected by Rev. E. A. Bally, O. S. A., Hoosac Falls, New York, was dedicated to the service of Almighty God on the 8th of December by the Right Rev. J. J. Conroy, D. D., Bishop of Albany.

Departed this life, on Saturday, Nov. 25, at 11½ P. M., Sister M. Hillary, in the 56th year of her age and 40th of her religious profession. The deceased was connected with the Baltimore Infirmary, Lombard and Green streets, for many years, and held the responsible position of Sister Superior of Departments absenting themselves from Washington.

Sumner moved to take up the resolution offered last March, asking the Secretary of the Navy for information as to the number of ships employed in Southern waters on the cost of sending and keeping them there, etc.

Conkling objected, and then Sumner offered it as a new resolution. Conkling objected, and then the resolution went over.

Blair offered a resolution, which was adopted, directing the Committee on Retrenchment to inquire whether any Minister of the United States in any foreign country is engaged in any mining company and using his official position for the promotion of its interests.

MEMPHIS, December 25.—A negro mob invaded Little Village, Chicot county, Arkansas, on the night of the 19th, took three of the murderers of the negro lawyer out of jail, shot them, took possession of the town and inaugurated a reign of terror. The latest reports are that every white citizen able to obtain a conveyance has left the county. The Governor had applied for regular troops to quell the disturbance, fearing that the militia, being colored, would fraternize with the rioters.

NEW YORK, December 25.—August Belmont has published a card in reply to certain articles in the Herald insinuating that he had been connected with the Tammany Ring. He pronounces all such insinuations entirely false and unfounded, without the slightest foundation.

ATLANTA, (Ga.,) December 25.—Smith, Democrat, has been elected to fill the unexpired term of Bullock, without opposition, the Republicans taking no part in the election, which was the quietest ever held in the State.

COLUMBIA (S. C.), December 25.—The report of the Legislative Investigating Committee, which has been sitting in New York, is published. It gives an elaborate review of the election frauds of the State framed up by the present State Government. In regard to the State debt they declare that the fearful truth stares them in the face that bonds and stocks printed by the American Bank Note Company, to the amount of $22,540,000, represent liabilities of the State for which the faith or credit of the State, however unlawfully procured, has been pledged for payment. The contingent liability incurred by railroad endorsements swells the total to $30,000,000. The Committee declare that this condition of things is chargeable to a ring composed of leading officers of the present State Government, and that they can be left responsible only by the Republican party, and every means used to bring them to punishment.

NEW YORK, December 26.—A Tribune special from Sedalia (Mo.), says Christmas day witnessed a presumptuous outbreak of Ku-Kluxers at Marshall, Saline county, and vicinity. A large number of armed men turned out in great force, and a reign of terror was placed near the town and every traveler was halted and questioned. All business was suspended and mob violence reigned supreme. It is not known how many negroes were killed. Sheriff Edward Jones, the left Marshall at eleven o'clock, saw the dead bodies of five—two hanging by the neck and three lying on the ground—and was terribly wounded, having his shoulder shot away. At the latest accounts a party of armed men were staring out, swearing they would clean out every negro in the county.

NEW YORK, December 27.—At a late hour this morning the Sheriff still failed to discover the whereabouts of Tweed, though a large number of deputies are in active search for him. His son-in-law says the father is in the city, and that he did an interview with him to day. A warrant for his arrest was put in the hands of a Deputy Sheriff by Farley. The Sheriff holds Farley to his bonds as surety for Tweed until the latter is produced or Farley's place on the bond made good.

CINCINNATI, Dec. 27.—A special to the Gazette says the Confederate General, John T. Brackenridge, died at 5 o'clock this evening at his home in Danville, Ky., after a protracted illness.

Foreign.

PARIS, December 25.—The Germans have seized prominent citizens of the town of Revin, in the Department of Ardennes, because of the trouble between the Italian troops quartered there and the French people. It is announced that the Germans are taking a census of the private fortunes of the wealthier citizens of the invaded Departments.

There is delivered a powerful speech in the National Assembly to-day in opposition to levying an income tax.

BERLIN, Dec. 21.—Bismarck sent a dispatch to the German Representative at Paris, setting forth the feeling of exasperation caused in Germany by the outrages perpetrated upon German soldiers in France, and threatening to occupy those provinces unless the assassins in future in those and other neighboring provinces are delivered up to German officers by the French authorities. He declares that unless these threatening outrages shall cease, the army of occupation shall reoccupy such provinces, and the expense and burden of its support, which is to be paid by France, shall be doubled.

HASTE, Dec. 22.—The Catholic Bishops of the country have united in a memorial to the King against a discontinuance of the Dutch Legation at the Vatican.

LISBON, Dec. 25.—The press of this city shows much anxiety over the largely increased emigration of workmen to the United States, and recommends remedial measures.

MISCELLANEOUS.

GEO. C. SHREVE & Co.

NO. 110 MONTGOMERY STREET,

HAVE RECEIVED FROM THE

GORHAM MANUFACTURING CO.

A BEAUTIFUL ASSORTMENT OF

STERLING SILVER WARE,

COMPRISING

Many choice pieces made to their special order for this season. Their arrangements with this celebrated Company are such that they can supply on the most favorable terms every requisite, from the costliest object of luxury to the least expensive article for table ornament or use.

Admirers of Elegant and Artistic Silver are invited to examine this choice selection.

dcv

GEO. C. SHREVE & Co.

110 MONTGOMERY STREET,

ARE OPENING THEIR FALL STOCK OF

WATCHES, DIAMONDS, JEWELRY, SILVER WARE, CLOCKS, &C.

INFORMATION WANTED.

INFORMATION WANTED—Of the relatives of MRS. ANN LONG, widow of the late Patrick Long, who died in the Insane Asylum of California, of consumption, on the 7th inst. Long was a native of a small town named Latnaloo, about 3 miles from the village of Cork, Ireland. Said Long left Ireland in 1851, for Philadelphia, after two years' sojourning from Ireland, and before he came to California. If there be relatives in the care of any of the readers, it will be to their advantage to write to WM. SWARKLEY, guardian of said Mrs. Long, No. 151 Fifth street, San Francisco, California. Boston Pilot please copy. dcv

INFORMATION WANTED—OF DAN SULLIVAN, from Millstreet, Co. Cork, Ireland, July, 1865. He was in San Francisco in April, 1870. Any information of him will be thankfully received by SIMON CONLON, Jamison City, Plumas county, California. dcv6

PIANOS.

OFFICIAL.

This will certify that the

HALLET, DAVIS & CO'S

PIANOS

EXHIBITED BY

WM. G. BADGER

At the Eighth Industrial Fair of the Mechanics' Institute, held at San Francisco, 1871, received

THE FIRST PREMIUM

AND THE

ONLY MEDAL AWARDED

For Eastern-made Pianos.

H. W. HALLET, Boston.
A. S. HALLIDIE, President Board of Managers.
W. H. WILLIAMS, Secretary.

WM. G. BADGER, Sole Agent,

No. 7 Sansome street, San Francisco.

ALSO, AGENTS FOR

GEORGE WOODS & CO'S

VESTRY & PARLOR ORGANS,

THE FINEST IN THE WORLD.

LYNCH & COMIEN,

MANUFACTURERS OF

Overstrung Grand, Square & Upright

PIANOS.

WAREROOMS,

Nos. 933, 935, 937 and 939 Broadway, NEW YORK.

THESE PIANOS ARE UNSURPASSED FOR tone, touch, elasticity, purity, fine and powerful tone, Great Durability, and, in short, everything that constitutes a PIANO PERFECT.

Especial attention is called to this assortment. It is larger than any stock of goods in this line ever before offered in San Francisco, and contains a list of Novelties which for purity of material, beauty of design and skillful workmanship cannot be excelled.

Many of the finest articles were manufactured expressly to our order with a view to meet the growing demand here for the richest goods that can be procured.

dcv

BANKING.

LAND MORTGAGE UNION OF CALIFORNIA.

OFFICE, 123 POST STREET, SAN FRANCISCO.

GUARANTEE CAPITAL, - - - $200,000

President, - - - J. R. [illegible]

DIRECTORS:

John Morton, Thomas B. Hayes, R. G. Mathews, John Nicholson, John M. Gallagher, J. H. Fish, Henry Kimball.

INVESTMENT CAPITAL, - - - UNLIMITED

Interesting Shares, $250 each. Entrance fee, $5 per share. Fortnightly subscriptions, $2 per share. Paid up shares, $7 50.

Interest allowed on fixed deposits from 30 days.

Loans from $ 10 to 10 per cent. per annum.

1872 JOHN T. CARTER, Secretary.

SECURITY SAVINGS' BANK

Guarantee Capital, - - - - $300,000

Officers:

PRESIDENT, - - - JOHN PARROTT.
VICE-PRESIDENT, - - - HENRY S. BRANT.

Directors:

F. D. ATHERTON, JAMES OTIS, I. FRIEDLANDER, ADAM GRANT, JOHN PARROTT, JOHN MORTON, JAMES D. WALKER, JEROME LINCOLN, H. S. BARROWS.

SECRETARY, - - - T. F. BAILEY.
ATTORNEY-AT-LAW, - - - SIDNEY C. WEBB.

Ordinary and Term Deposits received. Money loaned on Real Estate. Loans made on Real Estate in the interior. Terms, etc., made by application.

OFFICE:

NO. 526 SANSOME STREET, FRIEDLANDER'S BUILDING.

Opposite Bank of California.

HIBERNIA SAVINGS AND LOAN SOCIETY,

526—Northeast corner of Montgomery and Sutter streets.

OFFICERS:

President, - - - M. D. SWEENY.
Vice-President, - - - C. D. O'SULLIVAN.

TRUSTEES:

M. D. SWEENY, C. D. SULLIVAN, JOHN SULLIVAN, J. O'TOOLE, M. J. O'CONNOR, P. MARAN, GUSTAVE TOURNY, JOHN DONAHOE, PETER DONAHOE, WILLIAM BARRY, RICHARD TOBIN.

Treasurer, - - -
Attorney, - - - [illegible]

Remittances from the country may be sent through Wells, Fargo & Co.'s Express Office, or any responsible banker; but the Society will not be responsible for losses by mail. The signature of the depositor should accompany his first deposit. A passport to be issued to each depositor, for which no charge will be made.

Deposits received from $1 upwards.

OFFICE HOURS—From 9 A. M. to 3 P. M.

DR. A. SUTRO, San Francisco. EUGENE CASE, Virginia City.

ARE OPENING THEIR FALL STOCK OF

BOOT AND SHOE STORE

OF

SELLERS & KING,

No. 19 Third street, corner of Stevenson.

KEEP ON HAND A CHOICE AND complete assortment of Ladies', Misses' and Children's Boots and Shoes, which they offer at very low prices. Boots made to order, and repairing done in the best manner. Give us a call at the Sign of Mechanics' Alley, will be glad to see you, and will guarantee to sell you cheaper than you can buy elsewhere. Call and be convinced. dcv

ST. MARY'S HOSPITAL,

CORNER FIRST AND BRYANT STS.

SAN FRANCISCO.

THIS INSTITUTION IS UNDER THE MANAGEMENT OF THE

Sisters of Mercy.

JAMES MURPHY, M. D. - - - Visiting Physician.
S. U. LANGE, M. D. - - - Resident Physician.
A. F. HILLINGER, M. D. - - - Resident Physician.

TERMS:

Payable monthly in advance or satisfactory references, viz.:

In the wards - - - $10 per week.
In private rooms - - - $12 50.
Children under 12 years, attending a public school - - - $5 per month.
Confinement cases - - - $20 extra.
Patients who are unable to procure a private room will be received free of the rent it.
Prescribed Medicines are not required to pay for attendance.

Medical Advice.—Dr. Wm. R. Doherty, Medical and Surgical Adviser to the Sisters of Mercy, gives his time gratuitously from the commencement of each month, to the poor who may need advice from an old resident and attending physician.

Applications for admission to be made to the Sisters in charge.

JEWELRY, PLATED WARE AND WATCHES are actually given away in comparison with former prices by Tucker & Co. They are determined at whatever sacrifice they may make to close out the entire stock offered that will pay the intrinsic value of the article purchased. The present stock is larger than ever before sold to make room for new goods just about to arrive.

THE GREAT PICTORIAL ANNUAL.—Hostetter's United States Almanac for 1873, for distribution gratis throughout the United States, and all the principal countries of the Western hemisphere, still be published in the usual manner, in the English, French, German, Norwegian, Welch, Swedish, Holland, Bohemian and Bohemian languages, and all who wish to understand the true principles of health, and how to avoid and ponder the valuable ingredients it contains. In addition to these admirable medical treatise on the cause, prevention and cure of a large variety of diseases, it contains a great deal of interesting and valuable miscellaneous matter, for the merchant, the miner, the farmer, the lawyer, the mechanic, the sailor, the soldier, the planter, the lumberman, the steamboatman, and the emigrant. Of such incredibles and indispensables are most attractive features of the Pictorial Annual, that every newspaper agent is pledged to its use, therefore, hostetter issues a smaller number than the sufficiency are. This is to guard against its being thereafter, which long experience has given, and to which the Bitters owe its unbounded popularity and worldwide fame. Persons afflicted with either acute or chronic disease would do well to consult the Annual. At all events they do no harm, as for constitution be shaken to their foundation or life undermine by the subtle agencies the pestilential poisons himself under his own roof, or in the miasmatic district, rather than of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, the staple tonic and alterative of more than half the United States. dcv

Wholesale Market Report.

MONDAY, DEC. 9, SAN FRANCISCO, }
TUESDAY, Dec. 24, 1872. }

FLOUR—The local demand continues fair, with a better inquiry for export. Prices, however, show no change since our last weekly review. We quote standard brands of Oregon extra at $7 25; and fancy brands as follows: Superfine, $6@6 25, and extra at $7 12½@7 50 in sacks.

WHEAT—Has been in limited demand, about the only inquiry being for milling purposes, and at a decline of 2½c per ctl. Favorable crop prospects abroad. Quotable at $1 39@2 40 @ 100 lbs.

BARLEY—The Market has remained quiet during the week under review, and we have heard of no sales worthy of note. Quotable at the close at $1 15@1 40, @ 100 lbs.

OATS—The demand continues moderate for fine grain, but the past week' prices, however, are without material change. Quotable at the close at $1 70@2 00 @ 100 lbs.

RYE—The supplies have been light during the past week, and the demand has been fair. Quotable at $1 30@1 40 @ 100 lbs.

CORN—Quotable at $1 40@1 50 for cracked; $1 30@1 40 for whole; $1 30@1 40 for Chicken feed.

CHICKEN—Quotable at $1 20@1 25 @ 100 lbs.

BEANS—Following are the current rates: Bayo $7 50@7 75; Pea, $7 25; Small White, $7 25@7 50; Lima, $7 50@8 00.

POTATOES—The Freights have been free, and demand fair during the past week, and we have no change to note in prices. Quotable at $1 25@1 50 @ 100 lbs.

ONIONS—Quotable at $2 @ 2 50.

BRAN—Quotable at $16 @ ton.

MIDDLINGS—Quotable at $17 50 @ ton from the mills.

HAY—Quotable at $20 @ 100 lbs.

BUCKWHEAT—Quoted at $2 @ 2 50 lbs.

BARLEY MEAL—Quoted at $2 50@2 75; Almond, $2 75; Oatmeal, $3 @ 3 50.

HOMINY—Is in good request and quotable at $3@3 50 @ 100 lbs.

HAY—Is in fair request and quotable at $20@25 @ ton.

WOOL—The demand has been fair. We quote good shipping wool at 22@24c @ lb.

DAIRY PRODUCE.

BUTTER—California fresh, 37½@42½c; fresh roll, 35@37½c; Oregon, 35@37½c; Eastern, 30@35c; Goshen, 40@42½c.

CURED MEATS.

HAMS—California, 14@15c; Oregon, 13@14c; Eastern sugar cured Hams, 14@15c; do clear, 13@14c; California, 11@11½c; Oregon, 10@11c; Eastern sugar cured Breakfast, 14@15c; do clear, 13@14c.

BACON—California, 10@11c; Oregon, 10@11c; Eastern, 12@13c; Eastern, in tins, 13@14c.

FRESH MEATS.

BEEF—For first quality, 6½@7½c; for second do, 5@6c; third do, 3@4c.

MUTTON—4½@5½c.

VEAL—6@7½c.

PORK—Dressed, grain-fed, 7½@8c, on foot, grain-fed, 5@6c.

POULTRY AND GAME.

POULTRY—Spring, $4 @ 5; Spring Chickens, $3@3 50; Roosters, $3 @ dozen.

GAME—Quail, $1 @ dozen.

Rabbits, $1@1 25 @ dozen.

Geese—$1 50@2 @ dozen.

Ducks—Wild, $2@2 50 @ dozen; Tame, $3@3 50 @ dozen.

Turkeys—20@25c @ lb.

Deer—8@10c @ lb.

Retail Prices of Poultry and Game.

CHICKENS—Spring, $4@5 @ dozen.

OLD HENS—Large, $5@6 @ dozen.

YOUNG HENS—$4@5 @ dozen.

OLD ROOSTERS—$4@5 @ dozen.

YOUNG ROOSTERS—$4@5 @ dozen.

RABBITS—$1 @ dozen.

QUAIL—$1 @ dozen.

TURKEYS—20@25c @ lb.

GEESE—$1 50@2 @ dozen.

DUCKS—$2@2 50 @ dozen.

A. FLYNN'S CITY OF DUBLIN BOOT AND SHOE WAREHOUSE,

106 THIRD STREET,

Between Mission and Howard, San Francisco.

Manufactures and deals in all kinds of Boots and Shoes. Repairing promptly and neatly done at very low prices.

DONOHOE, KELLY & Co

SAN FRANCISCO.

EUGENE KELLY & Co,

NEW YORK

BANKERS

EXCHANGE ON

NEW YORK, LONDON, AND BANK OF IRELAND.....DUBLIN

Payable at all the Branches,

AND IN EVERY COUNTY TOWN IN IRELAND.

MISCELLANEOUS.

J. SELLERS. THOMAS KEE

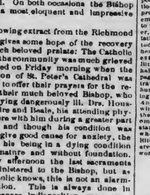
BOOT AND SHOE STORE

OF

SELLERS & KING,

No. 19 Third street, corner of Stevenson.

KEEP ON HAND A CHOICE AND complete assortment of Ladies', Misses' and Children's Boots and Shoes, which they offer at very low prices. Boots made to order, and repairing done in the best manner. Give us a call at the Sign of Mechanics' Alley, will be glad to see you, and will guarantee to sell you cheaper than you can buy elsewhere. Call and be convinced. dcv



ST. MARY'S HOSPITAL,

CORNER FIRST AND BRYANT STS.

SAN FRANCISCO.

THIS INSTITUTION IS UNDER THE MANAGEMENT OF THE

Sisters of Mercy.

JAMES MURPHY, M. D. - - - Visiting Physician.
S. U. LANGE, M. D. - - - Resident Physician.
A. F. HILLINGER, M. D. - - - Resident Physician.

TERMS:

Payable monthly in advance or satisfactory references, viz.:

In the wards - - - $10 per week.
In private rooms - - - $12 50.
Children under 12 years, attending a public school - - - $5 per month.
Confinement cases - - - $20 extra.
Patients who are unable to procure a private room will be received free of the rent it.
Prescribed Medicines are not required to pay for attendance.

Medical Advice.—Dr. Wm. R. Doherty, Medical and Surgical Adviser to the Sisters of Mercy, gives his time gratuitously from the commencement of each month, to the poor who may need advice from an old resident and attending physician.

Applications for admission to be made to the Sisters in charge.

FIRST ANNUAL Clearance Sale

BOOTS! SHOES!
BOOTS! SHOES!
BOOTS! SHOES!

FOR THIRTY DAYS ONLY.

EVERYBODY SHOULD AVAIL THEMSELVES of this opportunity, and purchase their stock of BOOTS AND SHOES for the fall season.

LADIES' WARE.

| | At No. | Now |
|---|---|---|
| French Kid Button Boots | 7 50 | $ 6 50 |
| French Kid Serrated Boots | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| French Kid Button Boots, high cut | 8 00 | 7 00 |
| French Kid Lace Boots, high cut | 8 00 | 7 00 |
| Kid Lace Serrated Boots | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Lace Vamp Serrated | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Lace Vamp Boots | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Pole Buckle New Patterns | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Pole Buckle Serrated | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| English Country Button Boots | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 1 and 2 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 3 and 4 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 5 and 6 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 7 and 8 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 9 and 10 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 11 and 12 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 13 and 14 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 15 and 16 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 17 and 18 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 19 and 20 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 21 and 22 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 23 and 24 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 25 and 26 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 27 and 28 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 29 and 30 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 31 and 32 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 33 and 34 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 35 and 36 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 37 and 38 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 39 and 40 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 41 and 42 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 43 and 44 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 45 and 46 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 47 and 48 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 49 and 50 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 51 and 52 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 53 and 54 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 55 and 56 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 57 and 58 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 59 and 60 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 61 and 62 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 63 and 64 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 65 and 66 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 67 and 68 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 69 and 70 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 71 and 72 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 73 and 74 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 75 and 76 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 77 and 78 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 79 and 80 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 81 and 82 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 83 and 84 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 85 and 86 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 87 and 88 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 89 and 90 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 91 and 92 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 93 and 94 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 95 and 96 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 97 and 98 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 99 and 100 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 101 and 102 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 103 and 104 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 105 and 106 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 107 and 108 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 109 and 110 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 111 and 112 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 113 and 114 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 115 and 116 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 117 and 118 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 119 and 120 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 121 and 122 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 123 and 124 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 125 and 126 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 127 and 128 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 129 and 130 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 131 and 132 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 133 and 134 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 135 and 136 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 137 and 138 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 139 and 140 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 141 and 142 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 143 and 144 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 145 and 146 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 147 and 148 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 149 and 150 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 151 and 152 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 153 and 154 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 155 and 156 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 157 and 158 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 159 and 160 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 161 and 162 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 163 and 164 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 165 and 166 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 167 and 168 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 169 and 170 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 171 and 172 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 173 and 174 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 175 and 176 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 177 and 178 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 179 and 180 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 181 and 182 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 183 and 184 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 185 and 186 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 187 and 188 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 189 and 190 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 191 and 192 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 193 and 194 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 195 and 196 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 197 and 198 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 199 and 200 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 201 and 202 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 203 and 204 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 205 and 206 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 207 and 208 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 209 and 210 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 211 and 212 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 213 and 214 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 215 and 216 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 217 and 218 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 219 and 220 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 221 and 222 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 223 and 224 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 225 and 226 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 227 and 228 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 229 and 230 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 231 and 232 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 233 and 234 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 235 and 236 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 237 and 238 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 239 and 240 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 241 and 242 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 243 and 244 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 245 and 246 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 247 and 248 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 249 and 250 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 251 and 252 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 253 and 254 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 255 and 256 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 257 and 258 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 259 and 260 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 261 and 262 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
| Kid Button Boots, Nos. 263 and 264 | 7 50 | 6 50 |
|

TELEGRAPHIC.

Eastern.

WASHINGTON, December 21.—The joint resolution introduced in the Senate by Sumner, for an amendment to the Constitution to confine the President to one term, has a long and elaborate preamble reciting the growing feeling among the people, without regard to party, in favor of the one term principle, and quoting the message of Jackson, the letter of acceptance of Harrison and his speech during that campaign, and from speeches and letters of Henry Clay, to show that all strongly favored this principle. It also cites the action of Ben. Wade urging an amendment to the same effect, and quotes De Tocqueville, where he speaks of the danger apprehended to republican Government by permitting the President to hold more than one term. The present amendment is as follows: Article 1, Section 1.—No person who has had the office of President of the United States once, shall be thereafter eligible to hold that office a second time. This amendment shall not take effect till after the 4th of March 1873.

Davis offered a resolution instructing the Committee on Retrenchment to inquire and report concerning the President's interests in public contracts, the appointment of his relatives to office, and appointments to office of those who have made him presents.

Sumner offered a resolution, which was adopted, directing the Committee on Retrenchment to inquire whether any money had been paid for the lease of Samana Bay to the United States, by whom, and out of what fund; if by private individuals, if they were interested in land grants and other speculations, etc. Also, concerning the San Domingo treaty, and as to the President and heads of Departments absenting themselves from Washington.

Sumner moved to take up his resolution offered last March, asking the Secretary of the Navy for information as to the number of ships employed, in Dominican waters, the cost of sending and keeping them there, etc.

Cowling objected, and then Sumner offered it as a new resolution. Cowling again objected, and then the resolution went over.

Blair offered a resolution, which was adopted, directing the Committee on Retrenchment to inquire whether any Minister of the United States in any foreign country is engaged in any mining company and using his official position for the promotion of its interests.

MEMPHIS, December 23.—A negro mob invaded Lake Village, Chicot county, Arkansas, on the night of the 18th, took three of the murderers of the negro lawyer out of jail, shot them, took possession of the town and inaugurated a reign of terror. The latest reports are that a strong force is available to obtain a conveyance has left the county. The Governor had applied for regular troops to quell disturbances, fearing that the militia, being colored, would exasperate with the rioters.

NEW YORK, December 23.—August Belmont has published a card in reply to certain articles in the Times and insinuating that he had been connected with the Tammany Ring. He pronounces all such intimations entirely false and malicious, and without the slightest foundation.

AUBURN (N. Y.), December 25.—Smith, Democrat, has been elected to fill the unexpired term of Bulkley, in which opposition, the Republicans taking no part in the election, which was the quietest ever held in the State.

COLUMBIA (S. C.), December 25.—The report of the Legislative Investigating Committee, which has been sitting in New York, is published. It gives an elaborate review of the sale and return of the State finances by the present State Government. In regard to the State debt it finds that the fearful truth stares them in the face that bonds and stocks printed by the American Bank Note Company, to the amount of $22,540,000, represent liabilities of the State for which the faith of the people of the State, however unlawfully procured, has been pledged for payment. The contingent liability incurred by railroad endorsements swells the total to $30,000,000. The Committee declare that the condition of things is chargeable to a ring composed of leading officers of the present State Government, and that they must be held responsible by the Republican party, and every means used to bring to punishment.

ST. LOUIS, December 26.—A Democrat special from Sedalia (Mo.), says Christmas day witnessed a preliminary outbreak of Ku-Kluxers at Marshall, Saline county, and vicinity. A number of armed men were turned out in pursuit of negroes. A patrol was placed near the town and every traveler was halted and questioned. All business was suspended and mob violence reigned supreme. It is not known how many negroes were killed, but Edward Wilson, who left Marshall at eleven o'clock, saw the dead bodies of four—two hanging by the neck and three lying on the road—and one corpse was minus a leg, having been cut away. At the latest accounts a crowd of armed men were starting out, swearing they would clean out every negro in the county.

NEW YORK, December 27.—At a late hour this afternoon the Sheriff had failed to discover the whereabouts of Tweed, though a large number of deputies are in active search for him. His son persists that his father is in the city, but he refuses to let any interview with him to-day. A warrant for his arrest was put in the hands of a deputy Sheriff by Farley. The Sheriff's duty is simply to his bond as surety for Tweed until the latter is produced or Farley's place on the bond made good.

CINCINNATI, Dec. 27.—A special to the Gazette says the Confederate General, John C. Breckenridge, died at 5 o'clock this evening at his home in Danville, Ky., after a protracted illness.

European.

PARIS, December 26.—The Germans have sent prominent citizens to the Court of Revin, in the Department of Ardennes, because of the trouble between the Bavarian troops quartered there and the French people. It is announced that the Germans are asking an indemnity of fifty francs from all the wealthier citizens of the invaded Department.

Thiers delivered a powerful speech in the National Assembly to-day in opposition to buying an mounted police.

BERLIN, Dec. 21.—Bismarck sent a dispatch to the German representative at Paris, setting forth the feeling of exasperation caused in Germany by the outrages perpetrated upon German soldiers in France, and threatening to occupy those provinces unless the assassins in future stop escapes into neighboring provinces are delivered to German officers by the French authorities. He declares that unless these horrible outrages shall cease, the army of occupation shall reoccupy such provinces, and the expense and burden of its support, which is to be paid by France, shall be doubled.

HAVRE, Dec. 22.—The Catholic Bishops of the country have united in a memorial to the King against a discontinuance of the Dutch Legation at the Vatican.

LISBON, Dec. 25.—The press of this city shows much anxiety over the largely increased emigration of workmen to the United States, and recommends remedial measures.

PARIS, Dec. 25.—The Duke d'Aumale and Prince de Joinville took seats in the Assembly on the 19th. They sat in the centre of the members of the Right. Their appearance created no sensation.

LONDON, Dec. 25.—In a speech last week, Elgin advocated perseverance in the commercial policy of Cobden, and treated the Internationalists with unsparing ridicule.

John G. Heenan, who is poor, pronounces as untrue the charges published in New York implicating him in the voucher robbery. He threatens the News Company which exhibited the report to Europe with a libel suit.

CATHOLIC ITEMS.

Eastern.

Right Rev. M. Heiss of Milwaukee, administered the Sacrament of Confirmation at Benton, Wis., on the 25th ult., to 142 children, and on Sunday, 26, at Shullsburgh, Wis., to 200.

On the morning of Nov. 26th, Right Rev. Bishop Laughlin conferred the holy order of Priesthood upon Rev. Michael Kircher, C. M., in the church attached to the College of St. John the Baptist, Brooklyn.

The new Church of the Immaculate Conception, erected by Rev. E. A. Daily, O. S. A., Hoosac Falls, New York, was dedicated to the service of Almighty God on the 5th of December by the Right Rev. J. J. Conroy, D. D., Bishop of Albany.

Departed this life, on Saturday, Nov. 25, at 11½ P. M., Sister M. Hilbary, in the 66th year of her age and 46th of her religious profession. The deceased was connected with the Baltimore Infirmary, cor. Lombard and Green streets, for many years, and held the responsible position of Sister Superior of that institution since 1866.

The Rev. Fathers Damen, Coghlan, Van Goch, and others of the Jesuits, have finished their missionary labors in the Grand Madison avenue and Fiftieth street. Three were some ten thousand and more communions heard. A good many Catholic made profession of the faith; but, better still, a great many, Catholics by baptism and wanderers from the faith, were brought back.

HOLY ANGELS', CINCINNATI.—There were forty-two persons confirmed Sunday evening, Nov. 24, in this church, by the Most Rev. Archbishop, assisted by Rev. Mr. O'Neill, pastor, and Rev. Mr. Schumacher, of St. Rose's. There was a very large congregation present, assisting reverently and devoutly at the imposing ceremony, and at Vespers and Benediction the choir rendered effective and edifying, and those confirmed were well instructed in the Christian doctrine.

In the beautiful Convent Chapel of our Lady of Mercy, Manchester, N. H., on Tuesday evening, Nov. 21, the Right Rev. Dr. Bacon gave the Holy Habit and White Veil to the following young ladies: Miss Mary Jordan, in religion Sister Mary Evangelist; Miss Ellen O'Halloran, Sister Mary Aloysius; Miss Teresa Carraher, Sister Mary Genevieve; Miss Eliza O'Grady, Sister Mary Beatrice; Miss Agnes Locker, Sister Mary Agnes. The next morning at seven o'clock, Miss Mary Murphy, in religion, Sister Mary Eva Xavier; Miss Anna Mary Tierney, Sister Mary Salome, made their holy vows, and received the Black Veil. On both occasions the Bishop preached a most eloquent and impressive sermon.

The following extract from the Richmond Dispatch gives some hope of the recovery of the much beloved praise: The Catholic portion of the community is much grieved and alarmed on Friday morning when the congregation of St. Peter's Cathedral was astounded by the announcement that the recovery of their much beloved Bishop, who was then lying dangerously ill, Mrs. Houston, Maguire and Beale, his attending physicians, were with him during a greater part of Friday, and thought his condition was such as to give good cause for anxiety, the symptoms were favorable, and a dying condition were premature and without foundation. On Friday afternoon the last sacraments were administered to the Bishop, but as every Catholic knows, this is not an alarming indication. This is by no means a case of severe indisposition, more as a precautionary measure than as a sign of approaching death. The Bishop on Friday evening was much easier, and it was hoped that he would recover. He is suffering from an attack of malarious fever.

Foreign.

On the 8th November, the eldest daughter of the late John O'Briens, of Smithfield, Dublin, was received into the Convent of Our Lady of Mercy, Baggot street, Dublin.

His Grace the Most Rev. Dr. Leahy has appointed the Rev. Dr. Ryan, Administrator of Tuam, to the parochial charge of the parish of Ballingarry, in the room of the late lamented Rev. Mr. Power, P. P.

On November 8th at the Presentation Convent, Middleton, Anastasia Kelly (in religion Sister Mary Joseph), eldest daughter of the late Matthew Kelly, Professor of St. Patrick's College, Maynooth.

Active steps are being taken to restore the nave of the ancient cathedral of Kilkenny. Mr. Street, who is now engaged in the restoration of Christ Church Cathedral, Dublin, has given his opinion that the nave can be restored for £5,000. Nearly £1,000 has already been subscribed.

A nun in a Convent in South Tipperary celebrated, on Nov. 21st, the sixty-first anniversary of her profession as a religious—one of the Presentation order, surrounded with the happy congratulations of her Sisters in Religion, and the best wishes for her health and prolonged life of all her friends.

It is with deep regret that we announce the death of the Rev. T. Green, P. P., who was an amiable, unassuming and rarely gifted Christian minister. For several years he was the pastor of the parish of Skerries, where he worked well in his Divine Master's service. The obsequies had formed a took place on Sat. 26.

On the 21st of November, the Feast of the Presentation of the Blessed Virgin, Miss Bridget Blake entered the order Mary Laurentia, third daughter of William Blake, Esq., of Fairview, Rathdrum, county Wicklow, Ireland, to be clothed in the habit of the Sisters of Mercy, in the parish church of Athy. The Very Rev. Canon Quinn officiated on the occasion.

Died, at the Presentation Convent, in Tralee, on the morning of the 23rd of Nov., Sister Mary de Sales Harrington, aged 25. She entered religion at the early age of seventeen years, and by her pure life and edification of the fond Mother and Sisters, who now deeply deplore her loss, while they feel that she must be in the enjoyment of what she longed for—the light and possession of her God.

On Tuesday, the 21st of Nov., the professional and religious was solemnized at the Convent of Mercy, Limerick, when a young lady professed was the third daughter of the late Mr. Nicholas Aherne, Inniscara, Midleton, sister to Mr. Mary Joseph Aherne, Presentation Convent, Fermoy, and cousin germain to the Most Rev. Dr. Maloney, Bishop of Armadale.

On Nov. 23rd the interesting and solemn ceremony of profession was held at the convent Convent of the Sisters of Mercy, Inchicore. The ladies who were then devoting themselves to God and his pear in the cloister, were Miss E. Elliott, of Ballinrobe in religion Sister Mary Gertrude and Miss Kelly, of Kinsdare, Cahra in religion Sister Mary Francis. The ceremony was performed by the Very Rev. Thomas Hardiman, P. P., Ballinrobe.

We congratulate the Catholics of Newry on the gratifying announcement that has been made within the past few days—that a community of the Sons of St. Dominic, of the Order of Preachers, are about to be installed in the town. It is the wish of his Lordship, the Most Rev. Dr. Leahy, and we are happy to say that his wish will be soon supplied. The seat of the Deanery and church will be Ballybot.—Dundalk Democrat, November 18.

QUEENSTOWN CATHEDRAL.—At the last Mass in Queenstown Church, Nov. 12th, the Right Rev. Dr. Keane informed the congregation on the progress made in the erection of the new Cathedral, and the present status of the Building Fund. His Lordship announced that the people of Queenstown had subscribed the munificent sum of £15,000 towards the erection of the Cathedral. The remainder of the diocese had contributed £3,000, and a like amount had been raised in America.

A LESSON FROM TURKEY.—Since the death of Ali Pasha, sentences of exile are daily executed against the high functionaries of Turkey who appear to have made a good thing of grinding the taxes of the poor. A new administration—The Grand Vizier is resolved to do all in his power to eradicate the evil of administrative corruption. He has great difficulties to contend with in his task, of which not the least is the management of the finances, since 1867, as I said before, is peculiar, and renders it difficult for his Prime Minister to be liberal in reforms. It is for this reason that Vizier does not know how universal is corruption in the Ministry, but because he does know it, that he has selected some of the most flagrant cases, Hussein Avni, Hussni, and Mehmed Rouchdi, and made examples of them. His Highness and Prince Mustapha Fazil have both agreed upon one point, that before any real progress can be made in the country, the foul blot of exemption from taxation must be wiped out. The administration, and the judicial system so reformed that justice may be brought within reach of every man.—Toronto Globe.

We are glad to learn that the Sultan and his Highness and the Prince are working in concert. The latter, who is Mehmet Rushdi, late Minister of Finance, who has been sent off, and is now the head military of his harem, to Aminsia.

JEWELRY, SILVER WARE and WATCHES are sold still given away in comparison with former prices at Tiffany & Co's. They are determined at whatever sacrifice they may be made to close out their entire stock this year. The entire value of the article will be given to purchasers. Those who wish to make profit for their goods just about to arrive.

THE GREAT DOMESTIC ANNUAL.—Hoskins's Colored Supplement, 1872, will be distributed throughout the United States, and all entitled contributors to their brasspounders, will be published about the 1st of January, in the regular form of the year. Norwegian, Welch, Swedish, Holland, Spanish and Bohemian languages are now also in use. We stand the true philosophy of health should read and ponder the valuable and primary chapters on Diet, then to an admirable medical treatise on the causes, prevention and cure of all diseases of the human frame, embraces a large amount of information interesting to the professional reader, as well as to the general reader. Then comes a full and complete household treatise on the management of children, and the whole concludes with a valuable collection of Receipts, Tables, etc. Purchasers of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, the staple tonic and alterative of more than

MISCELLANEOUS.

GEO. C. SHREVE & Co.

NO. 110 MONTGOMERY STREET,

HAVE RECEIVED FROM THE

GORHAM MANUFACTURING CO.

A BEAUTIFUL ASSORTMENT OF

STERLING SILVER WARE,

COMPRISING

Many choice pieces made to their special order for this season. Their arrangements with this celebrated Company are such that they can supply on the most favorable terms every requisite, from the costliest object of luxury to the least expensive article for table ornament or use.

Admirers of Elegant and Artistic Silver are invited to examine this choice selection.

PUBLISHERS

D. & J. SADLIER & CO.

BEG TO CALL ATTENTION TO THEIR

NEW AND ELEGANT STYLE OF

MONTHLY AND QUARTERLY

PUBLICATIONS,

Which are now ready, and for sale at

No. 11 MONTGOMERY ST.

Cor. Third Block.

STATIONERS

ST. MARY'S HOSPITAL,

CORNER FIRST AND BRYANT STS.

SAN FRANCISCO.

THIS INSTITUTION IS UNDER THE MANAGEMENT of the Sisters of Mercy.

JAMES MURPHY, M. D. ..... Visiting Physician

JOHN F. ROSE, M. D. ..... Resident Physician

A. F. BILLINGS, M. D. ..... Resident Physician

TERMS:

Payable monthly, or quarterly, for board, medicine, attendance, etc.

In the wards ..... $ 10 00

In single rooms ..... 15 00

In private rooms ..... 20 00

Children under five years of age, half price.

Patients furnished with their own medical attendants, by paying the usual charges.

☞ Medical Advice, by Wm. H. Doherty, Medical and Surgical Instrument Maker, at any hour in the office of our state and local agents, and his capacity as medical attendant, although taking a very active engagement, he has the general and full charge of the manufacturing of such a course. We are prepared to furnish the public with the best article of Surgical Instruments ever made in this country, and have had the assistance of the most skilful workmen in the business, and have had the assistance of the most skilful workmen in the business, and have had the assistance of the most skilful workmen in the business

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

ENGLAND.

Disestablishment.

Within the last few months the question of the disestablishment of the English Church has advanced from being the question of a year to be the question of a session. Already the supporters of the disestablishment number one hundred in the House of Commons—a power, if united, that can make or unmake governments at its will. Before long we may expect to see the question of disestablishment of the Church in England a test question, and none that the fate of the establishment is sealed. The Nonconformists of this country and the Catholics and Nonconformists of this country are united against it to a man. The tone of the press shows pretty clearly which way "the cat is going to jump," and even the temper of Mr. Gladstone is inclined to the movement. The whole Conservative of unsolitous upon the point. No reasonable man in this country looks upon the Established Church as a stable institution. There may be a few speculative recluses who might venture to insure its existence to three score years and ten, but they must be very few indeed, or we mistake their penetration. No one could read Mr. Mialt's speech at Newcastle-on-Tyne the other day without being convinced that the days of the Established Church in England are numbered. The government of this country experimented upon Ireland, and finding disestablishment work pretty well, they think it safe to adopt it themselves.—Irish Vindicator, Dec. 2.

Sensible of Her Wants.

Mr. Butt's visit to Glasgow, it appears, is producing unexpected fruit. It has awakened Scotland to a sense of her true position in the empire. The Scotch people, insinuates the Times, have nothing to complain of, because Scotch business in the House is left almost exclusively to the Scotch members themselves. "Everybody knows when a Scotch bill is about to pass." There is a meeting up stairs to arrange details, and then the matter is left to the Lord Advocate, who conducts the bill through the House. Practically there is no other difference between this and Mr. Finn's plan of grand committees. But still the Scotch are discontented, and Sir David Wedderburn gives expression to the natural feeling. His amendment is considerate in the manner in which Irish and Scotch businesses are conducted in the House of Commons will establish the strongest argument in favor of Home Rule for Ireland. We hear how much of Irish business in the Imperial Parliament being referred to the Irish members? We have never heard it. But the Irish members being consulted before imposing measures passed by the Imperial Legislature, and the Irish people? If motions that during the passage of the Disestablishment Act Irish opinion on the question was never asked, and during the discussion on the Land Act not alone was the case, but the measure proposed by the Irish members whose principle was endorsed by the House of Commons, and authored by no less a man than Judge Longfield, was contemptuously rejected and not permitted even to be considered in committee. Is Scotland, then, to be dissatisfied, and she has a just right to be so, is it any wonder that Irish discontent should grow apace? Scotland and Ireland has been treated with Imperial condescension, Ireland with Imperial contempt. Can the reader fail to perceive the cause of the difference of feeling in both nations?

Great Home Rule Meeting at Waterford.

At the great demonstration in favor of Home Rule for Ireland that came off on Tuesday, Nov. 28, Mr. Maguire, M. P., addressing himself to the meaning of the Home Rule to be obtained, stated that from taxation in three hundred millions sterling would be reduced to about fifty millions sterling after the general election, and anticipated that Home Rule would be carried in the end by the representative power of Ireland in the House of Commons, aided by Englishmen, for he believed that Englishmen in the long run are just, generous, and true, and would grant us what was right towards the sister country. But he assured, with the view to the desired end, that Irishmen would be united, moderate and determined. Every radical man in the land knew the object sought could not be got by violence; that would not be worth having by violence; oh, no! persuasion, public opinion, moral force, peaceful agitation, and above all, the determination of a nation to have it—that was enough. Practicalness, moderation, and firmness, belief in justice, in the justice of a noble cause, upon which God and his saints raised blessings—with these they would succeed; with these they would make their land prosperous, glorious and happy, and make their country greater and more powerful than ever she was known to be since the halcyon days of her Irish history. At the same meeting a letter, dated the 27th ult., was read from Mr. Butt, M. P., in which he said he was in good faith in the result of the appeals of the advocates of Home Rule to the great masses of the English people. He felt persuaded that if they made that appeal to their sense of justice and their love of freedom, they could safely but silently, the day was not far off when they would see the right of Ireland to a domestic parliament enforced in Ireland with the full and cordial consent of the English people.

FRANCE.

Young Communists.

It has been noticed that the Communists, though the ruin of the field at present, are training the rising generation in their footsteps. In certain quarters of the city the authorities attend to this matter in time and well on the corners of the streets for the use of promising youngsters, brushes, and polish them off as they go home. One of these latter had his head broken the other night, and he obliged to seek medical advice. The Christian Brothers have also been compelled to alter the hours of attendance at their schools in order to meet the difficulty. Meanwhile the government is keeping a sharp lookout on these distributors of order.

Religious Requests.

The death of the late lamented Abbe Deguerry, Cure of the Madeleine, though deplored by so many, is not unlikely to carry joy to the hearts of one class of society—that is, the lawyers. The Abbe had bequeathed his whole of his property, which is to be considerable, to hospitals, but his near relatives have disputed the validity of the will, and his relations Khedivik are also coming to the fore in numbers with the hope of picking up some of the crumbs. Like many of the French priesthood, the good Abbe came of humble parentage, being the son of a cowger and a laundress. It is an undisputed fact that the nibble and other orders are more profuse than the higher classes of society, and the family of the martyred Cure of the Madeleine seems to be no exception to the general rule. The Mayor of the Commune of Vaux d'Ecaure alone has given upwards of fifty genealogical certificates to people claiming kinship with the testator, to the tenth degree! and it is greatly feared that his pious intentions will be partially, if not entirely, frustrated by this unreasonable interference of his worldly-minded relatives.

Claiming his Sister.

A French paper says that Lucille Rome, a pretty girl, with fine eyes and fair hair, pearly but neatly clad. Was brought before the Sixth Court of Correction, under the charge of vagrancy, "upon any one claim you?" asked the magistrate. "Ah! my good sir," she replied, "I have no longer friends; my father and mother are dead; I have only my brother James, but he is so ungrateful to me, that, what can he do for me?" "The Court must send you to the House of Correction." "Here I am, sister—here I am! do not fear!" cried a childish voice from the other end of the Court, and at the same instant a little boy, with a lovely countenance started forth from the crowd, and sped before the judge. "Who are you?" said he. "James Rome, the brother of this little girl." "Your age?" "Thirteen." "And what do you want?" "I came to claim my sister Lucille." "What have you the means of providing for her?" "Yesterday I had not, but to-day I have; don't be afraid, Lucille." "Oh, how good you are, James!" "Well, let us see, my boy," said the magistrate; "the Court is disposed to do all it can for your sister, but you must give us some explanation." "About a fortnight ago," continued the boy, "my poor mother died with a bad cough, for it was very cold at home. We were in great distress. Then I said to me self, I will be an artisan; and when I know a good trade I will support my sister, and get appointed as a parish student. Every day I used to carry her half my dinner, and at night I took her secretly to my room, and she slept in the bed, while I slept on the floor. But it appears she had not enough to eat. The day she begged on the Boulevard, and was taken up. When I heard that, I said to myself, 'Come, my boy, things cannot last so; you must find something better.' I soon found a place where I was lodged, fed, and clothed, and have twenty francs a month. I have also found a good workman to teach me to make frames, will take care of Lucille, and teach her needle work. I claim my sister." "My boy is right," said the magistrate; "your conduct is very honorable. However, your sister cannot be set at liberty till to-morrow." "Never mind, Lucille," said the boy, "I will come and fetch you early to-morrow." Then, turning to the magistrate, he said, "I may kiss her; may I not, sir?" He embraced the object of his affection, and both wept tears of affection.

German Barbarism.

It is difficult to exaggerate the importance of having the sternums off, of getting finally rid of them by hook or by crook. The Germans, before the treaty and under strict military control, they were compelled to relax themselves, but now that the reins of discipline have been relaxed, and that they are allowed to do pretty much what they like in the departments which they still occupy, the savage "nature of the beast" displays itself in all its bestial ferocity. Scenes have recently taken place in Epernay, which are a disgrace to humanity. On Sunday, the 12th inst., some drunken Prussians picked a quarrel with some inoffensive passers-by, and a disgraceful row ensued, which no considerations can justify. One young man, twenty-two years of age, received twelve sabre cuts, and was eventually pitched into the Marne. On the evening of the 14th a similar occurrence took place, and left the old and respected inhabitant of the place, unluckily attracted the attention of some soldiers, who gave him a beating that he will remember for a long time. Many other such scenes have taken place, but found no safe asylum there. The soldiers, however, were then effected an entrance, and he shortly breathed his last. His corpse was then found to have more than forty sabre cuts and bayonet thrusts. The whole town is terror-stricken. Nobody ventures out in the streets after dusk, and the Germans have it all their own way as it appears in the street. The enemy are possessed to and fro between the town and their own houses on their daily avocations are pursued by these valiant warriors, and who is up some times as a mark to shoot at. On one occasion, a woman, sixty-two years of age, was severely wounded, and a young child by whom she was accompanied was unmercifully beaten by the savages. In consequence of these atrocities, M. Blandin, Mayor of Epernay, has come to Paris in order to have an interview with M. Thiers, and lay before him the condition of his unfortunate fellow-citizens. It is quite needless to say that there is but a poor chance of the desired result, and that the only prospect of delivering the country from the German modbus, and of coming happy and prosperous, is by a greater and more powerful than ever she was known to be under the able counsel of her late Dictatory. At the same meeting a letter, dated the 27th ult., was read from Mr. Butt, M. P., in which he said he was in good faith in the result of the appeals of the advocates of Home Rule to the great masses of the English people. He felt persuaded that if they made that appeal to their sense of justice and their love of freedom, they could safely but silently, the day was not far off when they would see the right of Ireland to a domestic parliament enforced in Ireland with the full and cordial consent of the English people.

FRANCE.

Young Communists.

It has been noticed that the Communists, though the ruin of the field at present, are training the rising generation in their footsteps. In certain quarters of the city the authorities attend to this matter in time and well on the corners of the streets for the use of promising youngsters, brushes, and polish them off as they go home. One of these latter had his head broken the other night, and he obliged to seek medical advice. The Christian Brothers have also been compelled to alter the hours of attendance at their schools in order to meet the difficulty. Meanwhile the government is keeping a sharp lookout on these distributors of order.

Religious Requests.

The death of the late lamented Abbe Deguerry, Cure of the Madeleine, though deplored by so many, is not unlikely to carry joy to the hearts of one class of society—that is, the lawyers. The Abbe had bequeathed his whole of his property, which is to be considerable, to hospitals, but his near relatives have disputed the validity of the will, and his relations Khedivik are also coming to the fore in numbers with the hope of picking up some of the crumbs. Like many of the French priesthood, the good Abbe came of humble parentage, being the son of a cowger and a laundress. It is an undisputed fact that the nibble and other orders are more profuse than the higher classes of society, and the family of the martyred Cure of the Madeleine seems to be no exception to the general rule. The Mayor of the Commune of Vaux d'Ecaure alone has given upwards of fifty genealogical certificates to people claiming kinship with the testator, to the tenth degree! and it is greatly feared that his pious intentions will be partially, if not entirely, frustrated by this unreasonable interference of his worldly-minded relatives.

Claiming his Sister.

A French paper says that Lucille Rome, a pretty girl, with fine eyes and fair hair, pearly but neatly clad. Was brought before the Sixth Court of Correction, under the charge of vagrancy. "upon any one claim you?" asked the magistrate. "Ah! my good sir," she replied, "I have no longer friends; my father and mother are dead; I have only my brother James, but he is so ungrateful to me, that, what can he do for me?" "The Court must send you to the House of Correction." "Here I am, sister—here I am! do not fear!" cried a childish voice from the other end of the Court, and at the same instant a little boy, with a lovely countenance started forth from the crowd, and sped before the judge. "Who are you?" said he. "James Rome, the brother of this little girl." "Your age?" "Thirteen." "And what do you want?" "I came to claim my sister Lucille." "What have you the means of providing for her?" "Yesterday I had not, but to-day I have; don't be afraid, Lucille." "Oh, how good you are, James!" "Well, let us see, my boy," said the magistrate; "the Court is disposed to do all it can for your sister, but you must give us some explanation." "About a fortnight ago," continued the boy, "my poor mother died with a bad cough, for it was very cold at home. We were in great distress. Then I said to me self, I will be an artisan; and when I know a good trade I will support my sister, and get appointed as a parish student. Every day I used to carry her half my dinner, and at night I took her secretly to my room, and she slept in the bed, while I slept on the floor. But it appears she had not enough to eat. The day she begged on the Boulevard, and was taken up. When I heard that, I said to myself, 'Come, my boy, things cannot last so; you must find something better.' I soon found a place where I was lodged, fed, and clothed, and have twenty francs a month. I have also found a good workman to teach me to make frames, will take care of Lucille, and teach her needle work. I claim my sister." "My boy is right," said the magistrate; "your conduct is very honorable. However, your sister cannot be set at liberty till to-morrow." "Never mind, Lucille," said the boy, "I will come and fetch you early to-morrow." Then, turning to the magistrate, he said, "I may kiss her; may I not, sir?" He embraced the object of his affection, and both wept tears of affection.

German Barbarism.

It is difficult to exaggerate the importance of having the sternums off, of getting finally rid of them by hook or by crook. The Germans, before the treaty and under strict military control, they were compelled to relax themselves, but now that the reins of discipline have been relaxed, and that they are allowed to do pretty much what they like in the departments which they still occupy, the savage "nature of the beast" displays itself in all its bestial ferocity. Scenes have recently taken place in Epernay, which are a disgrace to humanity. On Sunday, the 12th inst., some drunken Prussians picked a quarrel with some inoffensive passers-by, and a disgraceful row ensued, which no considerations can justify. One young man, twenty-two years of age, received twelve sabre cuts, and was eventually pitched into the Marne. On the evening of the 14th a similar occurrence took place, and left the old and respected inhabitant of the place, unluckily attracted the attention of some soldiers, who gave him a beating that he will remember for a long time. Many other such scenes have taken place, but found no safe asylum there. The soldiers, however, then effected an entrance, and he shortly breathed his last. His corpse was then found to have more than forty sabre cuts and bayonet thrusts. The whole town is terror-stricken. Nobody ventures out in the streets after dusk, and the Germans have it all their own way as it appears in the street. The enemy are possessed to and fro between the town and their own houses on their daily avocations are pursued by these valiant warriors, and who is up some times as a mark to shoot at. On one occasion, a woman, sixty-two years of age, was severely wounded, and a young child by whom she was accompanied was unmercifully beaten by the savages. In consequence of these atrocities, M. Blandin, Mayor of Epernay, has come to Paris in order to have an interview with M. Thiers, and lay before him the condition of his unfortunate fellow-citizens. It is quite needless to say that there is but a poor chance of the desired result, and that the only prospect of delivering the country from the German modbus, and of coming happy and prosperous, is by a greater and more powerful than ever she was known to be under the able counsel of her late Dictatory. At the same meeting a letter, dated the 27th ult., was read from Mr. Butt, M. P., in which he said he was in good faith in the result of the appeals of the advocates of Home Rule to the great masses of the English people. He felt persuaded that if they made that appeal to their sense of justice and their love of freedom, they could safely but silently, the day was not far off when they would see the right of Ireland to a domestic parliament enforced in Ireland with the full and cordial consent of the English people.

ITALY.

The Pope and the Vatican.

It is now confidently hoped that a course of events will soon bring about the return of the reigning monarch which will enable the Holy Father to remain in the Vatican. This, in the first instance, can only be the Religious Orders are not interfered with. The question of expelling the Holy See has, it is said, been defeated, and the majority of the Italian people, if compelled to leave Rome, are resolved to ask his Holiness to leave the city. The cardinals proposed the Archbishop Tyrell, but he refused to take refuge on his territory of a Power established to be his greatest enemy. Malta has then suggested, but was also declined, on account of England being a Protestant Power. France was finally spoken of, and the Pope expressed a preference for France, if compelled to leave Rome, but pointed out how difficult would be his position amid the political agitations which France is subject. It is also reported that the supervisors of the religious associations at Rome have collectively requested the Pope not to leave the Vatican, adding that his presence in Rome will probably moderate the stringency of the law on religious corporations. The Times says it is authorized to declare that the Pope has no intention of leaving Rome. His Holiness is in perfect health, and there is not the least chance of his giving way to the Italian Government.—Weekly Register.

Brigandage in Italy.

Our Rome correspondent writes under date of Nov. 22, 1871: "Mamone, the brigand chief who captured Mr. Monteseno and the Rev. Mr. Moseley, is again at large, and the province of Salerno is in a state of terrorism. Another batch of prisoners, the crimes which were proved against him, he was, of course, dealt tenderly with by an Italian jury, and condemned only to imprisonment for life. The place of his deportation was Pesaro, from which one would have thought it difficult to get out, but Mamoni is a man of great resources and determination, as his future will show. He and laughed at stone walls. The Neapolitan journals relate that the authorities were surprised by himself of his intentions, unwittingly, indeed, as a letter which was written to a friend, saying that he would see him in a few days, fell into the hands of the Prefect of Salerno. Intelligence of this was at once sent to the Minister, who rather poohpoohed the affair, but still gave orders for his removal to Ustica, thinking by such a measure to thwart the plans of the notorious chief. His new residence, however, would seem to have offered yet greater facilities for escape, as he soon accomplished it, and is now over the hills and far away. In the intercepted letter there were threats of vengeance against the jury, the Minister, and the Judge who had condemned him. These threats which he is now at liberty to carry out if he can, and which he no doubt will. If the opportunity presents itself. Hence there is a great panic in the province of Salerno, and the local journals say that people scarcely dare to put their heads outside their doors. Outlawed as he is, and hunted by the military force, Mamoni has no resource but crime, and even if he were likely to be kept in check by apprehension of consequences, he well knows that they cannot be worse than the punishment from which he has just escaped. A few murders, and the brigand will be enforced to treat for a new position, and his is very likely, therefore, to enjoy to the full the excesses of vengeance. It is not likely that he will be captured for some time, as no one knows so well all the hiding places of the mountains as a chief who has so long played such a notorious part, and notwithstanding the present panic which his escape has occasioned, there are numbers of persons who, from some motive or other, will be ready to come to his aid, or join him in his enterprise. The same sentiment which induced the Sicilians to welcome Garibaldi as their deliverer from the Bourbons, may, with extenuating circumstances, will prompt the peasant to conceal and succor the victim of the law, so that we may expect to hear more of one who held two of our countrymen in his power, for a week and a half years says the Naples Observer, Mamoni confessed that he had received from his captives no less a sum than 318,000f., or nearly £12,000. Provisions, liquors, and cigars to arrange the details of obtaining them; still, enough remained to reward his faithful followers, and to put the chief in funds for many a year to follow who has scarcely been to eat.

The Pope's Throne.

"The King is on the throne," and "the satraps throng the hall." So far we enjoy Home life in Rome. But it will not last long again. We can discern as yet the fatal handwriting on the wall, as Rome's appearance similar with deadly terror the sacrilegious monarch of Babylon, but the day of wrath and the hour of retribution are not yet. The throne of the despoiler will pass away and his family perish, and his name be a curse and a by-word to all ages, as the existence of the law of right and wrong. In the meantime we must endure patiently the insolent leave of short-lived triumph, whether it comes from an infidel parliament or an infidel king. Their reign is short, whether it comes from an infidel parliament or an infidel king. Their reign is short, whether it be but a single generation, as in the case of St. Andrew, of the spiritual. Meanwhile the Pope is free from persecution; the bold hand made by the Pope's "grandsires" is not yet withered, and the Pope is free from the insolence of his infamous work? Wherever it may be, there is no denying that the Pope is the game of princes, is played upon a very large board, with a tolerable number of pieces, and the stakes are of great many "moves." Would it surprise us if, in the course of the present year, Pius the Ninth should be dead, and the Holy See vacant? Would it surprise us if, in the course of the present year, Victor Emmanuel should be dead, and the throne of Italy vacant? Would it surprise us if, in the course of the present year, Napoleon the Third should be dead, and the throne of France vacant? Would it surprise us if, in the course of the present year, Alexander the Second should be dead, and the throne of Russia vacant? Would it surprise us if, in the course of the present year, Francis Joseph should be dead, and the throne of Austria vacant? Would it surprise us if, in the course of the present year, Victoria should be dead, and the throne of England vacant? Would it surprise us if, in the course of the present year, Queen Isabella should be dead, and the throne of Spain vacant? Would it surprise us if, in the course of the present year, Leopold should be dead, and the throne of Belgium vacant? Would it surprise us if, in the course of the present year, Frederick William should be dead, and the throne of Prussia vacant? Would it surprise us if, in the course of the present year, Victor Emmanuel should be dead, and the throne of Italy vacant? Would it surprise us if, in the course of the present year, Napoleon

WEEKLY CALENDAR.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING JAN. 14.

January
7—Sunday—Sunday within the Octave of the Epiphany.
8—Monday—Of the Octave.
9—Tuesday—Of the Octave.
10—Wednesday—Of the Octave.
11—Thursday—Of the Octave, St. Hyginus, P. and M.
12—Friday—Of the Octave.
13—Saturday—Octave of the Epiphany.

THE MONITOR,
PUBLISHED WEEKLY
Irish and Catholic Journal in California.
SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.
SATURDAY.....JAN'Y 6, 1872.

A DOUBTFUL TELEGRAM.

A telegraphic dispatch, dated 29th December, 1871, purporting to come from Rome, says that several Italian Archbishops and Bishops waited on the King of Italy on Christmas day and presented him congratulations of the season. Some non-Catholic journals, accepting this intelligence at true in all respects, treat it as a very important affair. It is proof strong they think that the attitude of the Pope with respect to the annexation of the Pontifical dominions to the Italian Kingdom is not approved of by the hierarchy. It also proves, according to the same authority, that some and perhaps many of the highest ecclesiastical dignitaries desire to acknowledge Victor Emmanuel as the King of united Italy. Finally, this telegram is taken as demonstrating beyond possibility of doubt that the excommunication incurred by the monarch in consequence of his participation in the spoliation of the Church, is disregarded by those who should attach the greatest importance to it. Now, there is a great deal too much assumption in all this argument. Indeed it is perfectly amusing to mark the exaggerated importance which non-Catholic writers will persist in attributing to every petty incident which appears in the least to tell against the Papacy. Ardently wishing for the downfall of the Church, they naturally are inclined to accept every unfavorable circumstance as an indication of the approaching realisation of their wishes. But with regard to this telegram we may remark—firstly, that it is not at all improbable that the thing is a fabrication from beginning to end. The concoction of false news is carried on to an astonishingly large extent by the Roman correspondents of the English and American journals, and, in fact, it constitutes the chief part of their business. Secondly, the story may be an exaggeration of something which really did take place. A prelate or two not in the best possible reputation at Rome may have so far forgotten the respect due to the Head of the Church as to pay a visit to its despoiler. Thirdly, the visit may have been paid by Piedmontese Bishops, whose legitimate sovereign Victor Emmanuel undoubtedly is, and if so it would lose all significance—at least all of the nature which non-Catholics are anxious to attribute to it. Fourthly, the visit may have been for the interference of legitimate business, and so have been altogether unobnoxious. To short, unless this ecclesiastical visit was paid by Bishops who are located within the Pontifical States, it is hard to understand how it could be regarded as in any way important or worth the trouble of telegraphing. It is perfectly allowable for Neapolitan, or Lombardian, or Modenese prelates to accept the sovereignty which has been wrought in the political condition of these countries, and acknowledge Victor Emmanuel as their King. It is no affair of Pius IX. or of the Church either if they do so. Of course it would be quite a different affair if they were subjects of the Pope, and were never released from their allegiance. Still, granting the utmost, we imagine there is not so much reason for exultation at this alleged rapprochement between the Italian hierarchy and the excommunicated King. If it were possible for the Holy Father to condone Victor Emmanuel's offence, if he could be justified in accepting the destruction of the temporal power, which he could not, seeing that he held it in trust for his successors, the nature of the King's criminality would remain the same. He would still have upon his conscience the stains of robbery and sacrilege. We would remind the gentlemen who talk so loudly of the downfall of the Papacy, that the Catholic Church is indestructible—the gates of Hell shall never prevail against it. Indeed it may do much mischief. They may rob and persecute and embarrass, but they cannot destroy. Even if the temporal power of the Popes be destroyed for ever—and that is more than any sensible man would be inclined to acknowledge — the Church will not only continue to exist, but will spread and grow powerful throughout the habitable world. What Catholics regret is the loss of the temporal power is not any thing essential to the existence of their Church, but simply the loss of one adjunct which was a great benefit and convenience. When will anti-Catholic writers learn to realise this fact? It has been stated about and times for, their especial benefit, and yet they write as if they never heard it. None are so blind as they who will not see!

THE Catholic World commences the New Year well. Its articles embrace a wide range of subjects, and all of them are good. They are: Who is to educate our Children? The Christmas Eve in La Vendee; Thoughts for the Women of the Times; The Protestant Rule of Faith: The late General Convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church; Chateau Regnier, a Christmas story of the Twelfth Century; The Liquification of the Blood of St. Januarius, article fifth; The New School of History; Mr. Clarke's Lives of the American Catholic Bishops, and the usual review of new publications.

THE Legislature, which adjourned for the holidays, resumed business on Thursday of this week.

LAND INVESTMENT.

A letter, addressed to the San Francisco Chamber of Commerce, by Mr. J. Ross Browne, which was published in the Chronicle of Saturday last, gives some interesting particulars regarding the formation of an Anglo-American Company, whose specialty shall be investment in California swamp lands. The scheme appears to be thoroughly practicable and likely to result in considerable benefit to the State. Briefly stated, the project is to secure by conditional agreements or otherwise purchase large tracts of marsh, swamp and overflowed lands; to form a company in London, with a Board of Management in San Francisco, capital stock being at least five million of dollars, for the purchase, reclamation and the resale of these lands; to subdivide them into small tracts and encourage settlement thereupon by low prices and easy terms of payment. To effect speedy settlement, it is proposed to provide passage hither for farmers, laborers and artisans from England, Holland, Germany and elsewhere. The immigrants will be provided, on their arrival, with homes on long credit and at moderate interest; they will be furnished with provisions, seeds, implements and all things requisite to enable them to surmount the difficulties of the first year; they will have the privilege of purchasing whatever proprietary interest they please in the land whereupon they settle. The Company's profits are expected to arise from direct cultivation of unsold lands, leases for settlement, and the natural rise in the value of real estate in consequence of the progress of agriculture, commerce and manufactures throughout California. The Company is not altogether a California one. It is to be incorporated in London, and Mr. Browne deserves much credit for his share in the organization of the Company. He has done more substantial good for California in this way than a score of our politicians could or would do in a life time. Our State has abundant wealth of the right sort as a producer of the precious metals, and as that it is now best known. But the day is evidently approaching when its chief dependence for prosperity, and its greatest fame abroad, will rest upon its agriculture. Consequently, every enterprise tending to develop agriculture, to introduce the ploughshare where it has never passed before, is a benefit to the whole community. Among such enterprises that of the Company sketched by Mr. Ross Browne is, we think, destined to hold prominent rank.

—"THE CATHOLIC GUARDIAN."—We have received the first number of The Catholic Guardian, published in San Francisco, and edited by Francis Dillon Egan, Esq. It is a sheet of twelve medium sized pages, and presents a very creditable appearance. The issue before us is called a "specimen number," but no intimation is given as to when the second will be published.

THE San Joaquin Valley Bank and the Bank of Stockton have each declared a dividend of 1 per cent. for the month.

JUDGE LAKE'S TRIAL.

Judge Lake's trial for the assault committed upon Mr. Joe Young of the Chronicle, some weeks ago, was, in our opinion, a scandalous farce. We cannot call to mind anything, even "Sunday-school" legislating in any country blessed with properly organized courts of justice, and we hope nothing like it will be witnessed here again. This mild mannered local luminary seems to have come to the determination not to begin the new year with a charge of murderous assault hanging over his head, and he accordingly took measures to be rid of it before the expiring of 1871. On Saturday, December 30th, he coolly walked into the County Court and demanded a trial there and then. His only reason for this strange proposture was, apparently, that it suited him to get over his little trouble as speedily as possible. Judge Stanley, who presided, had been made aware by some kind of intimation, received the proceedings of that day, that this application for trial would be made; but no one else connected with the case seems to have been acquainted with the fact. Consequently, every one had to be sent for specially in order to form some sort of jury to try Judge Lake. When Mr. Murphy, the District Attorney, arrived, he protested strongly against this unusual and uncalled for way of doing business. His protest was supported by Mr. Porter, who had been engaged by Mr. Bo Young to watch the case on his behalf. But Judge Stanley decided against them, and ruled that the defendant should be allowed to plead. Knowing that the application would be made, he had consulted with three other Judges, and had come to a decision to the effect that the arraignment should be proceeded with. We do not feel strong enough in legal lore to question the pronunciamento of this high tribunal; but, however it may be, the affair, according to our idea, looks very much as if the County Court were run to suit the defendant alone. There, of course, the "trial" commenced. The reading of the indictment was dispensed with as a useless formality, and Judge Lake pleaded guilty. He was ordered to appear for sentence on Thursday, January 4th. After this all parties quitted the Court, some well satisfied with the day's work, others, no doubt, hugely disgusted with it. Mr. Murphy was one of those rather unsavy in mind. He pondered over the matter, and finally remembered that sentence should be passed at the same session of Court with the trial. It was therefore clear that any long sentence on January 4th, would be an illegal proceeding. Then there was rushing hither and thither to bring all parties once more in the presence of Judge Stanley. It was condescending of Judge Lake to agree to this arrangement, and we don't know how he could have been forced to do it if he saw fit to demur. However, he that as it may, on Saturday afternoon last the farce of trial No. 2 was gone through, and that highly appreciative audience, the reporters, published in the daily papers was read, one witness was sworn and sentence for the offence was passed. Majesty is concerned the very highest and most dignified terms were employed by themselves to the grossest deceptions. Consequently, although we believe it was not the case in the present instance, we should not be surprised to see at some future time that the queen, or some member of her family was represented as suffering from a specified cause when in reality the affliction was the result of something of a very different kind, more congenial to the atmosphere that surrounds a Court!

CATHOLIC ORPHAN ASYLUM, SAN RAFAEL.—The friends of this benevolent institution will be pleased to learn that—thanks to the kindness of a few charitably disposed gentlemen—its inmates were enabled to pass a merry Christmas time, and their Reverend guardian desires to express his gratitude to the undermentioned for their respective donations: Jos. A. Donahoe, fifty dollars; Peter Donahoe, twenty-five dollars; Mr. Hopkins, a generous supply of groceries; Jas. Phelan, Esq., one box candy; James Miller, Esq., liberal donation of provisions; J. H. Redmond, Esq., a fat heifer. For some reason or another the Christmas gifts to the Asylum have not been as numerous this season as usual. It may be that the great inclemency of the weather prevented many intending benefactors from carrying out their gifts. If this surmise be correct, we can assure the gentlemen that their offerings, though a little late, will still be acceptable, and will, indeed, be received with gratitude. We trust all concerned will not be slow to act upon this suggestion. The Orphan Asylum is a most meritorious institution, and under the management of Rev. Father Bermingham, it is accomplishing a vast amount of good with the most gratifying success. Let, then, its friends not neglect their duty nor prove remiss in their kindness.

THE CATHOLIC PARTY.—The party for the benefit of the Catholic Church of this city, given on Wednesday evening by the ladies of that church, was a crowning event of the season. Music Hall was crowded in every available part by the wealth, beauty and fashion of San José. At nine o'clock, Varney's odillion band struck up the grand march; and from that until near the "peep of dawn," they gaily tripped the light fantastic to music sweet. All who participated agree in pronouncing it one of the most delightful affairs that has been held in San José for some time, and one long to be remembered. In the dining hall the supper was served at the tables in charge of fifty ouns each; and a superb one it was, too, that greeted the epicurean. The tables were tastefully decorated with evergreens and flowers, which lent a pleasant charm to the occasion. It was a remunerative party as well as enjoyable, for we understand it will net near $1,000, the elegant lunch was set on Thursday. The ladies deserve great praise for their unselfish management in the premises.—San Jose Argus, Dec. 30.

WHAT WAS THE MATTER WITH HIM?

What was the matter with his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales? The press in its telegrams and leading articles said he was ill of typhoid fever. The progress of the disease, the condition of the sufferer were reported every morning for the information of all sympathizers. The prominents of the physicians were published in full according as they were delivered. In short there was every reason for believing that the heir-apparent to the throne of England was really and undoubtedly stricken with the malady just mentioned. Moreover, he was reported at one time in so critical a condition that his life was despaired of and his death was hourly expected. But, if the London correspondent of the New York Herald is to be depended upon, we have been pretty extensively fooled about the matter. This veracious special acknowledges that his Royal Highness was indeed very ill, almost at death's door, to use a common phrase; but he asserts that typhoid fever had nothing to do with the Prince's illness. The distinguished personage was confined to his room, and was in danger of losing his life in consequence of an attack from upon him by a number of the International Society! The mysterious brotherhood, it seems, had resolved to put him out of the way in order to facilitate the destruction of the British throne, and whoever was commissioned to perform the little job made a complete blunder of it. We are strongly of opinion that the Herald's correspondent must have been lately keeping the company of her gracious Majesty's marines. The tale bears a wonderful resemblance to one we "yarn" about being among that gallant corps, which are far more remarkable for their singularity than for their veracity. We have not seen any particulars as to where, when or how the attack was made upon the unfortunate Prince; but we daresay the correspondent's informant was well able to furnish them. It does not now matter much what was the agency which brought his Royal Highness so near his last moment. He is now rapidly improving and will soon be able to get about as usual. Let us hope, for his own sake, and for the sake of the peace to be influenced by his example, that his future career will be somewhat more creditable and respectable than his past has been. We should not like the trembling our readers with this absurd, and, as we believe, totally unfounded story told by the Herald's correspondent, were it not that it illustrates forcibly one thing characteristic of monarchy, and of the English monarchy in an especial degree. Everything connected with the sovereign and the royal family is shrouded in mystery and concealed as much as possible from vulgar observation. Nearly every statement put forth upon the subject of Court affairs which are published even by authority in the English papers and reproduced by the press of other countries. They are lies from first and these, but if there be the smallest reason for supposing that the health of her Majesty is concerned the very highest and most dignified terms were employed by themselves to the grossest deceptions. Consequently, although we believe it was not the case in the present instance, we should not be surprised to see at some future time that the queen, or some member of her family was represented as suffering from a specified cause when in reality the affliction was the result of something of a very different kind, more congenial to the atmosphere that surrounds a Court!

Resumption of Studies at St. Mary's College.

Studies were resumed at Saint Mary's College on January 2d. The classes are being organized, students advanced according to merit, and very soon the College will be pursuing its usual routine. It is gratifying to every way desirable that parents should send their children back to their studies without any further loss of time. The delay even of a week is a detriment to the pupils themselves, and a serious inconvenience to the Professors. It sometimes necessitates special examinations to decide the status of the boys who arrive late, and thus the progress of the classes is in some degree retarded. The holidays are now over, the youths have all had their season of enjoyment, and the scenes of mirth are remained in earnest the better it will be. There is no need of our saying anything as to the high reputation as an educational establishment enjoyed by St. Mary's College. Suffice it to say that it is an institution of which the Catholics of California have a right to be proud. No young man requires a better education to enable him to work his way in the world, or attain eminence in any of the liberal professions, than that which can be procured in its halls. All over the world, and in Ireland particularly, its students have distinguished themselves as the recitations were conducted by the Christian Brothers.

Montgomery Blair on the Situation.

The Herald has interviewed Montgomery Blair, Postmaster General under Lincoln, on the political situation. Blair says there has been no excitement in politics for two years—that there are now nothing but personal humiliations, under which the Southern States are sinking into the condition of Ireland, and public men are degenerating into "miserable pretenders." That is pithy and true. He says that Lincoln was approbrassive of just such a state of affairs, tirant is nothing but a soldier and free form of government is su..ply that of a camp. He is a Republican at heart, and cares only for power. Blair says he was in favor of offering Grant the Democratic nomination in 1868, and that Grant would have it, if he had not been sure of the Republican nomination. Grant's character, says Blair, is Paul Kelly, bird, 76; silver napkin ring, 5; gold finger bowls, 12; carving and dessert carvers, 36; silver knife and fork, 90; table cloths, 6; napkins, 72; pearl and gold brushes, 415; worsted table cover, 20; silver fingers bowls, 12; picture of a church, 150; gold watch, 150; silver pitcher, 92; gold watch, 185, gold bracelet 35&½; locket cloth, 19; large album, 62; album, 20; diamond breast pin, 125; Bible, 5; gold pen, 174; mess tea set, 278, turquoise jewelry, 100; gold watch and chain, 125; A dozen and 15 knives, 12; silver pitcher, 92, 1816 party, 70; Japanese cabinet, 155; woolen scarves, 17; cream pitcher, 9; gold watch, 185; gold watch and chain, 125; silver napkin ring, 5

(Continued from page 5)

Parish to our Fathers;' from thence to the church, and afterwards to the field provided for the sports of the day, a few miles' walk from the wall, where races, leaping matches, running in sacks, football, and the amusing game of Aunt Sally, will be carried on during the day. Notice —The managers reserve to themselves the right of disqualifying any person they think proper from entering for the races, but A. quadrille band will be stationed in a select portion of the field for dancing. The committee sincerely trust that all who support the excursion will render every possible assistance to the management, in preserving order, as the excursion is only intended to afford a day's rational enjoyment, and that the indulgence in anything which would tend to prevent the accomplishment of such, will not take place." The foregoing was from a Catholic paper. His Lordship then read the following extract from Punch: "Have we not Bishop's fulminations ex the 'young men,' who, in a Christian country, dream it proper to label themselves 'Christian young men?' There is a notion that they are modest, or, at all events, preternaturally proper parties. We discover that they are nothing of the kind. They appear to take quite a decent view of life, and to be as—well, we won't say vulgar—as Moses Hallish in their tastes as heathen young men. Look at Jones, it is from Scarborough; the Christian young man has an excursion to York this week, and very right, too. Only are not these suggestions, which we find in their genuine frankness, raised of a—a worldly sort? Hear Jones:

'Polly, dear!
Louisa, love!
Lilly, sweet!
All the bachelors by this train you'll meet.'

And then—

'Charming scenery! lovely walks! and Beautiful music!
Dear Polly and Sal, don't set papa,' what!
Dancing in the hands!
Oh, it will be promenade!'

Now, this sort of thing, if not refined, is perfectly harmless, and French in tone. Reducing the Christian young man for liking a little decorous flirtation, especially if it intends to marriage," The Bishop said that he sometimes took a pair of scissors, and when he found in a newspaper anything like what he had been reading, or advertisements, or notices of the same sort, he cut it out and put it in an album, till the occasion suggested itself for bringing it to His. There were other

AMUSEMENTS ABOUT CHRISTMAS TIME,

Which were too parties. Now there was nothing more enjoyable than to see little children regaled with tea and buns, and going home each with an orange, but when it was extended to older parties, then it brought in a dangerous element of flirtation and there was much which was not always decorous. As an illustration of the character of some tea meetings, His Lordship read an extract from the Manchester Examiner and Times, from "A witness of forty years' experience." The writer was as follows: "Sunday scholars' tea meetings, carefully arranged, are unquestionably good, but I have often seen, after the little people have been dismissed, the older scholars and the younger teachers left in a state bordering on without control, often turning the schoolroom into a beer garden, and leaving a well attended entertainment all the worse for it." The Bishop of Manchester said: "I have been at some of these meetings, and I know that some of them are very happy gatherings; but I also know that when the clergyman and the older teachers are withdrawn that dancing is sometimes got up, and carried on for two or three hours. I ask again, is that safe?" Another witness said: "I was disposed to see in the social tea meeting a means of bringing the people together, and making them happy, but I am sorry to say that in many instances I have observed that the tea meeting has been followed by dancing, and sometimes by worse."

TELEGRAPHIC.

Eastern.

NEW YORK, Dec. 29.—Tweed surrendered to the Sheriff this morning, and his son Richard was accepted as a surety in place of Farley. G. W. Von Hoist has been appointed Commissioner of Public Works by the Mayor, who received Tweed's formal resignation. These events created quite an excitement. After the necessary requirements in the change of sureties were complied with, Tweed went to his office in the Department of Public Works, and introduced his successor to the clerks and employés.

Tweed has resigned his directorship in the Erie road, and Sherwood or Corning will be elected in his place.

Another fraud in the Tax Commissioner's office has been brought to light. The taxes of Messrs. Iden, amounting to $75,000, were marked "dismissed" on false affidavits; the amount paid to the city being $4,000.

LITTLE ROCK, Dec. 29.—The total losses by the fire last night are estimated at $100,000; insurance about $35,000. The Journal appeared as usual this evening, though reduced in size. Its power press was destroyed.

ALBANY, Dec. 29.—The new bridge across the Hudson is completed, and transit are passing over it.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 29.—The Postmaster-General, to-day, ordered an auction sale of the mail service on the Central Pacific Branch Railroad from Chico to Tehama.

The Secretary of the Treasury to-day addressed the following letter to all Collectors of Customs:

SIR:—The rules in regard to appointments in the Civil Service of the Government, prepared by the Commissioners on the Civil Service and approved by the President, will take effect on Monday next. Orders and other appointments to your office will be made in accordance with these rules, so far as is practicable. It will be necessary to designate a Commission of competent persons to make a complete examination of candidates for appointment and for promotion, and until an appropriation shall have been made by Congress to defray the expense it will be necessary to draw as such Commission persons who are already in the service of the Government, and connected with your office. I have therefore to request that you will give me the names of those persons who are in your opinion qualified to perform that duty, and unless objection shall appear, your recommendation will be approved. You will receive herewith a copy of the regulations. The Commissioners, together with the regulations approved by the President, which I shall doubtless directed, will guide your conduct in this business.

MATAMORAS, Dec. 26.—The revolution is advancing into the State of Tamaulipas. General Gonzalez' insurgent forces appeared before MeN. (?) this morning in considerable numbers, when General Cortina's troops, who had occupied the place, fell back on Camargo, thirty miles distant, where it is supposed they will make a stand against. The occupation of MeN. by the rebels gives them a port of entry on the Brownsville to Matamoras supply.

NEW YORK, Dec. 30.—In the further examination of Ward's bookkeeper this morning, young Tweed testified that he owned property valued at a million and a half of dollars, some of which was deeded to him by his father in August last, and some in November, in consideration of his love, and affection—there being no understanding that he should bail his father.

CHICAGO, Dec. 30.—Fourteen additional indictments for bribery have been found against members of the late Board of Public Council. This makes eighteen indictments which have been found against Aldermen and ex-Aldermen.

The Sherman House, the largest Hotel in removing the ruins of the late fire, was found a few feet below the surface an iron bound box, containing about $90,000 in gold, silver and bristol coin. The contents of the latter indicates comparatively recent burial, but so far, there is not the slightest clue to the owner of the treasure.

Grand Duke Alexis has decided to go on to Omaha by the Northern line, having been the Grand Duke will visit Milwaukee, St. Louis, Kansas City and Leavenworth, as heretofore announced, and from the latter place will go to Omaha, arriving there on the 10th of January. General Sheridan will receive them, and, with proper military escort, conduct them to the hunting grounds. On arriving there, should snow be found too deep for hunting, the party will go to San Francisco.

The Grand Duke passed to-day very quietly. There being no fitted church in the city, he did not attend public worship.

NEW YORK, Dec. 30.—The morning papers say that Secretary Fish's resignation is once more on the tapis, and in a more tangible shape than ever. In fact, his final resignation is a day or two is no longer a matter of conjecture, but one almost of absolute certainty.

The difficulty lately arisen between the United States and Spain, with regard to Cuban matters, have matured his resolution to withdraw as soon as possible from affairs which threaten to assume a black and stormy aspect.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 1.—This evening officer Doyle, accompanied by two policemen, attempted to arrest a Mrs. Shay in her house. She resisted, and shot Doyle with a pistol, the ball taking effect in his mouth, from which wound he shortly after died, bleeding to death. Mrs. Shay is now under arrest.

The requisite amount of bail being ready, Controller Connolly will probably be released to-morrow.

NEW ORLEANS, Dec. 31st.—At 11 o'clock last night a fire was discovered in Sandor's saloon. The flames spread rapidly, and in four hours sixty buildings had been burnt. The burnt district includes the wealthiest portions of the city from Court House square to Bourdi street, embracing two squares, from Bourdi street down along the river front, to, and including Sandor's saloon and store, from the river to McKenna's saloon, and along the side of Bourdi street not a house was left standing. Among the buildings destroyed were the Union Church, McCormick's offices, shops, residence and outbuildings; the fine stores of Hernandez, Jeanneau, Dreyfus, Meyers, Sanders, Moffee, Oliver and King; the Orleans Hotel, Mansion House, Central House, Kellers' new store, Endom's shop, stables and store, the old Alhambra, the new Alhambra, and many other buildings are entirely destroyed. Total loss, $3,000,000; insurance, $1,000,000. The origin of the fire is believed to have been accidental.

NEW YORK, Dec. 31st.—A World's correspondent, writing from Havana on the 25th, says that the Captain-General of Cuba has just decreed the practical enslavement of the whole Chinese population of the Island of Cuba, numbering some 235,000 souls.

The decree orders the ten thousand or fifteen thousand free Chinese immediately to enroll themselves under the tutelage of the Government, and work in the Government workshops, receiving for their labor only $1 per month; and ordering that all Chinese who are now working under contract shall be re-indentured on the expiration of their terms, or be sent to Jail.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 1.—The reception of the President to-day was the most brilliant for many years.

NEW YORK, Jan. 2.—During the present month is be expected that a vigorous search will be made on the present Erie management.

The Republican Assembly caucus met yesterday and nominated Henry Smith of Albany for Speaker—an informal ballot resulting in 56 for Smith and 47 for Alvord; but on the latter's motion Smith's nomination was made unanimous.

ANNAPOLIS, Jan. 2.—In the Wharton trial yesterday, Dr. Genth was recalled and repeated that the analysis of the contents of Ketchum's stomach, and of the tumbler, by Aiken and Toney, was unreliable.

Dr. J. J. Ross, Professor of Medical Jurisprudence and Toxicology in the University of Pennsylvania, testified to the incompleteness and unreliability of Aiken's and Toney's analysis. He said further there was nothing in the symptoms described to exclude the idea that death was produced by natural causes.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 2.—The public debt has increased in round numbers $4,000,000.

All the members of the Cabinet were present at the meeting to-day. The session was brief.

The Secretary of the Treasury will shortly issue a circular containing new and more stringent rules for the keeping and disbursing of public moneys by Government officials, which will supercede those previously issued upon this subject.

ALBANY, Jan. 2.—The Senate and House met at eleven o'clock. The Governor's message was long, and devoted to the business of the State and city. The New York State debt has been reduced to $29,000,000. The tolls on canals have increased nearly $250,000 over the previous year. It recommends a new charter for New York city, the acquiescence of which are generally similar to those proposed by the Committee of Seventy.

NEW YORK, Jan. 2.—Some of the old board of Aldermen attempted to take possession of their chamber to-day, but were driven off by the police.

ROCHESTER, Jan. 2.—A mob attempted to break the jail where the negro rawler of little Minnie is confined, but were prevented by the police.

The excitement over the rape of a little girl by a negro fiend continued in bloodshed. An immense crowd surrounded the jail this evening, inside over the report the child's death from the injuries. The evening papers published the evidence against Howard confessive of his guilt. The police surrounded the jail and the military assembled at the armory. The police finally dispersed the crowd, and quiet being apparently restored, they were retired. Later the crowd again surrounded the jail, yelling and hooting, and the police were again sent for.

Meanwhile the military arrived on the ground, and about 10 P. M., while the police were rallying at the corner of Court and Exchange streets, the military fired a volley at least, killing two men, John Eiter and Henry Merlow, and a boy, name not learned, and wounding Joan Hilbert, who was shot through the leg. It is reported that a woman was also shot, but this is doubted. The excitement redoubled, and people rushed from all parts of the city to the scene.

Some consider the firing unnecessary, while the military declare they were obliged to shoot in self-defense, as they were being pelted with stones. From the testimony of the police, who were eye witnesses of the affair, the movement of the military appears untrue. The men killed were mere spectators, and not participating in the mob. Hilbert was a highly respectable influential German citizen. The feeling against the military is intense. It is feared there will be more bloodshed before morning. The streets and houses are filling from their houses, as it is not deemed safe for them to remain in the near distance of the City Hall and ground around the jail.

LATER.—There does not seem to be any further attack on the jail; five companies of militia are now guarding it. Everything is quiet.

Ester and Merlow were killed; John Nolan fatally wounded; E. N. Menton reported shot in the thigh.

The Captain of the military says the order was to charge bayonets, and in this movement the guns were discharged.

COLUMBUS, O., Jan. 2.—The General Assembly re-organized to-day. The Honorable N. H. Van Voorhees (Republican) was elected Speaker, and the Senate selected Republican officers by the casting vote of the Lieutenant-Governor—the vote in the House being a tie.

Governor Hayes' message is short, mainly setting forth the state of the financial condition of the State, which he pronounced satisfactory.

NEW YORK, Jan. 2.—There has been a considerable run on the Arcanie Savings-bank to-day. Over a million dollars have been paid out. The officers of the Bank state that they are perfectly able to meet all liabilities.

Two failures of brokers are reported today.

For the first time within the knowledge of the oldest officials the Controller has sent to the Mayor the quarterly financial statement of the city.

ALBANY, Jan. 3.—O'Donovan Rossa presents a memorial claiming representation from Tweed's district, claiming that six thousand votes were unlawfully cast for Tweed; consequently, he asks the seat. Tweed, on the account of fraud in the election. Tweed has not appeared here.

The Senate ratified the Fifteenth Amendment by 27 against 1.

NEW YORK, Jan. 3.—It is reported that the Tammany Sachems, in a private meeting last night, concluded that it was useless to attempt continuing Tammany as a political organization on account of its odious reputation, and that they will abandon it and dispose of its property, which is worth fully one million dollars.

The Frigate Constellation moved from the Navy Yard into the stream this morning, and sails this evening for Havana, to remain until further orders.

European.

HOME, Dec. 28.—A royal decree has been issued, carrying into effect the ecumenical (creed) recently concluded between Italy and the United States.

PARIS, Dec. 28.—The papers assert that Bismarck is seeking a pretext for the reoccupation of the evacuated French Provinces.

The Committee on the Bank of France are disposed to increase the circulation of the Bank but 300,000,000 francs, instead of 450,000,000, as demanded by the Government.

The Committee of the Assembly on the reorganization of the army, proposes to make the terms of military service five years on active duty, four years in the reserve, and six years in the secondary service.

LONDON, Dec. 30.—The Times, in reviewing the position of President Grant's message relating to Cuba, says that that island should be separated from Spain.

Clarendon, the Conservative section of the Liberal party, led by the Duke of Somerset and Viscount Halifax, are seeking to form a coalition with the Tories for the purpose of electing Beaterie Speaker of the House of Commons, instead of Brand, and to compass the retirement of Gladstone.

NEW YORK, Dec. 30.—The Herald publishes a London letter in which it is stated that the writer is informed by one who is well posted regarding secret societies in Europe, that the Prince of Wales was not suffering from typhoid fever, but from an attempted assassination by poison by a secret agent of the International Society. The organization, it is said, has resolved upon the death of the Prince, and the public assertions of some of its members urged a corroboration of the fact. The Herald editorially declines to endorse the story.

LONDON, January 1, 1872.—Cyrus W. Field gave a banquet to telegraphic conference at Rome, at which twenty-one countries, twenty-six languages, and private companies whose aggregate capital is 600,000,000 francs, were present. The loss in an 800 francs, were present. The loss in an accident address invited the Council to St. Petersburg in 1875.

LONDON, January 2.—The Prince of Wales continues to improve.

The Times believes that the American Government has no intention to make exorbitant demands for indemnification before the Geneva tribunal, and that the main desires is to obtain a public acknowledgment of the correctness of its position during the war. The Times says it would indubitably encourage belligerents to bring claims against neutrals for constructive injuries.

The Cologne Gazette asserts that the United States claim an enormous amount of indemnity, in order when deductions from

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

ENGLAND.

Dreadful Sufferings of a Shipwrecked Crew.

Knud Erickson, one of the Oromocto, of Newcastle, which was lost on her passage from Quebec, laden with timber for the Tyne, had arrived at the Sailors' Home, North Shields. Erickson was at one period thought to be the only survivor, but it afterwards transpired that several others of the crew were saved, and afterwards picked up by an American schooner and landed at Grenon. Erickson states that the vessel struck on a gale in latitude 49.46, longitude, 36.46, on the 17th September last, and afterwards broke up. The crew were before the vessel broke up the crew were in the rigging. While there a tremendous sea came away, and the breakfasts of the crew were in the forecap at the time, and were thrown into the water. They however, managed to get to the ship's hull, where they remained some little time. The second mate and one of the ship's boats and was put into one of the ship's boats and was carried away. Erickson was afterwards carried away from the vessel on the back of the freshwater, where he remained for twenty-four hours—the sea continuing to break over him, during which time he suffered severely from the wet and cold. He continued to drift to sea till the Oromocto was lost sight of. He was subsequently picked up by one of the ship Mo. espied by one of the vessels, and the alarm having been given, Erickson was taken on board, where he was put off and afterwards landed at Grenon. Erickson states that Captain Wilson, of North Shields, who was in the forecap, fell from the rigging into the sea and was drowned. He is not able to say what became of the others, but, as already stated, seven of them managed to snatch themselves on portions of the wreck and landed picked up by a passing vessel and landed at Grenon. The crew consisted of fifteen hands, and of these seven were drowned, Erickson was sent from Quebec on board the Landon to Newcastle, and from London to the Tyne.—Newcastle Chronicle.

A Good Move.

A movement is on foot to form a Celtic society in London, which will set before it the patriotic aim of bringing intelligent Irishmen together for the study of the rich Irish language and literature. In this public association are to be established a Public Library, with the late lamented Dr. Cane, M.P., for president, but of more natural kidney, for president, but of more natural kidney, for president, but of more natural kidney,

WEEKLY CALENDAR.
FOR THE WEEK ENDING JAN. 20 1872.
Sunday—Second Sunday after Epiphany. Holy Name of Jesus. Ps. 97. Matt. 2.
Monday—St Paul, first Hermit. St Maur, Abbot.
Tuesday—St Marcellus, Pope and Martyr.
Wednesday—St Anthony, Abbot.
Thursday—St Fabian, Pope and Martyr. St Prisca, Virgin and Martyr.
Friday—St Canute, King and Martyr. Six Martyrs and many others, Martyrs.
Saturday—St Sebastian and Companions, Martyrs.

THE MONITOR:
THE ONLY
Irish and Catholic Journal in California.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

SATURDAY.....JANY 13, 1872.

THE SLAYING OF JAMES FISK, JR.

A sensation, the equal of which has not been experienced for a long time, was created throughout the States on Saturday last, when intelligence was flashed along the wires that the notorious James Fisk had been shot at, and seriously wounded by one Edward Stokes. In less than twenty-four hours afterwards came news that the injured man had died, and that the assassin had been safely lodged in prison. This, of course, added to the popular excitement and made it yet more intense. The murder was the leading topic of conversation in business circles, and we may say all the news papers of importance had editorials on the same subject.

Assassination is not, unfortunately, a crime of rare occurrence in this country; indeed, it is common enough to make it a stain upon the national escutcheon; and in its attendant circumstances the murder of James Fisk differed little from the ordinary crimes of such class. But there was that in the position and antecedents of the victim which attracted unusual public attention to the deed of blood. There were not many Americans more extensively known abroad than he whose throat of life was cut by the bullet of the gambler Stokes. He was regarded as the very personification of our spirit of commercial enterprise. Shrewd, daring and unprincipled, he had amassed enormous wealth by means which only the lax morality of the present day would hesitate to stigmatize as dishonest. Yet, it was a debatable question whether, even judged by the most liberal standard applicable to speculative transactions, many of his most brilliant exploits were not flagrant violations of law, and calculated to consign him to a long term of imprisonment. The query indeed was in process of solution—was engaging the attention of the law courts—at the time he was shot; but probably his death will prevent the investigation from being carried to its proper termination. James Fisk has gone to that mysterious bourne where adverse verdicts of American lawyers cannot pursue him or trouble him.

It is truly a charitable maxim that which counsels us to say nothing save good of those who have sunk into the grave; but occasions will arise when for the defense of virtue and the assertion of truth it is not expedient to fitly characterize the life and works of departed men. And with every desire to deal gently with him, we must say, his enormous wealth, accumulated, as we have said, in a no less than doubtful manner, was used for the purposes of vulgar and offensive display. Fisk's horses, Fisk's carriages, Fisk's mansions, Fisk's diamonds, were brought under public notice in every conceivable way; and a morbidly wealth-worshipping public was supplied freely to the man's insatiable appetite for notoriety. James Fisk owned railroads, and steamships, and theatres, and opera houses, and also had something resembling proprietary interest in matters which are not usually thought merchantable. It is said he owned courts and legislatures, and used them without compunction as a forward his money-making schemes and intrigues.

A voluptuary and sensualist of the worst type, one would imagine he took particular delight in setting at naught the usages of respectable society and trampling all decorum under foot. His lavish profligacy was exacted in the daily newspapers until it must have been a stumbling-block in the path of honest poverty. He was a power in New York, one of the most conspicuous cities in the world, and his public life arrived from nothing but riches, unscrupulously wielded to corrupt or intimidate. But let us not Fisk excluded upon the bad points in his character. There were others upon which it should afford us more pleasure to dwell, for James Fisk was not without some redeeming traits. His enterprising spirit, of course, led him to undertake many works which necessitated his giving a great deal of employment. He was a good employer, and was always well liked by the men in his pay. It is stated, too, for him that he was charitably disposed, and rarely failed to assist persons who came to him seeking pecuniary aid. But, unhappily for the cause of so ruthy, these matters seldom found their way into the papers, and Fisk figured in their editorials only as a wealthy profligate or a dishonorable speculator. Such was the man who fell by the bullet of an assassin on the sixth of January.

There are circumstances connected with his murder which are chiefly fitted for comment in a newspaper, and therefore we pass them aside. But we would not feel satisfied in concealing the fact that his immorality is to be in great measure blamed or his untimely end; because with that inconsistance is inseparably connected the moral belonging to the tragedy. He was killed by a successful rival in the affections, rather favors, of a worthless and intriguing woman. Stokes had supplanted in in the good graces of Miss Mansfield, nee Mrs. Lawlor, and Fisk was endeavoring to obtain revenge by ruining his opponent by means of law suits and prosecutions. A temporary success achieved by Fisk enraged Stokes in such a degree that, it appears, he resolved to slay him. The assassination was cowardly and cold-blooded in the extreme; it had about it every symptom of malice and premeditation. Fisk was shot as he was walking up stairs in the Central Hotel to visit a relative of his wife. Stokes stood on a landing above him, rested his arm on the balustrade and took deliberate aim. He fired twice, striking his victim both times, once in the shoulder and once in the abdomen. Having thus satisfied his murderous passion, and assured himself of the death of his enemy, he attempted to escape, but was caught, arrested and hurried off to prison. Fisk only lived a few hours after receiving his wounds. He was conscious up to within a few minutes of his death and settled his affairs. These does not seem to have been a minister of any religious persuasion present at his bedside; so he died as he had lived, a man of the world, destitute of faith and careless of eternity.

Thus perished the "Prince of Erie." He entered the Central Hotel full of life and vigor, in the enjoyment of immense power and influence, with the prospect of a speedy ascendancy over his rivals; and in a few months he was carried out of it wounded, bleeding and helpless, with the dark shadow of the King of Terrors looming up before his eyes. Such is the end of a career

THE SHIP WILL SAIL TO-MORROW.

The ship will sail to-morrow! all is o'er.
The struggling hope, prolonged from day to day,
Has left its bitter sweet; refer more
Shall joy for us arise with golden ray.
The last and hour draws near—oh God! the last—
Would that its twilight of despair were past.

Parsed for ever! mournful dirge be still!
Mocked be the heart's will wailing—vain be vain
To combat fate with firm and stubborn will.
Or seek from shattered chords to strike one strain.
Numb the hot rain of tears; be numb for ay
Wrung from the spirits depths of agony.

The world looks coldly on. It cannot gauge
The measure of our anguish; what were words,
Brief, weak and trite, our sufferings to assuage,
To blunt the grief piercing like two-edged swords,
The eye may scan the surface; can it know
Aught of the storm that rages far below?

The ship will sail to-morrow! adieu are fair!
Fresh is the breeze, yet westward turn'd towards the sea.
The surplus of our race the land can spare.
Thin out the rank growth, mephit, blast and blear.
Weed from the overcrowded garden leaf and root,
And transplt down the refuse under foot!

It blisters not the quivering flesh-torn blood,
Life's current ebbs—blisters no smarch the wound
Passing upon the other side; none heed
The victim's cry, by pain and suffering bound.
Oh, earnest truth, the heart alone can feel
The bitter pang that words can ne'er reveal!

To-morrow! and the numbered hours steal on—
It scarce can speak for those fast falling tears—
I thought the tumult of despair was gone,
For what have I to do with hopes and fears?
A lonely waif, tossed on the desert shore,
The storms of life can buffet me no more.

Is all prepared?—Take down the linnet's cage,
And let imprisoned life have fresh dew'y leaves,
And the feathery free, and sprigs of thyme and sage,
And cooling woodbine from the cottage lanes,
Poor Mary's bird! her dying gift to me,
I'll tend it day and night upon the sea.

"Have you forgotten it must whisper low"
The green sod from our mother's holy grave?
Never a'er so slight Ireland's darling grow!
Our resting place may be beneath the wave,
There, wrap it up, my heart items faint with pain,
I must not look upon it again.

Here is the rose tree from our garden plot,
The pallid primrose from the shady brake,
The violet, and the blue forget-me-not,
And our own shamrock, loved for Ireland's sake,
Another soil must nourish leaf and stem,
The tillage of home can never shine for them.

Oh, that these weary eyes might but be bold
The far off glimmer of the coming morn,
And the dark future for this hour unfold
The fate that to our country shall be born,
My grateful song of joy should never cease—
Lord! let thy servant now depart in peace.

The ship will sail to-morrow! all is o'er,
The hope, prolonged from torturing day to day,
Died like a summer sunset; never more
Shall joy for us arise with golden ray.
The last sad hour draws near—oh God! the last—
Soon shall the midnight of despair be past.

—Irish Vindicator.

THE BIBLE IN THE SCHOOLS.

Lecture by Rev. Dr. McGlynn.

On Sunday evening, Dec. 17, the Rev. Dr. McGlynn lectured in St. Mary's Church, Hunter's Point, N.Y., on "The Bible in Common Schools." Owing to the recent introduction in the public schools of that city of the Bible, the terror was manifested by the parents of the children to learn what were the views of so eminent a divine as Dr. McGlynn on the subject in dispute. The result was that the church was crowded to its utmost capacity, many persons from New York being also present.

The topic of this evening's lecture, to my mind, is one can be further from my intention than to say even a single word in wounding the feelings of any of my fellow-citizens, no matter of what creed or Church, or to increase or revive the unpleasant feelings which have recently been aggrieved in this community. I am not here to make myself responsible in any degree for the unfortunate and unseemly occurrences of the last few weeks. It would be ungracious and impertinent for me to come here to award either praise or censure to either of the parties in the recent unseemly contests, which right-minded men of all creeds and parties, cannot but regret and deplore. I come here simply with some reluctance, to discuss a question in the bearings for almost extensive than the limits of this very small and very young community, and in their respective rights and duties of its taxpayers and its school officers; and I hope to treat the subject in such a manner, that, if I may not convince those who differ with me of the truth of my views, at least they may be satisfied of the honesty and benevolence of my intentions. And I also hope, at least to impress them with the thought that there are many and weighty considerations of justice, liberality and public policy in favor of the views that I shall present, and that those who hold them need be none the less good and faithful citizens and enthusiastic lovers of their country and its institutions. Nay, more; I should hope to convince them that in advocating these views, I show myself

A TRUER AMERICAN

And a better friend of the cardinal principles of American liberty and justice, and of those institutions and principles of government through which these great blessings of our country find expression, and by which they are to be consolidated and perpetuated. I do not, therefore, stand here to-night, as a clergyman of the Catholic Church, asking favors for my co-religionists or demanding their rights, but as an American citizen, and one who is proud to have been born such, arguing in behalf of views that I believe to be of paramount importance to the welfare of my beloved country, and pleading equally for the rights of all people on the land, whether they be Christians or Pagans, Protestants or Catholics, Jews or Deists. I would, if I could take the petty theological hatreds and bickerings which have been so plentiful a source of evil to other nations, out of the field of American politics, at once and forever; and I maintain that a renewed and, a great step to so desirable a consummation would be achieved by

ACTING ALL THE COMMON SCHOOLS OF THE LAND ENTIRELY UNSECTARIAN,

In fact, as they are claimed to be, but too often in theory. Proud as I am of the country, and hopeful for it, of a future without example in the world's history, yet I must confess that at times I am saddened beyond measure at witnessing how unAmerican are many who boast of their American principles and their American birth, and even their love of country; and at witnessing how grossly many such can misunderstand and ignore the principles that we have supposed to be most essential to the American system and most dear and sacred to the American heart. What can be more essential to the true conception of American liberty and justice, and what is more prominent and conspicuous in the Constitution of the United States, and of each individual State, than the great principles of the separation of Church and State, and the cardinal doctrine that, not merely do the Nation and State tolerate all forms of religious belief, as if this were a concession or a favor, but that the State, that no person shall be compelled to attend, erect, or support any place of worship against his consent; that no preference shall be given by law to any religious society; that no interference with the rights of conscience will be permitted; but that, deep and hollow all State laws, and State constitutions, "all men have a natural and indefeasible right to worship Almighty God according to the dictates of their own conscience," and that neither the Nation, nor the State have any right to establish a church, or a religion, or to enforce its practices or tenets in anything that is common and public, or to forbid or restrain them in private? And yet, under these magnificent and almost inspired charters of liberty and justice,

PETTY SCHOOL BOARDS

Throughout the land, that exist only by their authority, in utter defiance of their letter and their spirit, are adopting and enforcing upon the children of the land the tenets and practices of a sect or combination of sects, and converting nearly every common school-house in the land into a temple of sectarian worship, maintaining in them a constant reminder and badge of what should have been long since an obsolete and unspeakable sectarian ascendancy. By antagonized sectarian ascendancy. By the abuse and misinterpretation of the powers, and in deference to the sectarian bigotry, which unfortunately is yet far from dead, are adopting by appeals to that dead and laudable but illogical and unstaken minds of the people, these school boards are permitted, and in too many instances required, to wound the religious feelings, and violate the rights of conscience, and the equal rights and and liberties of a large portion of the people. Whenever the question that the school should open with the reading of the Bible, without "note or comment," they are simply adopting and establishing a religion for all the children who frequent it, and what is especially aggravating, offensive, and unjust to hundreds of thousands of children in these schools, they are adopting, verbatim, an old sectarian war cry that was adopted exclusively from the beginning of those specially fixed as a condemnation of the teaching and practice of the Catholic Church, which teaches that the Bible is not to be read without note or comment, and that the Bible is an incomplete and fragmentary, and frequently obscure record of the Word of God, and liable to be grossly abused and misunderstood unless read in the light and connection of her living practices, traditions and institutions, and interpreted authoritatively by her judicial authority. Again, it is contrary to the teachings and practices of the Catholic Church for her children to join in public worship with those who are out of her communion; and this is not the time and place for me to start the grave and solid reasons of this teaching and practice. And now no one will pretend but that the opening of this school with the reading of the Bible, and, as is frequently the case, the recitation of prayer and the singing of hymns, is, and is intended to be, an act of religion and worship. Then, again, a large number of Christians, Catholics and Protestants, regard it as in many places a false and corrupt version the one in common use, and as deeply and unsoundly imbuing errors contrary to the teaching of their Church. Moreover, by what perversion of logic and reason can these school boards defend the forcing of a Christian Testament and Christian worship upon the Israelites who have here, in common with Christians,

EQUAL RIGHTS AND LIBERTIES,

Civil, social and religious? Why should a Jewish child be compelled to listen to the Testament that proclaims the Messiahship and divinity of one whom they refuse to accept as their Messiah and their Saviour, and that is replete with passages abusive of them and their religion, and to take part in an act of worship in the recitation of the Lord's prayer made by one whom they do not admit to be their Lord. The only justification for this permission or requirement by a school board of any such practices would be in the unanimous consent or request of the parents of all the children, without a single exception. And this was evidently the intention of the framers of the law of the State of New York concerning public schools, where, so far from prescribing the reading of the Bible, they leave it undetermined whether it shall be read at all, and they leave it to the people of the respective neighborhoods to determine, through their local school boards, whether the Bible shall be read, and to determine which, if any, version shall be read in the schools. Every sentiment of justice and liberality should impel such officers to forbid all such practices, if the parents of but one single child of the neighborhood should object. But we are told that there are comparatively few who desire or demand the exclusion of these acts of religious worship from the schools. Now, I assert,

THAT ALL THE JEWS

Throughout the land, who are not indifferent to their rights and liberties, must object, and that the Catholics of the land, so represented by their highest authority in the United States, do emphatically object to the reading of Protestant Bibles or the singing of their hymns or the reading of their prayers in the public schools. And if any Catholic, whether layman or ecclesiastic, should assert a contrary opinion, it is charitably to be presumed that he has either never read or has forgotten the solemn utterance of the Council of Baltimore on this subject. This is a fitness, being the 429th paragraph of the volume of transactions of the Council:

"As it is evident that public education is so conducted in most of the States as to be made worse the cause of heretical sects, and the minds of Catholic children are thus gradually imbued with the principles of these sects, we admonish the pastors that they should use all diligence in providing for the Christian and Catholic education of Catholic children, and they should spare no pains to prevent their using the Protestant version of the Bible, singing the hymns or reciting the prayers of the sects. Therefore they should be vigilant in preventing the introduction into the public schools of such books or practices to the detriment of the faith and religion of the children. They should everywhere resist with constancy and moderation these efforts of the sects and endeavor to obtain from the proper authorities the necessary remedy."

The Rev. lecturer then proceeded to support his views on the school question by quotations from high authorities, who held similar opinions to his. Among others he mentioned the late Bishop Fitzpatrick, of Boston, and read a letter written by that prelate to the local authorities at Boston, in which the reading of the Protestant Bible in the common schools was strongly condemned, and declared most unjust and unfair to Catholic children. We protest and will continue to protest against the conversion of the

HOUSES OF WORSHIP

into PUBLIC SCHOOL EDIFICES INTO PROTESTANT PLACES OF WORSHIP.

It is utterly inconsistent with the genius of the American Constitution and institutions.

But yet, what our forefathers thought themselves incompetent to do, any petty school board of directors assumes. The schools must be protected as purely civil or secular institutions. If you insist upon making the schools houses of worship, divide the funds, and allow each sect to have their own schools; make them common, purely secular. Religious education must be gained elsewhere; teach it in your own families, on your own hearthstones. There must be liberty of conscience assured to the children. He continued to say he protested against reading the Protestant Bible in the schools on account of the difficulty of understanding it, and the facility of misinterpreting it. You, Protestants, be consistent, say you have a majority, therefore I submit to be read. A dangerous argument. Suppose Mahomedans, or even Catholics have a majority, would it be lawful to enforce their particular creeds? You carried a most powerful weapon. The action of the board of Education is an abuse of power. What I ask for myself, I cheerfully give to others. In protesting against the action of the school boards, I am only doing what my duty requires. It is an insult to our faith, and a grievous outrage to us that your version of your Bible should be forced upon our children. The assertion that we object to the Bible is calumny; we object to your deductions from it and cannot trust your influence. The Public Schools must be common property.

The lecture, which took upwards of an hour in its delivery, was listened to throughout with the utmost attention.

In Rome.

The Freeman's Journal says that a career of political infamy and of personal criminality reached its summit of infamy and criminality in the maladministration of Victor Emanuel in the glorious city of the seven hills. Rome at home there were vaigus in the heavens" that appalled many of the stout hearts in our midst. In the darkness of the night the assassin prowled in our streets, were lighted up by flashes of lightning, and the thunder rattled and rolled through the heavens. Rapt were, to say the least, unusual sounds at this season of the year, and we have been watching with some interest the logical developments of the curious atmosphere that has been over the city of Rome. We know not if it was the same as Rome—but, assuredly, we should have little reason to be surprised to learn that the manifestations of the little share it had in the regal demonstration made in the Eternal City. Of course it is necessary to say that the Catholicity of the world will spare it an outrage. Rome is a sick lion, and never will be lain. Rome is the home of Catholic faith—the centre of Catholic unity. The desire to crush it by assault, slumbering, it may be, for a while, will in the end awake and re-demand its life in its own. It may be that for a month, or a year, the impious revelers of his court will hold their merry riots in the streets of Rome—but the memories of these sacred halls will rise up in judgment against the profligate revelers, and their walls will be covered with mystic warnings against the pollutions of the Holy Ghost. There was a significant omen in the fact that, with all his preparations, with all the paid-for gathering of flags, showering down of bouquets along the Corso, with all the cavalcade of senators, and all the laughable pageantry of a closed-up carriage, Victor Emanuel knew what this must mean—they are not less sharp either in courts or on the continent. We can, therefore, understand why he speaks in the way he does of the Pontificate. If he dared—if he felt that the popular heart was with him in his diabolical outrage on a power which had been reverenced for centuries upon centuries, would he have cared to proclaim that even in the abnormal circumstances of his usurping Governments, "Rome will continue to be the peaceful and respected seat of the Pontificate?" The Catholics of the world will accept this declaration—but they will accept it in a sense quite different to that intended by Victor Emmanuel. They will accept it as a declaration that, though held for a while by his lawless hordes, Rome for a while by his lawless hordes, Rome will again, and before long, be the home of the Popes and the Catholic peoples of the universe.

---

The name of Patrick Justice O'Byrne, of Milltview Terrace, Bray, county Dublin, a journalist (of the Dublin Irishman), appears in the list of the insolvent debtors in the Gazette.

CATHOLIC GIFTS

FOR THE

HOLIDAYS.

A splendid variety of CATHOLIC ARTICLES, both useful and ornamental, as well as a complete assortment of

CATHOLIC PUBLICATIONS,

PRAYER BOOKS, BIBLES. &c., &c.,

Specially adapted for

CHRISTMAS & NEW-YEAR'S GIFTS.

FOR SALE AT

FLOOD'S CATHOLIC BOOKSTORE,

605 MARKET STREET.

Nucleus Hotel Building.

de18

T. CANTY,

Merchant Tailor

37 Sutter street, near Montgomery,

SAN FRANCISCO.

Suits of California clothes made to the latest style, at the ruling prices. ja6 1f

SHAW'S

PECTORAL COUGH SYRUP,

For the Cure and Relief of all

PULMONARY COMPLAINTS.

For sale at SHAW'S DRUG STORES, corner Second and Folsom, and Sutter and Powell streets, San Francisco.

EDUCATIONAL.

SAINT MARY'S COLLEGE

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

Conducted by the Christian Brothers.

Offers every facility for answering thoroughly Education, whether Classical, Scientific or Commercial.

The Commercial course has been established for the convenience of those who wish to acquire a good practical education in a short time and cheaply.

While proper care is bestowed on every branch taught in the College, our two principal objects are Religion and Elocution. The daily exercises of the Students in Grammar, Composition and Literature are publicly and carefully corrected in the class room.

TERMS PER SCHOLASTIC YEAR.

(Payable half-yearly in advance).

Board, Tuition and Washing.....$250 00
Entrance Fee.....10 00
Physician's Fee and Medicines.....10 00
Vacation at the College.....60 00
Use of Bedding.....10 00
Baggage, Music and drawing form extra charges.

Studies will be resumed on the 1st of August.

BRO. B. JUSTIN, President.

jy29

EDUCATIONAL.

ST. CATHERINE'S ACADEMY,

CONDUCTED BY

THE SISTERS OF ST. DOMINIC,

BENICIA, CALIFORNIA.

THIS INSTITUTION AFFORDS EVERY FACILITY for the acquisition of a refined and solid education. The Academy was founded in 1856, and ranks among the most successful Educational Establishments in the State.

The course of Instruction embraces the English, French, Spanish and Latin Languages, Rhetoric, Philosophy, Mathematics, Ancient and Modern History, Biography, Mythology, Astronomy, Geography, Algebra, Geometry, Use of Globes; Vocal Music, Instrumental Music, including Piano, Guitar and Organ; Drawing, Painting in Water Colors and in Crayon; Tapestry, Plain and Ornamental Needlework, etc., etc.

TERMS.

Board and Tuition (payable half-yearly, in advance).....$225
Washing.....12 50
Entrance Fee.....10

EXTRAS.

Piano and use of instrument (payable half-yearly)...$30
Harp.....40
Guitar.....30
Vocal Music in Class.....10
Drawing and Painting.....10
Drawing Pencils and Crayons.....5
Painting in Water Colors.....10
Board during vacation.....30

School Books at Current Prices.

Each young lady is required to be provided with four dresses, besides the uniform dress of the Institution, one of which must be white, for graduation; one, a navy blue delaine; the changes of dress for home, say, a plain merino and a plaid poplin; four sheets, four pillow cases, four counterpanes, four towels, four toilet quilts, one pair table napkins; a knife, silver fork and spoon, one pair of blankets, one mattress, one quilt, spread, fork and spoon, all marked with white, the other with green; also a pair of rubbers, a pair of overshoes, a pair of carpet slippers and passage shawls.

Pupils will be received at any time during the year, the first commencing August 16th, the second, January 1st.

Pupils of any religious persuasion will be received, but the rules of the Institution will require all pupils to be present at the regular religious exercises of the Church.

Parents may select the commencement of a term for the entrance of their children, but the charges will be computed for such portion of it as may remain. No deduction will be made for any time less than a month withdrawn during the session, except in case of sickness.

Parents may rest assured that every attention, consistent with the strictest economy, will be paid to the comfort of the pupils. Every young ladies will be subject to the constant supervision of a Sister.

All correspondence of young ladies will be submitted to the inspection of the Superiors. Letters of parents will be carefully attended to.

Books conveying passengers to Benicia leave Broadway Wharf, San Francisco, at 7 and 9 a.m., and 2 and 4 p.m. on Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday at 10 a.m. Returning, leave Benicia at 7 a.m. and 2 p.m. Carriages in attendance on the arrival of the boats.

Application for admission may be made to the Superior at the Academy, or to REV. J. O'KEEFE, D. D., Pastor of SUPERIOR.

BENICIA, CAL.

jy29

COLLEGE OF NOTRE DAME,

SAN JOSE, CALIFORNIA.

YOUNG LADIES' INSTITUTE.

THIS INSTITUTION, WHICH IS INCORPORATED according to the laws of the State of California, will commence its next session on Monday, the Twenty first Annual Session on Monday, August 21, 1871. The course of studies embraces all the branches of a thorough education.

TERMS:

Entrance, to be paid but once.....$15 00
Board and Tuition, per session of 10 months.....150 00
Washing, per quarter.....12 00

Physicians fee, if any, to be paid by parents. Payments are required to be made half a session in advance. Parents will be informed in case their children are behind hand in their studies, and a written report will be presented at the opening of the Session. Each pupil will be required to be provided with a bed, bedding, washing, etc., etc.

Visiting Physician.....$10 00
Physician and Surgeon.....20 00
Music (Vocal and Instrumental).....40 00
Use of Piano.....10 00
Painting in Water Colors.....10 00
Painting in Oil Colors.....20 00
Painting on Velvet.....10 00
Drawing.....10 00
Use of Bed and Bedding.....10 00
Washing, if extra.....12 00
Fee for graduation.....10 00

Payments must be made semi-annually in advance. Parents will pay for meals at attendance, and supply bed and bedding.

Money will not be advanced by the College; for the purchase of necessary articles, a sufficient sum must be deposited.

For further particulars apply to

REV. J. J. O'KEEFE, D. D., Pastor of

SAN FRANCISCO.

jy29

ST. VINCENT'S SCHOOL,

THIS INSTITUTION IS SITUATED IN SANTA Barbara, a short distance from the Mission, in the most delightful and healthy part of the city. The buildings are extensive, and the location is large and airy, and will be opened on the 15th June, 1871.

TERMS:

Invariably half-yearly in advance:

Board, tuition, bed, bedding, washing, etc.....$100 00
Music.....20 00
Piano, and use of instrument.....20 00
Drawing.....10 00
Use of bath.....5 00

For further particulars apply to

SISTER IN CHARITY
SUPERIOR Santa Barbara Cal.

jy29

ST. VINCENT'S COLLEGE,

LOS ANGELES, CAL.

THIS INSTITUTION, CHARTERED ACCORDing to the laws of the State of California, endowed by its munificent founder, is situated in the city of Los Angeles, proverbial for the salubrity of its climate, and conducted by the CLERGY OF THE DIOCESE, composed of the FATHERS AND BROTHERS of the CONGREGATION OF ST. VINCENT DE PAUL, of the Province of St. Joseph, U. S. A. Its aim and objects, as well as the intellectual and moral training of youth, are identical with those of every College in which are united the Classical and Commercial courses, which, though strictly necessary, still are not the only ones.

STUDIES.

The course of studies embraces a full course of English and Classical Literature, Mathematics, Natural Sciences, Moral Philosophy, Rhetoric, Logic, and also, a Commercial Department, to prepare young men for the duties of practical business.

TERMS.

For Board, Lodging and Tuition, per Scholar.....$200 00
Washing, per session.....20 00
Physician's Fee and Medicines.....10 00
Violin, Guitar, Flute, etc., each, per Month.....4 00
Use of Piano.....10 00

Those who desire to play on any of the above named instruments will have the privilege of hiring the same at the instrument free of charge, otherwise their will be a charge of 5 per month.

REMARKS.

Payments are to be made invariably half yearly in advance. No student will be received for less than half a term. No deduction will be made for any time except in case of protracted illness of duration of more than one month, and sufficient notice is given during the term, as to the expense incurred by parents or guardians, and a sufficient excuse be rendered by the parents.

Physicians Fees and medicines will be paid by the parents.

The Scholastic Year is divided into two sessions of five months each, beginning respectively on the 16th of August and the 1st of January. The Annual Vacation will commence on the 15th of June, and end on the 15th of August.

For further particulars, apply to

Rev. JAMES MARTIN, President.

jy29

FRANCISCAN COLLEGE,

SANTA BARBARA.....CALIFORNIA.

THE FIFTH SESSION OF THIS INSTITUTION, under the direction of the Order of St. Francis, will commence on August 15th.

All the studies will be pursued, viz.: a good English, Mathematical, Classical and Philosophical Education, with the addition of the Spanish language, so necessary in California and thereby bring its advantages within the reach of all.

TERMS:

Entrance Fee, to be paid but once.....$10 00
Tuition, Board and Washing, per session, of 10 months.....150 00
Music, Drawing and Painting form extra charges.
Physician's Fee and Medicines to be paid by parents who spend vacation at the College will be charged $20.

Parents are required to be made half a session in advance, and to be informed in case their children are behind hand in their studies.

Each pupil will be required to be provided with a bed, bedding, etc., etc.

Payments must be made semi-annually in advance.

The object of the institution is to give a good English, Mathematical, Classical and Philosophical education, with the addition of the Spanish language, so necessary in California and thereby bring its advantages within the reach of all.

TERMS.

Entrance Fee, to be paid but once.....$10 00
Tuition, Board and Washing, per session, of 10 months.....150 00
Music, Drawing and Painting form extra charges.
Physician's Fee and Medicines to be paid by parents who spend vacation at the College will be charged $20.

Parents are required to be made half a session in advance, and to be informed in case their children are behind hand in their studies.

Each pupil will be required to be provided with a bed, bedding, etc., etc.

Payments must be made semi-annually in advance.

For further particulars apply to

REV. J. J. O'KEEFE, D. D., Pastor of

SAN FRANCISCO.

jy29

GROCERIES, WINES AND LI

WILLIAM B. DOLA

185 Third Street.....

Importer and Dealer, Wholesale and

Irish Whis

Imported direct from Ireland.

HAS ALWAYS ON HAND a assortment of California Wines of sup that, which he will dispose of at the convenience of families.

All orders left at the store, 185 Third promptly attended to, and delivered free any part of the city.

JOHN FLANAGAN &

Importers and Jobbers of

Fine Brandies, Wines, Liqu

Fire-proof Store, 421 Front street, bet. Clay

SAN FRANCISCO.

Foreign Liquors in bond. Fine Brandies,
Port, Claret, etc., sold in quantities to suit

Also, dealers in entire California Wines

ja8 1f

M. H. REIS

Kelly & E

IMPORTERS AND DEALERS IN

FINE WINES AND LI

No. 604 Battery

New Jersey.

E. Commins

(Successors to P. Riley & Co.,)

WHOLESALE LIQUOR MER

my6 No. 806 FRONT

F. & P. J. CAS

Importers and Wholesale Deale

Wines & Liq

NO. 502 FRONT STREE

SAN FRANCISCO.

Sole Proprietors of CANNIN'S
BRANDY BITTERS.

A. P. HOTALING &

IMPORTERS AND DEALERS I

FOREIGN AND DOME

AGENTS FOR THE J. H. CU

WINES AND LIQ

AGENTS FOR THE

OLD BOURBON WH

C. P. MOORMAN & CO., Distil

LOUISVILLE, KENTUCK

OWING TO THE DESERVED REP
of the celebrated brand of Whisky
Moorman & Co., we have been in concealing the imitations of the which are now flooding the market two purchase and use the bottle
Moorman & Co.

To guard as far as possible the trade we have had the bottle made with the Moorman & Co. blown in the glass
we are the sole Agents for the

A. P. HOTALING &
n11 421 Front street, near

SHEPERD'S SH

No. 311 Pine street, near

SAN FRANCISCO

Finest Brands of Wines, L

CHIARS, CONSTANTLY ON

HOT LUNCH FROM 11 TO

THOS. SHEPERD

PAINTS, OILS, G

WASON & MOR

Successors to J. R. KELLY

PAINTING AND DECORA

HOUSE AND SIGN PA

GILDING AND GLA

Imitations of Wood and

Banners, Flags and Military Bann
to order.

PAINTS, OILS,

TURPENTINE, VARNI

BRUSHES, Gl

No. 38 CALIFORNIA S

Two doors below Davis street, Sa

SULLIVAN, KELLY &

Northwest corner Pine and

Where they offer for sa

THE LARGEST STOCK

PAINTS,
OILS,
GLA

ETC., ETC., ON THE PACIFIC

AT THE LOWEST MARKE

101, 103 and 105 FRONT

ja8 110 PINE STREET

CHANCE

CRYSTAL METAL O

To Architects, Builders and

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

"We have [illegible] the Crystal Metal Roofing of KELLY & CO., of San Francisco, and find it to be a valuable addition to the list of fire-proof roofings."—[illegible] Bulletin.

STAINED AND

GLASS WOR

JOHN M'LLOR

EVERY DESCRIPTION OF STAINE

ELED, EMBOSS and

Churches, Private [illegible], Saloons,

Railroad Cars, etc.

tion. Particular attention to [illegible]

We invite the [illegible] to examine our

...e English Workingman our Friend?

...is a grave question, not only for the ...le in England, but also for the Irish ... whether the working men of this ... are really our friends or not. It is ... fact that affects us in many ways, ... much to be said on both sides. ... the English workingman is or is ... friend. We can all remember the ... he displayed with the withdrawal ... Irish meal apply;" and a few ... No Irish meal apply!" is still a ... and in many a respectable ... in Great Britain. But with the mon... ... have nothing to do at present. ... may be actuated by a sense of ... they may be actuated by a sense of ... they will or confess we have never ex... in their practice. They will gravely ... the words of Mr. Justin McCarthy, "that ... the English working-... ... only is strength, and he ... enough to respect unions and ... He knows from experience ... old maxim which is current ... that Ireland is disaffected, ... he asks why? He may still regard ... heaven to suppose that aught of good could arise from the landlords of Ireland. ... From the hour when she gave her... self up to its bloody frenzy of Protestantism, through the endless ... monise has coursed through her veins, bowling, remorseless, from the ... never calm unless an iron hand ... upon her throat, an iron heel upon ... knows no leadership but the sword. ... Rome's last days. Her society is utterly ... corrupt, but the rottenness of the ... sermon bombs have dictated to her the ... terms of a disgraceful peace. Her ... is the work of her own ... and her people are revelling and ... feasting by the light of the flames ... of her glory. Faction is still rife ... in her councils; over her prostrate ... Reds snarl and contend, not for the ... sance, but for the form of government. ... Possessed by this idea, no man thinks of ... leadership but the settling of his ... country; let her perish, the reader of ... is willing—chief of his ... creed.—Temple Bar.

T. J. BRODERICK,

Late Broderick & Keat,

IMPORTER AND DEALER IN

NO. 24 THIRD STREET,

Next door, two doors below Stevenson.

T. J. B. begs to announce to old friends and the public that he has opened a large stock of

Fashionable Boots and Shoes,

Always on hand, a complete assortment of Gents', Ladies' and Children's Boots and Shoes of every description, including the Patent Rubber Shoe. All warranted.

Please call and judge for yourself, at n11 1f No. 24 Third Street.

THE

MODEL MAGAZINE OF AMERICA.

The Largest in Form, the Largest in Circulation, and the only original

FASHION MAGAZINE.

DEMOREST'S ILLUSTRATED MONTHLY

Is universally acknowledged to be the Model Fashion Magazine of America. Each number contains a Splendid Chromo, "Jack's Sea Pet," and a Steel Engraving, "Fashion Illustrated," and a large and elegant Lithograph of Fashions, and over 1,000 Illustrations of the Latest Styles for all ages, all of which can be cut out from the Magazine. Only $3 a year.

W. JENNINGS DEMOREST,
473 Broadway, New York.

☞ A Splendid Offer to Our Subscribers.

We will send the above popular and valuable premium for one subscription to any paper in the country with THE MONITOR, for $3 50; or for one dollar and fifty cents we will send Demorest's Monthly for a year, and both Chromos.

Send for a specimen copy of the MONITOR, the Magazine and the Chromos will be promptly forwarded.

THE EVENING POST,

A DAILY NEWSPAPER.

HENRY GEORGE, EDITOR.

A. H. RAPP, Business Manager.

PRICE, ONE CENT!

Price to Agents and Dealers, One half Cent.

Mail Subscribers, 75 cents per month, or $9 per year.

Delivered to the trade in all parts of the city at the rate of 12,000 copies will be printed for city circulation.

Advertisements 10 cents per line.

Communications, with Montgomery street, above Clay.

HINTON, RAPP & CO.,
Publishers.

de4

SEWING MACHINES.

WM. B. HIGGINS,

NO. 240 THIRD STREET, (WEST SIDE)

Bet. Howard & Folsom, San Francisco.

WM. HAS HAD THE ADVANTAGE OF FIVE years' practical experience in the manufacturing Sewing Machine establishments in the Eastern States, and his ability having now been fully tested by himself, guarantees entire satisfaction to all who may favor him with their patronage. Repairing and Cleaning Sewing Machines on the most reasonable terms. Satisfaction guaranteed.

☞ All sewing Machines ordered "C.O.D." will be promptly attended to.

☞ Sewing Machine Needles and Oil for sale.

☞ Machines always on hand for sale at the lowest possible rates.

my20 1y

TROY BELLS.

Old Established Troy Bell Foundry.

TROY, N.Y., Publishers and Dealers in

A LARGE ASSORTMENT OF CHURCH, School and other Bells constantly on hand. Also, every Fire Alarm and other Bell of any size required. Also, Steam Whistles, Chimes and Peals. Metal copper and Tin. Hoop, with Mandrels, Moulds, Screws, Clamps, the best and most durable ever used. All Bells warranted satisfactory.

Large Illustrated Catalogues sent free upon application to

JONES & CO.,
Troy, N.Y.

my27 1y

A VOIR QUOI?

A [illegible] question, asking [illegible] dentistry, proposing [illegible] and tried to gain every [illegible] remedy has failed, [illegible] has failed to [illegible] Dr. [illegible] will be at all hours [illegible] to his fellow sufferers. J. H. [illegible] 78 Nassau street, New York.

de18 1y

MEDICAL, ETC.

Every year increases the popularity of this valuable Hair Preparation; which is due to merit alone. We can assure our old patrons that it is kept up to its high standard; and it fully up to its high standard; and it is the only reliable and perfected preparation for restoring Gray or Faded Hair to its youthful color, making it soft, lustrous, and silken. The scalp, by its use, becomes white and clean. It removes all eruptions and dandruff. It removes all eruptions and dandruff, and, by its tonic properties, prevents the hair from falling out, as it stimulates and nourishes the hair-glands. By its use, the hair grows thicker and capillary glands to their normal vigor, and will create a new growth, except in extreme old age. It is the most economical Hair Dressing ever used, as it requires fewer applications, and gives the hair a splendid, glossy appearance. A. A. Hayes, M.D., State Assayer of Massachusetts, says, "The constituents are pure, and carefully selected for excellent quality; and I consider it the Best Preparation for its intended purposes."

Sold by all Druggists and Fancy Goods Dealers in Medicines.

Price One Dollar.

Buckingham's Dye
FOR THE WHISKERS.

As our Renewer in many cases requires too long a time, and too much care, to restore gray or faded Whiskers, we have prepared this dye, in one preparation; which will quickly and effectually accomplish this result. It is easily applied, and produces a color which will neither rub nor wash off. Sold by all Druggists. Price Fifty Cents.

Manufactured by R. P. HALL & CO., NASHUA, N.H.

Ayer's
Sarsaparilla

Is widely known as one of the most effectual remedies ever discovered for purifying the blood. It is almost the first of years, with a constantly growing popularity, based on its intrinsic value, and sustained by its wonderful cures of Scrofula, and all scrofulous diseases of the blood, such as the scrofulous Ulcers, Eruptions, and external manifestations of the skin, Tumors, Blotches, Boils, Pimples, Pustules, Sores, St. Anthony's Fire, Rose or Erysipelas, Salt Rheum, Scald Head, Ringworm, and other disfigurations of the Uterus, Stomach, and Liver. It also cures other complaints, to which it is not generally supposed to be applicable, as Dropsy, Dyspepsia, Heart Disease, Neuralgia, Hemicrania, Fits, Neuralgia, Headache, Debility, and Leucorrhœa, when they are manifestations of the scrofulous poison.

It is an excellent restorer of health and strength in the Spring. By renewing the appetite and toning the digestive organs, it diminishes the depression and listless languor of the season. Even where no disease appears, people feel better, and live longer, for cleansing the blood. The system moves on with renewed vigor and a new lease of life.

PREPARED BY

Dr. J. C. AYER & CO., Lowell, Mass.,

Practical and Analytical Chemists.

SOLD BY ALL DRUGGISTS EVERYWHERE.

J. O'KANE,

Manufacturer and Importer of

SADDLES & HARNESS

Fine Horse Clothing, etc., etc.

No. 617 KEARNY STREET,

Between Black and Sutter.....San Francisco.

Repairing done with neatness and dispatch. Orders punctually attended to.

DR. JULIEN PERRAULT,

MEMBER OF THE MEDICAL FACULTY OF Paris, Graduate of the University of Paris, Ex-Surgeon and Physician of the 2d, John Rapp's Regiment, Late Physician to the Pacific Railroad Co., Late Physician to the Pacific Mail Steamship Co., Late Physician to the Pacific Mail Steamship Co., Late Physician to the Pacific Mail Steamship

TELEGRAPHIC.

Eastern.

CLEVELAND'S testimony before the Senate Custom-House Investigating Committee is not flattering to the management of that institution at New York, whereby there as a piece of partisan machinery to elevate one faction and punish the other; to control conventions by rewarding political bummers. Other witnesses testified to implicate persons high in authority at Washington, as parties to the upholding of the general order business, even to the extent of dismissing an honest Collector who refused to sanction it. One witness said Grinnell was removed on this account.

AT Washington the late change in the Spanish Ministry is regarded as hostile to a conciliatory policy towards Cuba.

NEW ORLEANS, January 1.—There is great excitement in political circles here. Yesterday, in the House of Representatives, the Warmoth men attempted forcibly to oust the Speaker from the chair, but were prevented by an armed force of the latter's friends, who were held as a reserve in his private office. This morning the Warmothites had two hundred policemen and a detachment of the City Guard around the Hall, while the Speaker had over two hundred colored troops, obtained from General Ramsey, stationed at the Custom House. Just as the Legislature was about to assemble, the United States Marshal appeared with a warrant for the arrest of Governor Warmoth, Lieutenant-Governor Pinchback, four Senators and two Representatives, and the Superintendent and two Captains of Police, sworn out before the United States Commissioner under the Ku-Klux Act, and charging conspiracy, etc. While the Governor and his fellow prisoners were before the Commissioner the Speaker called the House to order, and a resolution was passed declaring the seats of the six Warmoth men vacant, and filling them with opponents of the Governor, and the House then adjourned. Meanwhile the ousted officials gave bail, and at 5 P. M. the Governor assembled a quorum of members of the House, who proceeded to pass resolutions declaring the action of the House in the morning null and void. They declared the Speaker's chair vacant, elected another Speaker, and put the House in charge of the Sergeant-at-Arms, with orders to admit no one until order is restored, and then adjourned to that hour. It is feared that a conflict will take place between the two factions to-morrow.

NEW ORLEANS, January 6.—The political muddle continues.

WASHINGTON, January 6.—The President is in constant telegraphic communication with the Secretary of War and others with regard to Louisiana affairs. It is authoritatively stated that the Administration will not interfere in the local difficulties there any further than may be necessary to preserve peace.

Yesterday, Acting Secretary-of-the-Treasury Hartley, inquired of Collector Casey whether the revenue cutter Wilderness was used to prevent a quorum of the Legislature by not landing at their city. Collector Casey's reply was, "suspend judgment until you hear further, as false reports have been sent to Washington." Yesterday he responded that Casey's report was not specific, and he repeatedly telegraphed Casey to order the Wilderness to return to New Orleans at once, and to advise the Lieutenant-Governor. Casey replied that the arrival of "The Wilderness is here now, and has not been out of the city."

NEW YORK, January 8.—A Herald Philadelphia dispatch states that in the course of a conversation at the residence of ex-Secretary Borie, last evening, the correspondent was informed that President Grant had demanded an apology from Spain about the Virginius affair. Monitors are now being fitted out at Philadelphia, but are not intended to proceed to Spain, unless that Government refuses to apologize and pay reparation for the outrage on the Florida. The President does not think the outrage an intentional insult on the part of Spain, but deems it rather the result of rashness of the subordinate officers of that nation. The President and Cabinet Sickles had a long conversation on the Spanish difficulty. The President is more than ever determined to exact ample apology.

Albany specials state that Senators do not appear serious that O'Donnegal for the month of December, from Wells, Fargo & Co.'s express cars, 39,803 pounds, valued at $961,188 96. The total bullion shipments for 1871 was 6,612 bars, 135,000 pounds avoir., and worth $1,952,412 06. The shipment from the Gold Hill office of Wells, Fargo & Co., are not included in the above, including the bars from Gold Hill mint the total is $12,500,000. The shipments from this port in this year exceeds that of 1866 by $3,400,000.

British Columbia.

The Standard of the 23d ult., says: The Paine claim, on Germanseen creek, produced for three hands this season $19,000 in gold dust, and there was but little experience nected therewith. Besides this, specimens of nearly pure gold, silver, copper and platinum have been taken out of the claim.

Idaho.

From the Owyhee Avalanche of Dec. 23d we cut the following:

During the past week a rich strike has been made in the 11th level of the Elmore 150 feet north of the old pitch in the mine. Fifty or sixty dollar ore with a two foot vein.

The Golden Chariot is yielding fine looking ore from both the 4th and eigh levels. Additional bands have been put to work.

The Idaho World of December 21st says: During November the bank of Idaho, at Co., shipped below, gold bars of the aggregate value of $100,939 17.

Montana.

Work on the gold quartz ledge, "Red Bluff," below Sterling, in the Hot Spring District, is being vigorously prosecuted with good results.

The Helena Gazette of December 23th says: The Pittsburg mill has been started up on the Jaw Bone lode in the vicinity of St. Louis with good success, producing $1,200 from fifty tons of rock.

Utah.

The Salt Lake Tribune of January 4th says that the Lexington mine which is situated in Little Cottonwood Cañon, about half a league from the city, was sold yesterday for $75,000 to Samuel Sloo, Phillips, of London. The former owners were General Connor, Moore, Pierson and Lawrence.

The Lexington is being worked right along, notwithstanding the bad weather, and it is expected that by spring it will be in full turnout ont a large amount of rich ore. The snow is deep in the cañon, but the energy of the miners and citizens at Central and Alta has kept open the road, and it is believed that travel and transportation of ores will be kept up. Considerable ore is now leaving the mines daily on sleighs.

On Saturday, Dec. 30, the examinations and exercises came off at St. Patrick's school, Sonora. The pupils acquitted themselves very well indeed, reflecting much credit on themselves, and the manager of the school. Father McNally returns thanks to those who placed the two first prizes and the many other valuable gifts on the Christmas tree for him.

The west side of the State Capitol building is rapidly sinking.

Nevada.

The smelting works of Hosel & Co., at Lincoln, have started up again, and at last accounts were turning out a ton every two hours.

A rich strike was made in the Uncle Sam mine, Eureka district, on the 25th ult. The ore is represented as a very high order of grey carbonates, and the indications are that a large body of ore will develop into an unusual size and permanency.

The Virginia City Enterprise of December 24th says that Wells, Fargo & Co., have shipped since December 17th, for Meadow Valley Co., 19 bars consigned to New York, valued at $7,853 31.

The Ely & Raymond mines is improving daily, the lower level now being over 240 feet of ore in length, of good quality.

The Virginia City Enterprise of December 24th, says: "Colonel Bob" has gone to Reno for a month of December, from Wells, Fargo & Co.'s express cars, 39,803 pounds, valued at $961,188 96. The total bullion shipments for 1871 was 6,612 bars, 135,000 pounds avoir., and worth $1,952,412 06. The shipment from the Gold Hill office of Wells, Fargo & Co., are not included in the above, including the bars from Gold Hill mint the total is $12,500,000. The shipments from this port in this year exceeds that of 1866 by $3,400,000.

British Columbia.

The Standard of the 23d ult., says: The Paine claim, on Germanseen creek, produced for three hands this season $19,000 in gold dust, and there was but little experience nected therewith. Besides this, specimens of nearly pure gold, silver, copper and platinum have been taken out of the claim.

Idaho.

From the Owyhee Avalanche of Dec. 23d we cut the following:

During the past week a rich strike has been made in the 11th level of the Elmore 150 feet north of the old pitch in the mine. Fifty or sixty dollar ore with a two foot vein.

The Golden Chariot is yielding fine looking ore from both the 4th and eigh levels. Additional bands have been put to work.

The Idaho World of December 21st says: During November the bank of Idaho, at Co., shipped below, gold bars of the aggregate value of $100,939 17.

Montana.

Work on the gold quartz ledge, "Red Bluff," below Sterling, in the Hot Spring District, is being vigorously prosecuted with good results.

The Helena Gazette of December 23th says: The Pittsburg mill has been started up on the Jaw Bone lode in the vicinity of St. Louis with good success, producing $1,200 from fifty tons of rock.

Utah.

The Salt Lake Tribune of January 4th says that the Lexington mine which is situated in Little Cottonwood Cañon, about half a league from the city, was sold yesterday for $75,000 to Samuel Sloo, Phillips, of London. The former owners were General Connor, Moore, Pierson and Lawrence.

The Lexington is being worked right along, notwithstanding the bad weather, and it is expected that by spring it will be in full turnout ont a large amount of rich ore. The snow is deep in the cañon, but the energy of the miners and citizens at Central and Alta has kept open the road, and it is believed that travel and transportation of ores will be kept up. Considerable ore is now leaving the mines daily on sleighs.

On Saturday, Dec. 30, the examinations and exercises came off at St. Patrick's school, Sonora. The pupils acquitted themselves very well indeed, reflecting much credit on themselves, and the manager of the school. Father McNally returns thanks to those who placed the two first prizes and the many other valuable gifts on the Christmas tree for him.

Foreign.

LONDON, January 4.—Derwage and Hathbone, members of Parliament, in speeches yesterday evening, referred to the Washington Treaty in terms of high praise, and advocated an alliance between Great Britain and the United States. The Irish is the leading topic of the journals at the present time. The Advertiser alone opposes it, declaring that the English Commissioners have been outwitted; that England is bound hand and foot. It says that the Upper House should award all the United States claim, and would be less injurious to England than settlement. The Observer concludes with an appeal to withdraw from a treaty which is a disgrace to this country.

An important demonstration was made by Irishmen at Liverpool last night in favor of Home Rule for Ireland. Smithers, editor of the Dublin Nation, addressed the meeting, which was enthusiastic, and orderly.

LONDON, January 5.—The ship Dawn, from Liverpool for San Francisco, was wrecked yesterday off Holyhead. Five of the crew only were saved.

LONDON, January 6.—General Andrew Porter, formerly of the United States Army, died at Boscastle yesterday.

LONDON, January 10.—There was a demonstration in Limerick to-night by the supporters of Home Rule and the reception of P. J. Smyth, Isaac Butt, and other prominent advocates of the movement. The procession numbered 30,000 persons, bearing many banners, and was accompanied by numerous bands of music. It marched through the principal streets, and halted at Daniel O'Connell's monument, where a number of speeches were made. Butt spoke of the many wrongs inflicted upon Ireland, and urged raising the oppressed nation from the dust. He was severe in his denunciation of the Marquis of Hartington and the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland. A banquet was given to Butt this evening; 200 persons were present. Butt announced that he would fight the Home Rule campaign in the House of Commons, and claim for Ireland industrial and municipal privileges. The national English anthem was hissed.

THE HOUSEWIFE.

PUMPKIN PIE.—Three tablespoons pumpkin, stewed and strained; three tablespoons sugar, three crackers rolled fine. Fill the bowl with milk and flour to taste. This is sufficient for one pie.

CHILDREN'S CAKE.—The following is both an excellent and a safe remedy: Take onions, slice them thin, and sprinkle loaf sugar thickly over them; put in the night and simmer until the juice is thoroughly mixed with the sugar. It makes a thick syrup, very nice to take. Give a teaspoonful as seems to be needed, four or five times a day.

REMEDY FOR CORNS.—Mr. Rose, a merchant of San Diego, announces that these creators of so much torment in the world, can easily be cured by applying a good coat of gum arabic mucilage every evening on going to bed. He had them forty years, and tried nearly all the corn remedies in existence without relief, until he tried the above, which readily cured him in a few weeks.

LEMON FOR A COUGH.—Roast the lemon very carefully, without burning it; when it is thoroughly hot cut and squeeze into a cup upon three lumps of sugar, finely powdered. Take a spoonful whenever your cough troubles you. It is good and agreeable to the taste. Rarely has it been known to fail giving relief.

TO REMOVE CORNS.—When color on a fabric has been accidentally or otherwise destroyed by acid, ammonia is applied to neutralize the acid, and in many instances that of chloroform will in almost all cases restore it to its natural color. The application of ammonia is common, but that of chloroform is not generally known. Chloroform will also remove paint from a garment of any description.

A RELISH FOR BREAKFAST OR LUNCH.—Take the paper of a pound of cheese, good, fresh; cut it up in thin slices and put in a spider, turning over it a large cupful of sweet milk and a piece of butter the size of dry mustard, a dash of pepper, a little salt and a piece of butter as large as a butternut; stir the mixture all the time. Have on hand three Boston crackers finely powdered or rolled, and sprinkle them in gradually; as soon as they are stirred in, turn the whole into a deep dish and serve hot.

COOKING RABBITS.—Many people admire rabbits roasted, but except the head. This is best stuffed. While roasting baste frequently with butter, dredge it with flour and manage to keep the skin on the roast. The head and liver may be boiled. Split the head, take out the brains, wash them with the liver and add to the gravy. Wine and jelly are liked by some people in the gravy. Keep the rabbit in weak salt and water at least twelve hours, if the weather will permit, before cooking. We prefer rabbit stewed. It is a daintier dish.

A HEFTHER BAKER'S RECIPE FOR BREAD.—Take an earthen vessel larger at the top than at the bottom, put in one pint of warm water, one and a half pounds of flour and a half pint of malt yeast; mix well together and set away in a warm place until it rises and falls again, which will be in from three to five hours. Then put in a large spoonful of salt into two quarts of water and mix with the above rising; then put in nine pounds of flour and work it well; let it rise until light; then make it into loaves. New and runny flour requires one-fourth more salt than old or dry flour. Bake as usual.

ISLAND ROLLS.—Two pounds of fine flour, one tea spoonful of fine salt, one dessertspoonful of best carbonate of soda, white sugar, eggs, and some sour buttermilk. Mix with the flour, the salt, sugar and carbonate of soda. Then beat the whites of the eggs into a strong froth, with sufficient buttermilk and mix them up the consistency of thin cake batter. Bake in patty pans, carried from a moderate oven.

Wholesale Market Report.

MONTGOMERY STREET, SAN FRANCISCO, THURSDAY, Jan. 11, 1872.

FLOUR.—The local demand continues fair, with limited inquiry for export. Prices, however, are unchanged since our weekly review. We quote standard brands of superfine at $4 @ $4 25 per barrel, as follows: Superfine, $3 75@$4, and extra at $4 @ $4 25 per bbl.

WHEAT.—Has been in limited demand, almost the only inquiry being for milling purposes, but prices show a slight advance. Quotable at $1 42½@ $1 50 per ctl.

BARLEY.—The Market has remained quiet during the week under review, at nominal prices. Quotable at the close at $1 @ $1 05 for feed, $1 10 @ $1 20 for brewing.

OATS.—The demand has continued moderate for this grain during the past week; prices, however, are without especial change. Quotable at the close at $1 40@$1 60 per ctl.

HAY.—The receipts have been light during the past week, and the market is firm at $17@22 for ordinary wild oat and tame oat hay, and $20@$25 for choice timothy.

CORN.—Quotable at $1 @ $1 05 for cargo lots.

RYE.—Quotable at $1 @ $1 05 per ctl.

CORNMEAL.—Sells at $2 @$2 25 @ $2 50 for fresh ground.

BRAN.—Following are the current rates: Bags, $15 @ $16; Boxes, $20 @ $21 25; Pkgs, $18 @ $19; Middlings, $20 @ $22 50 per ton.

POTATOES.—The market has been quiet and dull, and prices are nothing like as high as they were some weeks ago. Quotable at $1 @ $1 25 per ctl, as to quality.

ONIONS.—Quotable at $1 @ $1 25 per ctl.

BEANS.—Quotable at $1 @ $1 25 per ctl.

MIDDLINGS.—We quote feed at $42 50 @ ton from store.

BUCKWHEAT.—Quotable at $2 @ $2 50 per ctl.

BARLEY MEAL.—Quotable at $2 per ctl.

Hay—California at 15@16c; Oregon, 13@15c; Eastern, 15@16c; Eastern Timothy, 16@17c; Eastern do, 16@17c.

Bacon—California, at 12½@13½c; Oregon, 12½@13c; Eastern sugar-cured Breakfast, 13@15c, do clear 12½@13c.

Lard—California, 12½@13½c; Eastern, 12½@13c; do in tierces 12½@13c.

FRESH MEATS.

Beef—First quality, 10@11 cts per lb; for second do, 9@10c; third do, 8@9c.

Mutton—At 12@13c per lb.

Lamb—Here 9 lb.

Pork—Dressed, grain-fed, 8@9c; corn fed, grain-fed, 8@9c per lb.

POULTRY AND GAME.

Poultry—Hens, large, at $6 @ $7; Spring Chickens at $5 @ $6; Turkeys at $18 @ $20 per dozen.

Ducks—Tame at $4@$5 per dozen.

Geese—At $1 50@$2 per pair.

Game—Quail, $1 @ $1 50; Crossed Pheasants, $2 @ $2 50; Rabbits, $1 @$1 50; Hares, $2 @ $2 50; Antelope, $1 50@2 50 per dozen.

Retail Prices of Poultry and Game.

HENS—Large, 37 ½@41 cents.

CHICKENS—Spring, $6@$7 per doz.

DUCKS—Tame, $6@$7 per doz.

TURKEYS—Wild, 25@30c per lb.

GEESE—Wild, 25@30c per lb.

RABBITS—10@12c each.

HARES—Large, $2 @ $2 50.

PIGEONS—Tame, $2 @$2 50 per doz.

QUAIL—$1 @ $1 50 per doz.

TURKEYS—$2 @ $3.

DUCKS—$1 @ $1 50.

QUAIL—$2@$2 50 per doz.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Medical Advice.—Dr. Wm. K. Doherty's Medical and Surgical Institute is becoming a sure resort to the welfare of our fellow men and women; and his rapidly spreading reputation, although it may excite surprise, is but the legitimate result of the many able services of such a name. We are informed that the Doctor's patients have come from almost every quarter of the globe, and that in every case they have been successful in obtaining relief. Dr. Doherty's success in this respect is unquestionably due to his great experience, his skill, his attention to the comfort of his patients, and his unremitting efforts to please. Those who are afflicted with any of the diseases to which the Doctor devotes his attention, should not delay a day, but at once call at his Institute in such a manner as must be gratifying to the patients. The examination is free, and the charges extremely moderate, and further, after hearing his opinion, if the patient does not like to employ him, he makes a charge unless he effects a cure. The Doctor's office hours are from 9 A. M. to 4 P. M., and from 7 to 8 P. M. Sundays, 10 to 12 A. M. Dr. Doherty's office is at 737 Market street, corner of Leidesdorff street, opposite the Grand Hotel.

PUBLISHERS
A. ROMAN & CO
NO. 11
MONTGOMERY ST.
LIBRARY BOOK
STATIONERS

THE MUSICAL TREASURE.

15,000 Copies Sold in Six Weeks.

THIS ATTRACTIVE COLLECTION, JUST PUBLISHED, contains a choice selection of Vocal and Instrumental Gems, by Abt, Bellini, Bishop, Donizetti, Flotow, Gounod, Meyerbeer, Mozart, Quartette, Rossini, Pollaca, Polka Mazurkas, Schottische, Songs, Waltzes, etc., etc., and is the cheapest and best collection of music ever published. Elegantly bound in cloth, full gilt, $2 50; Boards, $2 00; Cloth, $1; Full Gilt, $1.

A Capital Work! SOUL, THE VILLAGE FIDDLE. Price—Boards $2 00; Cloth $2; Full Gilt $3.

All who wish to go in ORGAN SCHOOL, are advised to apply at that excellent teacher, Mr. Isaac P. Hood, a name brilliant reputation in the musical world.

Root's School for the Cabinet Organ is one of the very best books that can be obtained for the cabinet organ. It contains 144 pages of excellent music, well bound, and has an extensive sale. Price $2 50.

Reprint of a Letter from the Superior of Sienna Convent, to Dr. Trask, Dr. Trask:

It is my much pleasure in stating that the Instrument has given very much satisfaction, for all who have used it, and indeed the beauty and finish of the work manship added, and the Nuns' voices seem to blend with it, and it is much admired. I take in this country liberal Britain and Ireland. I have ordered daily up to the Hour, and having returned from the convent, Mrs. Sister Mary Stanislaus, who has charge of the Music, has requested me to write you, as an effort of gratitude and admiration to all visitors. I am, sirs, sincerely yours in Christ,

SISTER MARY STANISLAUS.

The Piano that I bought for my daughter of Lynch & Gomez, has fully, in remembered a first-class instrument in tone, and wonderfully stronger than one of our Boston pianos we had in our house.

Yours truly, J. C. FREMONT.

Circulars and full particulars can be obtained at The Monitor office.

A. FLYNN'S CITY OF DUBLIN BOOT AND SHOE WAREHOUSE. 126 THIRD STREET. Between Mission and Howard, San Francisco.

Manufacturer and dealer in all kinds of Boots and Shoes. Repairing promptly and neatly done. 4ctf

PIANOS.

OFFICIAL.

This will certify that the

HALLET, DAVIS & CO'S

PIANOS

EXHIBITED BY

WM. G. BADGER

At the Eighth Industrial Fair of the Mechanics' Institute, held at San Francisco, 1871, received

THE FIRST PREMIUM

AND THE

ONLY MEDAL AWARDED

For Eastern-made Pianos.

W. H. WILLIAMS, Secretary.

A. S. HILLIBE, President Board of Managers.

WM. G. BADGER, Sole Agent,

No. 7 Sansome street, San Francisco.

ALSO, AGENTS FOR

GEORGE WOODS & CO'S

VESTRY & PARLOR ORGANS,

THE FINEST IN THE WORLD.

ly23

LYNCH & COMIEN,

MANUFACTURERS OF

Overstrung, Grand, Square & Upright

PIANOS.

WAREROOMS,

Nos. 852, 854, 856 and 858 Broadway,

NEW YORK.

THESE PIANOS ARE UNSURPASSED FOR their Elastic Touch, Singing quality, Rich, powerful and even tone, and Durability in short, everything that renders a PIANO PERFECT.

Description and Prices.

The Pianos will be delivered in San Francisco at the prices given:

No. 1-7 Octaves. Large size, round corners, plain legs, carved lyre.....$ 450
No. 2-7 Octaves. Large size, round corners, fluting on panels, carved legs and lyre..... 475
No. 3-7 Octaves. Large size, round corners, serpentine fluting, carved legs and lyre..... 500
No. 4-7 Octaves. Large size, round corners, serpentine fluting, carved legs, fretted legs and lyre..... 525
No. 5-7 Octaves. Large size, round corners, three mouldings, carved legs, fretted legs and lyre, three mouldings, serpentine fluting..... 550
No. 6-7 Octaves. Four large round corners, three mouldings, carved legs and lyre..... 600

These Instruments are all in Rosewood Cases, beautifully polished.

UPRIGHT PIANOS.

Seven Octaves, overstrung, Rosewood Case..... $500
Very fine, Rose-wood case..... 600
PARLOR ORGANS, with Automatic Swell, 11 stops and 3 sets of reeds.....$150

TESTIMONIALS.

Below will be found a few of many letters and a complimentary note received:

From Mrs. General W. T. Sherman:

MESSRS. LYNCH & COMIEN—Gentlemen: I am very well pleased with the Piano I purchased of you. It is a beautiful instrument in every respect, and is admired by all who hear it. Please accept my thanks for your kindness in selecting it for me. Mary Sherman.

Mrs. Judge Field writes: Messrs. Lynch & Comien—Gentlemen: The Piano which we bought from you has given us great satisfaction. It is a fine instrument. We cannot have any better. Please accept my thanks for your kindness in selecting it for me. Mary Field.

From Mrs. Governor Haight:

MESSRS. LYNCH & COMIEN—Gentlemen: I am very much pleased with the Piano you sold me. It is a beautiful instrument, and I am happy to say that it gives entire satisfaction. Yours truly, CAMILLA HAIGHT.

From Rev. J. Shaw, S. J., President of St. John's College, Fordham, N. Y.:

MESSRS. LYNCH & COMIEN—Gentlemen: The Piano which we bought from you have given entire satisfaction. We find it a very fine instrument, and we are pleased with it. Yours truly, J. SHAW, S. J.

From the Sisters of Charity, Academy of Holy Cross, Santa Barbara, California:

MESSRS. LYNCH & COMIEN—Gentlemen: We take pleasure in informing you that the Piano you sold us has given entire satisfaction. We find it a very fine instrument, and we are pleased with it. Yours truly, SISTER MARY OF THE CROSS.

From Mrs. Jane Stanford, No. 8 West Thirty-eighth street, New York:

Mrs. Jane Stanford has very great pleasure in certifying to the superior excellence of the Piano purchased of Messrs. Lynch & Comien, of 858 Broadway, city of this city. She has had one of the best Pianos for nine years past, and finds the Piano sold her by said firm superior to any of the instruments—mellow, rich, and sweet in tone.

From the Superior of Sienna Convent, Italy:

Reprint of a Letter from the Superior of Sienna Convent, to Dr. Trask, Dr. Trask:

It is my much pleasure in stating that the Instrument has given very much satisfaction, for all who have used it, and indeed the beauty and finish of the work manship added, and the Nuns' voices seem to blend with it, and it is much admired. I take in this country liberal Britain and Ireland. I have ordered daily up to the Hour, and having returned from the convent, Mrs. Sister Mary Stanislaus, who has charge of the Music, has requested me to write you, as an effort of gratitude and admiration to all visitors. I am, sirs, sincerely yours in Christ, SISTER MARY STANISLAUS.

The Piano that I bought for my daughter of Lynch & Gomez, has fully, in remembered a first-class instrument in tone, and wonderfully stronger than one of our Boston pianos we had in our house.

Yours truly, J. C. FREMONT.

Circulars and full particulars can be obtained at The Monitor office.

BOOT AND SHOE STORE

SELLERS & KING,

No. 19 Third Street, corner of Stevenson.

KEEP ON HAND A CHOICE AND FINE assortment of Ladies', Misses' and Children's HOSIERY AND GLOVES, which they offer at very low prices. Also, a choice stock of Ladies', Misses' and Children's SHOES, of the most approved styles and workmanship, and desirable materials. Also, a large assortment of Gents' Fine and Medium Calf Boots and Shoes, which they will sell at prices as low as any house in the city. Those in want of anything in their line will do well to call and examine their stock before purchasing elsewhere. 1ctf

BANKING.

LAND MORTGAGE BANK OF CALIFORNIA.

OFFICE, 123 POST STREET, SAN FRANCISCO.

GUARANTEE CAPITAL.....

President.....

John Middleton, John Wilson,
Thomas R. Hayes, John H. Wise,
E. H. Wallace, Jr. Henry Kimball.

INVESTMENT CAPITAL.....

Investing shares, $250 each. Payments by share. Paid up shares, $37 50.

Interest allowed on fixed deposits from date.

Loans from $ to 10 per cent. per annum, on Real Estate security.

JOHN T. CARTER, Secretary.

SECURITY SAVINGS BANK

Guarantee Capital, - - - -

Officers:

PRESIDENT.....JOHN A. DOHRMANN
VICE-PRESIDENT.....HENRY S. FOSTER

Directors:

P. B. ATHERTON, JOHN PARROTT,
JAMES LICK, JOHN MIDDLETON,
J. FREDERICKSEN, JAMES H. WILKINS,
ADAM GRANT, JEROME LINCOLN,
H. S. HARTSOOK.

SECRETARY.....T. P. ROTHWELL
TREASURER.....SIDNEY TAYLOR

Ordinary and Term Deposits received. Applications for Assistance Fee loans made on Real Estate and other securities. Terms, etc., may be known on application.

OFFICE:

No. 309 SANSOME STREET,

(FREELANDER'S BUILDING)

Opposite Bank of California.

HIBERNIA SAVINGS AND LOAN SOCIETY

Office—Northeast corner of Montgomery and Sutter streets.

OFFICERS:

President.....M. D. SWEENY
Vice-President.....JAMES FORD
Secretary.....JAMES V. COFFEY

Trustees:

M. D. SWEENY, M. J. O'CONNOR,
C. D. O'SULLIVAN, P. McGLYNN,
JOHN SULLIVAN, GUSTAVE TOUPE,
R. J. TOBIN, JOS. A. DONAHUE,
PETER DONAHUE,
JAMES V. COFFEY.

Treasurer.....RICHARD TOBIN
Attorney.....

Remittances from the country may be sent by Wells, Fargo & Co's Express Office, or by Postoffice Money Order, or Bank Draft. Money will not be received by mail except at the risk of the depositor. Interest will be allowed on deposits from the first day of each month. A pass book will be delivered to the depositor when the deposit is made.

Deposits received from $1 upwards.

Office Hours—From 9 A. M. to 3 P. M.

JOS. A. DONAHUE, Secretary.

EUGENE KELLY & CO., SAN FRANCISCO.

DONOHOE, KELLY & CO.

SAN FRANCISCO.

EUGENE KELLY & Co.

NEW YORK

BANKERS

EXCHANGE ON

NEW YORK, LONDON, AND BANK OF IRELAND.....DUBLIN

Payable at all the Branches, AND IN EVERY COUNTY TOWN IN IRELAND.

MISCELLANEOUS.

J. SULLIVAN, Successor to THOMAS BOOT AND SHOE STORE

SELLERS & KING,

No. 19 Third Street, corner of Stevenson.

KEEP ON HAND A CHOICE AND FINE assortment of Ladies', Misses' and Children's HOSIERY AND GLOVES, which they offer at very low prices. Also, a choice stock of Ladies', Misses' and Children's SHOES, of the most approved styles and workmanship, and desirable materials. Also, a large assortment of Gents' Fine and Medium Calf Boots and Shoes, which they will sell at prices as low as any house in the city. Those in want of anything in their line will do well to call and examine their stock before purchasing elsewhere. 1ctf

INFORMATION WANTED.

INFORMATION WANTED—Of the residence of WM. KENNY, a native of the city of Dublin, Ireland, who died in the Insane Asylum of California, 1867 subscribed for him will be thankfully received by SIMON CONLON, Jackson City, Tuolumne county, California. 6w12

INFORMATION WANTED—OF DAN NOONAN, who left Jacksonville, Tuolumne county, California, July, 1865. He was in San Francisco in April, 1870. Any information of him will be thankfully received by SIMON CONLON, Jackson City, Tuolumne county, California. 6w12

THE MONITOR:

A WEEKLY JOURNAL, DEVOTED TO

Irish and Catholic Literature

AND GENERAL INTELLIGENCE.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY, BY

LYONS & BARRY.

JOHN T. BARRY.

JOHN LYONS.....BUSINESS MANAGER.

OFFICE—629 CLAY STREET, between Montgomery and Kearny sts. (Sconce 7, 7 and 8, up-stairs.)

All communications, whether relating to the literary or editorial department, should be addressed "Lyons & Barry."

Correspondents, Boston Pilot please copy; do not forget.

THE ALTAR AND THE OFFERINGS.

Earth rendered up her richest store,
Her treasured stashes rare,
And Art her amplest skill brought
To serve an Altar fair.
O precious gifts! O gifts of love!
From out the abiding stone
Was hewed Love's daisy perfection,
Where sweetest dews have shone.
A beauteous band that been bestowed
With a slender calm,
There swells in sacred solitude,
The spouse of the Lamb.
Pure in the darkness mine,
Pure gleaming gold, and silver rare,
Pure as the purity shrine.
Absolve gifts offered by hand
And make the basis of Israel's altar
With Damascus throng of old.
Then Christ, Jesus shall sit the types
In victory to whirl.
Then Christ, Jesus shall sit the types
Shall smoothe his vengeful sword,
And stay the slaughtering dirk of wrath
That rightly to the Lord.
Then shall the grace that saves a world
Around and through us flow,
And Heaven appear its earthly throne
On thy blest offering.

The subject of the above lines is the magnificent altar lately erected in the chapel of the Sacred Heart Presentation Convent, Father street. This new church is considered one of the most richly adorned churches on the Pacific coast. The altar, which is of the Gothic order of architecture, is composed of the most costly and beautiful marbles and gilding monuments in the truly devotional Catholic grandeur whose soul and generosity beloved it. The altar was presented to Rome, at a cost of several thousand dollars, and was first opened on the occasion of the reception of four novices from the Sacred Heart convent, Mill Hill, England. Among the novices was Miss Ellen Ellis, now Sister M. Bernardine. Miss Julia Flood, Sister Mary of the Cross, Miss Catherine Sweeney, and Miss Josephine Sullivan, now Sister Margaret Mary. These ladies came from Ireland to enter the order, and are all natives of Ireland, and of good families, one of their cousins being a relative of Cardinal Cullen. The ceremonies were very impressive, and were performed in a solemn and impressive, and the splendid altar before which were breathed the vows of the consecrated women who have chosen as their spouse Him who is the King of Heaven, was then rendered still more truly "an altar of gold and silver."

But a sad offering was soon destined to be placed there. A few days were the preparers of the ceremony were rejoiced for the generous donor, who had been attached with sudden illness. Father Parrisius attended to his behalf, and received the last offering offered for him. But the pure spirit of the devout and resigned Christian was to flight even while the sweet incense of prayer for him, and the fragrance of the altar his soul had revered, was formed a path over which white-winged angels carried potent suppliance to the throne of mercy. Such is the eternal home. His first spirit, then the sacred offerings placed on his altar, and the sacrifice of the Mass, and the prayers of the faithful, whose sympathy pure and pleasure. The ornaments of the above described long efficient altar, including the monstrance, chalice, pieces and crosses are of solid gold and silver, of the most exquisite workmanship, and are the truly princely offering of the Monsignor, brother of the order of St. Gerard, and brother partner of the Rev. Father Parrisius, of this city.

San Francisco, January 14, 1872.

THE MONITOR.

VOL. XV. SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., SATURDAY, JANUARY 20, 1872. NO. 10.

Biography of a Communist.

As the hoary conspirator Blanqui will shortly be dried, a few notes on his career may be of interest. Since the decline of Orléanism there is no more formidable Blanqui, whether free or in prison, has never ceased to trouble the repose of the country. Viewed by the "Reds" as a myrmidon of Communism chief, he is regarded by his enemies as a political monster with no other creed than that of the Terror. One of Blanqui's compatriots familiarises us with the following particulars:

Louis Auguste Blanqui was born in the Maritime Alps in 1805. His mother, Sophie Wolff, was a Corsicaville, died when a dozen years ago in Paris, over eighty years of age, and up to the last she appears to have been a woman of remarkable intellectual mind. Blanqui's father was from Nice, and accurately followed the fortunes of Napoleon I. He took his seat in the Convention fifteen days after the death of the King, and his first vote was in favor of declaring war with England. He was afterwards arrested with the Girondins, but was let out of prison on the death of Robespierre. Under the Empire he was a prefect, and showed considerable talent in the administration. Louis Auguste Blanqui, born at the foot of the Alps, spent his youth among the mountains, till driven thence with his family in 1815. The Blanquis then settled at La Bonne, where Louis Auguste became a farmer's assistant; but when thirteen years old he went up to Paris and distinguished himself at the College of Charlemagne, taking prizes for Latin, history and geography. Among other schoolfellows were M. Hinneau, Minister of Finance, and M. Jouvyn d'Arcys. In 1824 Blanqui went to a chateau near Toulouse as a tutor. He was then nineteen, a capital walker, facile to look at, gifted with an inflexible energy, and already a character. He would go to the mountains and bathe with his falcon eyes; his forehead was broad, and his features sharp and surcastic. Hence the nickname, as his mother says, he was linked and esteemed him, for he was witty and gay as well as good tempered. He was sobriety itself, and neither drank wine, liquors nor coffee. He also lived chiefly on fruit. Blanqui, too, delighted in a supply of fresh water, and as a Quaker, in winter as well as summer he slept with his window open and close to the window, and the snow falling on his bed would not awake him. He remained there in Paris, where he mixed up in politics, and after a campaign against the Bourbons, made a capital journal. He was not long in the Bastille, and when released he died a year after he had been condemned to perpetual imprisonment. This was a terrible blow to Blanqui, who afterwards wrote: "Compared to that vanishing point in the past twenty-eight years, my life is as lightly on me as a feather. And to think that I am treated like a dog! I am shut up, tumbled into a ditch. But I have remained night and day face to face with the shadow of her who is no more."

So wrote Blanqui, and by all accounts his wife was a most worthy, sensible, and loving woman, and a courageous woman, too, for Blanqui used to say she had the spirit of an empress." The writer of the story says that he often saw Blanqui when at noonday Pelagie, in 1848, when he was a sleek looking little man, with hair prematurely white:

I felt myself drawn toward him consciously or unconsciously by the indefinable charm of the likings of his party and his thorough contempt for sentimental weakness. Blanqui was then in the full vigor of words and gestures as Blanqui, in physiognomy more speaking and sardonic than ever. His skin by his cunning, a man at once simple and shrewd, calm as a lake and quick as powder, with the temperament of a Tropical fury as a fellahe, persevering as a missionary. Volatire was the character of his will, the coldness of his heart, and his impossibility a thorough grasp of all subjects. Volatire was the designs. Louis Auguste Blanqui, by his mysterious alive, the most dangerous man of the public, has assumed the proportion of a giant.

Such is the sketch given of this horrible conspirator, dismissed by the commission of inquiry appointed to have their sketch for the Archbishop of Paris.

A Greeting from an Old Friend.

We insert with much pride and pleasure the following note from the Very Rev. Dr. Waninger, we are known as much esteemed throughout the Pacific slope. It is a gratification of no mean order to find our efforts to produce a first-class Catholic publication so highly appreciated by an eccelesiastic of Dr. Weninger's reputation. We return our thanks to the distinguished theologian and able defender of Holy Faith, and wish him a long continuation of his labors in the cause of Catholic truth:

CINCINNATI, January 24, 1871.

DEAR SIR—I seem to give you a proof of my best feelings concerning THE MONITOR, and that I never forgot the kindness which the Editor always paid attention to my movements on the Pacific coast. Repeatedly I have once more to express my thanks for the debt of gratitude I owe, when I was lawless in affairs.

Please send me your esteemed paper to St. Xavier College, Cincinnati.

I wish you a happy New Year, and remain, most respectfully, yours, etc.,

F. X. WENINGER.

The steamship Alaska sailed for Panama Thursday. She will be back here in the course of seven weeks, and then sail for good.

THOUGHTS OF THE PAST.

Who amongst us does not remember the first pair of red-top boots he wore, or the nice things Old Nick used to bring him down the stove-pipe or chimney; and how his little heart leaped towards the fire-place where the stockings hung, most with all it could wish? The first time that I remember of hanging up my st

TELEGRAPHIC.

Eastern.

Greeley's testimony before the Senate Custom-House Investigating Committee is not flattering to the management of that institution at New York, otherwise than as a piece of partisan machinery to elevate one faction and punish the other: to control conventions by rewarding political bummers. Other witnesses testified to implicate persons high in authority at Washington, as parties to the upholding of the general order business, even to the extent of dismissing an honest Collector who refused to sanction it. One witness said Grinnell was removed on this account.

At Washington the late change in the Spanish Ministry is regarded as a battle for a conciliatory policy towards Cuba.

NEW ORLEANS, January 7.—There is great excitement in political circles here. Yesterday, in the House of Representatives, the Warmoth men attempted forcibly to oust the Speaker from the chair, but were prevented by an armed force of the latter's friends, who were held as a reserve in his private office. This morning the Warmothites had two hundred policemen and a detachment of the City Guard around the Hall, while the Speaker had two hundred colored troops, obtained from General Emory, stationed at the Custom House. Just as the Legislature was about to assemble, the United States Marshal appeared with a warrant for the arrest of Governor Warmoth, Lieutenant-Governor Pinchback, four Senators and two Representatives, and the Superintendent and two Captains of Police, sworn out before the United States Commissioner under the Civil Rights Act, and charging conspiracy, etc. While the Governor and his fellow prisoners were before the Commissioner the Speaker called the House to order, and a resolution was passed declaring the seats of the six Warmoth men vacant, and filling them with appointments of the Governor, and the House then adjourned. Meanwhile the ousted officials gave bail, and at 3 P. M. the Governor assembled a quorum of members of the House, who proceeded to pass resolutions declaring the action of the United Istend to the morning mail and void. They declared the Speaker's chair vacant, elected another Speaker, and put the House in charge of the Sergeant-at-Arms, with orders to admit no one until to-morrow, when, if then adjourned to that hour. It is feared that a conflict will take place between the two factions to-morrow.

NEW ORLEANS, January 6.—The political muddle continues.

WASHINGTON, January 6.—The President is in receipt of telegraphic communication with the Secretary of War and others in regard to Louisiana affairs. It is authoritatively stated that the Administration will not interfere in the local difficulties there any further than may be necessary to preserve peace.

Yesterday, Acting Secretary-of-the-Treasury Hartley, implied of Collector Casey whether the revenue cutter Wilderness was used to prevent the storming of the Legislature by not landing at that city. Collector Casey's reply was, "suspend judgment until you hear further, as false reports have been sent to Washington." Hartley responded that Casey's report was not special, and subsequently telegraphed to Casey to order the Wilderness to return to New Orleans at once, and so advise the Lieutenant-Governor. Casey replied to Hartley: "The Wilderness is here now, and has not been out of the city."

NEW YORK, January 8.—A Herald Philadelphia dispatch says that in the course of a conversation at the residence of ex-Secretary Borie, last evening, the correspondent was informed that President Grant had demanded an apology from Spain about five days since. Monitors are now being fitted out at Philadelphia, for are understood to proceed to Spain, unless that Government refuses to apologize and pay remuneration for the outrage on the Florida. The President does not think the outrage an intentional insult on the part of Spain, but deems it rather the result of rashness of the subordinate officers of that nation. The President and General Sickles had a long conversation on the Spanish difficulty. The President is more than ever determined to exact ample apology.

Albany specials state that Senators do not appear anxious that O'Donovan Rossa should take Tweed's seat. It is believed that Tweed will be thrown out, Rossa ignored and a new election ordered.

NEW YORK, January 8.—John Cochrane was to-day elected President of the Board of Aldermen.

Ex-Controller Connolly is not in jail, but his friends say he can return to prison when if he is wanted, but they refuse to disclose the place of his retreat.

Several suits of the Erie against other roads were to-day discontinued.

NEW YORK, January 15.—The Coroner says he will not bail Stokes, but is undecided what to do about prosecuting the case to the Grand Jury, until legally advised.

It is rumored that General McClellan will be the successor of Joel T. Boone, President of the Erie Railroad Company.

European.

LONDON, January 4.—Grange and Rathbone, members of Parliament, in speeches yesterday evening, referred to the Washington Treaty in terms of the highest praise, and advocated an alliance between Great Britain and the United States. The Times is the leading topic of the journals at the present time. The Advertiser alone opposes it, declaring that the English Commissioners have been outwitted; that England is bound hand and foot, and says that the Geneva Board should award all the United States claim, war would be less injurious to England than settlement under the Alabama Act, and concludes with an appeal to withdraw from a treaty which is a disgrace to the country.

A meeting of Liverpool merchants was made by Rathbone at Liverpool last night in favor of Home Rule for Ireland. Similar meetings of the Dublin Nations, addressed the meeting, which was enthusiastic, and orderly.

LONDON, January 5.—The ship Dawn, from Liverpool for San Francisco, was wrecked yesterday off Holyhead. Five of the crew only were saved.

LONDON, January 6.—General Andrew Porter, formerly of the United States Army, died at Bexley yesterday.

LONDON, January 10.—There was a demonstration in Limerick to-night by the supporters of Home Rule, and reception of P. J. Smyth, Isaac Butt, and other prominent advocates of the movement. The procession numbered 30,000 persons, bearing many banners, and was accompanied by numerous bands of music. It marched through the principal streets, and halted at Daniel O'Connell's monument, where a number of speeches were made. Butt spoke of the many wrongs inflicted upon Ireland, and urged raising the oppressed nation from the dust. He was warm in his denunciation of the Marquis of Hartington and the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland. A banquet was given to Butt this evening. 200 persons were present. Butt announced that he would fight the Home Rule campaign in the House of Commons, and claim for Ireland industrial and municipal privileges. The national English anthem was hissed.

The next side of the Gazette contained nothing in regard to mining.

MINING NEWS.

California.

CALAVERAS COUNTY.—The Chronicle has been shown a nugget of pure gold weighing $63, taken from Jesus Maria Creek.

LASSEN COUNTY.—Charles McClellan, the former Lassen coal contractor, says the Susanville Sage Brush, informs us that new mining discoveries have been made in the auriferous mines around Honey Lake.

NEVADA COUNTY.—The Grass Valley Union of January 4th says that the mill at the Greenhorn mine started to work on the 1st inst., after months of idleness. There is plenty of work on hand to keep the mill running while water lasts.

PLUMAS COUNTY.—The National of the 23d ult., notices that a number of "the boys" have gone to mining in the dry ditches and are making wages. Many "no spots" is passed over in the usual way of working placer claims, which "pans out" rich, if properly cleaned up.

PLACER COUNTY.—The Auburn Stars and Stripes of January 4th says: In the Yankee Jims claims, owned by John T. Middleton and others, there was last week a washing of a lot of bottom dirt that had been picked up and shoveled out, which yielded a fraction over six thousand dollars, being the results of about two months work by four men. Pretty good wages!

SAN DIEGO COUNTY.—The Union of the 24th instant says: "A private letter from Julian informs us that the mill of Gunn, Reynolds & Co. cleaned up a day or two since, after crushing 100 tons of ore from the Owens lead. The result of the crushing was $17 per ton."

The Antelope Company is now taking out some very rich rock. The first of the coming month they will add a powder-mill to their new mill, which they have leased until the 1st of next May. Thereafter it is probable that they will at once commence crushing quartz from their own lead.

The Comstock ledge, recently discovered, promises to be a first class mine. The rock is of a good character and is abundant. The company that own the new lead intend to work steadily upon it and develop it to its fullest capacity.

At present there is a scarcity of laborers at the mines. Ordinary miners are in demand, but it is impossible to obtain them. The demand is probably owing to the fact that many who were recently engaged in developing leads, are now on prospecting trips.

The recent rain storm has given a great impetus to prospecting.

Eighteen thousand dollars in bullion have been received from the San Rafael mines last week.

SISKIYOU COUNTY.—Mining on McAdams Creek and thereabouts, says the Yreka Journal of December 27th, is flourishing prosperously since the late storms, nearly every body being busy at work with a pick shinle head of water.

Idaho.

SILVER CITY, Owyhee COUNTY.—The Los Angeles Star of December 23d says: The largest quantity of bullion that has been received for some time, arrived here at the railroad depot yesterday. Seventy-eight tons of crude bullion was received from the Union mines, and four thousand pounds of base bullion from Cerro Gordo, making in all eighty thousand pounds or forty tons of ore.

Nevada.

The smelting works of Buel & Co., at Lusin, have started up again, and at last accounts were turning out a ton every two hours.

A rich strike was made in the Uncle Sam mine, Eureka district, on the 25th ult. The ore is reported as a very high order of silver carbonates, and the indications are that the mine will prove a valuable one.

Utah.

The Salt Lake Tribune of January 9th says that the Lexington mine which is situated in Little Cottonwood Cañon, about half a mile south of the Hero Mine, was sold yesterday for $75,000 to Samuel Cox, Phillips, of Louisiana. The former owners were General Conner, Moore, Pierson and Lawrence.

The Lexington is being worked right along, notwithstanding the bad weather, and it is expected that by spring it will have turned out a large amount of rich ore. The snow is deep in the cañon, but the energy of the miners and citizens at Central and Alta is not to be daunted by that, and it is believed that travel and transportation of ores will be kept up. Considerable ore is now lying at the mines daily on sledges.

THE HOUSEWIFE.

PUMPKIN PIE.—Three tablespoons pumpkin, stewed and strained; three tablespoons sugar, three cold eggs, rolled fine. Fill the bowl with milk and flour to taste. This is sufficient for one pie.

CHILDREN'S COLDS.—The following is both an excellent and a safe remedy: Take onions, slice them thin, and sprinkle loaf sugar thickly over them; put in the dish and simmer until the juice is thoroughly mixed with the sugar. It makes a thick syrup, very nice to take. Give a teaspoonful as seems to be needed, four or five times a day.

REMEDY FOR CORNS.—Mr. Rose, a merchant of San Diego, assures that these creatures of so much torment in the world, can easily be cured by applying a good coat of gum arabic mucilage, every evening on going to bed. He had them forty years, and tried nearly all the cure remedies in existence without relief, until he tried the above, which readily cured him in a few weeks.

LEMON FOR A CURE.—Take the lemon very carefully, without burning it; when it is thoroughly hot cut and squeeze into a cup upon three ounces of sugar, finely powdered. Take a spoonful whenever your cough troubles you. It is good and agreeable to the taste. Rarely has it been known to fail giving relief.

TO RESTORE COLORS.—When color on a fabric has been accidentally or otherwise destroyed, the following recipe is applied to neutralize the same, after which an application of chloroform will in almost all cases restore the color. The application of ammonia is common, but that of chloroform is the best. Chloroform will also remove paint from a garment or a piece here.

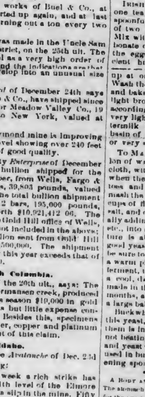
A RELISH FOR BREAKFAST OR LUNCH.—Take the remains of the tea (which is good, fresh; cut it up in thin slices and put in a saucepan, turning over it a large cupful of sweet milk; add a quarter of a teaspoonful of dry mustard, a dash of pepper, a little salt and a piece of butter as large as a butternut; stir the mixture all the time. Have dered or rolled, and sprinkle, then in quantity; as soon as they are stirred in, turn into the dish and serve hot. Cream crackers finely powdered is very delicious.

TOOTHING RAMBLES.—Many people admire rabbit when they except the head. This is best stuffed. While roasting baths frequently with the dredge it with flour and manage the same as any other roast. The head and liver may be boiled. Split the head, take out the brains, mash them with the liver and add to the gravy. Wine and jelly are liked by some people in the gravy. Keep the rabbit in a cool place and use at least twelve hours, if the weather will permit, before cooking. We prefer rabbit stewed. It is a daintier dish.

A KENTUCKIAN'S RECIPE FOR BREAD.—Take an earthen vessel larger at the top than at the bottom, put in one pint of warm water, one and a half pounds of flour and a half pint of malt yeast; stir well together and set away in a warm place until it rises; this will take about two hours, will be in from three to five hours. Then put in two quarts of water and two ounces of carbonate of soda. Then beat the whites of the eggs into a stiff froth, and add one pint of clear butternilk and mix them up the same as cake; add flour enough to make it stand up at once in whatever shape you like, and bake quickly. Mix with skim milk instead of water, and bake them in a rather quicker oven, for a quarter of an hour, or according to the size of the cake. They are very light and white. The source the butternilk the lighter the bread will be. A basin of butternilk will keep for a week, and to make cake will answer as well.

TO MAKE GOOD YEAST.—Take a small portion of water one pint of hops, tied in a thin cloth, with six good sized potatoes pared; when the potatoes are done, skins out potatoes and hops; throwing the hops away; mash the potatoes and put in one pint of the liquor, two cups of flour, one cup of sugar, one cup of salt, one teaspoonful of ginger, gradually adding the liquor, stirring the flour, etc., into a smooth batter. When the mixture is about lukewarm, stir in a cup of good yeast, and then fill a gallon jug, which is to be kept very clean, and set in a warm place until the yeast rises in the fermenent, then cork up tightly and keep in a cool, dark place. A cellar is best. Yeast made in this way will keep good over two months, and a teacupful is sufficient to do a large baking.

Black-head cakes are splendid raised with this yeast, but should be used in making them is in making the batter too thin, and not beating it enough. Warm water, salt and yeast with the flour, and milk should be used in buckwheat bread. Milk and shortening spoil the flour.



A BOOT AND SHOE DISEASE.—Such is frequently the stomach and the best remedy about for the one to suffer without the other, so that dyspepsia and dosing for dyspepsia is likely to be added, but the irritation of the stomach is allayed and the digestive organs restored to their healthy operating and thus exciting operation of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, a genial invigorant and purifier. The first effect of this agreeable tonic is to enable the system to assimilate the food which the organs in question have to work upon, and the system is braced to resist the malarious influences of the region of country where fever and ague prevails. Thus its preventive is not transient, but a permanent safeguard. Debility, nervousness, rheumatism, and kidney complaint, as it spurs the raw a less comfortable shoe, yield to it. Appetite, sleep, and cheerfulness it imparts a permanent acquisition of healthful vigour to the frame. Sold by all Druggists and Dealers generally. Directions for the preparation are scarcely necessary in the case of a medicine so universally known. If there is any one who does not know how to eight pounds of flour, one pound of butter, one pound of lard, one pound of sugar, one pound of the latter ingredient is equally necessary. The first step is to melt the butter and lard, and then to thoroughly rub the shortening into the flour. Secondly, dissolve the sugar in a pint of water, and add it to the flour, etc., previously prepared. Thirdly, add a pint of yeast, and knead the whole into dough. Fourthly, put the dough into tins, and set it before the fire to rise. Fifthly, bake in a moderate oven. Any one who follows these directions will have no reason to complain of his bread.

THE MUSICAL TREASURE.

15,000 Copies Sold in the Week.

THIS ATTRACTIVE COLLECTION IS NOT PUBlished until the first of the year, and has already reached a circulation of 15,000 copies. Among the contributors to its pages are Abt, Gounod, Dodworth, Pelton, Pelta Masterson, Nelson Kneass, Wallace, Bellak, and others, who have written all of the best songs of the day.

Copies sent Free for Pianoforte or Organ Price, Boards $2.50; Cloth $3; Full Gilt $4.

Copies sent Free for Guitar, Boards $2.50; Cloth $3; Full Gilt $4.

Address, with Stamp to an ORGAN SCHOOL, are given away with the first edition of the work. Every one should have a copy. Sold by all Music Dealers.

Root's School for the Cabinet Organ

Is one of the very best books that can be desired for the study of Cabinet Organ. It contains, already well known and has an extensive sale. Price $2.50.

A copious choice of POPULAR MUSIC for the Cabinet Organ is given in the

Root's Musical Monthly

The above books and pieces, mailed, postpaid, on receipt of price.

OLIVER DITSON & CO., Boston.
C. H. DITSON & CO., New York.

EHERHART & LAUTHMAN,

MANUFACTURERS OF

CALIFORNIA SPARKLING WINES.

SWEET AND DRY CHAMPAGNES.
Sparkling Muscatel and Catawba. Also, Still White and Claret Wines all kinds and grades. Angelica, Muscatel, Madeira, Port, Sherry, Claret, Hock, Rhine Wine, Muscatel and Dry Catawba, etc. Grape brandies are made specially for Medicinal purposes. Depot, corner of Third and Market streets, San Francisco.

MENEELY'S BELL FOUNDRY,

WEST TROY, NEW YORK.

Established in 1826.

CHURCH ACADEMY, FACTORY AND OTHER BELLS, made of copper and tin, mounted with the best rotary Yoke. Improved Patent Hangings. Illustrated Catalogue sent free. Our Patent and Adjustable Bell Stand is the best in use. Our Prices and Catalogues supplied.

E. A. & G. R. MENEELY,
West Troy, New York.

JEWELRY, SILVER WARE and WAT ches are selly given away in comparison with former prices at Tucker & Cook. They are determined at whatever sacrifice they may be to sell for cash regardless of cost. Call and examine their stock before purchasing elsewhere. They mean

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

ENGLAND.

The Cost of Law.

The Romford Mercury mentions a striking instance of the foolishness of going to law. The vestry of Whitlesey quarrelled with the Isle of Ely authorities as to which should repair Briggate Bridge. The Whitlesey vestry-men resolved to go to law, and the result is that, after six years' argument, the case has come to nothing. There is, however, £1500 to pay, for half of which it seems that the 37 parishioners who attended the Whitlesey vestry are severally liable. It is said that the outlay of a few shillings would have repaired the actual damage to the bridge, and a few pounds would have put it in good repair.

English Democrats and Mass Rule.

The London Democrats, or at least that section of them who disport themselves in the Hall that lies to public, have done us the honor of discussing the question of Home Rule, and deliberating as to whether Irishmen should be allowed some slight share of that freedom which they claim so loudly for themselves. The result, according to a correspondent of the Standard, shows that the Democrats" have not succeeded even that initial stage of toleration. Though no vote or show of hands was taken, it is evident, we are told, that not one out of ten present would have voted for "Home Rule" in Ireland. We cannot say we are greatly disjuleted by the intelligence. The habitues of "the Hole in the Wall" are hardly the men whose concurrence or whose opinion could be accounted of value. Nation, Dec. 16.

FRANCE.

A Nobleman in Want of a Wife.

The following advertisement appears in Galignani's Messenger: "A French nobleman, aged 46, widower, without children, desires to unite himself in matrimony with an English or American lady, whether a widow or not, who speaks a little French or Italian, and possessing a fortune of £1000. For all particulars, write in English or French, to," &c.

Rise in Marriage in France.

The approaching marriage of Prince Ladislas Czartoriski with the Princess Marguerite d'Orleans is an event which, in view of the increasing influence of the Monarchical house, may turn out to be that of some political importance. The Prince is the eldest daughter of the Duke de Nemours, the second son of Louis Philippe. She has two brothers—the Comte d'Eu, married to the Princess Isabella Orleans, and the Duc d'Alencon, married to a Davanian princess, the sister of the Empress of Austria. Prince Ladislas, son of Prince Adam Czartoryski, a statesman of European reputation, who played a leading part in most of the diplomatic negotiations relative to Poland, which took place between the Congress of Vienna and the Crimean war, has worthily continued the labors of his father in this city, at the Hotel Lambert, in Paris, and is a recognised representative of the Polish cause abroad.

Warlike Presents in Paris.

The New Year's day gifts in Paris are to be warlike in the extreme. Not to mention the stationers, who sell cannon ball paper weights and mortar inkstands, the bye-takers who advertise nothing but chassepods and leaden soldiers, and the sick-sack makers who have created a graceful cigar stand like a mitrailleur, there is a show in all the shop-fronts of the bon-bon confectioners of realised models of the late store-rooms. Sinister-looking rows of shells in sugar on the upper shelves, while the lower ones are encumbered with Prussian helmets and muffin caps, made of course to contain sweetmeats. As the last new article of present there can be no doubt that to eat sugar-plums out of a sugar shell like a mitrailleuse is an improvement on the old Gothic notion of drinking hydromel out of his skull; but one cannot help thinking that it will require some caution before venturing upon such a gift as a shell. Taking into account the inconvenience of tendering one of these projectiles to a person who had had his house destroyed by one, there are circumstances in which the gift might be said to bear an ironico-congratulatory sense very distressing to the recipient. Take, for instance, the case of a man who had inherited the house sighed for fortune of an uncle, thanks to the shell which had ridden him prematurely of this revered relative; or, again, that of a man who had his house (a worthless tumble-down house) blown into fragments as aforesaid, but afterwards contrived to make a handsome sum out of the scrap iron worth from the Indemnity Commission. One is bound to sympathize with the extremely unlucky man if he should find himself offered

WEEKLY CALENDAR.

For the Week Ending Jan. 27, 1872.

21—Sunday—Third Sunday after Epiphany. St. Agnes, Virgin and Martyr.
22—Monday—St. Vincent and Anastasius, Martyrs.
23—Tuesday—Espousals of the B.V.M. and St. Joseph.
24—Wednesday—St. Timothy, Bishop and Martyr.
25—Thursday—Conversion of St. Paul.
26—Friday—St. Polycarp, Bishop and Martyr.
27—Saturday—St. John Chrysostom, Bishop, Confessor and Doctor of the Church.

THE MONITOR:

THE ONLY

Irish and Catholic Journal in California.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

SATURDAY.....JANY 20,

CATHOLIC NEWSPAPERS.

We hope few if any of our readers have omitted to peruse the eloquent Address delivered on the afternoon of January 7th, in St. Mary's Cathedral, by Very Rev. Father Prendergast, before the members of the Catholic Sunday School Union. It was replete with sound sense; it was full of useful information; it was in good time and in good taste. While we thus speak of the Address as a whole, there is one part which we deem more particularly worthy of notice at our hands. We allude to that part of the discourse wherein Father Prendergast treated of the beneficial effects of Catholic literature and the great necessity of a warm approval of every word uttered by the reverend speaker with reference to this subject, inasmuch as we have frequently put forward precisely the same views in these columns.

There is scarcely a Catholic prelate or dignitary of any rank who does not avail himself of every proper occasion to impress upon the heads of families the duty of procuring sound religious literature for the edification and instruction of their children. To begin with the very highest authority that can speak on this earth, our Holy Father, the Pope, has repeatedly encouraged the propriety of fostering Catholic literature and more especially Catholic journalism. His advice has been taken up and reiterated by the most distinguished and learned prelates of our faith. The late Pope Pius the Ninth, Bishop of Orleans, the Most Rev. Dr. Manning, Archbishop of Westminster, his Eminence Cardinal Cullen, Archbishop of Dublin, have all contrasted the advantages of Christian literature with the pernicious effects of infidel or atheistical publications, and brought their respective flocks to support only those newspapers devoted to the spread of truth. As was to be expected from their zeal and love of our Holy Faith, the Archbishops and Bishops of the United States have not been slow in following the example of their illustrious brethren in Europe. In nearly every sermon and pastoral they issue after consecrated the faithful to guard knowledge as well as to practise the virtue of religion.

These high authorities there is no gainsaying. Consequently it is an established fact that Catholics are bound in honor and conscience to support and encourage, according to the measure of their ability, those newspapers which sustain the interests of the Church. We say "sustain the interests of the Church" advisedly; because, unfortunately, there are many journals which profess to be Catholic, but which, nevertheless, express views and uphold opinions totally at variance with those of the high-toned fathers and expounders of the Faith, as delivered to the Apostles. Papers of this kind, so far from being of any benefit to the people, are productive of great evil. Whilst we thus speak of the Address as a whole, there is one part which we deem more particularly worthy of notice at our hands. We allude to that part of the discourse wherein Father Prendergast treated of the beneficial effects of Catholic literature and the great necessity of a warm approval of every word uttered by the reverend speaker with reference to this subject, inasmuch as we have frequently put forward precisely the same views in these columns.

There is scarcely a Catholic prelate or dignitary of any rank who does not avail himself of every proper occasion to impress upon the heads of families the duty of procuring sound religious literature for the edification and instruction of their children. To begin with the very highest authority that can speak on this earth, our Holy Father, the Pope, has repeatedly encouraged the propriety of fostering Catholic literature and more especially Catholic journalism. His advice has been taken up and reiterated by the most distinguished and learned prelates of our faith. The late Pope Pius the Ninth, Bishop of Orleans, the Most Rev. Dr. Manning, Archbishop of Westminster, his Eminence Cardinal Cullen, Archbishop of Dublin, have all contrasted the advantages of Christian literature with the pernicious effects of infidel or atheistical publications, and brought their respective flocks to support only those newspapers devoted to the spread of truth. As was to be expected from their zeal and love of our Holy Faith, the Archbishops and Bishops of the United States have not been slow in following the example of their illustrious brethren in Europe. In nearly every sermon and pastoral they issue after consecrated the faithful to guard knowledge as well as to practise the virtue of religion.

Bishop Goss on Popular Discontent.

The Right Rev. Dr. Goss, Catholic Bishop of Liverpool, delivered an address on Sunday, Dec. 3d, at the last Mass in St. Vincent's Church, St. James street. His Lordship began by observing that anyone who cast his eyes over the map of Europe, or considered its present political aspect, would hardly recognize it to be the same place as it was twenty years ago. Some years ago there was hardly a single country in Europe in which not only absolute, but autocratic power did not prevail; and that, with other causes, had helped to bring about the great French Revolution, in the midst of which we are still living. With the solitary exception of Russia, he believed there was not a country now where more or less of constitutional government did not prevail, and in many of the countries the people seemed to have a preponderance of power greater than their knowledge, wealth, or standing warranted. Of course, the people would be always the most numerous; but, after all, they appealed from those who held the reins of power—whether emperors, or kings, or presidents—a certain amount of enlightenment and training in matters of government; for, as the present Premier once said, the science of government required to be learned as every other science did. He (the Bishop) had no intention to say one word against the possession of power by the people, for he was totally indifferent whether he lived under a king or an emperor, under a constitutional government like our own, or even under a Republic like the Catholic Church, and the members of that Church, as such, had no connection with any kind of Government. All they sought was freedom for the exercise of their religion—freedom for the souls over which God had not given power unto man; and, therefore, all they asked of any Government, whatsoever it might be, was that they should be left alone in their freedom, and never contrained to do a matter under what Government they lived, they never should be, and never could be ashamed. They would be dastards, cowards and craven if they were satisfied, until they found themselves as free in all respects as those amongst whom they lived. He had no political intention whatever in the few words he was addressing to them, but he wished to call their attention to one fact, and that was the increasing discontent was greater

UNREASONING AND GROUNDLESS PREJUDICE.

Then at present. That uneasiness was not confined to this country, nor to France—where it seemed to have originated—but to Belgium nor Austria, nor even Russia—for there also there was a certain upheaving of the people which showed restlessness and discontent—but it had gone across the Atlantic. There seemed to be a general uneasiness; and he must confess he was at a loss to understand why there should be discontent, unhappiness, and unsettled feeling amongst a people where they had a fair share of government, and where there was no grievance that might not be remedied by the machinery of the Government under which they lived. It was not necessary that they should take up arms if they felt that they did not enjoy freedom to the full extent, for the Government of this country allowed, and tolerated, he might almost say sanctioned, agitation. The people, through their members, were present in Parliament, and they could affect their members by their expression of opinion. He was, as he had already said, at a loss to the uneasiness which he found on every side; but he felt that it was his duty, as a Christian Bishop, that he should endeavor to calm that portion of the people who were under his jurisdiction; for they had a grievance they ought not to rest until it was removed; but if they had no grievance, they should not strive upon any ephemeral notions or

VAGUE IDEAS OF POLITICAL POWER.

To upset the Constitution under which they lived. They should not strive by means of secret societies to overturn the established order of things, for, in the end, they might, perhaps, find themselves under a tyranny as great as that under which their ancestors cast off hundreds of years ago. It appeared to him that the agitation and uneasiness of people across from certain atheistic principles; but he did not mean to say that those who were the victims of such a movement necessarily saw that they were acting on an atheistic principle. The men who were striving to upset the present order of things did not even believe in the existence of a God; yet there was no man, except he came from an asylum, or was in a fit mind to one, but must admit that if there was a First Cause, call it by what name he would, He enabled those who held Him to bear the misfortunes and ills of this life with patience and resignation; and while they should better their position if they could, yet it should be in accordance with the law of God. His Lordship then read some extracts from a book entitled,

"THE PRINCIPLES OF THE NATIONAL SECULAR SOCIETY,"

by

With the object of showing how certain persons, under the pretence of bettering the social condition of the working-man, were in reality striving to deprive them of all religion; and said that nothing could have induced him to read such passages, except the conviction that books of that nature were being circulated amongst the people. He had been told that men were selected who had other men to watch them, and that efforts had been made to win them over to Secularist principles, with the hope that such men would not employ others than those who adopted a similar belief. Then the basis and foundation for a system of communism that would overturn the established order of things, and carry all the wrath and hatred against God and creation of the world upside down. God forbid that those who heard him should, by the hope of obtaining political independence, be induced to barter their faith for misery and degradation, or to smile the tools of designing men, who should strive to rise to eminence, but who, when they had gained that eminence, would try to kick from under them the ladder by which they had risen.

THE Supreme Court of Iowa has just decided that while a railroad track is fenced and the bars in the fence are down, and a cow, peacefully feeding and not trespassing, is killed by a train, the company are not liable, unless the fact that the bars were down was previously known to the company.

A fatal Alpine accident happened on the 4th inst., an English gentleman and lady staying at one of the hotels at Mentone. He was exploring the rocks of the Grotte St. Louis, which separates France from Italy, when a large piece of rock got loosened above him and fell on to him, carrying him some way down the rocks, and causing almost instantaneous death.

At the Mersey Docks Board, Mr. S. R. Graves, M. P., stated that between 60 and 70 per cent., of the ocean traffic of the United States was carried under the British flag.

CATHOLIC ITEMS.

Eastern.

ORDINATION AT ST. JOSEPH'S PROVINCIAL SEMINARY, N. Y.—The following named gentlemen were ordained on the 23d Dec., 1871:

Priests.—Archdiocese of New York—Rev. Joseph Byron, Rev. Nicholas J. Hughes.

Diocese of Albany.—Rev. Edmund Walshe.

Diocese of Boston.—Rev. John McGeough.

Deacons.—Archdiocese of New York—Rev. Patrick J. Brophy, Rev. Cornelius Donovan, Rev. James Flood, Rev. Henry J. Gordon, Rev. John J. Keoghen, Rev. John F. Lynch, Rev. Patrick Malone, Rev. Wm. J. O'Kelly.

Diocese of Albany.—Rev. John J. Cannon, Rev. Francis J. Maguire, Rev. Edward P. O'Connor.

Diocese of Boston.—Rev. Michael Clark, Rev. William McComb, Rev. Christopher McGrath.

Diocese of Springfield.—Rev. Charles E. Burns, Rev. John Daly, Rev. Daniel H. O'Neill, Rev. Patrick B. Phelan.

Diocese of Nashville, Tenn.—Rev. Michael J. McInnerey.

Sub deacons.—Archdiocese of New York—Rev. Joseph C. Campbell, Rev. Daniel J. Corkery, Rev. John McQuirk, Rev. Anthony Molloy, Rev. James Powers, Rev. James T. Wasserman.

Diocese of Albany.—Rev. Patrick Beehan, Rev. Wm. A. Drum, Rev. Charles A. Reilly, Rev. James Renehan.

Minor Orders.—Archdiocese of New York.—John Flaherty, Henry T. Medinley, John Mowbray, John McQuirk, Edward J. Newman, John B. Slater, Owen Smith.

Diocese of Albany.—Michael Clune, John McDonald, Richard Meehan, Thomas F. Walsh.

Diocese of Boston.—John Murphy.

Diocese of Burlington.—John Michaud.

Diocese of Hartford.—Thomas Clinton, John Maloney.

Diocese of Rochester.—Walter Golden, Thomas Hendricks, William Mulhearn, George Osborne, Hugh Rafferty.

Diocese of Springfield.—T. Canavan.

Louis Muller, Order of St. Francis.

Tonsure.—Archdiocese of New York.—Peter Farrell, Wm. Foy, Cornelius V. Mahony, John McGilvrey, John McQuirk, Owen Smith.

Diocese of Albany.—Michael Clune.

Diocese of Burlington.—John Michaud.

Diocese of Hartford.—Thomas Linden.

Diocese of Rochester.—John Donnelly, Thomas Hendricks, Michael Madden, Geo. Osborne.

Louis Muller, Order of St. Francis.

Recapitulation.—Ordained priests, 4; ordained deacons, 10; ordained subdeacons, 10; promoted to Minor Orders, 22; promoted to Tonsure, 14; Total, 60.

ORDINATIONS IN MILWAUKEE.—On Wednesday, Dec. 20, Rt. Rev. John Martin Henni, Bishop of Milwaukee, conferred the order of Priesthood on the following deacons in the chapel of the Seminary of St. Francis of Sales, St. Francis, Wisconsin:

Rev. J. Baumann, Rev. P. Graham and Rev. F. W. Oberbroeckling, of the diocese of Dubuque; Rev. Anthony Decker, Rev. P. C. Nash and Rev. James Joseph Keogh, of the diocese of Milwaukee; Rev. Theodore Mahelm, of the diocese of Fort Wayne; Rev. G. Hoppe, of the diocese of Alton; Rev. L. Wieder, of the diocese of St. Paul, and Rev. H. Pigge, Rev. F. Meeiesback, and Rev. S. Kleiser, of the archdiocese of St. Louis.

On Monday, Dec. 18, he conferred the order of Subdeaconship on Rev. J. M. Cleary, Rev. Joseph Dries and Rev. W. Pul, of the diocese of Milwaukee; Rev. H. Helbeke, of Alton; Rev. Joseph Hoffard, of St. Louis, and Rev. George Heer, of the diocese of Nashville.

On Sunday, Dec. 17, he conferred the order of Sub-deaconship on Rev. O. Miller, Milwaukee, and others.

On the same day he conferred Tonsure and Minor Orders on Messrs: E. Coyle, T. Wallenbring, of the archdiocese of St. Louis; Messrs. T. Cowley and F. Minger, of Alton; Messrs. L. Bisio, Greg. Foesaler, N. Thill, M. Ward and M. Wynn, of Milwaukee; Messrs. John Pavlin, A. Mahowald, of St. Paul; Mr. H. Wirtz, of La Crosse.

ORDINATIONS AT MOUNT ST. MARY'S OF THE WEST.—On Thursday, Dec. 21st, at the hands of the Most Rev. Archbishop of Cincinnati, elected, Toronto, and for minor orders were conferred on Wm. H. Tappert, of the diocese of Covington, Ky., and the holy priesthood on Rev. Anthony Schaefer, of the Archdiocese of Cincinnati. On Friday 22d, subdeaconship was conferred on Mr. James Burns, of Cincinnati, and Mr. Wm. H. Tappert of Covington. On Saturday, the 23d, deaconship was conferred on the same two gentlemen.—Cath. Telegraph.

DEDICATION.—On Sunday, January 14th, Feast of the Holy Name of Jesus, the Most Rev. Archbishop dedicated to the service of Almighty God, under the invocation of St. Elisabeth of Hungary, the new church just erected at Fort Washington, by the zealous and persistent efforts of Rev. Dr. Brann.

Bridget Doyle, called in religion, Sister Magdalene of St. Thais, a native of Cincinnati, aged 21 years, of which she spent in religion 3 years, died in the House of the Good Shepherd, Bank street, on the 24th of December of consumption. May her soul rest in peace.—Cath. Telegraph.

From the St. Paul Wanderer we learn that Rev. Father Wenninger received quite an ovation during his short stay in that city. Several societies went to meet him.

Foreign.

DEATH OF THE VERY REV. CANON HOCK.—The Times records the decease of a well known Roman Catholic clergyman and learned archeologist, the Very Rev. Daniel Rock, D. D., one of the canons of the Catholic "chapter" of the Cathedral of Southwark. Born in the year 1799, he was a native of Liverpool; he received his early education at the College of St. Edmund, at Old Hall near Ware, in Hertfordshire, and completed his studies at the English College at Home. Having been ordained by Italy orders he returned what was then known as the "London Mission" for some two or three years, at the end of which he became domestic chaplain in the family of Lord Shrewsbury, with whom he resided for many years at Alton Castle.

DEATH OF A VETERAN PARISH PRIEST.—The Freeman of Tuesday, Dec. 12, recorded the death, at the patriarchal age of eighty-one, of Rev. Michael Lennon, P. P., of Tulsk. Trained for the holy ministry in our great national College of Maynooth, he was ordained in the Pentecost of 1818. He thus spent upwards of half a century laboring unceasingly in the vineyard of his Master. Father Lennon was for years the C. of Athlone, eight years P. P. of Oran, and forty-one years P. P. of Tulsk, where his ashes now repose, and where his memory shall be held in benediction from generation to generation. He was buried on Friday within the church which he had raised to God's glory. The bishop and a large number of the priests of the diocese attended.

The Island of Saints.

Catholic Opinion, receiving a book with the above title, thus defends Ireland's claim to this honored appellation. It is curious to notice how anxious many Englishmen are to rob our country of its ancient fame and glory:

Our author has given a shrewd pull to the tail of the British Lion, and he must look out for the consequences. There is nothing of which English Catholics feel themselves more complacently proud or in the 'Prayers for the Conversion of England,' as printed in the Golden Manual, and stated to have been originally composed in Latin for the English College at Rome, in 1839, by the late Cardinal Wiseman, there occurs the following solemn invocation: 'Remember all those holy confessors, bishops and kings: all those holy monks and hermits; all those holy virgins and widows, who made this once "Island of Saints," illustrious by their merits and virtues.' Hearing this prayer devoutly recited in one of the churches in London a few years ago, the present writer, being challenged thereon, drew public attention in Catholic Opinion to such an extraordinary misappropriation of the well-known painful soubriquet by which Ireland has always hitherto been recognized in history. The notice of the Catholic Archbishop having been called to the subject, the prayer in question was subsequently altered, or modified throughout; and also, by changing the definite article the into the indefinite article an before the words 'Island of Saints,' a kind of compromise was effected, so as to avoid, as it were, what is supposed, to be alleged as another instance of the willingness of Englishmen of the present day to do justice to Ireland.[1] The author goes on to observe that, seeing the claim is not fully and publicly conceded, and the late address to his Holiness by the leading Catholics of England, he had thought it only just to put forth again in an appeal from the authorities on which he had grounded his arguments, preferring with proof by additional testimonies from history. In the present work he shows, by documentary proof, that Ireland was known from the earliest times, even before the conversion of England, by the above title; and, on the other hand, that there is no ancient authority on which the claim of England to the title rests. The Venerian, Lingard, indeed, in his 'Anglo-Saxon Church' gives the sanction of his name to the title, but does not quote a single authority in support of his statement. On this matter the words of Dr. Lingard in his preface to the above work, are in point, "On the second, literary objects the public mind is guided by the wishes or prejudice of a few leading writers, whose reputation conceives their opinions, and whose pronouns are often received, by the incautious reader, for truths. In such cases, he attests in error, but it helps to perpetuate deception; and, at the same time, to contradict merely without attempting to prove, is to create doubt, but will not enforce conviction. Hence it becomes necessary for the writer to point out the sources from which he has derived information, to fortify his narrative with quotations from ancient documents, and to show that the contrary statement is not consistent with the original documents." We are very glad to see this matter treated with proper and full research. It is simply a question of fact, not one of feeling, whether Ireland or England is called saciently "The Island of Saints." There is no question that both islands deserve the title, since both have been Islands of Saints; but the question is to which the title belongs as a prerogative right in history. The writer of this little work has proved to our satisfaction that the ancient title belongs absolutely to Ireland. Unless it can be shown from an ancient testimonies as to bring forward in this matter, it is those and Ireland "It is strange that Dr. Lingard should have so ingeniously, for the Saxon times England was called The Island of Saints; but as Dr. Lingard does not give his authorities, we are not aware of any author, that our great English historian, like many of his countrymen, is content to assert, without examining, what he had always heard stated and had never heard contradicted. We have ourselves met with Englishmen who were so sure of this point in favor of their country as to refuse to be raised at contradiction, and whose only answer when asked if they had ever examined this question was, 'It's so certain—it stands so securely on popular tradition—that it needs no examination to prove it.' Well, here we have the other side maintaining publicly that England has no right, and Ireland has every right to the title of 'The Island of Saints.' Those who deny this, must prove their title or else let judgment go by default.

Forbidden to Read the Scriptures.

Mr. William Tarr, who is at present confined in the county jail at Shrewsbury refusing to have his children vaccinated, has, it seems, fallen out with the Protestant chaplain of that prison, and has made a complaint to the visiting justices that the reverend gentleman has refused to allow him a Bible to read. The chaplain has accordingly addressed a letter to the visiting justices explaining the reason why Mr. Tarr has been refused the use of the book. He alleges that Mr. Tarr no admission to the jail, professed himself to be of "no religion." The next day, however, he asked for a Bible, and on the chaplain inquiring whether he had any objections on the subject of unbelief, Tarr replied, "none whatever. I am a well-educated man and have studied the Bible; I only want it to pass away the time." The chaplain did not think fit to give him the book, as he had avowed purposes, and quoted to him the 44th verse of the seventh chapter of St. Matthew: "Give not that which is holy unto the dogs, neither cast ye your pearls before swine, lest they trample them under their feet, and turn again and rend you." Tarr showed no disposition to read the chaplain, but the next day when again asked whether he had any misgivings, replied: "None; but you might give me the Bible, or Tom Paine or Voltaire—they would do to pass the time away." The above information the chaplain that "she was as sure of a hot seat in Heaven as the chaplain was." Under these circumstances the chaplain decided not to let him have the book. It is not easy to understand on what principle this decision has been arrived at. The Bible, in the opinion of many people, is the most proper book to place in the hands of a free thinker, and it is generally supposed that the object of most of our religious writers is to disseminate the Scriptures among those who hold opinions similar to those entertained by Mr. Tarr.—Pall Mall Gazette.

SALMON.

SALMON IN BARRELS AND HALVES.
New smoked Salmon and Herrings
Herrings in Barrels and Halves.
And all kinds of Pickled and Smoked Fish.
For sale by J. J. GRIFFITH,
No 121 Washington street, corner Davis.

EDUCATIONAL.

SAINT MARY'S COLLEGE
SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.
Conducted by the Christian Brothers.
Offers every facility for acquiring a thorough Education, whether Classical, Scientific or Commercial.

THE system of education embraces the English, French, Spanish and Latin Languages, Rhetoric, Elocution, Composition, Ancient and Modern History, Geography, Mythology, Algebra, Geometry, Arithmetic, and Use of Globes; Vocal Music, Instrumental Music, Drawing, Painting in Water Colors and in Oil; Tapestry, Plain and Ornamental Needlework, etc., etc.

TERMS.
Board and Tuition (payable half-yearly, in advance)..... $250 00
Entrance Fee..... 10 00
Physician's Fee and Medicines..... 5 00
Vacation at College..... 40 00
Day Students..... 50 00
Modern languages, Music and drawing form extra charges.

Pupils will be resumed on the 1st of August, 1871.
REV. B. JUSTIN, President.

ST. JOSEPH'S COLLEGE,
Robersville, Humboldt County, Cala.
CONDUCTED BY THE PRIESTS OF THE CONGREGATION OF THE MOST PRECIOUS BLOOD.

THIS INSTITUTION, SITUATED ON A PICTURESQUE eminence, commands views of Van Duzen and Eel Rivers, and near the town of Robersville. The property is the gift of the settlers in the celebrated country adjacent, and overlooks the Pacific in the distance.

With grandeur and beauty of location, it also enjoys a healthfulness unsurpassed on the coast. The buildings are large and commodious. The grounds for the pupils' recreation are extensive, and supplied with all manner of requisites for sporting, healthful and manly exercise.

The course of studies pursued in the College is classical, scientific and commercial, and it designed to do justice to the interests of the pupils. Besides, Spanish, Latin, Greek, and especially of the English and German, are taught. Arithmetic, pure and mixed mathematics, Geography, History, the sciences, particularly Chemistry, Natural Philosophy, and the teaching of which apparatus and charts have been procured from Germany, comprising the latest improvements.

Special care is paid to the commercial course, which is conducted by professors of experience, with the object to make business their profession.

Particular attention is given to the moral, intellectual and moral culture of the students. The discipline is parental, mildness and firmness being the express assignment of conscientious duty. Pupils will be scrupulously respected, and no interference with the religious opinions of any. Pupils are free to attend the religious services of all, according as their parents or guardians may direct.

Students are received at any time during the year for board or a shorter period than the term of five months. No deduction will be made from regular terms except for sickness or for regularly protracted absence.

Pocket money to be deposited with the treasurer. No leave of absence will be given to students except during the wholesale year except during the Christmas holidays.

Each student on entering should be provided with sufficient clothing, with suits of clothes for the week, a supply of shirts, socks, pocket handkerchiefs, towels, boots and shoes, hats and caps, and all articles necessary for the toilet; unless at the express request of parents or guardians, the College will furnish the above.

Payments are to be made half-yearly, invariably in advance.

TERMS:

For board, lodging, tuition, washing and mending, including use of bed and bedding..... $225 00
Vacation at College..... 40 00
Use of Piano and instrumental drawing, painting and modern languages, will form extra charges.
Each instrument, per month..... $ 1 00
Each pupil is required to furnish his own towels.
Physicians' fees and medicines to be paid by parents.

DAY PUPILS.

Senior class..... $60 00
Junior class..... 40 00

The scholastic year consists of two sessions, each comprising a period of five months. The first session commences on the 15th of August and the second on the 15th of January. The College will be opened for the reception of students after the first week of January, and not after the first week in July.

All communications regarding the College to be addressed to the Secretary, Rev. P. A. NEDELLEC, Rev. P. A. NEDELLEC, Superior.
de22

HOTELS.

Removal.
THE OCCIDENTAL HOUSE
Has Removed to 125 Second street,
Northeast corner of Minna. Furnished Rooms to let. With or without board, on the most reasonable terms. Call and examine.
M. O'NEIL,
Proprietor.

CENTRAL HOTEL
616 AND 618 SANSOME STREET,
Between Broadway and Pacific.....San Francisco

THIS NEW, LARGE AND COMMODIOUS Hotel has been thoroughly renovated by the well known proprietor, M. FARRELL, late of the Brooklyn House, where he will be happy to receive his numerous friends and the public generally. Thankful for past favors, he respectfully solicits a continuance of their future patronage.

There is a Reading Room for the use of the boarders. Money and Valuables can be kept at the risk of the proprietor.

Rates of board to suit the times.

Parties arriving at the Steamboat Wharf will be met by a carriage and transferred to the house free of charge.

Private entrance for ladies.
M. FARRELL, Proprietor.
jan1

FRANKLIN HOTEL,
616 AND 618 PACIFIC STREET,
Between Montgomery and Kearny.....San Francisco
HUGH CUNAN.....Proprietor.

Board, per week..... $4 50
Board and Lodging, single rooms..... 7 00
Board and Lodging, double rooms..... 8 00

Family accommodations on reasonable rates.
Entrance on Montgomery street, Lick House.
Take cars from the Ferry to the Lick House.

RAILROAD HOUSE,
Corner of Sansome and Pacific streets, San Francisco.
P. CASSERLY,
(Late of the Tremont House; where he will be happy to receive his old friends and the public in general.)
The choicest wines, liquors and cigars always on hand. Meals at all hours. Board and lodging by the week or month. Private rooms. The Rooms are large and airy, and can be had at reasonable rates.
The best attendance will be paid to the comfort and convenience of guests.
Board and Lodging per week..... $5 to $6
There is a fine pool table in the House, where money and vacations can be kept at the risk of the proprietor.
☞Free Coach to the House.
de23 P. CASSERLY, Proprietor.

ST. MARY'S HOSPITAL,
CORNER FIRST AND BRYANT STS.
SAN FRANCISCO.

THIS INSTITUTION IS UNDER THE MANagement of the Sisters of Mercy.
JAMES MURPHY, M. D.....Visiting Physician
C. H. LANE, M. D.....Visiting Surgeon
A. F. BELINGER, M. D.....Resident Physician

TERMS:
Payable monthly in advance, for board, medicine attendance, etc:
In the wards.....$15 per week
In rooms with one or more.....15 "
In private rooms.....20 "
Lyings-in and washing, extra.
Confinement cases, $25 extra.
Money always refunded in case a patient leaves before the expiration of the month.
Unclaimed deposits are required to pay in advance.
de12

EDUCATIONAL.

ST. CATHERINE'S ACADEMY,
CONDUCTED BY
THE SISTERS OF ST. DOMINIC,
BENICIA, CALIFORNIA.

THIS INSTITUTION AFFORDS EVERY FACility further acquisition of a refined and solid education. The Academy was founded in 1856, and has always been in the most successful and flourishing condition.

The course of instruction embraces the English, French, Spanish and Latin Languages, Rhetoric, Elocution, Composition, Ancient and Modern History, Geography, Mythology, Algebra, Geometry, Arithmetic, and Use of Globes; Vocal Music, Instrumental Music, Drawing, Painting in Water Colors and in Oil, Tapestry, Plain and Ornamental Needlework, etc., etc.

TERMS.
Board and Tuition (payable half-yearly, in advance)..... $250
Washing..... 12 50
Physician's Fee and Medicines..... 5 00
Entrance Fee..... 10 00

EXTRAS.
Piano and use of Instrument (payable half-yearly)..... $40
Organ..... 40
Guitar..... 30
Vocal Music in Classes..... 10
Private Lessons..... 40
Drawing and Painting in Water Colors..... 20
Drawing Materials..... 20
Board during Vacation..... 60

School Books at Current Prices.

Each Pupil is required to be provided with four dresses, besides the uniform which is a black merino (dress) with trimmings, collar and cuffs of muslin; a sky blue delaine; six changes of underclothing, six pairs of stockings, three pairs of shoes, one pair of slippers, one pair of overshoes, one dozen handkerchiefs, a knife, silver spoon, fork and napkin, a comfortable for the bed, one wool blanket, one pillow, one bolster, one mattress, one pillow-case, one sheet, one counterpane, one towel, one napkin, one set of toilet articles, one pair of sheets, one mosquito bar, paper, envelopes and postage stamps.

The Sisters will endeavor to combine with their duties the greatest attention to the comfort, health and happiness, as well as the intellectual and moral improvement of the students entrusted to their care.

The College is open to all over the age of six years. Pupils will be received at any time during the year, but no deduction will be made for absence, except in cases of protracted illness.

Pupils desiring after the commencement of a term are charged for each portion of it as may remain. No pupil will be withdrawn during the session, except in case of sickness.

No visits allowed, except from parents, guardians, or persons to whom they are entrusted by them, and with the written permission of the Superior. Letters of correspondence must pass through the hands of the Superior.

STUDIES!

The course of studies embraces a full course of English and Classical literature, the various branches of Mathematics, Ancient and Modern Languages, with a Commercial Department, to prepare young men for every branch of business.

TERMS:
Per Board, Lodging and Tuition, per Scholar.
Per Session of Five Months..... $100 00
Washing, per Session or Term..... 10 00
Use of Piano, per Session..... 10 00
Use of Bed, with Mattress, per Month..... 50
Physician's Fee, per Month..... 50
Those who have a Piano in their rooms will be charged extra. Those who bring their own bedding will be charged extra. Those who have the privilege of using a Stove instead of Grate, for warming their rooms will be charged extra.

PAYMENTS:
Payments are to be made invariably half yearly in advance, at the end of the first month, at 9 o'clock A. M., and on Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday at 12 M. Pupils will be received at any time. The Stage to Capital on her arrival at Vallejo every morning.
REV. J. J. GRIFFITH, O. P.,
Prioress.

COLLEGE OF NOTRE DAME.
SAN JOSE, CALIFORNIA.
YOUNG LADIES' INSTITUTE.

THIS INSTITUTION, WHICH IS INCORporated according to the laws of the State and under the direction of the undersigned, will commence the Twenty first annual session on MONDAY, August 15th, 1870. It is conducted by the Sisters of Notre Dame, of the Province of Oregon, assisted by other members of the Institute.

The course of instruction is complete in all the branches of a thorough education.

TERMS:
Entrance, to be paid but once..... $10 00
Tuition, Boarding and Washing, per session, of five and a half months..... 150 00
Music, French and German, each extra..... 10 00
Those who spend vacation at the College will be charged $20.
Payments are required to be made half a session in advance. Pupils will be received at any time.
Pupils will find it much to their advantage to be present at the opening of the session.
de12

DAY SCHOOLS
FOR Boys and Girls.

THE SISTERS OF MERCY HAVE JUST COMpleted a commodious School Building on First street, between Howard and Folsom, and will open a DAY SCHOOL for Boys and Girls.

A Boys' School is being established at Silver Mine Ranch, Amador County, Cal.

Both Schools will be opened on the 15th June, 1871.

San Francisco, May 27, 1871.

ST. VINCENT'S SCHOOL,
FOR BOYS,
SAN RAFAEL, MARIN COUNTY, CAL.

THIS INSTITUTION IS SITUATED IN ONE OF the most delightful and healthy part of the city. The grounds are extensive, and well supplied with shade and ornament.

The course of instruction embraces the usual branches of a thorough English education. Spanish and Latin.

TERMS
(Invariably half yearly in advance):
Board, bed, washing, mending, etc., per annum..... $200 00
Tuition, and use of instrument, per month..... $4 to $5 00
Music, per month..... 2 50
Drawing, per month..... 2 50
Entrance Fee, for Plain Sewing, Fancy Needlework, etc.
The scholastic year of ten months and a half consists of two sessions. The first commences on the last Monday in August.
For further particulars apply to
SISTERS OF CHARITY,
San Rafael, Cal.
1230

ST. VINCENT'S COLLEGE,
LOS ANGELES, CAL.

THIS INSTITUTION, CHARTERED AUGUST 27th, 1865, by the Legislature of California, with power to confer honors, is situated in the city of Los Angeles, which, for the salubrity of its climate and the beauty of its scenery, The Faculty is composed of the Priests of the CONGREGATION OF THE MISSION OF ST. VINCENT DE PAUL, whose constant endeavor is to promote the health and happiness, as well as the intellectual and moral improvement of the students entrusted to their care.

The College is open to all over the age of six years. Pupils will be received at any time during the year, but no deduction will be made for absence, except in cases of protracted illness.

Students desiring after the commencement of a term are charged for each portion of it as may remain. No pupil will be withdrawn during the session, except in case of sickness.

No visits allowed, except from parents, guardians, or persons to whom they are entrusted by them, and with the written permission of the President. Letters of correspondence must pass through the hands of the President.

STUDIES!

The course of studies embraces a full course of English and Classical literature, the various branches of Mathematics, Ancient and Modern Languages, with a Commercial Department, to prepare young men for every branch of business.

TERMS:
Per Board, Lodging and Tuition, per Scholar.
Per Session of Five Months..... $100 00
Washing, per Session or Term..... 10 00
Use of Piano, per Session..... 10 00
Use of Bed, with Mattress, per Month..... 50
Physician's Fee, per Month..... 50
Those who have a Piano in their rooms will be charged extra. Those who bring their own bedding will be charged extra. Those who have the privilege of using a Stove instead of Grate, for warming their rooms will be charged extra.

PAYMENTS:
Payments are to be made invariably half yearly in advance, at the end of the first month, at 9 o'clock A. M., and on Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday at 12 M. Pupils will be received at any time. The Stage to Capital on her arrival at Vallejo every morning.
REV. JAMES MARGRILL, C. M.,
President.

FRANCISCAN COLLEGE,
SANTA BARBARA.....CALIFORNIA.

THE FIFTH SESSION OF THIS INSTITUTE, under the auspices and the fathers of the order of St. Francis, will commence on August 16th.

The object of the institution is to give a good English, Mathematical, Classical and Philosophical education to the youth entrusted to it, and thus fulfil in California—and thereby bring its advantages within the reach of all.

TERMS:
Entrance Fee (to be paid but once)..... $10 00
Tuition, Board and Washing, per session, of five and a half months..... 150 00
Music, French and German, each extra..... 10 00
Those who spend vacation at the College will be charged $20.
Payments are required to be made half a session in advance. Pupils will be received at any time.
For further particulars apply to
FATHER GUARDIAN,
Franciscan College,
Santa Barbara Cal.
1230

GROCERIES, WINES AND LIQ

WILLIAM B. DOLAN,
140 Third Street.....San Fr
Importer and Dealer Wholesale and

French Wines and Brand
AND
Irish Whisk
Imported direct from Ireland.

HE HAS ALSO ON HAND A LAR assortment of California Wines of every class, which he will dispose of, in lots to suit the convenience of families.

All orders left at the store, 140 Third street, will be promptly attended to and delivered free of charge any part of the city.

JOHN FLANAGAN & CO.
Importers and Jobbers of Fine Brandies, Wines, Liquors,
San Francisco.
Foreign Liqueurs in bond. Fine Brandies, Sherry, Port, Claret, etc., sold in quantities to suit the trade.
Also, Goderich native California Wines and Brandies.
de6-1f

M. H. EMEY. Jos
Kelly & Em
IMPORTERS AND DEALERS IN FINE WINES AND LIQUO
No. 604 Battery street,
Near Jackson, San Fra

D. Commins & Co
(Successors to P. Riley & Co.,)
WHOLESALE LIQUOR MERCHANTS
my6 No. 305 FRONT STREET.

F. & P. J. CASSIN,
Importers and Wholesale Dealers in Wines & Liquor
NO. 325 FRONT STREET,
SAN FRANCISCO.
Sole Proprietors of CASSIN'S GRAPE BRANDY BITTERS.

A. P. HOTALING & CO.
IMPORTERS AND DEALERS IN FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC
WINES AND LIQUORS
AGENTS FOR THE J. H. CUTTER
OLD BOURBON WHISKY
C. P. MOORMAN & CO., DISTILLERS,
LOUISVILLE, KENTUCKY.

OWING TO THE DESERVED REPUTATION of the celebrated brand of Whisky, distilled by C. P. Moorman & Co., many unprincipled parties are in the habit of counterfeiting the labels of the same, thereby deceiving the public and injuring the reputation of our purchaser and ours the bogus, represented is not the genuine article.

To guard as far as possible the public against buying counterfeits, we notify the trade and consumers that this is the only genuine brand of Cutter Whisky and that we are the sole Agents for the same on the Pacific Coast.
de12-1f

A. P. HOTALING & CO.,
121 and 123 Battery street.

Finest Brands of Wines, Liquors an CIGARS, CONSTANTLY ON HAND.
HOT LUNCH FROM 11 TO 2 DAILY
de6-1f THOS. SHEPHERD, Proprietor.

PAINTS, OILS, ETC.

WASON & MORRIS.
Successors to J. S. KELLY.
PLAIN AND DECORATIVE
HOUSE AND SIGN PAINTERS,
GILDING AND GLAZING.
Imitations of Wood and Marble
Banners, Flags and Military Standards painted to order.
IMPORTERS AND DEALERS IN
PAINTS, OILS,
TURPENTINE, VARNISHES,
BRUSHES, GLASS, Etc.
No. 26 CALIFORNIA ST.,
Two doors below Davis street, San Francisco.

SULLIVAN, KELLY & CO.,
Northwest corner Pine and Front Sts.,
Where they offer for sale
THE LARGEST STOCK OF PAINTS,
OILS,
GLASS,
ETC., ETC., ON THE PACIFIC COAST.
AT THE LOWEST MARKET RATES.
101, 103 and 105 FRONT STREET,
AND
110 PINE STREET.

STAINED AND CUT
GLASS WORKS.
JOHN MALLON,
10 Fremont Street, Near Market Street.
EVERY DESCRIPTION OF STAINED, ENAMELED, EMBOSSED and Cut Glass, for Churches, Private Houses, Saloons, Steamboats, Railroad Cars, etc. Metal Sash work of all descriptions. Particular attention paid to Bending Glass.
We invite the Public to examine our new designs.

QUITE AN ATTRACTION
AT
MRS. RIORDAN'S
MILLINERY EMPORIUM,
121 Kearny street,
☞ One door from the Corner of Pacific street. ☜
The latest assortment of FURBIFAN AND NEW YORK STYLES selling at the lowest figures. Ladies, please call and examine for yourselves. jy8

THE HOUSEWIFE.

…bath, rest and abstinence from …ures cures disease than a pos…

…ooms should be thoroughly …and fresh air introduced pre… retiring.

…ful of pine tar and one of …sulphur burnt, and the fumes …will almost immediately cure a …ad.

…ndispensful of allspice boiled in a …milk and drank when hot, is the …best nourishment for invalids, …where the patient has weak …

…ance should not be permitted to …or coffee, as it debilitates the …and creates a morbid appetite, …frequently results in the habitual …and tobacco.

…ATOES.—Beat two eggs with a …of white bread, nutmeg and pep… Pour your oysters in and fry them …with butter. These may be used …round a dish of stewed oysters.

…SWEET YEAST OR SODA.—Make …of milk or water lukewarm; stir in …as much as will do for the bread; …a pinch of salt; put into this in a …it in a pot of warm water; keep …in a warm place. In five hours it …be like yeast; then knead in flour …up in paste, let them rise again, …in a quick oven.

…E.—The following recipe for mak… pie is worthy of dissemination. …a spoonful of butter, one tea… of molasses, one teacupful of …, one egg and a little nutmeg; …soda crackers fine and add to the …and you will have material enough …pie. Try them, and you will …

…PUDDING.—Place over the fire …of sweet milk for each person, …to a boil and stir in one egg, one …of sugar, one of flour, one pinch …alt, let it cook for a few minutes. …ve from the fire and add a little …them. When cool, the pudding …eat. Serve with sweet cream or …

…PASTE.—Pare your apples, cut …in slices, take out the core, weigh …each, add one teaspoonful of nut… …, pare and slice one or two ap… …ded dish, then moisten it with either …or milk, mix meal as thick as it will stir …a spoon; then put it in a dish …manner over the boiling dinner …it wants to cook from one to two …with seasonal cream, or butter …whichever is preferred.

…CAKE.—Four pounds of flour, …pounds of butter, four pounds of …, two of raisins, one ounce …four lemons, one pint of cream, …ten eggs, one teaspoonful of soda, …will make nice loaves in two …Work the butter and sugar to… add the eggs, beaten separately; …fruit, cream, saleratus and last …

…LLENT DISH.—Chop up one …cold mutton, put it in a sauce… …ne fourth of a pound of good …ch on the fire and let it melt; …brown; add one pound of the …ed washed, free from pluts or …and let it boil slowly till there is …ch gravy; season with salt and …le bit, with the cover on it, for …or minutes; dish it up in a …and serve hot.

…FLOUR.—Mince a fleshy piece of …ef very fine, add a little

TELEGRAPHIC.

Eastern.

WASHINGTON, January 12.—The Senate Committee on Private Claims have sent apart Friday to hear testimony on the Nicaragua or New Idria mine case. General Hickies, ex-Engineer and Surveyor Seymour, of New York, and other prominent officials are to be examined.

NEW YORK, January 12.—An Albany letter states that Tweed has notified his friends that he is not going to claim his seat in the Senate.

The Mail's Washington special says a sworn statement in the Florida case has been made known in the Navy Department, and they have been at once forwarded to the State Department by order of the President. A demand will be at once made, in a manner which will admit of no evasion, for an explanation, apology, and full satisfaction. The friends of the Government will be unyielding in defence of the assailed honor of the flag. Minister Roberts is perfectly aware of the feeling which prevails, and has undoubtedly notified his Government that there is no evasion of either an ample apology or war.

A special from Washington says the Gortschakoff letter is regarded by high officers as a direct and open insult to the President and Secretary of State, and likely to lead to serious results. The country need not be surprised if Curtin is immediately recalled by a command from Washington, and ordered to demand his passports, and the Russian Charge d'Affaires here suspended from business, in case he may take his departure from the United States.

Charge O'Conor has signified his willingness to accept Connolly's bondsmen on their formal justification which will take place to-day. Connolly will not, however, place himself within reach of arrest until the whole matter is closed.

A cable dispatch says the constituents of the O'Donoghue have requested him to resign his seat in Parliament, because of his opposition to the Home Rule movement.

CHICAGO, January 13.—Judge Anderson, of the Superior Court of this county, yesterday delivered a long and elaborate opinion in the case of Mrs. Catherine Wait, of Hyde Park, who applied for a mandamus to compel the Inspectors of election and ex-officers of the Board of Registry of that town to register her as a legal voter, the decision to be to the effect that the elective franchise is not inherent in citizenship, and is not conferred upon women, either by the Constitution of the United States or those of foreign countries. The application was denied.

RICHMOND, January 14.—The Right Rev. Bishop John McGill, for twenty one years Bishop of the Roman Catholic Diocese of Virginia, died here this morning, aged sixty years.

NEW YORK, January 18.—On the question of his resignation, the President said that he had never expressed any opinion; that it would be time to give his views when the time for action. As a Republican, he would feel in honor bound to support any candidate who would give his best efforts to the success of the party.

A Berlin letter says that the German Government has received a circular from Gortschakoff relative to some incidents transpiring from the recent Fenian raids. This circular is said to have been necessary from the unfriendly demonstrations. The American people are further doing a disgrace to the house of a German Minister at Washington, by proposed reading a letter from the American Secretary explanatory of the Cassaday affair, but the Russian Minister refused to listen, and the German Minister said such a letter must not be read in his house. Secretary Cramer went to Copenhagen and read the letter to them individually, they, of course reporting to their Government. The Russian Cabinet feels versed over the affair, and considers it a personal affront, and hence no sympathy is felt in Berlin that a coolness between Russia and the United States has arisen therefrom.

The same letter states that the Emperor St. Petersburg represent that the Emperor feels and all society there consider this affair was slighted by President Grant in his not returning the Duke's visit, and the Emperor will not allow Prince Alexis to return to Washington.

NEW YORK, January 18.—In the Custom House Investigation to-day, Mr. Mudgett further testified that he had counselled Grinnell to resist the illegal search warrant or permitted adventurers from Washington to get all the plums, and Grinnell said he would. About this time Marshal Den, brother-in-law to the President, waited on Grinnell to ask him if the new general order in bonded business to a certain party; and corrupt business to a certain party; that party consisted of Grinnell, Fish, Lent, Lindsay and others. Afterward then, Porter came to see Grinnell, who gave orders to send goods to Bixby's store, the latter having arranged with Porter & Co later having arranged with Porter & Co later having arranged with Porter & Co later

ATHLONE AND AUGHRIM.

The Battle of Aughrim has certainly called "the Cullodon of Ireland." It certainly was the battle that most largely decided the fate of the Stuart dynasty in Ireland; but it was no such decisive overthrow, no such complete and disastrous rout, as was Culloden for the house royalist. It was a lost battle—no more. The Irish army fell back on Limerick, and for long after were not without abundant probabilities of turning the tide of fortune. They would have done so had England contributed any effort to the Royalist cause: but Ireland was left to fight almost single-handed the Williamite forces contributed by England, Holland, Denmark, Sweden and other countries. As it was, the Irish had victory within their grasp at Aughrim, and it was snatched from them by one of those singular accidents or chances that sometimes change the fate of kingdoms.

The William army rendezvoused at Mulligar towards the end of May, under generals De Ginckle, Talmash and Mackay. On June 7th they moved westward for Athlone, "the ranks one blaze of scarlet, and the artillery such as had never before been seen in Ireland." They were detained ten days besieging an Irish outpost, Ballymore Castle, heroically defended by Lieutenant-Colonel Ulick Burke, and a force of twelve hundred men against Sarsfield's army of thirteen thousand, and that artillery described to us by Macaulay. On the 19th they were joined by the Prince of Wirtemburg, the Prince of Hesse, and the Count of Nassau, with seven thousand foreign mercenaries. On the 19th their full force appeared before Athlone, and summoned the town to surrender.

On the previous occasion, when besieged by Douglas, the governor Colonel Grace relinquished as untenable the Leinster (or "English") side of the town, and made his stand successfully from the Connaught (or "Irish") side. The governor on this occasion —Colonel Fitzgerald—proposed to defend both the "English" and the "Irish" sides, St. Ruth having strongly counselled me so to do, and promised to reach him soon with the bulk of the Irish army from Limerick. Colonel Fitzgerald had but not more than three hundred and fifty men as a garrison; nevertheless, knowing that all depended upon his holding out till St. Ruth could come up, he did not wait for Ginckle to appear in sight, but sallied out with his small force, dashed at once with the Williamite army the approaches to the town, then successfully retarding them for five or six hours. But Ginckle had merely to plant his artillery, and the only walls Athlone possessed—but one side at least—were breached and crumbled up like pastry. Towards evening on the 7th, the whole of the bastion at the "Dublin Gate," near the river on the north side, being levelled, the English town was assaulted. The storming party, as sold off, were four thousand strong, and by three hundred grenadiers, under Mackay, and with profuse supports besides. To meet these, Fitzgerald had barely the garrison of his three hundred and fifty men, now exhausted after forty-eight hours' fighting. "There was a gap in the breach, when the assault was delivered, two hundred of that gallant band fell to rise no more." The remainder, fiercely fighting, crossed by their four thousand foes. From the Williamites shouts now arose on all sides of "The bridge—the bridge!" and a furious rush was made to get over the bridge above mentioned, which Fitzgerald and his few companions stood now nearly all buried in the ruined masonry, and the enemy beyond had battery on battery to bear on the gateway—but it was death to show in the line of the all but finished causeway.

One stepped from the ranks of Mackay's regiment a sergeant of Dragoons, Custume by name. "Are there any men here who will follow me with me for Ireland?" A hundred eager voices shouted aye. "Then," said he, "we will save Athlone. The bridge must go down!"

Grasping axes and crowbars, the devoted band rushed from behind the ruined battlement and dashed forward upon the newly-laid beams. A peal of artillery—a fusilade of musketry—from the other side, and the space was swept with grape-shot and bullets. When the smoke cleared away, the bodies of the brave Custume and his ten heroes lay on the bridge riddled with balls. They had torn away some of the beams, but every man of the eleven had perished.

Ten from the ranks of the same regiment dashed so many more volunteers. "There are eleven men more who will die for Ireland." Again across the bridge rushed the heroes. Again the spoils swept by a murderous fusilade. The smoke lifted from the scene; nine of the second band lie dead upon the bridge—two survive, but the work is done. The last beam is gone: Athlone once more is saved!

I am not repeating a romance of diction, but relating a true story, recorded by looker-ons, and corroborated in all its substance by writers on the Williamite and on the Jacobite side. When, therefore, young Custume, and his eleven heroes of Horse-tius Cocles and his comrades, who let their remember that the authentic annalist Ireland gives a sense of heroism not dissimilar in many of its features, not less glorious in aught. And when they read of the fall of the Gaul, they will not be plunged into the abyss at the forum to save the city, let them remember that such devotion, not in fable, but in fact, has been still more menurably exhibited by Irish-men and let them honor beyond measure the glorious Custume, the brave Custume and his glorious companions, who died for Ireland at Athlone.

The town was seized once more—Yet awhile. "Colonel Fitzgerald and nine defeated in striving to cross the Shannon, resolved to renew his approaches over the bridge by the more contracted passage of a covered walk, for 'close gallery,' and to support the new mode of attack, by several others in different directions." Toe whole of that day he cannonaded the Irish town from the river, "as I believe never town was," writes a spectator. Nevertheless, the Irish, narrowing and entrenching amongst the chaotic mass of ruins and piles of rubbish once called the town of Athlone, remained in the new defences as fast as the old were levelled, and Ginckle was at his wit's end how to carry upon if his "close gallery" should fail. A council of the Williamite camp decided that on the morning of the 29th, the passage of the river should be third time attempted, and a pontoon bridge laid down. A brisk cannonade was to be thrown across the river from the Leinster side, and all stone structures and it seemed to some one to suggest the summer had been exceedingly dry, and as water in the river appeared to be unprecedentedly low, it might be worth while to try something for that.

This haphazard thought—this apparent vague inspiration—was—Athlone.

"Three Danish soldiers, under sentence of death for some crime, were offered their pardon if they would undertake to try the river. The men readily consented, and, putting on some leathern jackets in three several places. The English in the trenches were ordered to fire accuingly at them, but in reality over their heads. The three men accurately concluded them to be deserters, and did not doubt but they were taken swimming, when the English by their great and small shot, obliged the Irish to be covered. It was discovered that the deepest part of the river did not reach their breasts," Thereupon it was resolved to assail the town next morning suddenly and by surprise at three points; one party to go over the bridge by the "close gallery;" a boat and to cross by the pontoons or boat-bridge; the third by a ford at the ruins. Colonel Mackay was to lead the assault, which was first for ten o'clock next morning; again, at the Dublin gate, three men were to swim to mount a green bough or sprig in his hat; and this time the word was to be "Killkenny."

That night a deserter swam the river before the town, and reported to the Irish that an assault was to be made by the boat bridge and "close gallery" next morning; and lo! when day dawned, the Williamites could descry the same army of the Irish drilling into the town, and detachments stationed at every point to contest the assault which was to have been a surprise. To make matters worse, the boats were not ready till ten o'clock, instead of six. Nevertheless, the attack was proceeded with, and the storm of grenades began to fly. It had been decided to decide the combat at once at the bridge close to the broken arches, where on their own side; the Irish had a breastwork and guns, which the "close gallery" had been advanced, and upon the attack at this point the other operations were to depend. After an hour's hot work the Irish set on fire the arches of the bridge, whereupon, "a shout in the Connaught side; but just as the enemy rushed with vengeance upon the doomed group, they set spurs to their horses, leaped over the edge of the chasm, flung away their arms, and dashed forward and plunge into the stream. Like a clap of thunder broke a volley from a thousand muskets from the Leinster side, tearing the water. There was a minute of suspense on each side, and then a cheer rang out—of defiance, exultation, victory —as the brave fellows were seen to reach the other bank, pulled to land by a hundred welcoming hands.

St. Ruth, at Ballinasloe, on his way up from Limerick, heard next day that the English town had fallen, "He instantly set out at the head of fifteen hundred men on foot, leaving the main army to follow as quickly as possible. On his arrival, he encamped about three miles below Athlone, and appointed Lieutenant-General D'Usson governor-general of the gallant Fitzgerald, as being best skilled in defending fortified places." Now came the opportunity for that splendid artillery, "the like of which," Macaulay has told us, "had never before been seen in Ireland." For seven long days in midsummer there poured against the Irish town such a storm of iron from seven batteries of siege guns and mortars, that by the 27th the place was literally a mass of ruins, amongst which, we are told, two men could walk abreast. On the sudden that seven hundred wagons arrived in the Williamite camp from Dublin with a further supply of ammunition for the siege guns." That evening the enemy by grenades set to fire the fascines of the Irish breastwork at the bridge, and that night, under cover of a tremendous thunderstorm, they succeeded in flinging some beams over the broken arches, and partially planking them. Next morning—it was Sunday, the 30th June—the Irish saw with consternation that barely a few planks more laid on would complete the bridge. Their own frightened by fancy. By the time this hurtful answer rectified him, the officer was enough to convince him that infallibly an assault was about to be made, and he sent with all speed to the camp, entreating the general to send him 1,000 men. St. Ruth replied by saying that if the officer in charge was afraid of such attacks, he might turn over the command to another. Sarsfield was present at this last reply, and he at once judged the whole situation correctly. He implored St. Ruth not to treat so lightly a report so grave from an officer of undoubted bravery. The Frenchman—courageous, energetic, and highly-gifted as he unquestionably was—unfortunately was short-tempered, imperious, and vain. He and Sarsfield exchanged hot and angry words; St. Ruth resenting Sarsfield's interference, and intimating that the latter henceforth should "know his place." While yet this fatal altercation was proceeding, an aide-de-camp galloped up breathless from the town—the English were across the river and safe the defence of Athlone! Eyes now St. Ruth's overwhelming self-confidence would not yield. "Then let us drive them back again," was his answer, at the same time directing troops to hurry forward for that purpose. But it was too late. The lodgment had been made in force. The English were now in the defences. The sails of the town on the camp side had been left standing, and only a siege could now dispossess the new occupants of Athlone.

St. Ruth fell back to Ballinasloe, on Ginckle's road to Galway, which city was now held to be the true point to which to direct one of their most important possessions. The Irish army was in a state of utter demoralization. He knew that Sarsfield held him accountable for the loss of Athlone, and his pride was painfully stung. How often do dire events from trivial causes spring! The misunderstanding between St. Ruth and Sarsfield was fated to affect the fe dinkes of Ireland, for to it may be traced the battle of Aughrim, and the consequences that followed.

At a council of war in the Irish camp it was at first resolved to give battle in the strong position which the army had now taken up, but St. Ruth moved off to Aughrim, about three miles distant, on the road to Galway. The new position was not less strong than that which had just been quitted. In truth, its selection, and the ties to which St. Ruth was giving orders of its natural advantages, showed him to be a man of consummate ability.

The village of Aughrim—destined to give name to the last great battle between Catholic and Protestant Europe on the soil of Ireland—is the Hill of Kilcommedan. The hill slopes gradually and steadily upward to the height of about three hundred feet from its base; running lengthways for about two miles from north to south. On its east side or slope, looking towards the way by which Ginckle must approach, is a bog or morass of great depth, the way, the Irish army was encamped, having on its right flank the town or village of Urraghree, and its left flank resting on the village of Aughrim. A large morass lay at the foot of Kilcommedan hill on the sweeping round the northern end of the hill which might be crossed in summer by footmen, but was impracticable for cavalry. Through its centre, from south to north, ran a little stream, which in winter rains flooded all the surrounding morass. Through the village of Aughrim; the latter one being defended or commanded by an old ruin, Aughrim Castle, at the hill base. Along the crest of the hill, parallel with its base, ran two or three lines of entrenchments, the crowning out of thick earth fences, affording admirable position and protection for musketry and artillery. The genius of a Wellington could have devised no stronger position than that. St. Ruth had done to turn every feature of the ground and every inch of this position to advantage. Yet by one of those singular fatalities that seem to mingle with the plan of battle to no one. Sarsfield was the man next entitled and fitted to command in the event of anything befalling the General; but he in particular was kept from any knowledge of the dispositions or strategy upon which the battle was to turn. Indeed, he was posted at a point critical and important enough, but one which lay far away from, and out of sight of the part of the field where the struggle was to be fought and what the reserve of cavalry beyond the castle to the extreme left? As to the forces from the Leinster side, Sarsfield made their efforts nugatory. It was found on examining the ammunition with which they had been supplied, that while the men were armed with firelocks, the balls that had been served to them were cast for English muskets, of which the calibre was larger, and that the Irish were consequently useless in this emergency the men cut the small globular buttons from their jackets, and used them as bullets. Sarsfield, in short, was forcibly, however briskly it was sustained, kept out of the battle, and reduced to a causeway were hit. This was but one of the mischances connected with the unhappy battle of Aughrim, which, as we shall see, how an Irish officer, when ordered with reserve to the left—"every man of the battalion from the left—wrong. This error was immediately followed by the opening of a gap in the centre of the battalion point by three Williamite regiments, who employed bayonets to facilitate their purpose, and who met with little or no musketry feebly resistance at the front line of the Irish centre, posted in making a hollow or a corn field on the Irish side."

It was, however—as the historian just quoted remarks in a paragraph—still very easy to remedy the effects of these errors for a time, belonging as they did to movements so rinder questionable the victory already substantially won by the Irish; and St. Ruth, from the high ground in the rear of the rest of the dogs, yet he would not allow the battle to be begun. Hearing in the distance the sound of the enemy's drums, he prepared to receive them in person. He was already in silver orders, he prepared to receive second one from the Irish Princess, and blasphemie his sacred Name for the bishop of Japan; when the decree of martyrdom was issued, and the order to behead the Christian soldiers. He himself died for Christians.

And now see how Almighty God gathers together His elect. Twenty-four martyrs were destined to die before the last hour; two of the Society before the last hour; two Portuguese Christians, who had followed lowest rank of the people, were added to them, relieving them. Having provided themselves with money for their journey, they presented it to the avarice of the guards, who took it from them, and allowed them to keep it. Their countenance was of wonderful joy, as they had yearned for; and, as nobleness they had manifested in their lives, when they were safely lodged in prison, for twenty-four, with these two new recruits, began to bless God for the glorious gift they were to receive, for having deemed in the number of His favored children.

They journeyed on, all through the bitter month of January; suffering intensely in the flesh, but rejoicing in the spirit, as they communicated to the heathens who crowded to see them, the joy of their souls. Their countenances were full of peace and confidence, as they spoke to them of the truth, that the bonzes, or ministers of religion, had persuaded the Emperor, by Paramburo. Then, giving to each of them a gift in His name, He said to them: "Here is something to console you, and I will preserve you in Heaven." Weep not for me, but rather for those poor unhappy ones, who are destined to die for ever; while those unhappy ones remain in their prison, they will not see me die for God. On the contrary, I hope to rejoice, since I shall be called to heaven, and there to be united with you for ever."

It so happened that the cross on which the martyrs hung was next to that of Father Peter Baptist, on the left hand. As he felt that his end was near, he rose to his heart that these saintly boys, so dear to the Lord, should not be left in the world, and entreated to be torn down on the blessed roll.

While he was in prison with the rest, a Japanese of rank came with a promise to deliver him if he would renounce his holy religion. It ought to have been said that Louis had been a catechumen almost to the time of his martyrdom, and had just received the sacrament of his new birth; But the answer of this agonized spirit was: "Say, it is you, my person was simply: "Say, it is you who ought to become a Christian; for there is no other way of being saved." When all the martyrs drew near to Nangasaki, a great multitude of Christians came out to meet them on the road, and Father Peter-Baptist, and Father Louis, of Father Peter-Baptist, and asked him to join with him in repeating the prayer of Malic vows of their baptism. "Praise the Lord, ye children." The Father was at the moment absorbed in God, and could not hear him. From the child, with a voice that seemed so completely to breathe of heaven, the words fell like a divine voice, and were instantly joined the angelic chants, inspired by God Himself, and they all found the pain himself, and he had also found the Father Peter, when the spear of the executioner pierced his heart, and he fell suddenly dead. Then first the work was finished, for it was caught up and glorified into the eternal Alleluia.

Then the Japanese who had invoked, what name he took in religion) was the name of the Blessed Virgin, where all were fervent and saintly. His parents, made happy by the news of this blessed change in the child that had never ceased to love, brought his body from the city to Nangasaki, where three hundred and forty years ago they were appointed Bishop of Japan. That of the Jesuits embarked on a Spanish vessel for Manilla, to preach, convert, and suffer. Then little Mr. Louis answered at once: "I do not wish to live on these terms; I should feel a life longer than I am without miserable life here."

On arriving at the place of crucifixion, where the executioners pointed it out, he ran forward to it in an ecstasy of joy, and struck admiration into the vast concourse of spectators. All were full of the joy of martyrdom, and the death of Louis, as he fastened by his sleeves, his body only smile, and he kept his eyes fixed on heaven, and his countenance was full of joy. Then little Mr. Louis answered at once: "I do not wish to live on these terms; I should feel a life longer than I am without miserable life here."

Then the martyrs were bound upon the cross, and three executioners, with lances, pierced their hearts. Their bodies were burned, and their ashes cast into the sea.

But Brother Philip's cross had been put to death by fire, others on frozen lakes; those have been cut into small pieces, those had been torn asunder; others cast down precipices. But for us, brethren, unworthy as we are of martyrdom, we have together what men are even now making ready for us, the crosses, that instrument of angels in our sphere worthily to value it. Let us, then, prepare ourselves to endure with fortitude whatever the executioners will inflict upon us. Let us aim ourselves with the armor of God, the glorious Passion of Jesus! He, who knew so sin, who was living, and who was yet pleasing to the infinite Sanctity, was yet pleasing to the infinite Sanctity, was yet pleased to endure for our salvation. Ah, brethren, let us not despair, since our God does indeed exhibit towards us, who are but a single mortal sin, we observed the everlasting palms of martyrdom to commit to hell; and he vouchsafes to us, in the midst of the tempest of angels in our able worthily to value it. Let us, then, prepare ourselves to endure with fortitude whatever the executioners will inflict upon us. Let us arm ourselves with the armor of God, the glorious Passion of Jesus! He, who knew no sin, who was living, and who was yet pleasing to the infinite Sanctity, was yet pleased to endure for our salvation. Ah, brethren, let us not despair, since our God does indeed exhibit towards us, who are but a single mortal sin, we observed the everlasting palms of martyrdom to commit to hell; and he vouchsafes to us, in the midst of the tempest of angels in our sphere

WEEKLY CALENDAR.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING FEB. 17. February.
11—Sunday—Quinquagesima Sunday.
12—Monday—St. Raymond of Pennafort, Confessor.
14—Tuesday—Of the Feria.
15—Wednesday—Ash Wednesday. Beginning of Lent. St. Valentine, Martyr.
16—Thursday—Of the Feria. St. Faustinus and Jovita, Martyrs.
16—Friday—Most Holy Passion of our Lord
17—Saturday—Of the Feria.

THE MONITOR:

THE ONLY

Irish and Catholic Journal in California.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

SATURDAY.....FEBY 10, 1872.

DIVERS THINGS.

New Trial for Mrs. Fair.

Mrs. Laura D. Fair's plea to have a new trial. Her appeal to the Supreme Court has proved successful, the exception taken by her counsel to some of the rulings of Judge Dwinelle having been sustained. The animosity of evidence respecting the moral character of the accused, and the denial to her counsel of the closing argument, were the grounds upon which the new hearing of the case has been ordered. While we are totally opposed to any maudlin sympathy with the prisoner, and think many of the arguments used in her favor sheer nonsense, we think she ought be accorded justice in its fullest and freest sense. Consequently if grave informalities have been discovered in her first trial, it is only right and proper she should have a second. It will of course entail great expense upon the State, but money is nothing compared with human life or even with purity of administration in justice. Those who, on the other hand, be considerable difficulty found in empannelling an unbiassed jury belonging to the city and county of San Francisco, because the affair's antecedents have been so generally discussed and pronounced upon, that a juror who has not expressed a decided opinion must be very rare indeed. The probability is that there will be a change of venue, and that Mrs. Fair will be tried in some other county—Alameda being, perhaps, the likeliest. We do not think that Judge Dwinelle can be blamed much for the necessity of a new hearing. He evidently did all he could to give the case a fair trial and to do justice to both sides. Nevertheless we must confess that his admitting evidence respecting the moral character of the accused, was a palpable mistake. When the sole object of inquiry was really whether Mrs. Fair was responsible for her actions at the time she shot Crittenden, it was certainly irrelevant to scrutinize into her morals. This case has obtained a great deal more notoriety than it deserved, and we are sure the Editor will be pleased to see the whole matter was finished one way or another, and Mrs. Fair relegated to her former obscurity.

The Bank Commissioner.

We are glad to see that the Call comes out in favor of the appointment of a Bank Commissioner. There can no longer be any doubt that the citizens desire the creating of such an official. All the objections urged against it when put together, are hardly worthy of a serious attempt at refutation. The Banks would no doubt endeavor to bribe the Commissioner; but it does not follow they would be successful. It is not impossible to procure a man who would faithfully discharge his duties and resist from corruption. We are willing to allow that efforts would be made to fool and thwart this official; but common sense could be easily found to render that sort of game a little too risky. The upshot of the whole matter is that depositors, the men, rich and poor, who entrust their money to the banks, want that which they have not now—security for the safe-keeping of their funds. The necessity for this security has been taught by several rather severe lessons, which will not readily be forgotten. As things are at present, no depositor knows what is done with his money, nor has he even any right to inquire. All he is expected to do is to hand over his coin, and then receive thankfully whatever interest is awarded. As long as the bank doors are open and business is transacted, he is to suppose his money perfectly safe: when they are shut, and the clerks are turned into the streets to look out for other situations, he needs no prophet or ghost from the grave to tell him that his dollars are gone where the woodbine twineth. Experience has proved how utterly and wretchedly insolvent a bank may be while yet transacting business with its customers to the last penny. Experience has also demonstrated (if we cannot without sarcasm say "satisfactorily," let us say "thoroughly,") that when once a bank has suspended payment and is completely involved up, the chances are entirely against the depositor getting back half his money. This sort of blind dealing is not business by any means. If the bankers are wise in their generation, they will cease opposition to the appointment of a Commissioner, and gracefully accede to what they well know to be the earnest wish of nine-tenths of their patrons.

The Santa Cruz Robbery.

That was a handsome robbery at Santa Cruz. It was neatly and artistically done, and a fair booty, twenty thousand dollars in gold, it is said, was secured by the bold operators. The incidents ... reported are highly sensationnaute, and under the skillful manipulation of a sensational writer they might be worked either into a three-volume novel or a thrilling drama. The County Treasurer of Santa Cruz county is at work in his office after the usual hours. To him suddenly enter three or four disguised ruffians, who seize him, and, by dreadful threats, backed by knife and revolver, intimidate him into opening the safe. The twenty thousand dollars are immediately confiscated; the Treasurer is ... bound and thrown into a cellar, and the plunders, of course, make their escape without any difficulty. They threatened terrible things against the Treasurer himself, in fact, that as soon as they had the money they would kill him anyhow; but fortunately they relented and contented themselves with securing him in the manner we have mentioned. Thus they spared themselves the odium of committing murder while perpetrating the minor crime of burglary. The loss falls upon the county, and will inevitably bring it to the verge of bankruptcy. The robbers are still at large, and no clue to their detection has yet been discovered. As a daily contemporary aptly remarks, if the loss were sustained by a private individual, or a large firm, that of Wells, Fargo & Co., for instance, more vigorous efforts would be made for the apprehension of the thieves than seem to be making at present. It would seem to be nobody's business, particularly to look after the interests of the people. The citizens are robbed every day, and only in the modern generale does this Santa Cruz affair differ from a thousand robberies about which very little noise is made. This plugging men and bursting open safes is a clumsy way of prospering after all, and only defensible under circumstances like those which depressed the Santa Cruz operators. We congratulate the Treasurer upon his escape, and suggest to him that in future he refrain from overworking himself and quit his office at the usual business hours.

The Man for Galway.

Wednesday's telegrams contained one small item of Irish intelligence which was more than usually pleasing to us. It simply recorded the fact that Captain John Philip Nolan had been returned as member of Parliament for the historic City of the Tribes. As a general thing, we feel extremely little interest in the changes occurring in the personnel of the Irish representation in the great British talking house. We are to be numbered among those who think that very little good will ever come to Ireland through the agency of loyal members of Parliament. Our idea of the proper manner of redressing the wrongs of our native land, is one that it would be hardly safe to ventilate inside the walls of Stephen's; but let that pass. Since election to Parliament is one of the ways left to our people at home of testifying their respect for, and confidence in, a gentleman, we are glad that Captain Nolan has been the recipient of such an honor. We are pleased at it for more reasons than one. In the first place, he belongs to the Home Rule party, and therefore to a certain extent must be a Nationalist. A Home Rule man does not quite come up to our idea of an Irishman or Irishwoman, but he is ... better than Irishmen ought to be; nevertheless we much prefer him to a Wood or Gibson. The former believes that Ireland has at some rights of her own; the latter believes that she has ... only to be contented with favors from England. The former says, "English Government is a bad job; but we can't get rid of it, so let us make the best of it; the latter says "English Government is a blessing for which we never can be sufficiently thankful." In the next place Capt. Nolan is a good and kind-hearted landlord, not an oppressor or an exterminator. When he had some difficulty with his tenantry, whose farms he wished to alter for certain reasons, instead of evicting them; and turning them out on the world, as most landlords would have done, he called upon three good Nationalists, put his case before them, and guaranteed to abide by their decision. The Portcarron award, as it is called, gave satisfaction to all parties, and was recently sustained and commended in a court of law. Finally we are pleased at Captain Nolan's election, because he had the hearty support of the western bishops and priests. Their spirit of nationality is well known, and they would never lend their influence to any man whose public and private character was not above reproach.

Affairs in France.

Affairs in France are quieting down very much. It is not that the people are contented with their government, but that they are at length beginning to understand the mischief wrought by turbulence. "Theirs is not liked: he possesses the confidence of no party; he is universally disliked with a desire to restore the Bourbons; but just at present he is the only available man that France seems to possess, and so he is endured. The opinion of the country is completely absorbed by the great task of getting rid of the Germans. That is first to be accomplished and then minor political differences will be settled as speedily as possible. Communism, which was only scotched, not killed, in the late rebellion is quiescent just now, and shows little outward sign of existence. Yet it is still powerful and only awaits an opportunity to make itself more terribly felt than it was last year. The opportunity it seeks can only be afforded by a collision between the Imperialists and moderate Republicans of which there appears, we are happy to say, no immediate prospect. Confidence in the future is not exhibited by any party. All seem to be impressed with the belief that the present order of things will only last until the indemnity is paid, and that civil war will be renewed very soon afterwards. How correct these gloomy apprehensions may be it would really be extremely hard to say, but that there are serious grounds for them cannot be doubted. The indemnity is being paid off with a regularity that must impress anyone with a wonderful idea of the wealth and patriotism of the French people. We question much whether even England, generally reputed the richest country in the world, would be able to produce such immense quantities of money without suffering a fatal blow towards and commerce. According to a recent telegram Bismarck is willing to accept a Frenchcoin in lieu of a portion of the indemnity. We hope no foolish punctilios about nationality honor will be allowed to stand in the way of the gratification of his whim. Let him get Cayenne, for example, or even Algeria, if he prefers it. When the inviolable war comes it will be the cash that will tell the world to take back the colony again. A couple of ironclads will accomplish the whole affair. That war must come, and come soon, there can be no doubt. Where is the Frenchman, dastard enough to accept the late campaign as final, as establishing German dominance in Europe?

Irish Literary and Social Club.

The Irish Literary and Social Club held their first annual election of officers on the evening of Monday last. There were two tickets in the field, but the contest was altogether of a friendly nature, and created only interest and amusement. After scrutiny of ballots the following gentlemen were declared duly elected. President, Mr. Edward Gowan; Vice-President, Mr. T. A. McKoy; Secretary, Mr. James Wightman; Treasurer, Mr. R. C. Tobin; Directors: Messrs. T. T. Barry, R. Mitchell, E. R. Fogarty, T. Mahoney, M. J. Walshe, J. C. Nolan, W. Halsey, T. F. McCarthy and R. O'Sullivan. After the elections were concluded the social element in the club was developed; their generally Champagne in abundance made its appearance, a number of songs were admirably sung by the meeting, gifted with a taste for harmony, and quite a pleasant time was had by all present, until near midnight. We are glad to be able to state that the Club is progressing most satisfactorily, and has now about one hundred members on the roll. New and commodious rooms have been secured in a good position on Market street, and when the Club is properly located therein, we are still more confident of the success which attends its efforts, and was never even called upon to serve. The story of the ex-Emperor's having been a schoolman, like that of his having frequently been drunk and genuinely high, is a fabrication from first to last, coined very probably by an imaginative penny-a-liner, or by some "poet" of the stamp of Joaquin Miller. The latter is inflicted by the same reference to queen Victoria would, of course, be like a rendition of the play of Hamlet with the character of the Danish Prince omitted, and therefore Mr. Miller's assertion his astonished audience that there was great bustle in the streets of the British metropolis that the masses were very fine; that St. Paul's was four hundred feet high; that London bankers will not open an account for a man unless he produces a letter of introduction; that a great many books are printed in Paternoster Row; that the Guildhall is a magnificent building; that Gog and Magog are still visible; that the heads of traitors used once upon a time to be impaled on the battlements of the Tower, and a great many other things whose connection with "literature" is not one of the clearest. These matters he seasoned with a little anecdote gossip about Doctor Johnson and Oliver Goldsmith and John Milton, and a few of the living literary celebrities, then he concluded by reciting some of his own poetry. Although he rarely traveled outside the record of "Bradshaw's Handbook of London," he managed to make some gross mistatements on his own hook. For example, one of his observations was to the effect "that English people dressed better and behaved better than the people in America. Now quite the contrary is notoriously the case, and a thousand witnesses have declared so. One of the first things that strikes an observant traveler, landing in America, is that the people here are much better dressed and exhibit far greater courtesy to strangers than the generality of Englishmen. Mr. Miller mentioned as a peculiarity of the British people that they all wore hats; we are not aware, however, that Americans go barebended to any great extent. He praised the physique of the English policemen, and remarked incidentally that Napoleon III. "was a member of the force on the streets of London." This assertion is ridiculously false in every particular. The Emperor Napoleon never served for one moment as a policeman either in London or anywhere else that we are aware of. He was a special constable for a few days, was strutting at the time. When the Chartists were threatening the peace of London, and a terrible riot was feared, a large number of the gentry and respectable people were sworn in as special constables to aid the authorities in case of need. Among these "special constables" were many of the highest rank, and subscribers of the very humblest. Louis Napoleon, then "a young man about town," like the rest of blasirisseratie companies, did what was thought the genteel thing under the circumstances, and ordered his very valuable assistance to the Government. It was accepted, he took an oath, received a baton, and that was the end of the whole affair. The baton is ... and was never even called upon to serve. The story of the ex-Emperor's having been a schoolman, like that of his having frequently been drunk and genuinely high, is a fabrication from first to last, coined very probably by an imaginative penny-a-liner, or by some "poet" of the stamp of Joaquin Miller. The latter is inflicted by the same reference to queen Victoria would, of course, be like a rendition of the play of Hamlet with the character of the Danish Prince omitted, and therefore Mr. Miller's assertion his astonished audience that there was great bustle in the streets of the British metropolis that the masses were very fine; that St. Paul's was four hundred feet high; that London bankers will not open an account for a man unless he produces a letter of introduction; that a great many books are printed in Paternoster Row; that the Guildhall is a magnificent building; that Gog and Magog are still visible; that the heads of traitors used once upon a time to be impaled on the battlements of the Tower, and a great many other things whose connection with "literature" is not one of the clearest. These matters he seasoned with a little anecdote gossip about Doctor Johnson and Oliver Goldsmith and John Milton, and a few of the living literary celebrities, then he concluded by reciting some of his own poetry. Although he rarely traveled outside the record of "Bradshaw's Handbook of London," he managed to make some gross mistatements on his own hook. For example, one of his observations was to the effect "that English people dressed better and behaved better than the people in America. Now quite the contrary is notoriously the case, and a thousand witnesses have declared so. One of the first things that strikes an observant traveler, landing in America, is that the people here are much better dressed and exhibit far greater courtesy to strangers than the generality of Englishmen. Mr. Miller mentioned as a peculiarity of the British people that they all wore hats; we are not aware, however, that Americans go barebended to any great extent. He praised the physique of the English policemen, and remarked incidentally that Napoleon III. "was a member of the force on the streets of London." This assertion is ridiculously false in every particular. The Emperor Napoleon never served for one moment as a policeman either in London or anywhere else that we are aware of. He was a special constable for a few days, was strutting at the time. When the Chartists were threatening the peace of London, and a terrible riot was feared, a large number of the gentry and respectable people were sworn in as special constables to aid the authorities in case of need. Among these "special constables" were many of the highest rank, and subscribers of the very humblest. Louis Napoleon, then "a young man about town," like the rest of blasirisseratie companies, did what was thought the genteel thing under the circumstances, and ordered his very valuable assistance to the Government. It was accepted, he took an oath, received a baton, and that was the end of the whole affair. The baton is ... and was never even called upon to serve. The story of the ex-Emperor's having been a schoolman, like that of his having frequently been drunk and genuinely high, is a fabrication from first to last, coined very probably by an imaginative penny-a-liner, or by some "poet" of the stamp of Joaquin Miller. The latter is inflicted by the same reference to queen Victoria would, of course, be like a rendition of the play of Hamlet with the character of the Danish Prince omitted, and therefore Mr. Miller's assertion his astonished audience that there was great bustle in the streets of the British metropolis that the masses were very fine; that St. Paul's was four hundred feet high; that London bankers will not open an account for a man unless he produces a letter of introduction; that a great many books are printed in Paternoster Row; that the Guildhall is a magnificent building; that Gog and Magog are still visible; that the heads of traitors used once upon a time to be impaled on the battlements of the Tower, and a great many other things whose connection with "literature" is not one of the clearest. These matters he seasoned with a little anecdote gossip about Doctor Johnson and Oliver Goldsmith and John Milton, and a few of the living literary celebrities, then he concluded by reciting some of his own poetry. Although he rarely traveled outside the record

Lent.

The holy season of Lent will commence on the 14th inst., that being Ash Wednesday. We trust we shall be able to fulfil the duties which this blessed time brings with it, for they must be known to all good and well-disposed Catholics. But we would observe that there never was a people in history during which the Church stood more in need of the prayers and good works of her children than she does at the present moment. To all outward appearance she is crushed to the dust, her enemies are triumphant everywhere, her Venerable Head is a prisoner, and we are indeed in days of darkness. It is meet, therefore, that we, with the mysteries of her Majesty's toilette. Shoulder his knowledge was derived from actual inspection or was founded upon general report. However, that is a matter of little moment. The decided opinion "immortal crowns" would be very cruelly earned if they could be had by subscribing long, eloquent and sounding names to fulsome vanities. We shall not trouble our readers any longer with comments upon this strange "lecture." Let it suffice for us to say it was about the weakest, washiest and most pointless frivolous discourses that ever any man pretending to a literary reputation dared deliver before an intelligent audience. It has had, nevertheless, the effect of making the Irish objectors somewhat more cautious. If he were at Camp Grant, and its only inhabitants were, as on April 30, 1871, women and children, so far the dread devils," as he calls them, would meet with scanty mercy. He would be a worthy companion in-arms for the gallant heroes whom the Court at Tucson has just acquitted from the charge of murder.

THE ALABAMA CLAIMS.

At length we are beginning to learn something definite respecting the recent sensation about the Alabama claims. Now we know why there has been so much unusual excitement in London, and why English editors so fiercely denounced American blackmail. A great deal of sound and fury has been wafted to our part across the waters of the Atlantic; but we can translate our friends by assuring them that it all signifies nothing. There will be no war between Great Britain and the United States on account of the non-settlement of these famous claims—of that fact every one may rest satisfied. It is true, certainly, that a vast amount of writing and speechifying is now going on in the English metropolis, in connection with the Geneva Conference, and that an incalculable quantity of Cockney indignation is being expended upon what is termed the extravagance of the American demands; yet, for all that, there will be no gunpowder burned in the settlement of the quarrel, and not even as much physical force required to so would hurt the feelings of the most tender-hearted Quaker. For our part, we are firmly convinced that all this apparent rage is caused simply by the carrying out of a programme adopted long ago by Gladstone & Co., and that the machinery by which this country is to be defrauded of its just rights. We maintain that England agreed to submit the claims to arbitration, consenting to the assembling of the Geneva Conference, only because she had first made up her mind that the claims should remain unpaid and that the Conference should break up without coming to any decision. The proofs of our assertion are easily enumerated. They are to be discovered in the policy pursued by the British Minister for Foreign Affairs, Lord Granville, from the day the Treaty of Washington was concluded to the present. Let it be borne in mind that the object he had in view all along was to delude the American people, to please them with a sham of arbitration, while taking measures to postpone a settlement to the Greek Kalends. Dodge, trickery and evasion of the meanest kind were resorted to for the sake of effecting this purpose, and what we say is that they will prove successful in the end. One of the first safe-lusses raised was that England should go into the Conference entirely free-at that is to say, the fact of her liability should be reckoned as one of the things to be proved. The American assertion was that Great Britain's liability could not be called into question at all, and that was clear according to International law, that it was admitted by her own statesmen, and, consequently, the arbitrators at Geneva had nothing to decide: for claims were just, what claims were unjust, and give an award for the amount, without any reference to the question as to whether his name before balloting took place. Mr. Thomas Hall, after a few remarks, nominated Brother Justin, President of St. Mary's College, when the nominations closed.

Brother Justin was declared elected. On motion of Mr. Bradley the election was declared unanimous. Mr. Brady and Mr. Hall were appointed a committee to wait on Brother Justin, and inform him of his election. Nominations for were declared in order. Mr. Pitt nominated Colonel P. E. Walsh. Mr. O'Connell seconded the nomination.

VICE-PRESIDENT AND SECRETARY

On calling the roll, Colonel Walsh received a majority of the votes, and his election was declared unanimous. The nomination Hon. J. J. O'Malley and Hon. Frank Mahoney were appointed to wait on Colonel Walsh.

The Secretary was notified to extend an invitation to the Irish regiments to participate in the proceedings of the day, and the Grand Marshal was given the power of inviting all military and civic bodies that may wish to join in the celebration.

On motion, the different societies pledged themselves that the societies which they represented would turn out and pay their pro rata of the expenses. If they failed to do so, they would be excluded from the next convention

The President of each society was appointed a committee to confer with the Grand Marshal.

A resolution was offered that the exercises of the day be interspersed with patriotic singing, which was carried

The Convention then adjourned, to meet at the same place on Sunday, February 18.

THE DOLLINGER REVOLT.

AN ABLE LECTURE

On Very Rev. Father Prendergast.

The Arguments of the Dollingerites Answered and Refuted

Dollinger's "Ring" composed of suspended Priests, &c., &c.

On last Tuesday evening a very large audience was in St Mary's cathedral, to hear the lecture to be delivered by Father Prendergast, on the "Old Catholics of Germany," or "The Very Rev. gentleman dwelt exhaustively on the inconsistency of Dollinger and his misled priests who followed him out in his defiance, in order to cover the shame that was justly the fold of the Catholic Church, through their misconduct. He also quoted from Church, in which new dogmas of faith were declared duly elected. President, Mr. Edward Gowan; Vice-President, Mr. T. A. McKoy; Secretary, Mr. James Wightman; Treasurer, Mr. R. C. Tobin; Directors: Messrs. T. T. Barry, R. Mitchell, E. R. Fogarty, T. Mahoney, M. J. Walshe, J. C. Nolan, W. Halsey, T. F. McCarthy and R. O'Sullivan. After the elections were concluded the social element in the club was developed; their generally Champagne in abundance made its appearance, a number of songs were admirably sung by the meeting, gifted with a taste for harmony, and quite a pleasant time was had by all present, until near midnight. We are glad to be able to state that the Club is progressing most satisfactorily, and has now about one hundred members on the roll. New and commodious rooms have been secured in a good position on Market street, and when the Club is properly located therein, we are still more confident of the success which attends its efforts, and was never even called upon to serve. The story of the ex-Emperor's having been a schoolman, like that of his having frequently been drunk and genuinely high, is a fabrication from first to last, coined very probably by an imaginative penny-a-liner, or by some "poet" of the stamp of Joaquin Miller. The latter is inflicted by the same reference to queen Victoria would, of course, be like a rendition of the play of Hamlet with the character of the Danish Prince omitted, and therefore Mr. Miller's assertion his astonished audience that there was great bustle in the streets of the British metropolis that the masses were very fine; that St. Paul's was four hundred feet high; that London bankers will not open an account for a man unless he produces a letter of introduction; that a great many books are printed in Paternoster Row; that the Guildhall is a magnificent building; that Gog and Magog are still visible; that the heads of traitors used once upon a time to be impaled on the battlements of the Tower, and a great many other things whose connection with "literature" is not one of the clearest. These matters he seasoned with a little anecdote gossip about Doctor Johnson and Oliver Goldsmith and John Milton, and a few of the living literary celebrities, then he concluded by reciting some of his own poetry. Although he rarely traveled outside the record of "Bradshaw's Handbook of London," he managed to make some gross mistatements on his own hook. For example, one of his observations was to the effect "that English people dressed better and behaved better than the people in America. Now quite the contrary is notoriously the case, and a thousand witnesses have declared so. One of the first things that strikes an observant traveler, landing in America, is that the people here are much better dressed and exhibit far greater courtesy to strangers than the generality of Englishmen. Mr. Miller mentioned as a peculiarity of the British people that they all wore hats; we are not aware, however, that Americans go barebended to any great extent. He praised the physique of the English policemen, and remarked incidentally that Napoleon III. "was a member of the force on the streets of London." This assertion is ridiculously false in every particular. The Emperor Napoleon never served for one moment as a policeman either in London or anywhere else that we are aware of. He was a special constable for a few days, was strutting at the time. When the Chartists were threatening the peace of London, and a terrible riot was feared, a large number of the gentry and respectable people were sworn in as special constables to aid the authorities in case of need. Among these "special constables" were many of the highest rank, and subscribers of the very humblest. Louis Napoleon, then "a young man about town," like the rest of blasirisseratie companies, did what was thought the genteel thing under the circumstances, and ordered his very valuable assistance to the Government. It was accepted, he took an oath, received a baton, and that was the end of the whole affair. The baton is ... and was never even called upon to serve. The story of the ex-Emperor's having been a schoolman, like that of his having frequently been drunk and genuinely high, is a fabrication from first to last, coined very probably by an imaginative penny-a-liner, or by some "poet" of the stamp of Joaquin Miller. The latter is inflicted by the same reference to queen Victoria would, of course, be like a rendition of the play of Hamlet with the character of the Danish Prince omitted, and therefore Mr. Miller's assertion his astonished audience that there was great bustle in the streets of the British metropolis that the masses were very fine; that St. Paul's was four hundred feet high; that London bankers will not open an account for a man unless he produces a letter of introduction; that a great many books are printed in Paternoster Row; that the Guildhall is a magnificent building; that Gog and Magog are still visible; that the heads of traitors used once upon a time to be impaled on the battlements of the Tower, and a great many other things whose connection with "literature" is not one of the clearest. These matters he seasoned with a little anecdote gossip about Doctor Johnson and Oliver Goldsmith and John Milton, and a few of the living literary celebrities, then he concluded by reciting some of his own poetry. Although he rarely traveled outside the record

ST. PATRICK'S DAY.

The adjourned meeting of the Irish societies to take into consideration the celebration of St. Patrick's Day, took place at the Young Men's Hall on Monday afternoon, President M. F. Cummings in the chair. On the minutes of the preceding meeting had been read and adopted, the Convention went into nomination for Grand Marshal.

Mr. Hassett placed in nomination the name of Colonel M. C. Smith. Mr. P. Mahon named Colonel Thomas Magee. Mr. Wall named James R. Kell.

Upon calling the roll, Colonel M. C. Smith received a majority of votes and was declared elected. On motion, Mr. Smith's election was made unanimous. The selection of an

ORATOR OF THE DAY

Being next in order, Mr. Bradley named Captain P. J. Kain, and Mr. Crowley, in a short speech, named Colonel P. E. Walsh. Tailed nominated Colonel P. E. Walsh, but withdrew his name before balloting took place. Mr. Thomas Hall, after a few remarks, nominated Brother Justin, President of St. Mary's College, when the nominations closed.

Brother Justin was declared elected. On motion of Mr. Bradley the election was declared unanimous. Mr. Brady and Mr. Hall were appointed a committee to wait on Brother Justin, and inform him of his election. Nominations for were declared in order. Mr. Pitt nominated Colonel P. E. Walsh. Mr. O'Connell seconded the nomination.

VICE-PRESIDENT AND SECRETARY

On calling the roll, Colonel Walsh received a majority of the votes, and his election was declared unanimous. The nomination Hon. J. J. O'Malley and Hon. Frank Mahoney were appointed to wait on Colonel Walsh.

The Secretary was notified to extend an invitation to the Irish regiments to participate in the proceedings of the day, and the Grand Marshal was given the power of inviting all military and civic bodies that may wish to join in the celebration.

On motion, the different societies pledged themselves that the societies which they represented would turn out and pay their pro rata of the expenses. If they failed to do so, they would be excluded from the next convention

The President of each society was appointed a committee to confer with the Grand Marshal.

A resolution was offered that the exercises of the day be interspersed with patriotic singing, which was carried

The Convention then adjourned, to meet at the same place on Sunday, February 18.

New York Custom House Investigation.

NEW YORK, Feb. 3.—At the Custom House investigation last night, Gen. Wm. E. Hillyer testified that Lent's special friend was the late Gen. Rawlins. He knew nothing of the arrangement between Lent and Bixby, and was satisfied that the President knew nothing of it. The President stated that he did not want to come to New York at all, and wanted no one fit connection with him to have anything to do with the Custom House; but he didn't think he ought to control the Colonel's action. Witness recollected having heard and told Gen. Cochrane that Gen. Porter had received money from the New York Custom House, and that he thought it was in connection with the general order business. Lent's services were entirely clerical.

Lent.—Does it occur to you that it was a very improper thing that a man in the military service should be employed in civil employment under the Government? A.—It does so occur to me.

Q.—Do you recollect the tenor of the charge by Mudgett against Porter? A.—[Letter considerable hesitation].—I believe the charge was that Porter got money from the Custom House. I suppose it must have been through Lent.

Witness admitted having informed persons in Washington that he had important evidence which he desired to offer, showing that the President was not connected with the Custom House lobbery. Although the President was at first anxious that Lent should go to the Centennial, he refused to take a Superintendency in Pennsylvania, he subsequently consented to have his name used as "labor contract; it was to be in the name of Howe, a New York politician.

Mr. Hillyer said he went to see the President first because aware of Lent's connection with the general order business. Lent appeared to him to be the active and well-informed man in the matter. Lent had been in future, because witness had been informed that he was implicated in frauds. It should be remembered, however, that the witness was sent from Boston to New York by Sylvain, creating the office of Constable in San Francisco.

In San Francisco the Labor Exchange appropriation bill was discussed and defeated. Burkhalter introduced a resolution, asking Congress to defer appropriation for one year all payments on United States bonds by actual settlers, and to remain at par value of the Confederate States, charging that ex-Detective Beatty enjoyed himself in his testimony yesterday regarding the orders given him in asking that Colonel Whitley and his assistants be examined. Beatty objected to the language of Whitley's letters.

Colonel Whitely was examined, and gave an emphatic denial to the statements of Detective Van Ness. Whitley denied the charges preferred against him by Detective Beatty, and said he has the greatest confidence in his employ, and had frequently threatened him.

The Westward March of Population.

Prof. Hilgard, of the Coast Survey, has been ciphering on the census returns, for the purpose of ascertaining how rapidly the march of empire takes its way from the Atlantic to the Pacific. The Chicago Times, that in 1840, "the center of gravity of the population," as he phrases it, was in Virginia, near the eastern side of the Cumberland mountains, in the 38th parallel of latitude. In 1850, the center was 57 miles further west, at a point south of Parkersburg, Virginia. In 1860, it was 82 miles further west, at Flat Top Station, Fayette county, Ohio. Taking the sum of these distances, it will be seen that the center of the population of the United States is 184 miles further west than it was in 1840—30 years ago.

Prof. Hilgard is of opinion that the rate of progress now is much slower than it was formerly, and predicts that, in 1900, the center of population will be found about the southwest of Indianapolis. The professor's reasons for thinking that the growth of the country is not so rapid as formerly are not made public: and it is difficult to form any conjecture as to their nature. It may be inferred that the rate of westward movement of the center will be slower in future, because it is more difficult to settle the country the prevailing decade. It should be remembered, however, that the census returns are not yet complete; but the census returns are not yet complete; but the census returns are not yet complete; but

A SKATING SONG.

She wears the shortest skirts,
And shows by whose fitting
She looks to queen of Fifths,
Miraculous thing!
Shall I skim Cinderella,
As I used to skim Camilla,
As I used to skim Dorothy?
My little pet Chlorabilla!

Oh, should the gracious fairy
Put Order in the program,
I swear for fifty stories
On forty hours distance,
Her willing hand I'd capture,
In spite of all rebuffs;
Then speed 'twixt Love and Glory
With little Chlorabilla!

The daintiest of dames,
With rosy tint her real skin,
With tiny tablets in gloves
Made of the softest seal skin;
A costumer who rejoices
Who wears (like a mantilla)
Yu soon tost in the crowd,
With Satin sweat Chlorabilla!

The warmth of her regard
I take as sort of token;
Although 'tis freezing hard,
Our social tea is broken!
Quotation in her Fan,
Who should but my rivals?
Ah! what a glance is here,
My little dear Chlorabilla!

Shall figure, high and twirl,
And every inch delicate,
Shall I consent to ever
As sent as bidden?
Oh, I could skate for Glory,
Or Heaven's complicity,
Cheered by the many wanks
Of Pig Skin sweet Chlorabilla!

Had I enough a year
To buy me skates in sable,
To wear my clothes by
I'd take my pet Chlorabilla!

THE WOMEN SUFFRAGISTS.

Pleading for the Ballot—A Raid on the Judiciary.

A Washington letter of a recent date gives the following account of a raid made by the Woman Suffragists on the Judiciary Committee of the Senate:

The Woman's Suffrage Association, now in session here, made their arguments to-day before the Judiciary Committee of the Senate, in accordance with a request of the committee adopted on Wednesday last. But if Mr. Trumbull and his colleagues on the committee could have foreseen the tremendous raid that was to be made upon them they would have hesitated long before agreeing to the request of the suffragists. They expected that Mrs. Stanton, Miss Anthony, Mrs. Hooker, and perhaps half a dozen others would appear before them, state their case, leave their papers, and retire. But they never contemplated a housecleaning in the Judiciary Committee room. This was a feat to which they had not invited themselves. The women were determined, however, to make the most of their privilege. They had begged and pleaded so long for a hearing before this committee that when their request was once granted they viewed it in the light of a victory so great that they were bound to make the most of it, not only so far as having a crowd present to hear the addresses, but also as wide spread a publication as possible. Accordingly it was announced in the morning papers that the Lincoln Hall since Wednesday when the arrangement before the committee was made, and the convention adjourned over after that night almost every day, so as to get their public pulpit and their eyes scratched out, I And Powers went wriggling through the hall all as shoutly to call to the scalp of any man who would dare to lay violent hands on them. But the whole thing could not make a break in the throng. Elizabeth Cady Stanton, Susan Anthony, Mrs. Hooker and Mrs. Pitzer were the only ones who took in the committee-room, and the committee patiently awaited a commencement; but they refused to begin the argument until the crowd was admitted, and finally Mr. Trumbull saw it was no use to wait any longer, and he yielded to the pressure, and directed the doors to be opened, and in the crowd rushed pell mell, and the room was filled in a twinkling, each woman was thinking of getting her neighbor to get the best position. The table was crowded upon, the members of the committee were almost driven from their seats, chairs were stumbled over, and little feet encased in little boots jumped upon the handsomely upholstered sofas, utterly regardless of any damage that might be done to Uncle Sam's "dearly furniture" order was soon restored, and quiet prevailed during the delivery of the speeches asking for a declaratory act from Congress, under the fifteenth amendment to the constitution the right to vote. Mrs. Hooker opened the ball, and was followed successively by Mrs. Cady Stanton, Susan B. Anthony, the only demonstration being an occasional outburst of applause as a good hit was made. The interview ended at a few minutes past one o'clock. Senator Trumbull took the papers, remarked that the subject should receive a careful consideration, and then, after short conversation with the members of the committee, the crowd retired in a much more orderly manner than it had entered. The suffragists are in high glee, though, that they have gained the point of being heard before the Judiciary Committee of the United States Senate.

Spicy Correspondence between Mrs. Cage and Mrs. Bellgren.

WASHINGTON (D. C.), Jan. 8, 1872.

The following correspondence appears in the minutes of the Convention of Female Suffragists, recently held at the National Capital:

MRS. ADMIRAL DAHLGREN:—Madame: The National Woman Suffragist Association is to hold a three days' convention in this city next week, in Lincoln Hall, commencing on the morning of Wednesday, the 10th. Notice has also afford the officers and speakers of the Convention greater pleasure than to hold a debate with yourself and your friends upon the subject of woman suffrage. As you have publicly expressed your opposition to the enfranchisement of woman, not only through the papers, but also by a petition against it in Congress, we feel sure you will gladly accept our invitation and let us know the reason for the faith that is within you.

MRS. Elizabeth Cady Stanton, as President of the National Association and Convention, will afford you every opportunity for argument, and will herself enter the lists against you. Not only Mrs. Stanton, but all the members of the Committee cordially extend the invitation for debate, to be held at any season most convenient for yourself. An early answer is desirable.

Martha Joslyn Cage,
Chairman Committee of Arrangements.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 9, 1872.

MRS. MATILDA JOSLYN GAGE, CHAIRMAN COMMITTEE OF ARRANGEMENTS:

Madame: Mrs. Sherman and myself are duly hurrying in receipt a note from you in which you invite us, in the name of the officers and members of the National Woman's Suffrage Association, "to hold a debate upon the question of woman suffrage," and mentioned that Mrs. Elizabeth Cady Stanton, as President of the Association and Convention, will afford every opportunity for argument, and will herself enter the lists," etc.

In reply to this invitation, for which we thank you in the first as it may have been expressed in a true desire to elicit fair argument, we would remind you that in the very fact of soliciting us to "hold debate" on a public platform, on this or any other question, you entirely ignore the principle that ourselves and our friends seek to defend, viz: the preservation of female modesty.

The functions of men and women in the state as citizens are correlative and opposite. They cannot be made common without seriously impairing the public virtue.

Our men must be brave and our women modest, if this country hopes to fulfil her true mission for humanity.

We protest against woman suffrage, because the right of petition may safely be considered common to all,and in such case most beneficial.

We publish written articles, giving "our reason for the faith that is within us," because we may say, consistently with the home life and its duties, make use of whatever talents God has confided to our keeping. To those printed articles, in which we have fully and at different times explained our views, we are happy to refer you.

We likewise hold that an appeal to the public made in such a manner is much more likely to evolve a clear apprehension of this important subject, as representing a principle, than a personal encounter, and one undimmed by those personalities which generally are indulged in at the public course of oral debate. I am, truly yours,

MADELINE VICTOR DAHLGREN.

Catholics and the Education Question—Pastoral of the Bishop of Beverley.

A pastoral from the Most Rev. Dr. Cornthwaite on the Education Question has been read in all the Catholic churches in Yorkshire, from which the following extracts are taken. His lordship in a portion of the pastoral says:—"Let us, then, at present, an account will be demanded of your; your children were confided to you by God; you are to be assigned the duty and the obligation of bringing them up; take this child and bring him up for me, said the Father to me, the Spouse of the living God. It is your duty then, and you must discharge it; and never will you be allowed to plead an excuse, that you entrusted them to the care of the unanointed teachers; for to you, not to them, was given the precious deposit, and from you, not from them, will account be demanded. They were to preach to you by God, to be brought up as the children of God; will they be brought up as such if you commit them to the care of those who, on set purpose, exclude them from God, and who acknowledge that their task begins and ends with making them civilized for the world? Will they, as it were, in spite of such training, still grow up the children of God? Will they respect and love His holy law, when it is studiously kept out of view and disregarded? Will they be trained to virtue, when it is uncalculated? Will they avoid sin, when not taught to fear it, or avoid its dangers, on occasions, when not warned against them?" The Bishop further observes; "Can you still be told by worldly policy that you should have abandoned some of your principles, and that you must accept secular schools. Gold-fearing parents, are you told that in the majority in the land, were justly terrified by the prospect before them. With them secular schools meant schools without God, and the term had to be suppressed for one that would give less unhappy offence. Be not afraid of the result be the same. The second time they were afford to be indifferent about the term, if the result be, as it will be, the very godless school which has excited man's fears. A well-known statesman, in giving in his adhesion, lately, to the league, which has been formed for the destruction of the Christian schools, took the trouble to explain, that the support of his name and means were given to the mere word "secular" but of execration reaching. Now, what meaning is conveyed in this word, which has near been so formally adopted as expressive of the new system? In our view, if it meaningfully, it means a system of education which, on the one hand, excludes the special and distinguishing tenets of any and every religious denomination; whilst on the other hand, it is not more secular than it is, may be, and ought to be, common to all. But is there a residue, in the land where God and revelation are freely heard to increasing number? If there be no residue, what does it mean to call and wish for a secular system? It is practically, it would be determined by the fancy, the bigotry, or the ignorance of the teacher appointed to that office, according to the maturel plans of our modern reformers, and to be brought up, seemingly in a series of normal schools to be provided to carry out their special views." As showing that in the present inspection the Government does not pay for religious teaching the Archbishop says:—"Let us, then, ask ourselves if education have a scruple about contributing to funds, which they say are to be paid for that purpose religion. How any one can be deluded by the patent falsehood of this assertion, we cannot comprehend. The very statement that its payments should dare to hope, that men would be so befooled. The law ignores religious teaching, or mentions it only to exclude it from consideration; and it empowers the Education Board to fix the time for it when there it is concerned, secular knowledge. It promises and on certain degrees of proficiency in secular knowledge, and full liberty to test that efficiency by means of its own officers. But no certificate of teachers who were laboring in the cause of science for years before their own reformers accept the terms, prove their fulfilment of all the conditions, and claim, as parties to the bargain, the promised reward. Surely is here the the expenditure of money for religious teaching is forbidden in the plainest and justly, its grant, whether or no it gives religious teaching; for whether it gives it or not, is no part of the bargain. Its power or its absence may affect the results, in rendering the school more efficient as the teacher of mere secular knowledge; but this is nothing to the purpose, as the award is made to depend wholly upon the results of secular knowledge displayed." The pastoral concludes as follows: "As regar is midnight Mass, it is hereby prescribed, that it be henceforth discontinued throughout the churches and chapels of our province, with the sole exception of domestic chapels attached to the houses of the gentry. If in any case, touching this matter, there be any hesitancy from the Holy See, it will be necessary to forward it to us for fresh authentication."

SOLDIER PRIESTS.—There is at this moment in Rome a considerable number of priests who have been forced into the ranks of the army by the Italian law. Every morning these soldiers go in different churches in the city, put on the vestments over their uniforms, and celebrate Mass. Each of the men's history contains painful facts, which of themselves would be enough to brand with infamy in, calhdic opinion the present rulers and legislators of Italy.

EDUCATIONAL.

SAINT MARY'S COLLEGE
SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.
Conducted by the Christian Brothers.
Offers every facility for acquiring a thorough Education, whether Classical, Scientific or Commercial.
Those who complete the Classical Course receive the degree of A. B. (Bachelor); B. C. (Bachelor in Science), a letter of Accounts.
The Commercial course has been established for the convenience of those who wish to acquire a good practical education in a short space of time.
While proper care will be taken to form every branch of learning, our own language receives special attention. The Daily exercises in Reading, Grammar, Composition and Rhetoric are publicly examined and criticised in the class-room.
TERMS PER SCHOLASTIC YEAR.
(Payable half-yearly in advance).
Board, Tuition and Washing.....$250 00
Entrance Fee.....10 00
Physician Fee and Medicines.....10 00
Vacation at College.....50 00
Bed and Bedding.....50 00
Mechanics, Music and drawing form extra charges.
Studies will be resumed on the 1st of August.
REV. B. JUSTIN, President.
jan31

ST. JOSEPH'S COLLEGE,
Rohnerville, Humboldt County, Cala.
CONDUCTED BY THE PRIESTS OF THE CONGREGATION OF THE MOST PRECIOUS BLOOD.
THIS INSTITUTION, SITUATED ON A PICTURESQUE elevation at the confluence of Van Ingen and Eel Rivers, and near the Bay of Humboldt, commands an excellent view of the surrounding country, and is unsurpassed for healthfulness in the distance.
Its central position and beauty of location, it also enjoys special advantages of facility of access. The buildings are large and commodious. The grounds belonging to the establishment are extensive, and afford the public opportunities of enjoying healthful and manly exercise.
The course of studies pursued in this College is based upon a thorough knowledge of the English language, and includes Mathematics, Natural Philosophy, Chemistry, Literature, Ancient and Modern Languages, Geography, History, the sciences, particular attention being given to Elocution and the teaching of which splendid apparatuses have been provided. Vocal and Instrumental Music, and the Fine Arts.
Particular care is paid to the commercial course, which affords rare advantages to young persons who intend to enter upon a business career.
Unremitting attention is given to the intellectual and moral culture of the students. The discipline is mild and parental, yet firm and persevering.
The religious sentiments of non-Catholic pupils will be respected, and no interference with the duties which they may owe to their respective churches will be tolerated. They will be free to attend the religious services of such churches as their parents or guardians may desire.
Pupils will be received at any time during the year but not later for a shorter period than one term of five months. No deduction will be made from regular charges except for absence occasioned by protracted illness.
Letters journey to be deposited with the treasurer. No sum of a single will be granted to the students except by special permission, or without permission Holidays.
Pupils will be required on entering should be provided with sufficient suits of clothing for the season, and with sufficient bed and bedding, viz: two mattresses, two pairs blankets, counterpane, pillow, pillow-cases, sheets, towels, napkins, and silver spoon, fork, knife and napkin ring, all of which should be distinctly marked. Each article supplied by the College, unless at the expense of the pupil, will be charged to his account.
Pupils are to be furnished with a gold thimble, pocket-knife, and two pairs of boots

TELEGRAPHIC.

Eastern.

WASHINGTON, February 1.—The President has appointed Frederick MacCrellish, of San Francisco, one of the Board of Visitors to West Point Military Academy for 1873.

Delegations of manufacturers representing the leading industries of the United States were presented to the President today. Senator Scott, in introducing the party, said they were there to prevent a reduction of duties on foreign articles that came into competition with American manufactures, which reduction can only result in direct injury to the interests of American labor. The President said he believed that his views on this subject were generally well understood. He had not changed from those expressed in his last annual message; that the reduction of duties on articles we could manufacture had not one tendency, that of depressing industry, injuring the working classes, and reducing them to the pauper labor of Europe. He understood the policy of Congress to be that retrenchment was not produced in this country, entering into general competition, should be admitted free of duty, while those competing with our manufactures should not be reduced. The delegation visited Boutwell, who instanced his opposition to the policy of interfering with the production of this country.

JOSEPH WHARTON, of Philadelphia, in behalf of the Industrial League, argued before the Senate Finance Committee today the general reduction of the tariff on a sliding scale, which is the principal of the bill before the Committee. Such reduction would have the effect of reducing American labor. The League was in favor of the removal of the duty on tea and coffee, and increasing the free list with such articles as could be produced in the country, and which enter into the manufacture of various branches of industry.

The children of John Slidell have brought suit to recover their father's estate, which was confiscated during the war.

CHICAGO, February 1.—The trial of Alderman McChesney to-day, on the charge of accepting a bribe to pass a certain ordinance through the Council, resulted in acquittance through the Council, resulted in acquittance through the Council, resulted in acquitt

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

ENGLAND.

A Bubble Scheme.

In Vice Chancellor Bacon's Court, on Saturday, a claim was made by Mr. Richard Gladden in the winding up of the "Nevada Freehold Properties Trust." The amount of the claim was £132,250, and the items of the claim were £100,000 for the purchase of 2000 for rent of offices and salary of manager, £157 rent of other offices, £2,500 for the purchase of eight mines, £2,500 for the 1,250 fully paid certificates and other sums; against which there was a set off of £50,000 for certificates alloted to the claimant. The object of the company, which was started in 1869, was to purchase from certain Americans twenty-two mines in Nevada, and it was stated by the prospectus that the result of the property would be about £12,000. About £12,000 was subscribed, and a first dividend was declared at the rate of 12½ per cent. This was declared in May, 1870, but afterwards the company came to an end, and a winding up order was obtained. The present claim was opposed by the official liquidator, who alleged amongst other things that one of the lessees of the Manhattan mines, for the purchase of which the company was formed, was, in fact, Mr. Gladden made a return, he was, to a clerk in a newspaper office, receiving a salary of £120 a year, and had never been in Nevada. Another lessee was a man who had been a fish salesman, and afterwards an hotel-keeper, and there was no ground upon which he could assign any of the claim. The items were met by contradictions on the one side, to which there had been no effective reply. The whole scheme was perhaps from a bubble and a sheaf from its commencement. The summons must be dismissed, with costs.—English paper, Feb. 9.

FRANCE.

Secular Education Indeed!

A story was told me the other day to illustrate the signification of secular instruction in France. An English father wished to get for his two sons a tutor who should take entire charge of their education, teach them French, and go about with them. He had during their hours of leisure. He found what he wanted in a tutor of gentlemanly presence and scholarly attainments. "Of course," inquired the tutor, "that you have no objection to my giving your sons a secular education?" "Certainly not," was the reply; "it is the very thing I want. Yes, I suppose, are not a Protestant, and therefore I would rather they were not taught any religion." Some months after-wards the lads returned to their father's house, and charmed him by the progress which they had made in the time. But he had manifestly done his work admirably. But the delight of the parent was changed to horror when, at the dinner table, the youths began to talk fluently of atheism. From whom had they learned such infamous doctrines? From their tutor. That gentleman was summoned to explain for what reason he had thus corrupted the minds of his pupils. "Why," replied the minds of his pupils. "Why," he exclaimed with some surprise, "you told me that you wanted your sons to receive a secular education, and that is what I have given. I have given a secular education in the most atheism."—Cor. Daily Telegraph.

ITALY.

Sobbery.

The Italian Government are about to press their many extreme measures by enacting a bill suppressing religious orders and confiscating their property. The sobbery when the citizens of foreign nations have a peculiary interest in them. It is only a few months ago that the President of the French Republic has renewed his offer of a suitable residence for the Pope. Latest advices from Rome state that the Pope is recovering from his indisposition, and that his Holiness received all the Professors of the University who remained faithful to him, and also many of the officers of his former army, of whom some, after entering the Italian service, have repented, and given in their resignation.

RUSSIA.

Poor Poland.

A gifted Frenchman, Thierry, has said that injured nations have long memories. An illustration of the truth of this has just occurred in Poland, which country was "pardoned" by Russia, Prussia and Austria in February, 1772. To commemorate this great crime, committed by three royal robbers against a brave and valiant nation, the members of the Polish National Society at Lemburg have issued a manifesto in which they say:

We must always remember, as if written in fiery letters, the date of the first partition of Poland. The secular anniversary of this fatal event now comes on the 18th of February, 1872, and we appeal to our Polish brethren will observe that day by mourning and deep prayers to the Almighty for the shortening of our sufferings. We must show the world that one hundred years' oppression and division into provinces have not been able to eradicate the spirit of national unity. We appeal above all to the ladies, who will, no doubt, discountenance any pleasurable entertainment, and dancing on that day.

The Russian Government, in order to counteract the effect of this document, has issued orders that its officials shall treat the day by festive amusements, to which they are to invite Poles, and they are to see that no Poles absent themselves indeed. What a gift some governments have for inventing means well as bodily punishments for those whom they oppress!

Poland to be a Native Once Again.

NEW YORK, Feb. 24.—A late letter has the following from Russia: "One of the most astounding political news is that Russia is in order to thank the Austrian policy in Galicia, intends to try one more experiment with the Poles. She proposes to conciliate them by granting them a certain amount of national representation and independence. This may seem even stranger than the fiction; but there is truth in it. The present Emperor has a touch of the romantic and, after having crushed out with an iron heel the unfortunate Poles so that they are left unable to rise by their own strength, may think of extending to them a helping hand, making them his friends. His motive may be assumed somewhat with politic ambition. An influential party in Russia much desires such reconciliation in the interest of Panslavism, which, in Austria, is now a question of life or death to the Constitution. In case Austria were to decide on the Galician autonomy, it would react upon Russian Poland, and become a serious difficulty to the St. Petersburg Cabinet. Much as the world imagines that Poland lies bleeding at the feet of the Czar, there is nevertheless a possibility that political combinations may partly restore this unfortunate nation. The great trouble is that the Poles have always been extravagant in their demands, and that even today they consider their boundaries as embracing Hamburg and Odessa."

IRISH INTELLIGENCE.

The Rev. W. G. Carroll, a Protestant clergyman, who is one of the most active members of the Home Rule Association, has written a letter protesting against the Irish Education question being submitted for settlement to Sadoli Presbyterians and other strangers. Whatever way the question is to be settled, he holds that it is right that it ought to be settled by Irish people themselves at home. No decision can be so bad and so insensible as the referring the matter at all to an alien Parliament. Although he cannot but regard a national system, which excludes no instruction in national history as a grinning contradiction in terms, yet he admits it has one just claim upon him, inasmuch as it is to his work for the past forty years is due the present cheering resurrection of national life and sentiment.

The Phenix Park Murders.

Mr. John Adamson, secretary to the Amnesty Association, has retired from that post, deeming it in better taste to do so as he is about to test the doctrine recently laid down that the Lord Lieutenant is irresponsible for his share in the prevention of the Amnesty meeting in August, and in the unfortunate transaction able motives, Mr. Nolan states that the autograph letter received from Mr. Gladstone by the Associ-ation has been in their hands for some time, but they were unwilling to publish it, from the recent affliction of the Royal family, and especially as they essential hope that the advisers of the queen may have sufficient wisdom and good feeling to counsel her to commemorate the late Consort by a gracious act of universal amnesty. Mr. Nolan also intimates the history of the secretaryship of the Phenix Park meeting will be translated into several European languages, in order to enlighten the people of the Continent upon the subject of English rule in Ireland.—Cork Herald, Feb. 5.

Consecration of the Lord Bishop of Clonfert.

On Sunday, Jan. 14, the Most Rev. Patrick Duggan was consecrated Bishop of Clonfert in the exquisite church attached to the Convent of the Sisters of Mercy in Galway. It was decided by the prelate-elect that the ceremony should be observed as privately as possible, and to commence for that reason an hour earlier. The consecration, which made a profession of faith in the sacristy, a procession was formed, headed by a cross bearer, thurifer, and acolytes, in which the Lord Bishop-elect of Achonry, the Lord Bishop of Kilmacduagh, the Lord Bishop of Meath, the Lord Bishop of Elphin were observed.

The Lord Bishop of Galway was the celebrant. The Bishop of Limerick and Elphin wore copes and mitres as assistant prelates. On the procession entering the sanctuary the usual ceremony commenced, during which the Lord Bishop of Galway and the prelate-elect, and as the Holy Sacrifice proceeded the ceremony with the order prescribed by the Ritual. A sermon, suitable to the occasion and solemn rite were deeply impressed with its touching beauty, symbolism, and solemnity. The bishop-elect was invested with the insignia of the great dignity which had been conferred upon him in compliance with the command of the Vicar of Christ, conveyed in the Papal rescript, which was read by the Very Rev. P. Fenerici, after the ceremony of consecration, the sublime hymn of the Veni Sancte Spiritus was sung. At the termination of the hymn, Mass was celebrated to its close by the Bishop of Galway and the newly-consecrated Bishop of Clonfert. The first named prelate having given the candidate the crook, chanted the Te Deum, during the singing of which the newly-consecrated Bishop of Clonfert, having donned the mitre, and having received the crozier, went through the church imparting his blessing. He returned to the altar steps, pronounced his solemn benediction on all present.

LEGENDARY TALES AND SONGS OF Ireland and Scotland.

A lecture was recently delivered in Hitchmond, England, on the "Legendary Tales and Songs of Ireland and Scotland," by Dr. White, author of "The Illustrations of National Minstrelsy," etc., under the presidency of his Grace the Duke of Buccleugh. Dr. White commenced by saying that the idea of re-publishing the early legends of these kingdoms was of late occupying much attention among antiquarians as an aid to historical research, in proof of which he referred to the labors of Dr. Grim and Dr. Campbell of Islay, the author of the "Gaelic Tales of the Western Islands," who have spent much time in collecting the legends and romance, not only in Germany but, throughout Great Britain and Ireland, in collecting and selecting the beautiful legends of these countries. It had been said by distinguished critics that in many of those fairy tales and legends would be found much sound and useful instruction and much solid, industrious maxims, whether they were allegories from their ancestors, thought any more of them than as an innocent pastime to beguile their leisure hours; but the more enlightened learning. They deserved, however, to be preserved, for in them could be traced the origin of much of the language and habits of the early Irish and Scotch peoples. Before proceeding to the immediate business of the evening, he said these tales and legends—for such they were—he was about to give were probably the first literary efforts of the aborigines of these islands.

THE SUBJECT.

Are supposed to have sprung from a colony of Greeks who used the Ionic dialect. The Greeks (also found their way into the Roman Empire, and were highly prized by the Sybarites. The origin of the Celts, however, was probably due to the Arabians, from whom the Crusaders derived their knowledge of the Arabian hospitality and chivalry, the embodiments of Pagan myths, modified by the early Christian poets, regarding events which had occurred long prior to the present era, having all the foundation in fact on which the bards reaped their legendary superstructure. What are now historic were first related in the halls of the Irish chiefs by wandering minstrels, and who, finding an asylum with the monks, did, in exchange for the hospitality and shelter they received, rehearse their tales on the scriptorium, and thus they were preserved.

Some short time ago the lecturer made a

FOUR TROUBLES IRELAND

For the purpose of gathering among the peasantry, in their own homes, in the most unfrequented places, what information he could obtain of the early traditions of Ireland, as they were preserved in their native simplicity. The journey was fraught with reasonable success, for he had thereby been enabled to add much to what he already knew. He had recently written and adapted a series of incendiary lyrics expressive of the feelings of Ireland's Sense of things in the Irish language, and he was sure that it would interweave with the evening's entertainment. He felt it would be superfluous in him to allude to the fairies of Shakspeare, in him to allude to the fairies of Shakspeare, with whose fanciful and brilliant creations they were familiar; nor to the Scottish elf and warlock and brownie, whose pranks had been so forcibly chronicled by Burns and Scott and Hogg. The Irish was a somewhat distinct genius in the order of intelligences. It was the belief in Ireland that

FAIRIES WERE GOOD PEOPLE.

Who had been expelled from Heaven, but who had reached this earth, and that others of all were familiar were going still farther down to a less comfortable place. That opinion was justified and illustrated by the supposition of the ancient Greeks, who, in order to reconcile the terrible furies of their mythology, reverentially spoke of them as the vengeful deities under the well-omened name of "Eumenedes." He then proceeded to narrate a number of the Irish legends with vocal illustrations, noticing their family likeness to those of Scotland. The most popular of them had been claimed by both nations. Much controversy had been spent on the subject. For his own part he thought it was highly amusing. In the first place it indicated a mutually instructive appreciation of all that was choice and beautiful in melody. It was the absence of a purely religious character, which are of a purely religious character, were most warmly applauded by the audience, and the latter place being sung with fine effect by Mdlle. Astolfo Vassili and Mr. White, who presided at the piano. The Air Nail-nal Anthem, "Prince Arthur Patrick's Welcome to Erin," which the evening's entertainment to a close. There was a large and more attentive than demonstrative audience, and the success of the musical illustrations, which were of a high musical order, was not only a test of their merit, but a rare amount of poetry and sentiment as well as edification.

"Justice or Repeal."

"Justice to Ireland!" was O'Connell's cry. This meant, says Mr. O'Donoghue, justice or Repeal—that is, that Ireland was now in a state of humble dependence, provided with the means of being happy and free with that consent, this pretext has been forced—seen and provided against, or rather it is that the connection is more simple than that of languages in general—there, for at least the two genders, similar to the Hebrew or the French, there is but one form of conjugation, and that is the conjugation of the indicative mode there are but the simple tenses of the present, past, and future. In the construction of declension writers that the Irish language can be better modified to music than any other language in Europe. "But, alas!" exclaimed the lecturer, "the language of the land of sweet sounding harps is now but seldom heard; for seven hundred years the harmony of that language with the harmony of the human heart."

Those who gave it harmony are no more.

"No more to chiefs and ladies bright
The harp of Innisfail
Ireland's bards and her minstrels are gone.
Her language, almost forgotten by herself,
Where the language of the poor and lowly,
And when we hear it from their lips we feel
That it has been their's for ages past
The noble, the philosopher, the priest,
The prince, and the poet. There is no part Of Ireland where English is spoken as the greater numbers, and in many instances of greater beauty than in the country surrounding the

FAR-FAMED KILLARNEY.

Apart from what nature has done to render a place where all her loveliness and grandeur are blended, much interest attaches to it from the associations with which it is the scene. Visitors seldom come away without having visited the Scottish and warlock and brownie, whose pranks had been so forcibly chronicled by Burns and Scott and Hogg. The Irish was a somewhat distinct genius in the order of intelligences. It was the belief in Ireland that

FAIRIES WERE GOOD PEOPLE.

Who had been expelled from Heaven, but who had reached this earth, and that others of all were familiar were going still farther down to a less comfortable place. That opinion was justified and illustrated by the supposition of the ancient Greeks, who, in order to reconcile the terrible furies of their mythology, reverentially spoke of them as the vengeful deities under the well-omened name of "Eumenedes." He then proceeded to narrate a number of the Irish legends with vocal illustrations, noticing their family likeness to those of Scotland. The most popular of them had been claimed by both nations. Much controversy had been spent on the subject. For his own part he thought it was highly amusing. In the first place it indicated a mutually instructive appreciation of all that was choice and beautiful in melody. It was the absence of a purely religious character, which

WEEKLY CALENDAR.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING MARCH 16.
March
1—Sunday—Fourth Sunday in Lent.
11—Monday—St. John of God, Confessor
12—Tuesday—St. Gregory, Pope, Conf. and Doctor of the Church
13—Wednesday—The Forty Martyrs of Sebaste.
14—Thursday—Of the Feria.
15—Friday—The Most Precious Blood of our Lord.
16—Saturday—Of the Feria.

DIVERS THINGS.

Death of H. H. Byrne.

On Friday, March 1st, one of the best known and most prominent members of the legal profession in California breathed his last and passed to another world, Henry Herbert Byrne on that day at noon delivered his soul to the merciful judgment of its Creator. The Roman poet tells us to say nothing but what is good of those who have passed through the gloomy archway that divides time from eternity. Theocracy indeed to follow that charitable advice in the case of H. H. Byrne, for not many men quit this life leaving less of evil to be said of them. His whole career has been one of honor and distinction, without a single blemish to mar the purity of its record. He was born in New York in the year 1824, of Irish parentage. His father, Patrick Byrne, was engaged in the stationery business in that city, and gained a fair competency by his industry and activity. Being a man of hospitable instincts and almost reckless generosity, he consequently impaired his means, but he was fortunately able to give his children all the advantages of a good education. Harry was sent at an early age to St. Sulpice College in Montreal, Canada, where he studied for some years with tolerable assiduity and success. It is probable his father intended him for the Church, but shortly after his return from school the young lad exhibited a decided inclination for the legal profession, and his parent did not care to thwart his desires. Accordingly he studied law, and in due time he was admitted to practice in the Courts. From the first he impressed every one with whom he came into contact as a young man of far more than ordinary ability and promise. He was passionately fond of reading, and was intimately acquainted with English literature. There can be no question that this study of the best writer in his mother tongue had great effect in perfecting his style, and giving his speeches that grace and elegance of diction for which they are so remarkable. His address was animated and vigorous without falling into the extreme of tone or gesture. He became popular very rapidly, and when only twenty-three years of age was selected to deliver the Fourth of July oration in his native city. His effort on that occasion is said to have been one of the finest and most telling speeches ever delivered in that city. Shortly afterwards he was elected Assistant Alderman for the First Ward, Mr. Oliver Charlick being his companion as Alderman. But political life had few charms for an honorable and talented man like Henry H. Byrne, and he resolved to devote himself exclusively and rightly to his professional business. In 1850 he abandoned the East for California, then becoming famous as the land of gold. In little more than a year after his arrival he was elected District Attorney. His position now brought him into contests with the ablest and most skillful lawyers in the State; and he had to meet with men like McDougall, Baker, James, Tingley, Tracey and others who had obtained high repute at the Bar. These were troublous and exciting days, and the debates in the forum partook largely of the spirit of the times. They were the times, in short, to try the souls of men. Harry Byrne, as he was familiarly called, proved himself a formidable opponent to the distinguished pleaders we have named, and bore off many a triumph from them. Several of them established him in profitability of acquirements, others were closer and more logical in their arguments, others again boasted of a more elevated style of language, and again others exceeded him in depth of legal knowledge, but Henry H. Byrne possessed a quite enough of each of the qualifications to make him a powerful antagonist, while his combination of all of them rendered him nearly irresistible. No man at the Bar could exercise a greater influence over the minds of a jury or so readily command a verdict. His knowledge of human nature was intuitive, and almost without an effort he could adapt his discourse to the capacity of those he was addressing. He was witty, humorous, grave or philosophical as occasions demanded. He had a peculiar fondness for displaying his acquaintance with English literature, and his best speeches were replete with quotations well selected and admirably applied. In 1857 his first term of office as District Attorney expired, but on the Democratic ticket as candidate for his former position. He was, we need hardly say, elected by a large majority. He continued to serve the people vigorously and faithfully until the victory of the Republican party to power at the close of last year again placed him among the ordinary pleaders at the Bar. For a long time past it was evident to all his friends that his health was failing. He struggled manfully against of that most insidious foe to life, bright's disease of the kidneys; but at length he was compelled to succumb. Some months ago he went to Gilroy in the hope that change of air would effect an improvement in his condition, and a seeming alteration for the better really did take place. He returned to San Francisco looking much stronger than before, so that expectations were formed by his friends that he would be spared to them and to society for at least a few years longer. But the improvement was only temporary and delusive; it was merely a faint gleam before the final setting in of the darkness of death. He was again attacked and forced to confine himself to his room never more to leave it a living man. His progress from bad to worse until his case became entirely helpless, and on Friday, March 1st, at about twelve o'clock, his spirit abandoned its earthly tenement and winged its way to the eternal mansions. The last case of any importance in which he was engaged was the prosecution of Mrs. Laura D. Fair for the murder of A. P. Crittenden. Never did he appear to greater advantage, never did he do better service for society or morality. His scathing denunciations of the infamous free-love doctrines which were imported into the case, his defense of female purity and family ties against the destroying levitarism involved in the pleadings of the accused, must certainly meet the warm endorsement of every lover of Christian order and morals. His description of those unsexed creatures who are keeping up a philippics agitation for what they call «the rights of women" was particularly felicitous, and no doubt it will be copied or plagiarized when the grass grows green over his grave. His death was deeply felt and sincerely mourned by all his comrades at the Bar, every one of whom had a kind word to say of him. The different Courts adjourned out of respect to his memory, as soon as the unlookedly intelligence of his decease reached them. The obsequies of the departed defender of justice took place in St. Mary's Cathedral, on Monday last. The sacred building was filled to its utmost capacity. All the leading members of the legal profession were present, marshaled by the Sheriff, as were also the regular police under the command of Captain Ryan. Solemn High Mass for the dead was chanted, Father Speckles being celebrant. The music, which was rendered by a full choir, was extremely impressive, and all the ceremonies were of a character befitting the sad occasion. A few friends having been permitted to take one farewell look at the familiar features of the dead man, the funeral cortege began its march to Calvary Cemetery. The grave was opened, the coffin deposited therein, and the cold earth was heaped upon its kindred clay which had once been a gifted and good man. Then the last sad rites were concluded, and the assemblage turned homewards leaving Henry Herbert Byrne to his long and last repose.

The Taxation of Church Property.

We regret to see that the Assembly by a majority of 33 to 18, refused to engross the amendment to the Constitution exempting from taxation churches, schools, cemeteries, etc. It appears to us that our law-givers must have been led astray by some unreasoning prejudice, and cannot have argued the case fairly on its own merits. If these several species of property were not indispensably necessary for the purposes to which the Constitution as originally drawn up, it certainly must have been in consequence of an oversight, for the men who framed that document were eminently wise and just. The last Legislature, therefore, in agreeing to the alteration thereof by a majority of eleven, were only acting in harmony with what may be presumed to have been the intentions of the authors of our State charter. Even if they were not, there are at all events carrying out the wishes of the majority of the citizens of California. This we maintain: It is true that many newspapers protested strongly against the intended amendment; but it would be a great mistake to confound their pronouncements with public opinion. These prints express the views of what is after all only a small section of the people, and that section by no means the most liberal or intelligent. The bulk of the man of California are not bigots, and they are disposed to do justice to all parties irrespective of creed. Accordingly, we are strong in our conviction that if the arguments in favor of the exemption of church property from taxation were honestly laid before them, they would vote for the amendment to the Constitution authorizing it by an overwhelming majority. It is really to be had that the organs of bigots and sectarians should pretend to act as exponents of the will of the people. We regard this rejection of Mr. Luttrell's bill as a blow at the Catholic Church on this coast, and we are not disposed to take it as doing so. There is no Christian community interested in the matter half so largely as the Roman Catholic. It sustains more churches, colleges, schools, hospitals, asylums and benevolent institutions of every class than all the others put together. The fact is that the other denominations are perfectly satisfied with what the Constitution in this respect, and they make little or no efforts on their own behalf. We do not urge this as a reproach against them by any means, because all the State institutions are essentially Protestant in their character, tone and management, and consequently the non-Catholic sects have no reason to complain of them. Catholics who believe spiritual interests to be paramount to all others—who believe it profiteth a man nothing if he gain the whole world and lose his soul—feel bound to support institutions of their own. They pay their part for the maintenance of the rest, just as if they derived full benefit from them. Thus they are doubly taxed. Our charitable, benevolent and educational institutions save the State a great deal of money, and it certainly would not be stretching liberality too far if they were made exempt from taxation. What reader of history is ignorant of the veneration in which the Cross was held by the Church? or of the sacrifices made by her children from St. Helena to Herstina, in order to recover the Holy Cross? How many Catholic missionaries have purpled the cross with their blood in every region of the world?

According to Magee's Real Estate Circular, real estate shows a slight advance on the prices that have prevailed for the past two years, particularly in the Western Addition. It is generally thought, however, that the general revival will be perceptible before next Fall.

Bismarck and the Poles.

Prince Bismarck is certainly not an amiable character. Whether the quart of brandy, which he is said to consume every day, has any effect upon his temper we cannot say, but, at any rate, his enmity towards those around him is that of a vicient and overbearing master. The way in which he bullies and browbeats the members of the German Parliament is actually astonishing; yet more astonishing still is the tame and spiritless manner in which they submit to such treatment. He behaves to them precisely as if they were so many servants, paid to do his bidding, and unworthy to have a will of their own. If they displease him in the slightest, he bursts into the chamber in a towering passion and scolds the assembled law-givers as imperiously as an enraged pedagogue would a lot of disorderly pupils. Germany, or rather Prussia, is supposed to be a constitutional monarchy, and consequently governed by a Parliament; but Bismarck governs the Parliament, so the final result is that the whole country is under the despotic yoke of the new-made Prince. There is only a small minority of the representatives who display anything like an independent spirit, and they are very much disliked among themselves. Indeed, they are even bitterly opposed in many respects, and the only principle they have in common is antagonism to the arbitrary tyranny exercised by the Chief in every principle of religion! It appears that in certain Lodges the Cross is made an object of profanation. In the "Conservateur Belge" of 1870, tome iii., page 158, we read:

"When the Chevalier Kadosch has pronounced the oath, a crucifix is placed at his feet, then the President says: Let it be understood that this image of superstition: brisé et mis pierre!"

Since the concordat between the Japanese Government and the merchants of Holland, we have not heard of such an anti-Christian ceremony being practised upon. Iesu Smith does not accuse the merchants of Holland of «breaking into pieces," but only of trampling under foot the crucifix, and that for the purpose of trade and commerce with the Japanese. But done with the end justify the means. And is not the trade and commerce with the same Japanese "a consummation devoutly to be wished" by us all? Yet, if the Mirror of Masonry understood from the following, a source as M. Ragon's book, that the ceremony of «trampling upon and breaking into pieces a crucifix" were required in the Catholic Church of all who are promoted to the dignity of Cardinal (!), we could not withstand its burning reflections. The force of such evidence would brand the Catholic Church as an anti-Christian conspiracy—an enemy of the Cross of Christ. What reader of history is ignorant of the veneration in which the Cross was held by the Church? or of the sacrifices made by her children from St. Helena to Herstina, in order to recover the Holy Cross? How many Catholic missionaries have purpled the cross with their blood in every region of the world?

THE MONITOR.
THE ONLY
Irish and Catholic Journal in California.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.
SATURDAY.....MARCH 9, 1872

THE ATTACK ON QUEEN VICTORIA.

By a happy dispensation of Providence we are never without some little sensation or another. The interest attaching to one has scarcely died out before a second makes its appearance and absorbs our attention. This succession of mild excitements has its uses; it prevents life from becoming weary or monotonous. Thrice blessed, then, be those journalists who take such excellent care that the supply of sensations never fails, and who rack their brains endeavoring to discover new or startling forms for their tales of horror. Just now they are liberally dispensing to the public the harrowing details of an atrocious attack upon the person of her Most Gracious Majesty Victoria of England. We hasten to quiet the pulse of the now-made Prince. There is only a small minority of the representatives who display anything like an independent spirit, and they are very much disliked among themselves. Indeed, they are even bitterly opposed in many respects, and the only principle they have in common is antagonism to the arbitrary tyranny exercised by the Chief in every principle of religion! It appears that in certain Lodges the Cross is made an object of profanation. In the "Conservateur Belge" of 1870, tome iii., page 158, we read:

"When the Chevalier Kadosch has pronounced the oath, a crucifix is placed at his feet, then the President says: Let it be understood that this image of superstition: brisé et mis pierre!"

Since the concordat between the Japanese Government and the merchants of Holland, we have not heard of such an anti-Christian ceremony being practised upon. Iesu Smith does not accuse the merchants of Holland of «breaking into pieces," but only of trampling under foot the crucifix, and that for the purpose of trade and commerce with the Japanese. But done with the end justify the means. And is not the trade and commerce with the same Japanese "a consummation devoutly to be wished" by us all? Yet, if the Mirror of Masonry understood from the following, a source as M. Ragon's book, that the ceremony of «trampling upon and breaking into pieces a crucifix" were required in the Catholic Church of all who are promoted to the dignity of Cardinal (!), we could not withstand its burning reflections. The force of such evidence would brand the Catholic Church as an anti-Christian conspiracy—an enemy of the Cross of Christ. What reader of history is ignorant of the veneration in which the Cross was held by the Church? or of the sacrifices made by her children from St. Helena to Herstina, in order to recover the Holy Cross? How many Catholic missionaries have purpled the cross with their blood in every region of the world?

* *

According to Magee's Real Estate Circular, real estate shows a slight advance on the prices that have prevailed for the past two years, particularly in the Western Addition. It is generally thought, however, that the general revival will be perceptible before next Fall.

Bismarck and the Poles.

Prince Bismarck is certainly not an amiable character. Whether the quart of brandy, which he is said to consume every day, has any effect upon his temper we cannot say, but, at any rate, his enmity towards those around him is that of a vicient and overbearing master. The way in which he bullies and browbeats the members of the German Parliament is actually astonishing; yet more astonishing still is the tame and spiritless manner in which they submit to such treatment. He behaves to them precisely as if they were so many servants, paid to do his bidding, and unworthy to have a will of their own. If they displease him in the slightest, he bursts into the chamber in a towering passion and scolds the assembled law-givers as imperiously as an enraged pedagogue would a lot of disorderly pupils. Germany, or rather Prussia, is supposed to be a constitutional monarchy, and consequently governed by a Parliament; but Bismarck governs the Parliament, so the final result is that the whole country is under the despotic yoke of the new-made Prince. There is only a small minority of the representatives who display anything like an independent spirit, and they are very much disliked among themselves. Indeed, they are even bitterly opposed in many respects, and the only principle they have in common is antagonism to the arbitrary tyranny exercised by the Chief in every principle of religion! It appears that in certain Lodges the Cross is made an object of profanation. In the "Conservateur Belge" of 1870, tome iii., page 158, we read:

"When the Chevalier Kadosch has pronounced the oath, a crucifix is placed at his feet, then the President says: Let it be understood that this image of superstition: brisé et mis pierre!"

Since the concordat between the Japanese Government and the merchants of Holland, we have not heard of such an anti-Christian ceremony being practised upon. Iesu Smith does not accuse the merchants of Holland of «breaking into pieces," but only of trampling under foot the crucifix, and that for the purpose of trade and commerce with the Japanese. But done with the end justify the means. And is not the trade and commerce with the same Japanese "a consummation devoutly to be wished" by us all? Yet, if the Mirror of Masonry understood from the following, a source as M. Ragon's book, that the ceremony of «trampling upon and breaking into pieces a crucifix" were required in the Catholic Church of all who are promoted to the dignity of Cardinal (!), we could not withstand its burning reflections. The force of such evidence would brand the Catholic Church as an anti-Christian conspiracy—an enemy of the Cross of Christ. What reader of history is ignorant of the veneration in which the Cross was held by the Church? or of the sacrifices made by her children from St. Helena to Herstina, in order to recover the Holy Cross? How many Catholic missionaries have purpled the cross with their blood in every region of the world?

* *

Masonry and the Cross.

EDITOR MONITOR:—In order to hold the «Mirror of Masonry up to nature," and to exhibit «the Free and Accepted Order" in its genuine colors, let me insert a paragraph extract from M. Ragon's book, called "Philosophical and Explanatory Course of Initiations, Ancient and Modern," which will be found at page 347 of the authority of the Grand Orient Lodge, Paris, 1841, page 47. In this work there is an account of the admission to the grade of Chevalier Kadosch, which grade cannot be conferred except on one who has affiliated every principle of religion! It appears that in certain Lodges the Cross is made an object of profanation. In the "Conservateur Belge" of 1870, tome iii., page 158, we read:

"When the Chevalier Kadosch has pronounced the oath, a crucifix is placed at his feet, then the President says: Let it be understood that this image of superstition: brisé et mis pierre!"

Since the concordat between the Japanese Government and the merchants of Holland, we have not heard of such an anti-Christian ceremony being practised upon. Iesu Smith does not accuse the merchants of Holland of «breaking into pieces," but only of trampling under foot the crucifix, and that for the purpose of trade and commerce with the Japanese. But done with the end justify the means. And is not the trade and commerce with the same Japanese "a consummation devoutly to be wished" by us all? Yet, if the Mirror of Masonry understood from the following, a source as M. Ragon's book, that the ceremony of «trampling upon and breaking into pieces a crucifix" were required in the Catholic Church of all who are promoted to the dignity of Cardinal (!), we could not withstand its burning reflections. The force of such evidence would brand the Catholic Church as an anti-Christian conspiracy—an enemy of the Cross of Christ. What reader of history is ignorant of the veneration in which the Cross was held by the Church? or of the sacrifices made by her children from St. Helena to Herstina, in order to recover the Holy Cross? How many Catholic missionaries have purpled the cross with their blood in every region of the world?

* *

It would seem, then, that his intention was to frighten the Queen into signing these two documents. A madder idea could not by any chance enter into the head of mortal man. The "attack" was made in the courtyard of Buckingham Palace, immediately in front of the entrance, in the presence of soldiers and lacqueys without number. Before the Queen could affix her signature, even if she proceeded to do so at once, the stoppage of the carriage would have been noticed, and it would have been surrounded by armed men. Of course, admitting for a moment that it was possible that the royal signature could have been obtained in this way, it would have been utterly worthless, and the papers containing it would have no validity.

No wonder that these circumstances merely to show that the design attributed to O'Connor would be entertained by no rational being, and consequently he must be insane. Indeed, the insanity seems to be universally admitted by the London press. Notwithstanding this, profound investigations have been made into his religion and nationality, as if therein lay the secret of his madness. O'Connor's grandfather was an Irishman, it appears, and that constitutes all his connection with Ireland. He is thus English by two generations, and is moreover a Protestant in religion. It would be hard, therefore, to make out how our country can be made accountable for his vagaries, or how Ireland can be made to rest discredit upon the Irish cause.

Yet that will be done if suppression and misrepresentation of facts can bring it about. For instance, the Post, a few days ago, had a long article dealing with this "assault" upon the Queen, in which it gravely denounced assassination for political purposes particularly the assassination of one person, and hailed the day when Henry IV. of France and the Prince of Orange out of their graves to serve as "awful warnings" of the bad effects of such crimes. Not a single allusion was made in this article to any of the circumstances proving that O'Connor never intended the least personal injury to the Queen, or to the circumstances preventing the pistol he had from being loaded. Indeed, upon, so obviously to the rescue of his royal mamma was quite enough to bring tears to the eyes of the most hardened republican. Subsequently, however, it transpired that it was not Prince Arthur, but a Scotchwoman, called John Brown, who seized the culprit.

This John Brown is the individual about whose relations with the Queen so many queer stories were circulated several years ago. Probably some of our readers may recollect the vigor and freedom with which a periodical named the Tomahawk denounced the scandal of a mere stable-helper being admitted to terms of intimacy with the Sovereign of England. The defense made was to the effect that the man bore a strong facial resemblance to Prince Albert, and her Most Gracious Majesty, who seems to be a believer in a very peculiar kind of metempsychosis, had breathed into her head that the soul of her departed consort had migrated into the body of this Highland "gillie." The royal fancy was very harmless, methinks, yet it did not satisfy everybody. In the course of some time, however, the Queen was induced to pay a little deference to public opinion, as a consequence of which it was announced that she had ceased to dispense with the dubious services of Mr. John Brown, and that that important personage was about being married. So we thought Mr. John Brown had permanently retired into private life, but on the unexpected turn coming up as the rescuer of his very Gracious Sovereign from assassination!

The English legal press—the organ of the profession—has been published in a very indignant that any human being should pen or utter a single word reflecting even indirectly upon the character of a Sovereign of the Polish language. Evidently the Polish share in the glory of the new Empire is intellectually small!

* *

Masonry and the Cross.

EDITOR MONITOR:—In order to hold the «Mirror of Masonry up to nature," and to exhibit «the Free and Accepted Order" in its genuine colors, let me insert a paragraph extract from M. Ragon's book, called "Philosophical and Explanatory Course of Initiations, Ancient and Modern," which will be found at page 347 of the authority of the Grand Orient Lodge, Paris, 1841, page 47. In this work there is an account of the admission to the grade of Chevalier Kadosch, which grade cannot be conferred except on one who has affiliated every principle of religion! It appears that in certain Lodges the Cross is made an object of profanation. In the "Conservateur Belge" of 1870, tome iii., page 158, we read:

"When the Chevalier Kadosch has pronounced the oath, a crucifix is placed at his feet, then the President says: Let it be understood that this image of superstition: brisé et mis pierre!"

Since the concordat between the Japanese Government and the merchants of Holland, we have not heard of such an anti-Christian ceremony being practised upon. Iesu Smith does not accuse the merchants of Holland of «breaking into pieces," but only of trampling under foot the crucifix, and that for the purpose of trade and commerce with the Japanese. But done with the end justify the means. And is not the trade and commerce with the same Japanese "a consummation devoutly to be wished" by us all? Yet, if the Mirror of Masonry understood from the following, a source as M. Ragon's book, that the ceremony of «trampling upon and breaking into pieces a crucifix" were required in the Catholic Church of all who are promoted to the dignity of Cardinal (!), we could not withstand its burning reflections. The force of such evidence would brand the Catholic Church as an anti-Christian conspiracy—an enemy of the Cross of Christ. What reader of history is ignorant of the veneration in which the Cross was held by the Church? or of the sacrifices made by her children from St. Helena to Herstina, in order to recover the Holy Cross? How many Catholic missionaries have purpled the cross with their blood in every region of the world?

* *

EDUCATION IN IRELAND.

The Irish hierarchy and the Irish people are struggling hard for denominational education. The bishops lose no opportunity of protesting against the monstrous injustice of the insufficiency of the «non-sectarian" system for the requirements of the country. The people, assembled in monster meetings, have affirmed the declarations of the prelates, and demanded acquiescence in their wishes. The agitation has not been by any means confined to Catholics, inasmuch as Presbyterians and Episcopalians have taken a prominent part in it. These two bodies form an overwhelming majority of the inhabitants of Ireland, the other religious persuasions being only represented by a handful of their number. Thus there is no room whatever for doubting that denominational instruction is ardently desired by the Irish people, and yet the Irish Government steadily refuses it, and English members of Parliament earn the applause of their constituents when they sympathize with the refusal. Such is the state of affairs which we commented upon last week, and to which we must make reference, as we consider it necessary to call attention to the fact that the Irish people are unanimous in their demand for denominational education, and that the Government is fully aware of the fact. Yet the Government steadily refuses to grant non-sectarian. Which will laymen. Will the bishops, priests and their clai[illegible] are too earnest, abandon their claims, and submit to the Home Secretary's ukase? Or will they respectfully refuse to petition? Or will they persistently refuse to petition? Or will they persistently refuse to petition? Or will they persistently

(ORIGINAL.)

A FEMALE BLASPHEMER.

"I cannot live: I'll curse my God and die!"
OLIVE HAZAR, in Saleeby's "Enterprise."

Woman, those words a poison yield. Beware!
Thy breath of blasphemy pollutes the air!
Check the gurgling curse that rises to
Or else prepare to quaff the bitter cup
Of fell remorse, reserved for treasons foul,
Whom hell abhors, tho' hell must hear them howl.

Say not thou will "curse thy God and die."
Nor death from thy frail soul shall ever fly!
The loathsome disease of the dread abode,
While scorching flames of fire around them blaze,
Curse their God; but every curse recoils
Back on those rebels writhing in their toils!

"Curse thy God and die!" The fiends will curse,
And all their hoarded hatred on thee nurse
Against Omnipresence and they shall give
Their fury vent; but they are doomed to live.
Ages curse thy God, weak woman, curse and sigh,
But thy immortal soul shall never die!

Pause, then, a moment! and consider well
The joy of heaven and the gloom of hell.
Make choice at once between them; cease to whine;
Glory or shame for aye—the choice is thine!
Approach thy God, and humbly bend the knee
Before his Majesty, for thou art free!

Free as the winds of heaven to select—
Thy good to choose, the evil to reject—
Free under our patience amid tears and sighs,
The greater shall our bliss be in the skies;
But we'll not further let thee accuse,
Or screw the greatness of Omnipotence!

CRO.

CATHOLIC ITEMS.

Eastern.

Died:at Carrollton, La. the 6th of Feb., 1872, Rev. Joseph Haney, priest of the Diocese of Pittsburg. The deceased was a native of Waterside, Londonderry, Ireland.

On Friday, Feb. 2, the Rt. Rev. M. Domenec, of Pittsburgh, raised to the dignity of the Priesthood, Rev. Messrs. Martin Haggerty and—Boyle.

Rt. Rev. James Gibbons, Vicar Apostolic of North Carolina, has been appointed Administrator of the Diocese of Richmond, Va. His address at present is St. Peter's Cathedral, Richmond.

It has often been said in this country that Catholics have an easier road to fame by come to the Church in Ireland than those at home; but following paragraph from one of the last Irish papers tells a different tale: "The collection in the parish of Farmoy for the last Quinquennial Cathedral collection, made by the Rev. Canon Dilworth, amounts to the magnificent sum of £1,500 or £7,500."

On Sunday, Feb. 5, at the Convent of Mercy, Pittsburg, the Rt. Rev. Bishop Domenec, assisted by the Very Rev. Provicar Wolf, O.S.B., of St. Mary's Church, Allegheny, and the Rev. S. G. Mulledger, of the Church of the Most Holy Name, Troy Hill, received the Religious Profession of Sister Mary Alberta Dunn, Sister Mary Gerald McConaigle, and Sister Mary Fusilla Daly, bestowing the black veil of the Order on the new candidates.

We have met the following items in several of our secular papers: Father Barlini, of Fort Wayne, Ind., has recently died. He is said to have fought against Russia when his countrymen revolted against the tyranny of the Czar. He afterwards became a priest, and served in that capacity in several counties of Ireland. His last charge was at Laporte, Ind. He was one of the Passionist Fathers. Catholic Church, spoke fourteen different languages. Recently he had died in poverty.

On the feast of the Purification the following young ladies were received in the habit of the Sisters of Mercy, at Calvary Convent, Rochester, N. Y.: Miss Bridget O'Hara, of Rochester, Ontario; in religion Sister Mary Lucy; Margaret Hickey, who assumed the name of Sister Mary Ann; Miss Anna Mc Donough, called Sister Mary Boniface; Miss Dohorty, taking the name of Sister Mary Austin; Annie Kearney, of Pittson, who took the name of Sister Mary William.

Foreign.

The Rev. G. J. Bourke, P.P., Kelloegue, has been transferred by his Lordship Bishop MacHale to the parish of Kilfenan.

The Rev. M. Kilkenny, late C. C. of Spiddal, has been appointed by his Lordship the Most Rev. Dr. MacHale, to the curacy of Westport, county Mayo.

On the 22d January, in the Convent of Mercy, Keele, Isabella Mary (in religion Sister Mary Aloysius), second daughter of John F. Ingoldsby, Esq., solicitor, Nenagh, was received by the Rev. Dr. McRedmond, who officiated on the occasion.

On the 28th January, in the chapel of the College of St. Malachy, Belfast, the following named young gentlemen were ordained Subdeacons, by the Most Rev. Dr. Dorrian: Daniel Cashmore—Rev. Patrick McCann and Edward Crawford: Kephoe—Revs. P. Kelly and Wm. Drummond. The following day they received Deaconship, and on the 4th February they were ordained priests.

On 29th January, the beautiful church of the Convent of Mercy, Ballinasloe, county Galway, was the scene of the profession and reception of two nuns. The Most Rev. Dr. Duggan, Bishop of Clonfert, officiated on the occasion. The ladies who adopted the sanctified of conventual life on the occasion were Miss Fitzpatrick, of Dublin, who received the black veil as Sister Mary Gertrude, and Miss Lizzie Kirkpatrick, of Loughrea, who received the white veil as Sister Mary Gonzaga.

RELIGIOUS CEREMONIES IN THURLES.—On the 26th January Miss Healy (called in religion Sister Louise) daughter of Joseph Healy, Esq., Cottage Borrisoleigh; and Miss O'Flanagan (called in religion Sister Rose) daughter of T. O'Flanagan, Esq., Kilbroral, Killenaule, were received into the Presentation Convent of Thurles, by the Most Rev. Dr. Leahy, Archbishop of the diocese. Miss Cooke (called in religion Sister Clare), daughter of Samuel Cooke, Esq., Brownstown, was professed also. The Rev. Dr. Butler, Administrator, acted as master of ceremonies.

The State of Death in the Vineyard of the Lord.

DEATH OF REV. EDWARD RYAN.—The estimable priest died on Jan. 17th, at the residence of Rev. M. O'Keefe, P. P. of Aughaboe, Queen's county.

REV. EDWARD SHEEHAN.—The decease of this estimable and lamented young clergyman took place on the 22d of Jan., at Carney, Modolige, the residence of his father, Mr. Patrick Sheehan. The Rev. Edward Sheehan, was a nephew of the Very Rev. Canon Sheehan, St. Chad's, Manchester.

REV. THOMAS TRACEY.—On Tuesday morning, at his residence, in Knockmahon, the Rev. Thomas Tracey, C. C., departed this life, after an illness of ten or twelve days, borne, with the fortitude and patience which his spirit, always brave and unconquering, had so often communicated to the dying Christian during the twenty-eight years he discharged the duties of the sacred ministry.—Waterford News.

REV. JOHN FERRAN, P. P.—So soon after the death of Father Ryan, it is our melancholy duty to record the demise of the Rev. John Florian, P. P. Tullaherin. The decease of Ossory will mourn the death of one, whose piety and zeal every one admired, and whose friendship every one valued. He was ordained priest by the Most Rev. Dr. Marum in the year 1826. He was over twenty years parish priest of Tullaherin.

REV. WILLIAM KINSELLA.—This vehemble clergyman died at his residence, Hailbrush, on the 30th of Jan. He had attained the advanced age of eighty-one years. Nearly fifty years ago he was appointed parish priest of Hollyford and Rathcoe, by the great Doctor Doyle. Father Kinsella was highly esteemed by that illustrious Prelate, and also by his Lordship the present Bishop.

REV. THOMAS MORRIS, C. C.—This young priest, whose death occurred in Goirtn, on Jan. 23, was one to command the esteem and affection of his fellow-laborers in the ministry, and the love and gratitude of the people among whom he labored. Father Morris was scarcely thirty years of age; yet in the different parishes in which he worked, he left the impress of his zeal, his eloquence and his devotion.

DEATH OF REV. JOHN PHELAN.—This reverend gentlemen, the beloved pastor of Tullahedin, diocese of Cloncry, departed this life on the 19th January,after a three days' attack of bronchitis. As a curate and parish priest he labored for forty-six years in the ministry in promoting every good work, exhibiting meekness, zeal and that self-sacrifice which sees no danger when the necessities of the poor and stricken demand his ministry.

The Rev. Father Young died at Belfast on the 15th Jan. On Sunday morning he said his last Mass; on Sunday at twelve o'clock he preached his last sermon, and on Thursday, at one o'clock he breathed his last breath. Struck down by that fell disease, cerebral spinal fever rattled. His death coming s soon after Father Cristopher, and arising from the same cause, will be a great affliction to the Catholics of Belfast—a people so affectionately attached to their priests.

A RELINQUISHER.—Far away from the bustle and struggle of human life, and shrouded for years in its pride or vanity and vain regret, in the Convent of Mercy, Gort, Sister Mary Ignatius, daughter of the late Mr. Moriarty, of Abbeyfeil, and sister of the Very Rev. T. Moriay, Vincentian, pre pared herself to meet the coming of the bridegroom and to face life's last struggle. She passed out of the world on Jan. 22, aged twenty-eight years, and in the sixth year of her religious life.

REV. G. BARRY, C. C.—We regret to have to announce the death of the above esteemed clergyman, which took place after a severe illness of a few days at Cappawhite. The Rev. Mr. Barry, endowed with rare mental attributes, commenced his studies for the priesthood at an early age. On entering the College of All Hallows his sound knowledge of the Greek and Latin classics as well as his future proficiency in the studies of sacred theology, and that of rare, but obnoxious, gaseous spirit which in after years was his distinctive characteristic, won for him the unbounded admiration of professors and students. He was subsequently received as a priest of his native diocese by the present Archbishop of Cashel, and was by him appointed Dean and Professor of Greek and Latin in the College of Thurles.

"SO IRISH NEED APPLY."

Thackeray predicates of all men that they are snobs. Accepting as correct the characters who, after Shakespeare, portrayed among the Immortals Intimate knowledge of the failings and frailties of the human mind, we would investigate one phase of snobbery which is as offensive as it is unchristian. Among many of our highly genteel Catholics in England, and, as a consequence, among those who bask in their smiles and deem it their duty to echo their sentiments, there is a spirit of anti-Irishism which speaks but badly for the gratitude of this country towards a people who have ever the desire to keep the lamp of faith burning through many a long year of persecution and oppression. Except Poland, we cannot point to any race which has undergone so much for Christ's sake as Ireland, with the only difference existing between them, that Russian intrigue and Russian tyranny combined were served, if not to obliterate, at least to keep out of sight the Catholicity of the Poles. Siberia, the knout and the gaspacher has gone far to blot out the faith in that unhappy land, and to prevent those evil promises of Christ's mission for religion from doing more than merely remain constant to their creed. But the sons of the Irish has been very different. Their mission seems to have been to serve as an apostolate in every land. Exiled from their native soil, whether by the hand of the exterminating landlord, or the inhumane Orange bigot, who for his own ends placed Catholicism and disloyalty in the same category, they have gone forth into all lands the Evangelizers of the heathen, the pioneers of the faith, the Hierarchies, the champions of the gospel of peace and charity.

Ubi patria regio in terris nostri non plena laboris," the Irishman may well cry, when stung by the reproach of those who thought to bow down before him in pious gratitude, he points to the work done by the countless priests in America, the Antipodes, the East and West, the North and the South, and asks where would be the faith in these places had it not been for the zealous sons of Catholic Erin. To put other countries out of sight, and

TO REVERT TO ENGLAND ALONE.

If we take the list of the clergy, secular or regular, and read it carefully through, how many Irish names do we find! Names that strike the reader's mind, and if we pass on and name the names of those who of late years have done the most good for the good of the Church we shall find that the Irish element predominates. We are far from ignoring—God forbid we should—the native efforts among the English Catholic families of England—"amongst the faithful only they"—not only keep up the Catholic religion in this country, but to further its spread, nor are we insensible to the vast power latent in cause by converts to the faith, whether by substantial benefits or the edification afforded by their good example of self-sacrifice and constancy; but we challenge contradiction when we assert that the genius of the past few years have done more for the building of churches, convents and schools than the pounds of their richer English brethren, while their continuous fervent prayers have effected for the conversion of England what the great day alone can disclose. We are not under the mark when we estimate the Irish element in the Catholic population of Great Britain as nine-tenths of the whole—if all were practical Catholics it would probably exceed this amount. Taken as a body, their tendency is to edification; and if at times they bring scandal upon their race and upon their Church, we must remember that in this country they are looked upon as pariahs and unfriendly than Protestant compeers, and too often treated as a separate caste by English Catholics. Instead of stretching out the right hand of fellowship to those whom the necessity of their lot has driven to seek an abode in the land of the stranger, the tendency of the day is to theorize about building Irish churches, to talk about the Irish quarter, to boast of being an English Catholic, and to affect to despise aught that savors of the "mere Irishie." In advertisements we see their feelings insulted and the door of domestic service shut in their face because they are not East Britons; their little blunders are held up to ridicule with the sneering remark

"HOW VERY IRISH!"

Their virtues, especially that shoeiest one of purity, are ignored; and we cannot but have heard some who owed the gift of Faith to their fathers in Ireland, disclaim, if it was not for the scandal given by the Irish in England and Scotland, the reproach of Catholicism as a thing to be ashamed of, such a pitch, indeed, has the evil reached that it is not uncommon to hear a would-be-aristocratic Catholic apologizing for his religion, and impressing upon his hearers that he is English and not Irish. Of all the forms of snobbery with which society is infested we know none more unchristian than this. It is mean to the last degree; it is ungrateful in the extreme; it is utterly un-Catholic, and cannot be but hateful before Him who knows naught of her of nationalities or of social distinction, but looks in the hearts of men and Judges accordingly. In his eyes the rich and the poor are equal; they worship together, and he is the Lord and Maker of them all. Therefore to look down upon our fellow Catholics because they are Irish, to subject them to ostricism in the Church and in the household is a double crime. It is to neglect the command of Christ, and to despise those without whose Faith and good works England in the old time as in the but a sorry plight. We are moved to wrath when we hear of the treatment of the blacks in the southern States of the Union when we read of churches, railway carriages and public conveyances being absolutely set apart for their use, lest perchance they might come between the wind and the nobility of their white brethren, but the spirit of this anti-Irish feeling is encouraged—and we regret to think that it finds favor in quarters where it ought not even to be heard of—we shall reduce ourselves to the condition of the Americans, and be guilty before our Irish brethren in the manner without any pretended excuse that they are not of a white skin. This new social movement is but another and a most odious form of that spirit of worldly idolatry so often and so often alluded in these columns as the bane of English Catholics; but which is now far more injurious than those springing from the other phases of the evil, inasmuch as the present position of Catholics is one of self-defence. We are fighting for our liberties and our rights, and if we alienate nine-tenths of our number by turning the cold shoulder towards them and positively insulting them, what position can we hold? we, the remaining tenth, have against our enemies? If our Catholic literature and literature is to be condemned because it ministers to the wants of the greatest number, what prospect is there of a Catholic literature coming into the hands of the people at all? We require it! We have to fight against such newspapers as Reynolds' Newspaper, Lloyd's Weekly News, and the London Journal, and how can we counteract their pernicious influence amongst our people unless by providing nearly all Irish, unless Irish Catholics their wants in a way that will suit their tastes and likings. Thus, while the Irish people stigmatizing the so-called Catholic Magazine as too Irish, we have to look to it on that account, or discriminating Catholic Opinion on the ground of its being "Irish" to support it? Let us have done with this contemptible spirit of snobbery, and if we have ever had cause to be ashamed of our country, we feel disposed, doubly at heart, the growth of a pure

CATHOLIC POPULAR LITERATURE

And the diversion of young Catholic writers from the Protestant Press. If those Catholics who by a mere accident of birth were born in England of old English families are able and willing to write, and write often without serious loss a publication into which nothing can find its way as an "Irishrie" shall enter, we invite them to try the experiment. We may safely prophesy that the result will be as favorable as we do from experience that such as they have not hitherto proved themselves the best friends to Catholic literature, which without the untiring and ungrudging assistance of the Irish element in the Catholic population must long since have died, clammed to death, amid an unsympathizing and unheeding crowd, too lazy or too stingy to afford it that support which it was their bounden duty to prefer. We do not intend to analyse this anti-Irish prejudice—to do so would not be worth the trouble. We are content to condemn it as the most arrant snobbery and the blackest ingratitude, and to set it down as fatal desire on the part of some of our higher-class Catholics to stand well with the powers that be, whose sole principle of action, as far as Ireland is concerned, is to repudiate her, except in so far as it may serve to the public revenue, and to see that her people are kept in a state of mental and independence or obtains even that minimum of justice which has been meted out to her grudgingly and unwisely by an unwilling Legislature. "Calcur quem fortuna parentem sortitus est," is the principle law animated our Irish legislation; we trust it may no longer be suffered to energise in the government of the Irish Catholics, who land by their English Catholic brethren.—Weekly Register. Jan. 27.

CALIFORNIA BUILDING and LOAN SOCIETY.

In Bankruptcy.

NOTICE OF SECOND DIVIDEND.

UNDER AND BY VIRTUE OF OUR AUTHOR ity as Trustees in Bankruptcy of the estate of JOHN F. SHERMAN, of the city and county of San Francisco, and by and with the advice and consent of the Commissioner of Creditors, we hereby declare a second dividend of twenty per cent. of the assets of said bankrupt, payable on and after the first day of March, A.D. 1872, at the store premises, No. 604 Clay street, San Francisco, to all creditors whose claims have been duly allowed by Samuel J. Clarke, Jr., Register in Bankruptcy.

The third meeting of creditors of said Bankrupt will be held on said first day of March, A.D. 1872, at 12 o'clock at the same place.

Dated at San Francisco, February 15, 1872.

JAMES B. KELLY,
FREDERICK BIGELOW,
Trustees in Bankruptcy of said Bankrupt.

Instigated by Pierce, Attorneys for Trustees, southwest corner of Montgomery and Commercial sts., San Francisco. fe24

DONNOLLY'S California PREMIUM YEAST POWDER.

ANOTHER GREAT REDUCTION.

Only $16 per gross in lots to the trade

THIS SUPERIOR YEAST POWDER has stood in the preparation of bread, cakes, etc.

USE DONNOLLY'S YEAST POWDER.

The best and cheapest ever offered to the public made fresh every day at the Factory, 211 Front st. San Francisco, Cal.

mh1 B. CALLAGHAN, Proprietor

EDUCATIONAL.

SAINT MARY'S COLLEGE

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

Conducted by the Christian Brothers.

Offers every facility for acquiring a thorough Education, whether Classical, Scientific or Commercial.

Those who complete the Classical Course receive the degree of A. B.; the Scientific, B. S.; the Commercial, Master of Accounts.

The Commercial Course has been established for the convenience of those who wish to acquire a practical knowledge of business in the shortest time.

The Scientific Course is designed for young branch taught in the College, our two languages receive special attention. The daily exercises in the Sinderia in grammar, Composition and Rhetoric are particularly discussed and corrected in the class-room.

TERMS PER SCHOLASTIC YEAR.
(Payable half-yearly in advance).

Board, Tuition and Washing.....$250 00
Half Boarders.....100 00
Tuition, Fees and Medicines.....40 00
Day Scholars.....20 00
Modern languages, Music and drawing form extra charges.
Studies will be resumed on the 1st of August.
REV. E. JUSTIN, President.

EDUCATIONAL.

ST. CATHERINE'S ACADEMY,

CONDUCTED BY
THE SISTERS OF ST DOMINIC,
BENICIA, CALIFORNIA.

THIS INSTITUTION AFFORDS EVERY FAcility for the acquisition of a refined and solid education. The Academy was founded in 1860, and now ranks among the most successful Educational Institutions of California.

The course of instruction embraces the English, French, German and Latin Languages, Rhetoric, Elocution, Composition, Ancient and Modern History, Biography, Mythology, Chemistry, Geography, Arithmetic, Natural Law of Nations, Moral Philosophy, Mental Music, including the Piano, Guitar and Organ; Writing, Tracing, Painting in Water Colors and in Oil; Tapestry, Plain and Ornamental Needlework, etc., etc.

TERMS.

Board and Tuition (payable half-yearly, in advance).....$175
Washing.....20
Entrance Fee.....10

EXTRAS.

Piano and use of Instrument (payable half-yearly).....$40
Harp " " " " " ".....50
Guitar " " " " " ".....20
Vocal Music in Class.....20
Private Lessons.....40
Drawing and Painting in Water Colors.....20
Painting in Oils.....30

No deduction for absence, except in case of sickness.

School Books at Current Prices.

Each young lady is required to be provided with four sheets, two towels, one mattress, one pillow, one blanket with counterpane, for Winter, and for Summer, one mattress, one pillow, one blanket, one counterpane, two morning-dresses, dressing-case, four sheets, two towels, one mattress, one pillow, one blanket, one counterpane, one silver fork, one silver spoon, one silver table-spoon, fork and napkin-ring; two white straw hats, one black straw hat, one black bonnet, one shawl, two yards of white set, and a supply of soap and tooth-powder.

The Academic Year continues of two equal terms, the first commencing on the first Mon. in August, and ending on the last Thursday in January 1st.

Reports of any religious denomination are respectfully invited, but for the sake of uniformity services of the Catholic Church are preferred.

Pupils entering after the expiration of a month will be charged from the date of their entrance, and no deduction will be made for absence during the session, except in case of sickness.

Parents may rest satisfied that every attention, consistent with the strictest rules of a well-regulated school, will be paid to the comfort of the young ladies placed under their charge.

Boats conveying passengers to Benicia leave Broadway wharf, every Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday at 10 P. M., and on Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday at 10 A. M. The Steamer Antelope leaves Benicia for the Capital on her arrival at Vallejo every morning.

All communications regarding the College will be addressed to the Superioress, ST. CATHERINE'S ACADEMY, Benicia, Solano County, Cal.

Very Rev. P. HENNEBERY, Superior.

de23

HOTELS.

Removal.

THE SECOND STREET HOUSE

Has Removed to 123 Second street,

Northeast corner of Minna. Purchased the house in its entirety, and refitted in modern style. Meals at all hours. Rooms, reasonable terms. Call and examine.

M. O'CONNOR, Proprietor.

CENTRAL HOTEL,

816 AND 818 SANSOME STREET,

Between Broadway and Pacific.....

Entrance, to be paid but once.....$15 00
Board and Lodging, per quarter.....12 50
Washing, per quarter.....12 50
Single meals.....25
Transient Fare (tickets it may be preferred to pay the bill in case of less room per quarter to

Plans, Vocal Music, Drawing and Painting Form extra charges, but there is no extra charge for the use of the London Journal. Dancing, Calisthenics, Reading and Fancy Needlework.....

Pupils entering after the first month are half a session in advance. Pupils will be received at any time, and charged from the time of entrance to the end of the session.

Parents may rest satisfied that every attention, consistent with the strictest rules of a well-regulated school, will be paid to the comfort of the young ladies placed under their charge.

Boats conveying passengers to Benicia leave Broadway wharf, every Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday at 10 P. M., and on Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday at 10 A. M. The Steamer Antelope leaves Benicia for the Capital on her arrival at Vallejo every morning.

All communications regarding the College will be addressed to the Superioress, ST. CATHERINE'S ACADEMY, Benicia, Solano County, Cal.

Very Rev. P. HENNEBERY, Superior.

de23

FRANKLIN HOTEL,

414 AND 416 PACIFIC STREET,

Between Sansome and Montgomery.....San Francisco

HUGH CUMMAR.....Proprietor.

Board, per week.....$4 00
Board and Lodging, single rooms.....5 00
Meals, Meals, 25 cents. Lodging, 25 cents.

Parties accommodations to reasonable rates.

Passengers and baggage conveyed to the House free of charge. Also Free to and from the cars.

A City Directory, and all the city papers taken.

RAILROAD HOUSE,

Corner of Sansome and Pacific streets, San Francisco.

IS NOW OPENED BY

P. CASSERLY,

(Late of the Treasure House, where he will be happy to receive his friends and the public in general.

The House is thoroughly fitted up in the latest fashion, with Elevator, Baths and all other modern improvements. The Bar-room is large and airy, and can not find another single or in suite for families.

Meals served at all hours. Board by the month, and accommodation of Boarders.

Terms, $5 to $7 per week.

There is a fire-proof Safe in the House, where persons can deposit valuables for the risk of the proprietor.

Free Coach in the House to and from the Cars.

P. CASSERLY, Proprietor.

CITY HOTEL,

K street, between Third and Fourth,

SACRAMENTO.

THIS HOUSE IS CENTRALLY LOCATED. THE rooms are commodious, well ventilated and handsomely furnished. The table is supplied with the best meats and vegetables in the market.

Board and lodging per week.....$6 00
Single meals.....25
F. CONLIN, Proprietor.

fe17

PARKER HOUSE,

617 Montgomery street.

THIS POPULAR OLD ESTABLISHED HOUSE has been purchased by Mr. M. O'Connor, Formerly of the Kremlin Saloon.

And has been renovated and refitted throughout in elegant style. The Bar is supplied with the best beverages to be found in the market, and the table will be set in a manner worthy of the former House—no restaurant with the public for years.

fe11tjw M. O'CONNOR, Proprietor.

SHAW'S PECTORAL COUGH SYRUP,

For the Cure and Relief of all

PULMONARY COMPLAINTS,

For sale at SHAW'S DRUG STORES, corner Sutter and Powell streets, San Francisco.

New and Important Publications.

THE LIFE, PROPHECIES & REVELATIONS

—OF THE—

VENERABLE MARY ANNE TAIGI.

Her recently supposed connection with the prophecy of the Virgin Parthenay, will make the life of this remarkable woman a most interesting book at this time.

VERONICA;

OR,

Devotions to the Holy Face of our Lord

With prayers and Indulgences.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL PRAYER AND HYMN BOOK, with 16 beautiful illustrations of the Mass; the most perfect book for children yet published.

CATHOLIC WORKS and articles of every description at the lowest rates. Send for Canvasser's circular, full of Catholic Books. Address

EUGENE CUMMISKEY, Publisher,
mh1 1047 Chestnut street, Philadelphia.

EDUCATIONAL.

ST. JOSEPH'S COLLEGE,

Mt Bonaventure, Humboldt County, Cal.

CONDUCTED BY THE FRIERS OF THE CONGREGATION OF THE MOST PRECIOUS BLOOD.

THIS INSTITUTION IS SITUATED IN A picturesque and healthy locality, between Van Duzen and Eel Rivers, and near the town of Robertville, about 200 miles from the city and can be reached by daily stages and from other parts of the State by steamers plying between San Francisco and Humboldt Bay. The buildings are spacious, airy and well ventilated. Special attention is paid to the moral training and care of the pupils.

TERMS PER SCHOLASTIC YEAR:
(Payable half yearly in advance).

For board, lodging, tuition, use of bed and bedding, washing, fees.....$225 00
Entrance fee, to be paid only once.....10 00
Vacation at College.....40 00

DAY PUPILS.

Senior class.....$50 00
Junior class.....40 00

Vocal and instrumental Drawing and modern languages, with firm rules charges. The Latin and Greek languages are taught respectively on the methods of the most approved authors.

All communications regarding the College to be addressed to the Superioress, ST. JOSEPH'S COLLEGE, Mt Bonaventure, Humboldt County, Cal.

Very Rev. P. HENNEBERY, Superior.

de23

THE YOUNG CRUSADER,

AN ILLUSTRATED

CATHOLIC MONTHLY MAGAZINE

FOR

CHOICE READING

AND

Good Pictures.

Read with interest by all, and with special delight and profit by the younger members of the family.

The Crusader is now in the fourth year.

The Illustrations are by the best of the kind.

Sample Copies sent free to all who ask them.

Back Numbers always on hand.

Liberal Premiums are given to those who get up clubs.

Get a Special Blank and subscribe for it.

Terms, $1 50 per annum, in advance.

Address, THE CRUSADER,
Box 1,006, Post Office,
mh2 San Francisco, Cal.

ST. VINCENT'S SCHOOL.

THIS INSTITUTION IS SITUATED IN SANTA Barbara, a short distance from the sea, in the most delightful and healthy locality in the State. The grounds are extensive, and the building is large and well ventilated.

The course of instruction embraces the usual branches of a thorough English education. Spanish is also taught.

TERMS:

(Payable half yearly in advance):

Board, tuition, bed, bedding, washing, etc.....$200 00
Piano, and use of instrument, per month.....$4 50 to $5 00
Guitar, per month.....2 50
No extra charge for Plain Sewing, Fancy Needlework, etc.
The scholastic year of ten months and a half commences on the first Monday in August, and ends on the Thursday in June.
For further particulars apply to
SISTERS OF CHARITY,
Santa Barbara Cal.

fp16

ST. VINCENT'S COLLEGE,

LOS ANGELES, CAL.

DEGREES CONFERRED

Rev. JAMES MACGILL, C. M.,
Late of
FRANCISCAN COLLEGE,
SANTA BARBARA, CALIFORNIA.

THIS INSTITUTION UNDER THE JURISdiction, conducted by the Fathers of the order of St. Vincent de Paul, is an ecclesiastical seminary.

The object of the institution is to give a good English and Classical education, and to prepare for the Priesthood, in the lowest possible cost, a small body felt in the Archdiocese of San Francisco, and in the Missions within the reach of all.

TERMS.

Entrance Fee (to be paid but once).....$10 00
Board, tuition and use of bedding per session, of ten months.....150 00
Washing.....20 00
Fuel, French and German form extra charges.
Those who spend vacation at the College will be charged $40.

Pupils entering after the month of is as may remain.

Payments must be made semi-annually in advance.

Parents will pay for medical attendance, and supply clothing for pupils.

Money will not be advanced by the College; for the pupils, and pupils receiving money will be subject to deposition.

For further particulars apply to

REV. J. J. QUEREZ, C. M.
Superior.

fp16

Thirty-Two large Double-Column Pages issued Monthly.

THE YOUNG CRUSADER,

AN ILLUSTRATED

CATHOLIC MONTHLY MAGAZINE

FOR

CHOICE READING

AND

Good Pictures.

Read with interest by all, and with special delight and profit by the younger members of the family.

The Crusader is now in the fourth year.

The Illustrations are by the best of the kind.

Sample Copies sent free to all who ask them.

Back Numbers always on hand.

Liberal Premiums are given to those who get up clubs.

Get a Special Blank and subscribe for it.

Terms, $1 50 per annum, in advance.

Address, THE CRUSADER,
Box 1,006, Post Office,
mh2 San Francisco, Cal.

SMALL PRUIT INSTRUCTOR.

SIX FOOT PAGES, with Colored Plate, just out. Tells how to plant and prune all kinds of small Fruit successfully, each for market and home growth. John J. Thomas, Henry Ward Beecher, Judge L. B. Harris, et al., and others, say it is one of the most complete and practical works ever printed. 50c Price list of Plants, retail or wholesale, free to all applicants. Address

A. M. PURDY, Waterford Pumps, N. Y.
Or to PURDY & HANCE, 58 Read, 2nd, 3rd, 4th and 5th streets, Philadelphia.

P. S. Specimen copies of the Fruit Recorder and Guide to cultivation, a dollar monthly, 6 M. Purdy, editor. Free to all applicants. Stamps for Postage. To every subscriber we will send one copy

mh2

GROCERIES, WINES AND LIQ

WILLIAM B. DOLAN,
134 Third Street.....San Fra
Importer and Dealer, Wholesale and Retail in

French Wines and Brand

AND

Irish Whisk

Imported direct from Ireland.

HE HAS ALSO ON HAND A LAR assortment of California Wines of every description, from the Vineyards of Los Angeles, to the vineyards of Sonoma.

All orders left at the store, 134 Third street, will promptly attended to, and delivered free of charge any part of the city.

JOHN FLANAGAN & CO.

Importers and Dealers in

Fine Brandies, Wines, Liquors,

Fire proof Store, 421 Front street, bet. Clay & Sa

SAN FRANCISCO.

Foreign Liquors in bond. Fine Brandies, Sh

Port, Claret, etc., sold in quantities to suit the

Also, Dealers in native California Wines and de16

H. S. KEIL

Kelly & E

IMPORTER AND DEALER IN

FINE WINES AND LIQU

No. Battery street,

San Fran

mar

D. Commins & C

(Successors to P. Riley & Co.)

WHOLESALE LIQUOR MERCHA

my6 No. 606 FRONT STREET,

A. P. HOTALING & C

IMPORTERS AND DEALERS IN

FOREIGN AND [DOMESTI

WINES AND LIQUO

AGENTS FOR THE J. H. CUTTE

OLD BOURBON WHIS

C. P. MORMAN & CO., DISTILL

LOUISVILLE, KENTUCKY.

OWING TO THE DESERVED REPU of the celebrated brand of Whisky, manufactured by the above firm, and are now engaged in counterfeiting the labels, bottles, etc., of the genuine article, we would caution consumers to be careful in their purchase and see the bogus, impressed on the cork, before buying.

For sale at the principal Bars throughout the city and State.

We have no agents for the sale of our goods in this city, and that any person claiming to be such is an impostor.

A. P. HOTALING & CO.
411 Jackson street, corner Hyde.

mch1

McMAHON'S SALOO

P. J. MCMAHON, FORMERLY THE last proprietor of the Head House Saloon has recently fitted up in the opposite the Alhambra Theatre, where he will be happy to see his friends and the public generally.

318 Bush Street,

Mr. McMahon has been known for many years as the leading saloon keeper of this city, and it is unnecessary to say that his liquors are of the best brands.

Give him a call.

de30

SAN FRANCISCO BUSINESS COLLEGE

Will open its Spring Session on MONDAY, January 1st, 1872, at the College Building, 24 Post street, and will be found the most complete and practical institution of the kind in the State.

Students can enter at any time, and receive instruction in Penmanship, Book-keeping, Commercial Calculations, Commercial Law, Correspondence, Grammar, Spelling, Composition, Letter-writing, Business Forms, Telegraphing, Phonography, Typewriting, Mercantile Arithmetic, Practical Surveying, Mechanical Drawing, Architectural Drawing, Civil Engineering, Assaying, Mining, Mechanics, Natural Philosophy, Chemistry, Physiology, Astronomy, Geology, Mineralogy, Botany, Zoology, Natural History, Ancient and Modern Languages, Music, Elocution, Oratory, Rhetoric, Logic, Moral Philosophy, Political Economy, Constitutional Law, Civil Government, Political History, Ancient and Modern History, Universal History, Physical Geography, Physical Culture, Gymnastics, Military Tactics, Military Engineering, Military Law, Military History, Military Strategy, Military Science, Military Hygiene, Military Topography, Military Geography, Military Statistics, Military Ethics, Military Discipline, Military Organization, Military Administration, Military Jurisprudence, Military Medicine, Military Surgery, Military Pharmacy, Military Chemistry, Military Physiology, Military Anatomy, Military Botany, Military Zoology, Military Natural History, Military Geology, Military Mineralogy, Military Astronomy, Military Meteorology, Military Navigation, Military Seamanship, Military Gunnery, Military Ballistics, Military Ordnance, Military Artillery, Military Cavalry, Military Infantry

TELEGRAPHIC.

Eastern.

EX-Secretary Seward considers that a great reunion exists in the people of Washington treaty, in that it does not insist on an apology by England for the Queen's proclamation of belligerent war with England is impossible, and that the time for the settlement of the Alabama claims has not yet arrived. The demand for a sum of money for consequential damages is, in his opinion, beneath the dignity of our Government.

The reply of the Secretary of State to Earl Granville's recent note regarding the Geneva arbitration, has been sent to England. The Cabinet were agreed on all the points presented, and were in session several hours on the subject. "The reply is couched in unbending terms, but is free from no doubt in the English mind of the friendly feelings of our Government, and of its desire to have a full, perfect and final settlement of all claims through the mode specified in the treaty. The United States Government adheres to its position as heretofore indicated, and sees no reason to modify its statement of the case. Having in good faith submitted the questions involved to the arbitrators or assessors, it will, as required by the treaty, abide by the result.

A bill passed the New York Assembly, striking the word "white" from the military code. This will allow negro companies and regiments.

At the village of Belvidere, near Elmira, N. Y., Postmaster Bullock has been arrested on a charge of persistently robbing the mails in his office. In one instance, a bag counts sing $4,000 was rifled.

New York, March 2.—Representatives of the Irish Societies formally decided to celebrate St. Patrick's Day on Monday, March 18th. The Sixty-ninth Irish regiment will accompany the procession. The Police Commissioners have offered an escort to Mayor Hall, and he has consented to review the procession from the City Hall.

Gossips assert that Minister De Long's presence here is neither by invitation of the Japanese Embassy nor cognizant of the State Department, other than what may be inferred from his stay days' leave of absence. They say that the Japanese Government contemplated appointing him to anything akin to their Legation's mission is pronounced a Canard, shrewdly designed to advance De Long's interests. The latter, it is understood, expects to be a competitor for General Nye's Senatorial seat.

CHICAGO, March 4.—A Washington special says the House Committee on Public Lands have agreed upon a bill for the improvement of the Illinois River, and of which the following points are given: The proemption laws are to be abolished, and all public lands are to be settled under the Homestead Act only. The subject of allowing soldiers to take up land and acquire valid title without residing on it the required length of time, was considered, but was decided feasible, being only, in fact, leasing land scrip in this particular class. It is probable the House Committee will recommend the reduction of the time for so real residence in their case.

EUROPE.

PARIS, March 1.—Prince de Joinville has been reinstated in his rank as Admiral in the Army, and Duke D'Aumale to his rank as General.

A committee of the Assembly, the report of a large majority Conservative party, the main object of which will be the liberation of French territory from German occupation, and all constitutional questions shall be shelved until that shall have been accomplished.

It is reported that two regiments of the line, which have shown a Bonapartist tendency, have been removed from the city.

VIENNA, March 2.—Emperor Francis Joseph has issued a decree declining to recognize the Catholic Bishops or opponents of the dogma of Papal Infallibility as a portion of the Roman Catholic Ecclesiastical Hierarchy of Austria.

ROME, March 2.—It is now believed that the Pope meditates departing from this city at an early day. The archives and jewelry in the Vatican are being securely packed, so as to be ready for removal. It is said he will go to the city of Trent in Tyrol.

MINING NEWS.

California.

AMADOR.—The State of Maine mine, says the Jackson Ledger, is located near the Mokelumne river, about four miles southeast of Jackson, and is now being worked under the energetic superintendance of C. E. Hutlings. As far as the mine has been developed, it certainly gives promise of future value, and from the fact that the Company have secured the right to the use of unlimited water power, with an abundance of timber close to the mine, four dollar rock under fair management would pay large dividends on the capital invested.

The Marbles mine is situated about four miles northeast of Volcano, is daily adding further evidence of its great value and permanency. The shaft is now down about four hundred feet, at which depth the ledge has increased to ten feet, and the entire body of the rock will yield over fifteen dollars per ton by mill process.

Rich rock was struck last week in the Phœnix mines, and the ledge gives every indication of being permanent.

BUTTE.—A party of prospectors, says the Chico Review of January 27th, left Chico on Saturday morning, last to make a search for some sort of a spot they had been told of, somewhere on the Bidwell road, about twenty-five miles from Chico. They proceeded—and they struck it. And we may say they have struck it rich.

CALAVERAS.—The Calaveras Chronicle of March 2d says: We hear very favorable reports of quartz mining operation in Angels. A first-class body of ore has been struck on the Stickles mine, upon which new machinery has been recently erected.

EL DORADO.—The claim of Lum, Thamber & Co., Green Valley, says the Placerville Republican of February 25th, was robbed of between $600 and $1,000 on the night of the 9th instant.

Prospecting for quartz ledges, says the El Dorado Republican of the 29th, is quite extensively indulged in hereabouts, and although we have heard of but one or two well defined ledges being struck recently, the spreading belief that there are but there are shy quantity of rich ledges awaiting development in this immediate vicinity. There is hardly a prospector that works up his specimens that does not make good wages, and we venture to say that any man can make from $600 to $1,000 a year prospecting and working up float pay rock; all that is required for the business is a pick, hammer, mortar and pan, with, perhaps, a little quicksilver. Last week we saw $10 worth of beautiful looking gold, the result of one day's prospecting. It was all extracted from two small pieces of rock.

LASSEN.—The Providence Mining Company, says the Lassen Sage Brush of Feb. 24th, sent in $620 lbs. of bullion, obtained from the working of 30 tons of the tailings from an arastra.

LOS ANGELES.—Mining on the San Gabriel river, says the Los Angeles News of February 15th, is progressing favorably. The Roberts-Maxfield Company have completed their first clean-up, with, we believe a satisfactory result.

TRINITY.—From the Trinity Journal, of the 21st, we collate the following: Thomas Baker has averaged $65 per day this season in his claim on Rich's Hill. This claim is in a section in which very little mining has been done during the past three years, owing to the great scarcity of water.

We are informed that a few days ago James Morris discovered a fabulously rich diggings high up on the hill back of A. T. Gorbus' store, on Indian Creek. Our informant, who was on Indian Creek just after the discovery was made, says that the ground prospects from two to four dollars to the pan, in coarse, heavy, peculiar-shaped gold; that Mr. Morris had just got, ready to work and that the claim would pay at least two hundred dollars a day to the hand.

MARIPOSA.—From the Gazette of Feb. 18th we take these items: We learn from one of the owners of the Francis mine that the company intend erecting a sixty stamp mill during the coming season. The prospects of the mine are very encouraging.

A few days since we picked up a piece of gold at Mormon Bar, on Sunday last, which weighed about eight ounces. It was lying in the road, and only a small portion of the chispa was exposed. The finder tried first to pick it up with his finger, then went for it with his knife, and finally pried it out with a pick.

The Mariposa Gazette of February 23d has the following: The Benton mills have been closed down, and Schonfeld & Co. are putting up one of their concentrators at Bogan's mill on Bear Creek. It is being put in this week and the mill will again be in operation in the course of two or three weeks.

NEVADA.—The Grass Valley Republican of February 29th says: The strike made by Reese and Depew at Randolph Flat, a few days past is exciting much interest. They continue to take out from their decomposed quartz vein from 8 to 10 feet in as high as 30 to the ton. The vein of the quartz is about an inch thick, with clay walls on each side.

PLUMAS.—The Plumas National of Feb. 29th says: It is reported that Webster & Co. have purchased pay for a flat opposite the mouth of Squirrel Creek, near Argenta. It is said that they are making as high as $15 a day to the hand: but that assertion, we have reason to suppose, should be taken with many grains of allowance.

The San Diego Bulletin of February 24th has the following: The total amount of collections made by the City of San Diego during the year 1871 through Wells, Fargo & Co.'s Express was $110,000, nearly all of which is from the Julian mines. Frank Lawrence, agent of the Company, estimates that $25,000 has been shipped through other channels, making a total of $141,000.

TULARE.—The Visalia Delta of Feb. 16th has the following: A Spaniard recently made the discovery of a rich silver ledge on the north side of the south fork of King's River. He informed his friends, and about twenty-five members of the Work family went into a company, and took up claims which they are at present engaged in opening. It is believed that the ore will pay $400 to the ton.

Utah.

The new mines of Alabama, 170 miles south of Salt Lake City, are attracting much attention. We were yesterday shown about one hundred pounds of galena yielding ore from the Star district. The ore is from the Hattie mine, discovered in the 4th instant. It is a rich mine and plenty of ore in sight. We have been working it this week and have six tons of ore on the dump that we think will mill $500 per ton, while others estimate it at $1,000. The ledge is four and a half feet wide at a depth of four feet.

AGRICULTURAL NOTES.

Three leagues of land in Monterey county, with a perfect title, were recently sold to one party at the rate of four dollars per acre.

The Petaluma Argus says there are at present over 1,100 tons of wheat along the line of railroad in Sonoma county, awaiting shipment.

Ayer Cannaliman, recently from San Joaquin Valley, says the Vallejo Chronicle, represents that the crop in Mount Moore's Landing to Hill's Ferry, on an average is ten inches high, and is growing so luxuriantly that farmers say cattle can fear from its rankness.

The Farmers' Club, says the Santa Cruz Sentinel, have, through their joint efforts and liberality, nearly completed a machine for draining lands that may be too wet for crops. By this, they, through excessive rains, be rendered too wet to work to season to secure a good crop.

The first grain of this year, says the Visalia Delta of February 24th, is not so promising in some localities as we were led to believe, owing to the late heavy rains, which have caused it to lodge. On Lewis Creek the standing grain is about 2½ feet high, but portions have lodged and will probably not root again, and poor but will all that can be expected from it. The late grain and the present soil, will, from present prospects, yield the best results.

The San Bernardino Guardian says very near all that cattle body of Government land lying in the southern arly direction from the town, bordering upon the Warm Creek settlements, and stretching to the foot of the mountains, have been taken up, and located in farms of 160 acres, by settlers, and their first crop of grain put in this season. This land, it is said, will produce as fine grain and hay as any in the valley, and the settlers will be peculiarly adapted to planting orchards and vineyards. Three years ago there was not a man in one of this land cultivated; they, thriving farms dot this portion of our valley up to the very foot of the mountains. Already the extensive wheatfields of our plains have put on their mantle of green, and in many instances are laying by their ploughs for southey season. Truly, the prospects for an extensive grain yield were never better.

We clip the following interesting item from the Leavenworth Daily Call: The new College recently erected by the Jesuit Fathers at St. Mary's Mission, is one of the finest and most commodious buildings in the West. It is situated close to the Kansas Pacific Railroad and about half a mile from the town of St. Mary's. It is a tinible building, containing commodious class rooms, study halls, dormitories, chapels, &c. Its dimensions are 80 by 65 feet, and contains 27 rooms. The entire cost of the College buildings is about $70,000.

Jas. McGonigis and Mr. Ward, of Leavenworth, have been the contractors.

Very Rev. Dr. Ryan, for many years Vicar-General of the diocese of Killaloe, was consecrated coadjutor Bishop of that diocese on the 4th February.

British Cruelties in India.

A correspondent of the Calcutta Englishman (just received) enters a vigorous protest against the barbarous and inhuman manner in which the war against the Loobahs is conducted by the British in India. He says:

It appears that the old story of the burning of villages and destruction of grain, and consequently of numbers of helpless and innocent beings, is to be repeated. A more cruel system we cannot indeed, worthy of an enlightened and Christian government! Must not the brave men who have to carry it out blush to be the instruments of such a dastardly and inhuman policy? Can one fancy the satisfaction with which the general commanding telegraphs the intelligence of the slaughter of so many, the burning of a large village, and the capture of twenty-five gyals, (pseudo pigs and ponies)? These are the laurels that our soldiers are winning; these are the trophies of this noble war. Thus does «Christian» England "prepare the way of the Lord" among the "heathen," sending the sword and the torch first, and the Bible next; driving the women and children forth from their homes to perish of hunger and cold upon the mountains, while the men escape to cherish in their hearts an undying hatred to the murderers of their wives and little ones. And then, after a time we shall have the «Christian» missionary! Below the white man pleading to the survivors of boldness and love! How beautiful upon the mountains will be the feet of these messengers of peace to the Loobahs! How gladly will the savages welcome their coming as they point by the way of bloodshed to the blackened ruins of their dwellings and the graves of their families! Truly it is sickening, the whole affair! And as to there being no other way of dealing with these Loobah chais, would it not have been a far less expensive and more effective plan to have set to work and have made a few good roads through their country, established markets, protected with a small force, and then left them to their own devices, and to gradually expose to them the benefits of civilization? Would not the presence of an honorable and trustworthy police force have been more powerful and more peaceful pursuits? Can there be a more ridiculous waste of money than the employment of two powerful columns into the Loobhal hills, to fight a handful of savages scattered in small bands over the whole country? Can there be a more ridiculous waste of time than the employment of these powerful columns into the Loobhal hills, to fight a handful of savages scattered in small bands over the whole country? Can there be a more ridiculous waste of time than the employment of these powerful columns in pursuit of, but their "pigs and ponies?"

He concludes by saying that such is the traditional mode of frontier warfare, and that no amendment in it is to be expected from the Government there.

Wholesale Market Report.

MONDAY EVENING, SAN FRANCISCO, TUESDAY, MARCH 7, 1872.

FLOUR—The demand for flour has been fair, with an improved inquiry for export, at a decline of 25 cents per bbl. Sales of 2,000 bbls. at standard brands of Oregon extra at $6@6 25; and total brands as follows: Superfine, at $4 @5 50; extra, $5@5 75; family, $5 75@6 25; XXX, $6@6 25.

WHEAT—The market has exhibited more activity, at a decline of 2 cents per ctl. Sales of 3,000 ctls. at $1 60@1 62½ for No. 1 shipping; $1 55@1 57½ for No. 2 do.; $1 50@1 52½ for No. 3 do.; $1 45@1 47½ for No. 4 do.; $1 40@1 42½ for No. 5 do.; $1 35@1 37½ for No. 6 do.; $1 30@1 32½ for No. 7 do.

BARLEY—The market has been heavier during the week under review, and closed weak. Sales of ordinary coast to choice fair brewing at $1 05@1 12½ per 100 lbs., which is the range of the inside figures.

OATS—The demand has continued moderate for the week during the past week, but with steady rates. Ordinary to choice sold at $1 60@1 75 @ 100 lbs., which is the extreme range.

CORN—Large yellow samples have been fair during the past seven days. Quotable at $1 60@1 70 for ordinary sold at $1 75@1 80 for choice.

STRAW—Quotable at $1 15@1 30 per 100 lbs. for large lots; $1 40@1 50 for small lots.

BRAN—Quotable at $1 15@1 20 per 100 lbs. for white, $1 10 lbs.

CORN MEAL—Sales at $2 10@2 15 @ 100 lbs from store.

BEANS—We note a fair demand, and the following are the jobbing rates: Bayo, $2 75@3; Butter, $2 50@2 75; Lima, $3 75@4; Pea, $2 50@2 75; Pink, $2 50@2 75 @ 100 lbs.

POTATOES—The receipts have been quite free during the past week. At the close we quote the range at 60@70 @ 100 lbs.

ONIONS—Quotable at $1 25@1 50 @ 100 lbs.

BRAN—Quotable at $1 15@1 20 @ 100 lbs.

MIDDLINGS—We quote feed at $21 50 @ ton from the mills.

RYE—Quotable at $1 15@1 20 @ 100 lbs.

SEEDS—We quote Flax at 3c; Canary, 3@3½; Rape, 3½@4; Timothy, 6@6½; Hemp, 3½@4; Mustard, 6@6½; Alfalfa, 12@16½.

HAY—We quote Wheat at $18 @ ton.

BARLEY—We quote Barley at $16 @ ton.

HIDES—We quote California dry at 19@20c; and salted at 9@10c.

TALLOW—Quotable at 5@6c @ lb.

WOOL—The market is quiet, pending the arrival of the Spring clip, which will find ready sales at high prices.

DAIRY PRODUCE.

BUTTER—California, fresh, 30@32½ per roll; 34@37½ per pound; Oregon, 30@32½; Eastern, 30@32½; Goshen, 30@32½; Pickled, 20@25c.

CHEESE—California, 15@16c; Oregon, 15@16c; Eastern, 15@16c.

EGGS—California, at 25@27½ per dozen; Oregon, 25@27½; Eastern, 25@27½; Duck, 30@35c; Goose, 40@45c.

FRESH MEATS.

BEEF—For first quality, 10@11c per lb.; for second, 9@10c.

VEAL—At 12@13c per lb.

MUTTON—At 10@11c per lb.

PORK—At 10@11c per lb.

POULTRY AND GAME.

TURKEYS—Gobblers, at 20@22c; Young Toms, at 18@20c; Hens, at 18@20c per lb.

GEESE—Young, at 12½@15c; Old, at 10@12½c per lb.

DUCKS—Young, at 12½@15c; Old, at 10@12½c per lb.

CHICKENS—Young, at 12½@15c; Old, at 10@12½c per lb.

MARRIED.

AVY—LOWE—In this city, March 3, at the residence of the bride's mother, by the Rev. Father Vaccaro, Eugene Avy of San José to Emma Young of Stanislaus county.

DIED.

OLIVER—In this city, March 1st, Nora A. Anna Maria, eldest daughter of D. J. Oliver.

The funeral will take place from St. Mary's Cathedral, immediately after a Solemn Pontifical Requiem Mass, commencing at the hour of ten, on Monday, this inst. at ten o'clock. Friends of the family are respectfully invited to attend.

KANE—In this city, March 1st, Mary Ann, daughter of Michael and Ellen Kane, aged 10 months and 27 days.

The funeral will take place from the residence of Mary Rock, on a portion of Ireland, aged 42 years.

CROWLEY—In this city, March 2d, Daniel Crowley, infant son of John and Ellen T. Crowley, aged 1 month and 7 days.

LEHRIN—In this city, March 3d, James M. Lehrin, a native of Ireland, aged 42 years.

The friends of the family are respectfully invited to attend the funeral, this day, at 2 o'clock p.m., from his late residence, No. 1 Hugh Robinson, a native of Belfast, Ireland, aged 42 years.

MCGRATH—In this city, March 2, Michael Turner, a native of Tyrconnel, Ireland, aged 41 yrs.

HARRITT—In this city, Feb. 26, Irene Harritt, late of Iowa Hill, Placer county, a native of Ireland, aged 48 years and 1 month.

HOLLAND—In this city, March 2d, Mary Ann, wife of Thomas Kelly, aged 37 years.

GREEN—In Oakland, March 3d, Ella Rose, youngest daughter of Dr. Thomas and Josephine Green, aged 2 years 1 month and 3 days.

PORTER—In Woodland, Feb. 24, at the residence of Mrs. Jas. Hollingsworth, Mrs. Jane Ann Powers, aged 73 years and 10 months.

JENKINS, STEVEN, WARD and WARRENS are active. We give them in comparison with former prices at Tracy & Co.'s. They are determined at whatever sacrifice they make to sell for any reasonable price offered that will pay the bottom value of the article purchased. Their stock is so large that it must be sold to make room for new goods just about to arrive.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Grand Joint Military and Civic

BALL

—OF THE—

IRISH CONFEDERATION

—AND—

KNIGHTS OF THE RED BRANCH

In Honor of St. Patrick's Day,

WILL BE GIVEN AT

PACIFIC HALL,

(California Theatre Building, Bush street,)

Saturday Evening, March 16 1872,

ST. PATRICK'S EVE!

☞ The proceeds will be devoted to the Irish National cause.

The Committee will see that the arrangements will be of such a nature as to ensure the entire satisfaction of all participants.

TICKETS.....FIVE DOLLAR

(Admitting gentleman and ladies.)

NINETEENTH ANNIVERSARY

BALL

—OF THE—

SONS OF THE EMERALD ISLE

BENEVOLENT ASSOCIATION.

THIS OLD AND POPULAR ORGANIZATION is making its usual arrangements for celebrating their 19th Anniversary, which will occur in the Ball at

IRISH-AMERICAN HALL,

On Monday Evening.....March 18th.

We need only remark that this Society have always given their entertainments the character of the most recherche with credit to themselves and satisfaction to their guests.

In addition to the regular Band and Programme of Dances this year, an Irish Harp is engaged, and the dancing hall will be enlightened and decorated in a manner to please the most fastidious. Irish Reel and Jig to their favorite music will be danced.

A efficient Committee of Arrangements will be appointed to attend to their respective duties.

TICKETS.....ONE DOLLAR

(Admitting gentlemen and ladies.)

A. O. H.

SECOND GRAND

ANNUAL BALL

OF DIVISION NO. 4.

ANCIENT ORDER HIBERNIANS

—WILL BE HELD—

AT PACIFIC HALL,

California Theatre Building, Bush street,

MONDAY EVENING.....MARCH 18, 1872,

ST. PATRICK'S EVE.

THESE PIANOS ARE UNSURPASSED for their Elastic Touch, Singing quality of Tone, Even Scale, Great Power, and in everything that renders a PIANO FIRST CLASS.

Description and Price

(The Pianos will be shipped to any part of the State at prices given.)

No. 1—7 Octaves. Large front, rosewood case, carved legs and lyre.....$350

No. 2—7 Octaves. Large front, rosewood case, carved legs and lyre, serpentine base.....$400

No. 3—7 Octaves. Large front, rosewood case, carved legs and lyre, serpentine base, with carved panels.....$450

No. 4—7 Octaves. Large front, rosewood case, carved legs and lyre, serpentine base, with carved panels and fluted columns.....$500

No. 5—7 Octaves. Large front, rosewood case, carved legs and lyre, serpentine base, with carved panels and fluted columns.....$550

No. 6—7 Octaves. Large front, rosewood case, carved legs and lyre, serpentine base, with carved panels and fluted columns.....$600

UPRIGHT PIANOS.

Same Description as Square Pianos.

Very Best, in rosewood case.....$500

PARLOR ORGANS AND MELODEONS.

Below will be found a few of many hundreds of testimonials received:

TESTIMONIALS.

From Mrs. Leonard W. T. Shaw:

MESSRS. LYON & BARRY—Gentlemen: I am pleased to say that the Piano purchased of you a few months ago has given entire satisfaction. It is a fine instrument in every respect, and I am happy to recommend it to my friends. Its tone is sweet and powerful, delicacy of touch and quality of tone are unsurpassed, and I am sure that it will prove durable, as it has been in regular use for several months, and will stand perfectly in tune. I shall most certainly recommend your Pianos to my friends, as I am satisfied they are the best instruments for the money in the market.

Yours truly, MRS. LEONARD W. T. SHAW.

From Rev. J. Shaw:

MESSRS. LYON & BARRY—Gentlemen: I am pleased to say that the Piano purchased of you a few months ago has given entire satisfaction. It is a fine instrument in every respect, and I am happy to recommend it to my friends. Its tone is sweet and powerful, delicacy of touch and quality of tone are unsurpassed, and I am sure that it will prove durable, as it has been in regular use for several months, and will stand perfectly in tune. I shall most certainly recommend your Pianos to my friends, as I am satisfied they are the best instruments for the money in the market.

Yours truly, REV. J. SHAW.

From Rev. J. Shaw & Sister, Rockford, Ill.:

MESSRS. LYON & BARRY—Gentlemen: I am pleased to say that the Piano purchased of you a few months ago has given entire satisfaction. It is a fine instrument in every respect, and I am happy to recommend it to my friends. Its tone is sweet and powerful, delicacy of touch and quality of tone are unsurpassed, and I am sure that it will prove durable, as it has been in regular use for several months, and will stand perfectly in tune. I shall most certainly recommend your Pianos to my friends, as I am satisfied they are the best instruments for the money in the market.

Yours truly, REV. J. SHAW & SISTER.

From Mrs. James Sadlier, The Wood Engraver:

MRS. JAMES SADLIER begs to say that the Piano purchased from Messrs. Lyon & Barry, of Montgomery street, has given entire satisfaction. It is a fine instrument in every respect, and I am happy to recommend it to my friends. Its tone is sweet and powerful, delicacy of touch and quality of tone are unsurpassed, and I am sure that it will prove durable, as it has been in regular use for several months, and will stand perfectly in tune. I shall most certainly recommend your Pianos to my friends, as I am satisfied they are the best instruments for the money in the market.

Yours truly, MRS. JAMES SADLIER.

From the Sisters of Charity, Benicia:

MESSRS. LYON & BARRY—Gentlemen: I am pleased to say that the Piano purchased of you a few months ago has given entire satisfaction. It is a fine instrument in every respect, and I am happy to recommend it to my friends. Its tone is sweet and powerful, delicacy of touch and quality of tone are unsurpassed, and I am sure that it will prove durable, as it has been in regular use for several months, and will stand perfectly in tune. I shall most certainly recommend your Pianos to my friends, as I am satisfied they are the best instruments for the money in the market.

Yours truly, SISTERS OF CHARITY.

From Mrs. Lucia A. Cummings, Teacher of Music:

MESSRS. LYON & BARRY—Gentlemen: I am pleased to say that the Piano purchased of you a few months ago has given entire satisfaction. It is a fine instrument in every respect, and I am happy to recommend it to my friends. Its tone is sweet and powerful, delicacy of touch and quality of tone are unsurpassed, and I am sure that it will prove durable, as it has been in regular use for several months, and will stand perfectly in tune. I shall most certainly recommend your Pianos to my friends, as I am satisfied they are the best instruments for the money in the market.

Yours truly, MRS. LUCIA A. CUMMINGS.

From Mrs. Frances and Pupils of Music:

MESSRS. LYON & BARRY—Gentlemen: I am pleased to say that the Piano purchased of you a few months ago has given entire satisfaction. It is a fine instrument in every respect, and I am happy to recommend it to my friends. Its tone is sweet and powerful, delicacy of touch and quality of tone are unsurpassed, and I am sure that it will prove durable, as it has been in regular use for several months, and will stand perfectly in tune. I shall most certainly recommend your Pianos to my friends, as I am satisfied they are the best instruments for the money in the market.

Yours truly, MRS. FRANCES AND PUPILS OF MUSIC.

From the Sisters of Charity, Benicia:

MESSRS. LYON & BARRY—Gentlemen: I am pleased to say that the Piano purchased of you a few months ago has given entire satisfaction. It is a fine instrument in every respect, and I am happy to recommend it to my friends. Its tone is sweet and powerful, delicacy of touch and quality of tone are unsurpassed, and I am sure that it will prove durable, as it has been in regular use for several months, and will stand perfectly in tune. I shall most certainly recommend your Pianos to my friends, as I am satisfied they are the best instruments for the money in the market.

Yours truly, SISTERS OF CHARITY.

From Rev. J. Shaw & Sister, Rockford, Ill.:

MESSRS. LYON & BARRY—Gentlemen: I am pleased to say that the Piano purchased of you a few months ago has given entire satisfaction. It is a fine instrument in every respect, and I am happy to recommend it to my friends. Its tone is sweet and powerful, delicacy of touch and quality of tone are unsurpassed, and I am sure that it will prove durable, as it has been in regular use for several months, and will stand perfectly in tune. I shall most certainly recommend your Pianos to my friends, as I am satisfied they are the best instruments for the money in the market.

Yours truly, REV. J. SHAW & SISTER.

From Mrs. James Sadlier, The Wood Engraver:

MRS. JAMES SADLIER begs to say that the Piano purchased from Messrs. Lyon & Barry, of Montgomery street, has given entire satisfaction. It is a fine instrument in every respect, and I am happy to recommend it to my friends. Its tone is sweet and powerful, delicacy of touch and quality of tone are unsurpassed, and I am sure that it will prove durable, as it has been in regular use for several months, and will stand perfectly in tune. I shall most certainly recommend your Pianos to my friends, as I am satisfied they are the best instruments for the money in the market.

Yours truly, MRS. JAMES SADLIER

sad silver badge of the society and a sprig of shamrock.

The officers of this society are John Collins, President; M. C. Hassett, Vice-President; John Higgins, Treasurer; Thos. McInerney, Recording Secretary; M. Farrell, Financial Secretary; John H. Emery, Corresponding Secretary.

One of the banners carried a beautiful silver shield, with the national emblems of Ireland and America upon it. It is a copy of a shield presented to the renowned 69th New York Regiment, November 4, 1865, by William Lyrell, Esq., of the 97th New York Volunteers. It was brought out here by a member of the 69th, who carried it yesterday.

THE FOURTH DIVISION

Consisted of the Laborers' Protective and Benevolent Association, and made a most creditable appearance. They were marshalled by Dennis Daly, aided by Dennis Curley and Jas. O'Connor. The officers of the Sout-ty are P. Sullivan, President; M. Kilkelen; Vice-President; James Delmartin, Recording Secretary; M. O'Donnell, Treasurer; N. Caishan, Corresponding Secretary. Each of the foregoing division-ns were preceded by a brass band and carried handsome banners, painted with appropriate devices.

THE FIFTH DIVISION

Marshaled by J. T. Brady, who was aided by Mr. Daniel Sheerin and James McMenomy, consisted of San Francisco Divisions Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5 and 8 of the American Order of Hibernians; and Division No. 1 of Oakland, and No. 1 of San José, all in their rich green regalia. Each Division of the Order was preceded by a band, and each carried elegant silken banners. The Grand Officers of the Order, accompanied by the Legion of St. Patrick, led the division. The State officers are: P. Brady, State Secretary; Patrick Barnes, C. D. General officers—James Cahill, 1; P. Patrick Turney, G. V. 1; Thomas McConnelly, G. S.; Archibald Small, A. G. S.; John Gosney, G. T.

The following are the names of the officers of the different divisions of the Order:

DIVISION No. 1.—James Barrett, President; Thomas O'Brien, Recording Secretary; Michael O'Brien, Financial Secretary; Daniel Harney, Treasurer; Aids—Bernard Sheehan, John O'Kane, Thomas Mulrehy.

DIVISION No. 2.—P. M. Wallen, President; W. J. Brady, Vice-President; Frank Minch, Recording Secretary; Michael Wade, Financial Secretary; Michael Norton, Treasurer. Aids—Patrick Sullivan, Florence Crowley, James Kelly and Martin Connolly.

DIVISION No. 3.—James O'Brien, President; Charles Parrell, Vice-President; Hennessy Gallagher, Recording Secretary; Daniel Ryan, Financial Secretary; John Murray, Treasurer. Aid—John C. Brady.

DIVISION No. 4.—Patrick Quinn, President; Patrick Carberry, Vice-President; T. D. Sullivan, Recording Secretary; Richard Tobin, Financial Secretary; Denis A. Healey, Treasurer. Aids—Wm. Deany, P. McEvoy and C. Sullivan.

DIVISION No. 5.—P. R. Hanna, President; M. F. Woe, Vice-President; John McGrath, Recording Secretary; Peter J. Carr, Financial Secretary; Patrick McGinn, Treasurer. Aids—Alex. Meaher and Edward Sweeney.

DIVISION No. 8.—M. C. Hassett, President; John A. Lennon, Vice-President; J. J. Donovan, Recording Secretary; Edward Cunningham, Financial Secretary; Thomas Magnire, Commanding Division; Tim Shy Nolan, President; Patrick Smith, Vice-President; J. Cahill, Recording Secretary; Thomas Trainor, Financial Secretary; Edward Fitzgerald, Treasurer. Aids—Denis Holland and John Quinn.

DIVISION No. 1.—San José. Hugh Kelly, Commanding Division. Nicholas Furlong, Pr'sid ni.

The Assistant order was one of the finest features of the procession. They turned out full twelve hundred strong, and marched with military precision.

THE SIXTH DIVISION,

Marshaled by Capt. M. W. Stackpole, who had Tr. Thurgard Joseph O'Connor as aids, consisted of Divisions No. 1 and 2 of the Knights of the Red Branch, and Divisions No. 1 and 2 of the Irish Confederation, Jos. C. Talbot and Michael Moore, respectively, Presidents, escorted by the Hibernia Militia, Capt. K. Kenny. The Confederation is a new society of Irish Nationalists, and replaces the Emmet Guard. The Knights of the Red Branch are said to be the old at Order of Knighthood in existence. The first division, which was headed in fact of the procession, was a triumphal car, drawn by four large horses, and elegantly decorated with large bunting streamers and flowers. The upper portion of the car represented an Irish Round Tower. The tower was about twelve feet high, painted in stone, and covered with moss and ivy. Its base rested on a platform, twelve feet long by eight wide, and it was drawn by four large, powerful horses. In front of the tower sat a beautiful young lady—Miss Margaret Jane—dressed in white, carrying a white wand with a golden ring attached, representing the Golden Age of Ireland, and made familiar by Moore in his song

"Rich and rare were the gems she wore,
And a bright gold ring she had on her wand
She bore."

Four young ladies—Misses Kitty Ryan, Mary Brenn Barton, Mary Ring and Katy Ingen—attired in white, and wearing green sashes, sat on the platform. They carried different colored banners, representing the provinces of Ulster, Munster, Leinster and Connaught. A Gallowglass, typical of Ireland's warrior days, in the person of William Oetzer, rode in front of the tower, while four aides, Henry Foster, John Hanna, Anthony Murphy and Terence Fagan marched before and acted as an escort. They were arrayed in the costumes of the ancient chiefs. John A. Donovan, James Guiffoy and John W. Murphy aimed on the platform. The first named represented a Knight of the Red Branch in armor. This order has been lately been established in this city dates as far back as 1117 A. D. The second Assistant Gualiop, personated an Irish pikeman. His father fought against the British at Vinegar Hill. John W. Murphy was a militiaman Highman, differed in a picturesque costume and carrying a rifle which figured to many a hard fought battle in '98. The Gallaghmen were hearty in fanicy of the Milesians, and their organization created a sensation with their arrival in Ireland, A. M., 3009. They were required to be very large, muscular, and robust men of undisputed courage and bravery. They were helmets and coats of mail, and bore battle-axes, pikes and swords. The extraordinary stature and martial bearing, fish costume and massive weapons of the Gallioglasses who were called Nish (Ngeil), as a body guard to the Court of Elizabeth, astonished and excited the envy of the Londoners. The Knight represents in his person two orders of Knighthood instituted in Ireland, many centuries anterior to any such being known or instituted in Europe. Firstly, the "Niadhi Nak" (Anglice, Knights of the Maiden Shield). The insignia of the order being a heavy massive chain of dentelled beatin and gemellion will Than those in Ireland, and England still. The finest depths, the closest weld, Where sinkers dark and sinkers Bend a knight's helmet and his shield The sign of fame and chivalry.

Chiefs and heros 'mong the dead,
Would I could have with you sealed bed;
I'd gain a spot by the bed,
In the earth whereon it sepulchred;
I'd sweetly sash heavenly sound,
And undisturbed repose in that ground
That ne'er should be from it removed,
Where sword and spear are laid in rest!
For you were to the Irish race ennobled,
And your names shall be ever blessed.

Upon the forehead of each Knight of the Red Branch was worn a golden circlet, and though he were not a king fight
Yet was he entitled to the name.
Who bravely in battle array did fight,
Fearless chiefs—a kind and true,
Who for their country fought and bled,
Through fears and fears perilous I see
Shades of ancient heroes pressing
And here's a good health to you.

No need that I should this day trace
The Irishmen's deeds, for I can't recall
In this great and busy noble race
Their deeds in the days of old.
Time and the deeps sweep of thought
Have swept the memory of them
Into the dim and misty past
Of Ireland's Diadem.

Stooped in tears, our country's wrongs
To market, and to fairs,
The stranger master in the land—
Kilmainham—Irishmen's lot,
Justice trampled, the dam down,
Black, tyranny overflows;
Hate spreads for fair and wide,
Famine and fever, the people's lot,
And fear the trembling cry of joy!
I feel crowned to the days of Brian!

No need that I should this day trace
The Irishmen's deeds, for I can't recall
In this great and busy noble race
Their deeds in the days of old.
Time and the deeps sweep of thought
Have swept the memory of them
Into the dim and misty past
Of Ireland's Diadem.

For these brave's but one remedy,
One healing balm can be found,
While the unseen history has been Written in the hearts of freedom
Of their own who made oppression
Bow down and bend to their will,
Shadow that the fighting of the troops
Of Ireland's Brigade
Who bonds it out—will never be free.

That Ireland holds this faith full well,
And that she'll ever hold it dear,
'Twas Wolf Tone's hope, Fitzgerald's pride,
And Emmet's fondest prayer.
And long as there's a heart in Ireland
Beaow their sons each Patrick's day,
To love the land, the race, the Irish
And place it among the first of earth—
Long as such degree be
That manner's home the land's hate,
In freedom's name and freedom's cause
Will Irish hearts beat high.

It's a day on which the Irish
Forget their bad blood, their feuds,
Ancient bickerings of race and creed,
Ireland, their mother land, then unite
In protecting her, as a whole
Beneath the shadows of the Star and Stripes, whose Folds are the symbol of liberty, every where Speaks of the beautiful blessings of Republican government—the land for the world for mankind!
The land that here be, and our posterity after us
Shall ever love be, and our posterity after us
Shall ever love.

Long the love for the land of our birth interfere
Not with the discharge of our duties for the land of our Adoption! Let the record displayed by Irishmen and Irish-Americans in the late war be a guarantee
That the duties required of citizens will be faithfully
Met by the fidelity of the adopted citizen.
Ireland, the land of our fathers, is struggling
Bravely, almost up to assuming the independence of Nationality, and the Irish-American who does not Feel a thrill of pride and joy at the prospect of her
Regained position, is unworthy the proud privileges
Of an American citizen.

Ladies and gentlemen, there are many memories
Both sacred and sad connected with the anniversary
Which brings us together to-day. It is the day of Ireland's patron saint, and it is the day of Ireland's Deliverance. It is meet her by every means in Our power—in assuming the position of a free and independent citizen—to assert and maintain—to defend—
Should occasion, to accept a sacred duty devolving on Every Irishman in this land—the right of Ireland
To be as a Nation. It is a duty incumbent on us as American citizens, and the means of rendering the area of Republicanism.

Let us then perform this duty, then those banners
Of green and gold displayed by Irish-American society
As a mockery and a defiance—the gilded trappings of
The slave, in some sense the badges of degraded manliness.
There is much in the present condition of our native
Land to inspire us with hope for the future.
The popular voice there is throbbing with a new and Ideal life.

A desire for a national autonomy is becoming suddenly
Intense. The hatred of England's policy,
Divide and Conquer, are rapidly melting away before
The light of reason and truth, and the Irish Catholic,
Protestant and Dissenter, Catholic, priest and minister, working shoulder to Shoulder in the great struggle for national life, for Mere the better for the cause of the people, so much
The better for the cause of religion.

We Irishmen, in this land, are in a position—probably Unprecedented in the history of nations—to render Ireland as home for national life, comparatively easy. If We fail in proving by the part we take to our political Faith, as well as false to one of the holiest feelings of
The ear represented in Irish Nationality.

Now let us have what seats we dead.
Where we've lingered with mirth and glee,
Where we've lingered with mirth and glee,
This is my own—my native land!"

Ladies and gentlemen, it is now my pleasure of introducing to you the Poet of the Day, Col. F. J. Ward.

The Colonel advanced, bowed gracefully, and when the applause that greeted his handsome presence subsided, twisted, with much elocutionary effort, the following

POEM.

Not mine the power to wake the lyre,
Not mine the power to fan the fire,
That gave to fifty hearts of old
The gift of song, a deathless soul.
But mine the look upon the day
To-day's a name to live for aye,
In history, glean and mingle rhyme
With a of the olden time.
Of days departed, glories dead,
Of those who fought and bled and bled
Upon the field that fairly bound to Heaven,
Through fifty hundred years of servitude
Ireland, tried land, from age to age!
Thy knees thy life-blood's power,
Long live thy children, long live thy race,
For both known thee well before,
Thy sons have ever been true and brave,
That gave to thee their heart's blood,
Their every thought of our race
Is made immortal in the song place.
And sons the garden of the sun
Are not our country's fair spread
For countless years thy counsels and
Thy sacred fires have been kindled
Heathen, race and wanting glow
Have lured the flowers of thy race
Intent lands whereby their lustre
Thy glorious fame has shed its light
In thy green fields the shamrock's
And wild flowers of the Irish sod,
In humble garb, with fire in hand,
Thy children's children still abide,
Who fought their foes and bled and died,
Fearless chiefs—a kind and true,
Who for their country fought and bled,
Through fears and fears perilous I see
Shades of ancient heroes pressing
And here's a good health to you.

WEEKLY CALENDAR.
FOR THE WEEK NOW ENDING MARCH 30.
March—
24—Sunday—Palm Sunday.
25—Monday—Of the Feria.
26—Tuesday—Of the Feria.
27—Wednesday—Of the Feria.
28—Thursday—Holy Thursday.
29—Friday—Good Friday.
30—Saturday—Holy Saturday.

THE MONITOR:
THE ONLY
Irish and Catholic Journal in California.
SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.
SATURDAY.....MARCH 23, 1872.

ST. PATRICK'S DAY CELEBRATION.

The Saint Patrick's Day Celebration for 1872 was in every respect creditable to the Irish of San Francisco. It had all the marks of the national festival of an orderly and religious-minded people. When other peoples were celebrating their peculiar anniversaries give themselves up exclusively to pleasure, and think of nothing but merry-making, the Irish find return thanks to Almighty God and then enjoy themselves in a sober and rational manner. This shows how free they are from the taint of irreligion which is so perceptible among prouder and more prosperous nationalities. May they always continue to be thus distinguished! It will be the earnest prayer of every right-one made.

The churches were thronged not only on Sunday but on Monday also by congregations who assisted at the Divine Mysteries with deep-felt devotion and listened to the explanation of their pastors with respectful attention. The Faith which Patrick planted has certainly not grown weak in the hearts of his people. It is as fresh, as pure and as active to-day as it was when the great apostle closed his eyes to the things of this world more than thirteen centuries ago in Downpatrick. Fire and sword, famine and persecution have been ruthlessly and persistently availed of to effect its destruction and all, thank God! in vain. Ireland is still intensely and boundingly Catholic. Even those who condemn her faith have been compelled to pay a tribute of admiration to her incomparable fidelity.

It is not alone on the soil sanctified by the presence of Patrick that this wonderful tenacity of religion is exemplified by Irishmen. They carry it with them wherever they go and make it the object character-istic of their piety. This is notably the case in America. Though not as a body wealthy, the Irish settlers in this country and their descendants have studded the land with splendid churches, monasteries, convents, schools, colleges, hospitals, asylums, and benevolent institutions that are a credit to millions of dollars. We say advisedly—and we challenge any other people to controvert us—that this should be a source of pride to all true Irishmen.

But, to return to the celebration of St. Patrick's Day in San Francisco. The civic and military display in the grand procession we can really very little. It could not have been equalled, although we doubt it, but rarely it could not have been excelled by any similar demonstration ever witnessed in this city. The splendid military corps also turned out in all their available strength. The uniforms and accoutrements were in splendid condition and the marching was excellent. The civic societies also made a magnificent appearance, with their splendid banners and tasteful regalia, and they kept line and step with a precision worthy of trained soldiers. The Grand Marshal, Colonel M. C. Smith, and his Aids, performed their arduous duties most satisfactorily, so that the procession was regular and unbroken from the time it started at 10 o'clock at various bodies composing it were dismissed.

The literary exercises in the California Theatre were remarkably good. We need not say one word in praise of the truly magnificent oration, delivered by Brother Justin, the respected President of St. Mary's College. Our readers will find it reported in full from another column to-day's columns. We sincerely wish every Irishman in America had a copy, and made a serious study of it. There is contained in it a telling vindication of the attitude of religion towards nationality, which might possibly have a salutary effect upon the degenerate Irishmen who maintain that the Church and its ministers are opposed to the freedom of their country. Colonel P. F. Walsh's poem, although it may not claim rank with the productions of Longfellow or Tennyson, was, nevertheless, good in spirit and composition. Its delivery was excellent. "God Save Ireland" has now reached the dignity of a national hymn, and its rendition by two thousand manly voices was a most appropriate conclusion to the proceedings. The banquet of the St. Patrick's Society and of the Irish Confederation, as well as the several balls and re-unions of the night, took place in the evening, were all highly successful, and passed off without the slightest incident of a nature to mar the pleasure of the occasion.

It is only right to say a few good words in recognition of the good order and sobriety which marked the whole of the day's proceedings. It was gratifying in the very highest degree. No disturbance of any kind occurred, and not an intoxicated man was to be seen, either in the procession or on the streets. We should not trouble ourselves to mention this circumstance were it not a favorite theory with those hostile to our nationality that every Irish demonstration must, of necessity, be a scene of drunkenness and disorder. We can safely assert that no race or people represented in the American Continent could go through a procession like that of Monday last and give critics less cause for complaint than our fellow-countrymen did. We are not at all astonished at the regularity and decorum which prevailed, they are only what we confidently expected would be: but we recommend them respectfully to the scribes who are so fond of writing about "Irish turbulence" to look at the celebration of St. Patrick's Day, 1872, was one to which all concerned may look back with feelings of satisfaction. We trust that all those to come off in the future will be similarly praiseworthy.

HOLY WEEK.

The Catholics of San Francisco are evidently firm in the Faith. They are preparing to celebrate the Holy Festival of Easter if the spirit and with the practices proper to children in the fold of Peter. Religious services are devoutly attended, and from morning till night the churches are never without an assembly of fervent worshippers and contrite penitents. There is probably no city in the world, not in an exclu-ively Catholic country, where all the ministrations of the Church, and all the agencies of salvation are put more liberally before the people than they are here in San Francisco. This one fact alone proves the zeal for the cause of God, and the love for the holy Faith of Jesus Christ, which animates the ecclesiastical authorities. The number of communicants, it is thought, will exceed that of any former year. This edifying way of concluding the Holy Season of Lent cannot but call down the blessing of Providence on the land and its people. We republish below an account of the incidents in the history of the Redeemer and of the Church, which are commemorated on each day:

NEXT Sunday, Palm Sunday, begins Holy Week, sometimes called the Great Week, or the Painful Week, or the week of austerities. All the exercises of Lent, says the Rev. Alban Butler, must now be continued with redoubled fervor, to which we must sedulously exercise ourselves by the most devout meditation on the Cross and Passion of our Divine Redeemer. This must be the great and only object of our thoughts and devout entertainments at this time. The Church sanctifies all whom she causes to bear the cross, and rejoices in those days of mourning for the loss of her Divine Spouse. At present the office and Mass of the Resurrection, which were solemnly said at midnight, are anticipated and said a little before noon. Though during this part of the office the devout Christian's attention is taken up on the Cross, Mass being to be will return to consider the glory of his sepulchre the rest of the day. For this long office was formerly begun at three o'clock in the afternoon, by blessing the fire and then the Paschal Candle. After this the ancient prophecies were read, the font blessed, and baptism solemnly administered. After Matins, at midnight, the Mass of the Resurrection was celebrated; and the faithful continued watching in the church from three o'clock in the afternoon till morning on Easter-day.

THE CEREMONIES OF HOLY WEEK.

We subjoin the order of the ceremonies of Holy Week for St. Mary's Cathedral. In other churches the ceremonies will be conducted in the same manner as they were last year:

Sunday next, the 24th, the Palms will be blessed by the Most Rev. Archbishop and delivered at High Mass.

The office of Tenebræ will take place at half past three o'clock on Wednesday, Thursday and Friday.

Solemn Pontifical Mass, until the blessing of the Holy Oil, will commence on Thursday at ten o'clock, and the mandatum or Washing of Feet, in imitation of our Lord washing the feet of the Apostles, will take place at three o'clock P. M.

On Good Friday the offices will begin at nine o'clock, and on Holy Saturday at eight o'clock.

The Massacre of the Dominicans at Arcueil

Fourteen prisoners were tried last week at Versailles for the murder of the Dominican Friars at Arcueil. A host of witnesses were called.

The principal prisoner, Serizier, accused of having given the order to fire upon the monks, is by trade a tanner. He is described as having become a colonel. It is alleged in the indictment, and very distinctly proved by evidence, that Serizier told one of his lieutenants to shoot all the priests, gendarmes, and sergeants-de-ville in the La Sante prison, if the Versailles troops should approach. Serizier, in his examination, said that from May 19 he was ordered by General Wrobleski to arrest the Arcueil Dominicans. He transmitted the order to Leo Meillet, and he, in his turn, to Lolive. He did not know of the execution of the Dominicans till after it had taken place. He saw their corpses on May 25, and inquired what had happened. Lolive, the prisoner, Bois, Assi Boichi, a tanner, who once worked in the same establishment as Serizier, was appointed by the latter of the Sante prison, to which the Dominicans were brought from the prison of Lobbes, after December 10 was a secretary of Leo Meillet. He was a friend of Jules Valle, Vermorel, Pindy, Urbain, and many other Communists, and a contributor to the Communist journal, Le Cri Du Peuple. He admitted having acted as a judge of instruction when the Dominicans were executed. Another, Jolly, an artillery man named Quesnot, a railway driver and a Communal captain, was made keeper of the Arcueil quarry by Leo Meillet. In his examination he alleged that he was ordered by Leo Meillet and General Wrobleski to burn the monastery, but he would not do it. He denied all participation in the executions. He was then severely interrogated was a Bonapartist and particularly ugly tooth out of a dead man's jaw. Another, Joe, who was an aide-de-camp of Quesnot, and who, notwithstanding his deformity, used to gallop about in the time of the Commune upon a big charger. He took a leading part in the combat of Moulin Saquet and other scenes of the Communist army. Anna (a fetainer's clerk), secretary of Serizier, admitted having served in the Communist army. He pleaded that he was only garrisoned at Arcueil to enable him to draw the pay, but that he never wore a uniform in his life, and took no part in military matters. He was confined by Serizier. One of the prisoners, named Gamelette, is seventy-five years old, and has been a soldier for fifty years notwithstanding, he was a drummajor under the Commune. He denied any participation in the execution of the Dominicans, and, indeed, no evidence against him, save a statement that he happened to go from curiosity to see his battalion, which was there, and then to go from his age belonged to the "sedentary" National Guard, and was exempted from active duty.

Four of the witnesses were actually among the hostages who escaped the slaughter, and some of their adventures would be almost too romantic to be credible for a sensation novel. One, who came before the Court in his Dominican's habit, would say nothing about the judicial priest. Father Sevaisin, which was considered to be a most able speaker, and possessing great eloquence, fervor of spirit and great patience in its author.

THE EXECUTION OF THE PRISONERS.

After the exercises at the church the procession reformed and marched down it to Fourth, to 2, to Seventh, to H, to Ninth, to Howard, to Eighth, to Mission, thus doubling in front of the ## CONVENT SCHOOL BUILDING.

Here the pupils, with green scarfs and appropriate badges, were drawn up to receive them. According to custom, the oldest of the class of younger pupils, was the one in advance was Carrie Graves—presented the Grand Marshal with an elegant bouquet. The pupils then sang a lovely song in honor of "St. Patrick," to an appropriate air. The band responded with "Wearing of the Green," and the children and other persons in procession took up the line of march to 3, to Folsom, to Fifth, to Shipley, to Sixth, to J, to K, and up K to the Metropolitan Theater, where the literary exercises were held. The procession reached the theatre, and this is what transpired there:

AT THE THEATRE.

The procession arrived at the theatre at about a quarter after two o'clock. There was a great crowd composed of both sexes, awaiting the arrival of the procession, and as soon as the doors were open there was a rush for the seats. The Dratter and the Pest with the dollar in the hand, as the fleet-footed ran to take their places upon the platform, as follows: President, J. W. Armstrong; Vice Presidents, John Ryan, Richard Breen, J. D. Dray, Captain Lonergan, Captain Coffey, Eddy Jennings, Richard Mc. M. T. O'Brien, B. Lacy, Denis Flynn, P. F. Mahon and M. Coffey. Secretaries—P. J. Egan and R. J. Dooling. The members of the Ancient Order Hibernians, the firemen and the military occupied the centre of the auditorium, citizens filling the balance of the seats. The private boxes were filled with the fair ladies, many of the fair sex were present in the dress circle, every part of the gallery was occupied, and before the speakers was covered with the American flag, and as the invited guests appeared upon the platform, the hall of the theatre was filled with the sound of the music, with the emblematic harp was laid upon the stage, the orchestra and the military were comfortably seated, and the ball was quiet, the Union Band, which was stationed in front of the stage, played "St. Patrick's Day in the Morning," which was received with great enthusiasm. The city band upon the left responded with the "Wearing of the Green," which was warmly applauded. The President then called the assemblage to order and reminded his hearers that for more than fifteen hundred years it has been the custom of the Irish people to honor the memory of their Patron Saint. The custom had been religiously observed and would continue to be honored by Irishmen and the children of Irishmen for all time to come. It was highly proper that the Irishmen of to-day should continue the observance of this day on the anniversary of the departure of St. Patrick from the scene of his earthly labors to receive his eternal reward for his faithful devotion to the welfare of his countrymen. He then introduced Mr. W. H. Rhodes, the Poet of the Day, who read, by request, the finest of his poetical productions.

[The poem mentioned is the one written by Mr. Rhodes for St. Patrick's Day, 1869, in this city, and published in The Monitor at the time, otherwise we would be happy to reproduce it.]

The reading of the poem elicited the warmest applause, and at the close of its delivery the poet was vociferously cheered. The City Band played "Wearing of the Green" in response.

The President then introduced Mr. Francis. Dillon Eagan, the Orator of the Day, who was greeted with much warmth. He began by calling to the minds of his hearers the truth, that love of country was one of the strongest instincts of man, and was particularly intense in the hearts of the Sons of Erin. This trait of character is manifested alike among the more civilized and the barbarian. The savage and the most highly cultivated among men have the underlying affection for home. He recalled to the memories of his hearers the hallowed associations that cluster around the name of St. Patrick and humorously alluded to the saying of a noted Irishman, who once remarked that one Patrick was as good a man as another Fourth of July." It was a fact that Ireland had no birthday to celebrate, but before the feasts were done by the Illustrious men who rendered the Fourth of July famous, the memory of St. Patrick and his deeds were honored and celebrated. England has boasted that the sun never sets upon her empire, but the sun never sets upon the sacred land upon which the tap of British drums were never heard. Australia may be a land where the birth-place of Ireland's patriot sons, Erin has glory enough in the fact that the sun never sets upon her, upon her soil. Ireland was the scene of his apostolic labors, and darkness, and brought her into the full light of Christianity. So long as the Irish people guard the arm bequeathed to them by the saint dead, so long as they guard the faith which he preached, so long as they guard the brightest jewels that deck the crown of Christianity. The speaker proceeded in the delivery of the oration, and for an hour kept the audience at the highest pitch of enthusiasm by the delivery of the address the speaker was cheered, and the audience dispersed.

INCIDENTS.

The parade was well managed by the Marshal and his aids, and was handsomely executed along the route.

In many parts of the town the American and Irish flags were flying. Several business places, conspicuously on Market street (Uhlfelder and Ludegan's, on J street, above Sixth, were tastefully dressed with flags and mottoes.

The accident of serious moment occurred. The nearest approach to it was the falling of a gentleman while mounting a skittish horse on K street, near Fifth street, in the morning.

There were the usual number of lost children, numbering about in several cases. The police were on hand with a number of well-behaved persons strongs the streets as the procession moved along.

No signs of disorder or unusual indulgence were manifested at any time. In all respects the celebration was a credit to its managers, to those participating, and to the city.

THE FESTIVAL AND BALL.

An appropriate winding up of the festivities of St. Patrick's Day was the evening in the Mercantile Library Hall of the Rose Chapters. At eight o'clock, those on terpsichorean and other pleasures bent, began to pile into the hall, and the long line of visitors came lingering along until after ten o'clock.

Unfortunately, large as the Pavilion is, the arrangements were not sufficiently extensive to accommodate all who were rather limited. One-half of the main upper hall was the gallery was also filled to overflowing, the managers additional not expecting so large an attendance—and the Skating Rink, which is also a most superb dancing hall. This was altogether too small, for at ten o'clock at least 2,000 persons were present and still more pouring in. The unappropriated half of the main hall was then illuminated, and soon filled with eager dancers, all enjoying themselves, though the crowd was so great as to render it difficult to such exercises.

Old and young alike gathered to enjoy the festivities of the festive. Hilarious crowds flocked in the pond for luck, and swooped down upon the tables, to the great delight of their proprietors. Elegantly dressed maids and spruce matrons, dapper youths in gorgeous ties and staid men in sober suits prevailed; all mixed together in the democracy of the occasion—all were Irish, and all were at home. But there is no use in prolonging the story. The ball was the very acme of Irish festivity, and will naturally be endowed, and must have resulted in netting a handsome sum for the object in whose behalf it was given.

The festivities were kept up until a late hour in the morning, and, if appearances are not deceitful, all were well pleased with the manner in which they had passed the fourteen hundred and fiftieth anniversary of St. Patrick.

NEW YORK, March 19.—The Times' Washington correspondent says, on unquestionable authority: I am able to infer you that a number of Irish gentlemen have come over the spirit of the administration on the subject of the question with Spain, growing out of the Cuban war of independence. The immediate cause of this change I have not learned, but it is well informed circles, it is supposed to be the result of the recent action of the Spanish Cortes at Madrid. Whatever the immediate cause of the fact, I can assure you that the relations between this Government and that of Spain, are at this moment of the most critical nature. Such, in fact, as to warrant the suspicion that an open rupture may supervene at any day. General Sickles will not return to Madrid, and a firmer grasp than the Prince of Wales became monarch of England by the abdication of his mother, is the grasp of the new monarch of England monarchy will be doomed. The resolution passed by the meeting was somewhat startled at the declarations of the chairman, whose fond avowal of republican opinions has created considerable sensation in Belfast.

Boston, March 18.—The celebration of St. Patrick's Day is more general to-day than on any previous occasion. It is favored by pleasant weather. The procession marched at the Irish Catholic charitable societies in the city and vicinity.

DUBLIN, March 16.—Richard Pigott, editor of the Irishman, is released from his three months' imprisonment for libel on the Chief Justice, during the trial of the Fenian Kelly. Pigott's friends made a demonstration in his honor upon his release, and he was afterward entertained at a breakfast.

H. C. Bateman, Catholic Bookseller, has just received a large stock of Christmas goods from the more blockade, which he is selling at reduced prices.

IRISH INTELLIGENCE.

The Derry Boys and Nationality.

The "Prentice Boys of Derry have prompted by repudiated any sympathy with the proposal of Mr. John Rea to erect a statute to Thomas Francis Meagher. They regard the memory of the ex-patriot as a traitor. With the project as a gross libel on their loyalty, and protest against the idea that they are have any connect with disloyal men. The Nation thinks that they are entitled to express their opinions as they please, and that they will assist in rearing statues to extinct fomenters of rebellion.

Irish Affairs in Parliament.

In the House of Commons last night, Capt. Shackelle pressed the Government to state whether it was intended to bring in any measure relating to Ireland. Mr. Gladstone replied that the matter was still under consideration, and that he reserved to himself the right to announce the intentions of the Government on the subject. The session would probably be brief. Mr. Butt, and Mr. Forster, was opposed by Mr. Liddel, on the ground that the Government would propose a measure on which political affairs would be conducted in England, and which all parties would be compelled to consider carefully. Mr. Gladstone, in reply, said he would introduce a dangerous measure into the House of Commons. He would not enter into the question of the bill and repeated the assurance that the Government with having changed its intentions. Mr. Bernal Osborne, in his speech he called on Mr. Gladstone to take a firm stand in favor of the Irish Church, and to resist the demands of Mr. Butt. Captain Nolan, the member for Galway, in a maiden speech, supported the bill, and said that he would be found as strongly upon the ballot as upon the floor of the House. Mr. Disraeli supported the bill, alleging that the recent elections many voters told against the real wishes of the constituencies. He would be careful not to require him to spread his wings too wide, or attempt to fly at it shall grind him to powder. He would be careful not to require him to reduce his establishment was reduced to the popularity of the gentlemen composing the House of Commons. He was convinced that they will have a splendid House of Commons, and that they will be found on the chief managers of the new Ireland, and he will be found in charge of the work. In the meantime, he will be found upon the ground of the principal representative and purchaser of the Irish Church

THE MAN OF THE DAY.

Very Rev. Father Burke's Lecture in Brooklyn, N. Y.

On Tuesday evening, the 22d, a vast concourse of people was gathered together within the walls of St. Paul's church, Court street, to listen to the world-renowned pulpit orator, Father Thomas N. Burke, who held his audience spell-bound for nearly two hours. The subject of the lecture was "The Christian. Man the Man of the Day." At about half-past seven o'clock, the great lecturer appeared and spoke substantially as follows:

My friends, I have selected, as the subject on which to address you, the following theme: "The Christian Man the Man of the Day." You may not, perhaps, be inclined to suppose that I mean by this, that, in reality, the Christian man was the man of the Day—that no was the man whom our age loved to honor; that he was the man who recognized as a Christian man, received, for I am very reason, the confidence of his fellow-men, and every honor society could bestow upon him. Do not flatter yourselves, my friends, that this is by meaning. I do not mean to say that the Christian man is the man of to-day. I wish I could say it. But what I do mean is, that the Christian man, and he alone, must be the man of the day; that our age cannot live without him; and that we are fast approaching to such a point that it will of itself will be obliged, on the principle of self-preservation, to cry out for the Christian man. But, then, to-day he is not in the high places; for the spirit of the age is anti-Christian. Now, mark you, there is no living man who is a greater lover of the age than I. And, priest as I am, and monk as well, coming here before you in this sombre-snooned old habit; coming before the men of the nineteenth century, as if I were a fossil dug out of the soil of the thirteenth century, I still come before you as a lover of the age in which we live, a lover of its freedom, a lover of its laws, and a lover of its material progress. But, I still assert, that the spirit of the nineteenth century of our is not Catholic. Let me prove it. At this very moment, the Catholic Church, through its Bishops, is engaged in a hand to hand and deadly conflict, in England, in Ireland, in Belgium, in France, in Germany, aye, and in this country, with the spirit of the age; and for what? To endeavor by legislation or by the rod of the child, to control that child's education, and to teach him all things except religion. But the Bishops come and say: "This is a question of life and death, and the child must be a Christian. I claim the right to shut out half its a thousand times better he were never taught at all, for knowledge without God is a curse, not a blessing." Now, if our age were Christian, would it then seek to banish from the se cools, to cause the name of God clean out of the h art of that little one, for we read Jesus Christ, the son of God, shed his blood? Another proof that the spirit of our age is anti-Christian, for whatever contradicts Christ is anti-Christian. Christ said—speaking of the most

SACRED OF MATRIMONY,

Which lies at the root of all society, at the fountain-head of all the world's future—Christ has said, "Whatsoever God has joined together, let no man separate." And the Legislature, the spirit of the age of ours comes in and says, "Let God join them; but I will reserve to myself a right to separate them." This is a special law. They have endeavored to substitute a civil marriage for the holy Sacrament, which Jesus Christ instituted. The spirit of the age, and ratified by his first miracle—the Sacrament which represents the union of Christ with His Church. "I will not let God join them together," says the State. "Let them go to a magistrate or a register." Let God have nothing to do with it. Let no sanctifying fountain-head be before them: let them look to their own lustful d sires, and to the full enjoyment of wicked passions, one cooked by God. Tear the State rules, in one of the third, and says: "I will break asu der that bond." And it made the anti-Christian law of divorce. "Whom God joins together," says the Master of the world—whose word shall never pass away though heaven and earth shall pass away—"let no man separate." God sin e can do it; but no, we dare to do it shakes the very foundation of society, and takes the key-tone out of the arch. But the Christian comes and says, "I will do it." This is the legislation—this is the spirit of our age. I do not mean to say that there were not wicked men and vices in other ages; but I have been taught to look back from my earliest child-hood hundred and six hundred years, to that glorious

THIRTEENTH CENTURY,

For the bloom and flower of sanctity proporting itself to the eye of the world. Still, I have been so taught as not to shut my eyes to as vices; and yet, to the spirit of this age was ignorant Christian than the spirit of this. The spirit that had faith enough to declare that, whatever rise was doubted by learned men, the sanctity of the marriage sacrament was to remain inviolate—it was not recognized its living author as the Son of God. It had faith enough to move all ranks of men as one individual, and as one possessing one faith, and one lofty purpose. And this is not the spirit of our age. Whom do we hear are the men who invent and make our telegraph and railroads, and all the great works of the day? Was it very little about Catholics generally but lookers-on in those great matters; but Cat olics had nothing to do with them. The age was same in simply to profit by the labor of others. And yet, don't we know that in every great discovery made upon this earth was made by some Catholic man or ot er and some of the greatest of them all made by old monks in their cloisters. Therefore,

THE SPIRIT OF THE DAY MARKS THE MAN OF THE DAY.

I do not congratulate you, my fie ds, that the spirit of to-day is a Christian spirit. Now, I am here this evening, to prove to you, a d to bring home to your intellects, two great facts; two great facts in two ways: First—The man the world makes independent of God, is such as to be a curse, and the world itself cannot endure him; for, if he leaves his mark upon his society, it is a curse, and evil. Second—The only influence that can purify and save the world, is the spirit of that glorious religion which alone represents Christianity. Call me not bigoted, my friends, if Catholic Church alone is the great representative of Christianity. I do not deny that there is goodness outside of it, nor that there are good and honest men, who are not of this Church. Whenever I meet an honest, truthful man, I never stop to inquire if he is Catholic or Protestant; I am always ready to do him honor as the noblest work of God. But this I must say—all this is, in reality, represented in the Catholic Church. And I am assured that the Catholic Church has the power to preserve in man the remembrance that God has created him. And, now, having laid down my opening remarks, let us look at the man of the day and see what he is.

Many of you have the ambition to become men of the day. It is a pleasant thing to be pointed at and spoken of as a man of the day. "There is a man who has made his mark." There is a man of whom every one speaks well, the intelligent man, the successful man, the man who is able to propound the law by expressing his opinion; able to sway the markets; the man whose name is blazoned everywhere. You all admire this man. But let us examine him in detail—for he is made for more above a mere paper man. Let us pick him in pieces, and see what is in this man of the day—whether he will suit for God or man—see whether he will come up to the wants of society or God. Man, I suppose you will admit was created by Almighty God for certain fixed specific purposes and duties. Surely, the God of wisdom, of infinite knowledge and of infinite knowledge and freedom, never communicated to an intellectual human being power and knowledge like his own, without having some high, grand, magnificent and God like purpose in view. A certain purpose must have guided Him. Certain duties must have been attached to the various principles that are thus imprinted on man's soul as the image of God. And I suppose, my friends, there are the duties man owes to the family, the duties of the domestic circle, the duties he owes to society, the duties he owes to his country, the duties of friendship; the duties he owes to his own soul, finally, over them all, permeating through them all, overshadowing all that is in him, there is his great

DUTY TO ALMIGHTY GOD,

Who made him. Now, what are man's duties in the domestic circle? Surely the most sacred of man in this article is the virtue of fidelity, representing the purity of Jesus Christ in the married state. Fidelity without a thought of the breaking hearts at home? Shall I tell you of the man of the day trying to commit adultery? Shall I tell you of the man of the day who is ready to take advantage of deserted youth, and why? Because all the worst vices of the young blood are there, for they are inseparable to the man of the day. Sometimes, in some fearful example, he comes out to fore us in all his terrible deformity. The world is undoubtedly, she world is frightened for a moment—but men who understand all those things better than you or I come to us and say, "Oh! it is what is going on; this is the order of the day." There is no vestige of purity, no vestige of fidelity. Mind and imagination corrupted; the very flesh rotting, great fact; two things seem to us ways: First—The man the world makes independent of God, is such as to be a curse, and the world itself cannot endure him; that is the world itself cannot endure him; for, if he leaves his mark upon his society, it is a curse, and evil. Second—The only influence that can purify and save the world, is the spirit of that glorious religion which alone represents Christianity. Call me not bigoted, my friends, if Catholic Church alone is the great representative of Christianity. I do not deny that there is goodness outside of it, nor that there are good and honest men, who are not of this Church. Whenever I meet an honest, truthful man, I never stop to inquire if he is Catholic or Protestant; I am always ready to do him honor as the noblest work of God. But this I must say—all this is, in reality, represented in the Catholic Church. And I am assured that the Catholic Church has the power to preserve in man the remembrance that God has created him. And, now, having

LOVE IS A NECESSITY,

And the Almighty has created that desire for love in the hearts of all men; and it has become sacred and typical of the union of Christ with His Church—typical of the great Christ-principle poured without Him in the heart in Galile-; and whatever it is it must lie at the very fountain-head of society, it must sanctify the very spring whence all our human nature flows; for, it is out of this union of two loving hearts that our race is propagated, and mankind continues to live on earth. What is that grace? I answer that it is the grace of fidelity. Understand me well; there is nothing more revolting, nothing more degradable than the heart of man; nothing wilder in its acts, in its propensities, than this treacherous heart of man. I know of no greater victory that a human being can make than that a young woman makes, when she takes the hand of a young man and kneels down with him before that altar where Jesus Christ has said they shall ever enter his heart. A treacherous, erratic heart is that of man. Nothing can change, prove to evil influences, existed by every form of passing beauty. But from the very beginning the obligations of Father and Mother to their progeny. Their children are to be educated; and as they grow and bloom in the fullness of their reason, the one object of the Christian father and mother is to bring their children into subjection to Christianity that is latent there. Christ enters into that young soul by baptism; but He lies sleeping in that soul, acting only upon the blind animal instincts of humanity, and the child grows up without Christ that sleeps there must be raised and developed, until that child comes to the fullness of his intellectual age, and the man of God is fully developed in the child of God, and is fit for the end of all love on this earth. Now, does the man of the day fulfill this end? how does he fulfill these duties to his wife and to his children, these duties which we may call

THE PLATONIC DUTIES?

This "clever" man of the day—how does he fulfill them? He, perhaps, in his humbler days, before he knew to-r at mo ifham the sin of his fortune h d arisen, took to himself a fair and modest wife. His fortune smiled upon him. The woman remained content with her first and simple love, and with fidelity to the man of her choice and the duties which were thus brought with them. But how is it with the man of the day? Shall I insult the ears of the Christian by following the man of the age through all the dark paths of his iniquity? Shall I describe to you the absence of his lustful eye, forgetful of the vows he has made to the one at home? Can I tell you of the man of to-day following every passing form, a mere lover of beauty; without principle, without God, without virtue, and without a thought of the breaking hearts at home? Shall I tell you of the man of the day trying to commit adultery? Shall I tell you of the man of the day who is ready to take advantage of deserted youth, and why? Because all the worst vices of the young blood are there, for they are inseparable to the man of the day. Sometimes, in some fearful example, he comes out to fore us in all his terrible deformity. The world is undoubtedly, she world is frightened for a moment—but men who understand all those things better than you or I come to us and say, "Oh! it is what is going on; this is the order of the day." There is no vestige of purity, no vestige of fidelity. Mind and imagination corrupted; the very flesh rotting, great fact; two things seem to us ways: First—The man the world makes independent of God, is such as to be a curse, and the world itself cannot endure him; that is the world itself cannot endure him; for, if he leaves his mark upon his society, it is a curse, and evil. Second—The only influence that can purify and save the world, is the spirit of that glorious religion which alone represents Christianity. Call me not bigoted, my friends, if Catholic Church alone is the great representative of Christianity. I do not deny that there is goodness outside of it, nor that there are good and honest men, who are not of this Church. Whenever I meet an honest, truthful man, I never stop to inquire if he is Catholic or Protestant; I am always ready to do him honor as the noblest work of God. But this I must say—all this is, in reality, represented in the Catholic Church. And I am assured that the Catholic Church has the power to preserve in man the remembrance that God has created him. And, now, having

Spiritual Dancing.

We do not dance for dancing sake, but the spirit of God moves them." Such is the confidence which a female servant girl, after a female servant girl, gave, regarding her congregation, to a London magistrate's Court the other day. Tas case in which the speaker was on a par with the evidence in the case, was one in which the accused was a the waiting upon the Lord at a Bible Christians, and a few weeks ago she was reading the Word to a number of the same Bible Christians, who assembled together in a railway arch close to, whether bad been duly registered for divine service, the day and some other young men came and threw their hats and hymn books at them, and then dammed upon the heads a good deal of noise, and interrupted the proceedings by various devices. "After you with the Book," said one of the party, "I'll be after you with my hat and half" shouted a third. The Christians interrupted the Bible with the pious speaker was not to notice. When the case at length came before the magistrate, the railway arch was greatly crowded "a certain chapel of some denomination called Bible Christians," and the defendant was charged with "disturbing" them. The defendant, in his own defence, said that upon the 12 o'clock on the day, the Beasties fell on him and his friends. He had stood in the land against on their side, and might, assured to them the Master of the place, he retired in peace and quiet, and in the interior of the unpleasant habits, and pretended they their landlords on the public-house, and never came to grief. He had acted as true men to the disappointment and rags of the defendant, who evidently considered the dismissing the crowd of a very different matter. At the hour fixed for the commencement of the Spirit, the defendant and his friends were found by the same spirit as you?" "Why, sir, I was simply rejected by my brethren, and I thought it my duty to go and see what was going on." "Do you mean to say that you had two female brethren?" "Yes, sir, I had two female brethren, and they were both members of the Bible Christians." "Do you know the nature of the oath you took when you were admitted into the Christian Church?" "Yes, sir, I do." "Will you tell us what it is?" "Why, sir, I was asked if I would spit on the Bible, and I said I would not." "Did you spit on the Bible?" "No, sir, I did not." "Did you refuse to spit on the Bible?" "Yes, sir, I did." "Did you refuse to spit on the Bible?" "Yes, I did not." "Did you refuse to spit on the Bible?" "Yes, I did not." "Did you refuse to spit on the Bible?" "Yes, I did not

THE HOUSEWIFE.

TO KEEP MILK SWEET.—A teaspoonful of fine salt or horseradish, in a pan of milk, will keep it sweet for days.

TO PREVENT LAMPS FROM SMOKING.—Lay the lamp-wicks in vinegar for an hour, and dry them well before they are used.

POTATO MUFFINS.—One pint of milk, six large potatoes mashed, one egg, one desertspoonful of butter, and one gill of yeast.

RICE BREAD.—Boil half a pound of rice in three pints of water till the whole is quite thick; with this, and yeast, and six pounds of flour, make the dough.

POUND CAKE.—Ten eggs, three cups white sugar, one and a half cups butter, one-half cup sweet milk, three cups flour, one-half spoonful of soda, one teaspoonful cream of tartar, flavoring to suit taste.

DELMONICO PUDDING.—One quart of milk, two and one-half teaspoonfuls corn starch dissolved in cold milk, with five eggs, beat the yolk, and one teacup of white sugar; boil the milk first, have the other things ready, and stir in altogether, then pour out and bake; but on a meringue.

TO REMOVE GLASS STOPPERS.—When the stopper of a glass decanter is too tight, a cloth wet with hot water and applied to the neck will cause the glass to expand, and the stopper may be removed. In phials the warmth of the hand may be sufficient.

FROTHED PUDDING SAUCE.—Beat one half pound of butter and the same of sugar to a cream. Have ready some thin boiling flour and water, add to the above, just before pulling on the table. Let it boil up two or three times, but do not stir it. Flavor according to taste.

CORN STARCH CAKE.—The white of ten eggs; one cup of butter, two cups of white sugar, one cup of corn-starch, one cup of sweet milk, one half teaspoonful cream of tartar, two cups of flour. Mix cornstarch, soda, and milk together. Flavor with lemon or vanilla.

FIG PUDDING.—A quarter pound of figs, half pound of suet, a breakfast cup of grated bread, the same of milk, a teaspoonful of nutmeg, a little grate of a lemon, three tablespoonfuls of sugar, and three eggs; boil two hours or bake one hour. The figs must be cut small, and then beat with the milk a long time.

TO WASH HAIR BRUSHES.—Hair brushes, however dirty, may be washed and kept good for years, without loss of stiffness, by putting a small handful of soda into a pint jug of boiling water. When the soda is melted, put in the brush and let it stand till clean. Rinse it in cold water, and dry in the sun or by the fire. The quicker it dries the harder the bristles will be.

TEA LEAVES A REMEDY FOR BURNS AND SCALDS.—A poultice of tea leaves applied to small burns and scalds affords immediate relief. The leaves are softened with hot water, squeezed nearly dry, applied upon cotton over the entire surface burned. This application discolors and prevents any pain, and removes entirely the acute sensibility and tenderness.

BRUISES ON FURNITURE.—Wet the part with warm water; double a piece of paper four or five times, soak in warm water, and lay on the place; apply on that a warm but not hot flat-iron till the moisture is evaporated; the bruise be not gone, repeat the process. After two or three applications the dent or bruise will raise to the surface. If the bruise be taken while fresh, soak it with the wet cloth, and hold a red-hot iron near the surface, keeping the surface continually wet—the bruise will soon disappear.

CARE OF CANARY BIRDS.—Place the cage so that no draft of air can strike the bird; give nothing to healthy birds put canary and rape seed mixed with water; this fish bone and gravel on the floor of the cage; also, occasionally, a little water for bathing; the room should not be overheated, or when moulting; shedding feathers avoid drafts of air, give plenty of rape seed slightly moistened, a little hard-boiled egg and cracker grated fine is excellent. By observing these simple directions birds may be kept in fine condition for years. Bad seed kills most of the birds that die; to which it might have been added that canary birds are not only fond of, but benefitted by having often a leaf of cabbage, piece of apple or other green food, which serves to keep down the tendency to fever and prevents constipation. When birds are sick and inclined not to eat well, remove all food for a day, and then only give soaked bread from which most of the moisture has been squeezed.

Just received, a large stock of Vestments, Chalices Remonstrances, Altar Cards and Candlesticks. Holy Water Sprays, Books, and all other Catholic articles, at the Popular Books, and all other Catholic articles, at the Popular Book House of Bancroft, 35 Kearny St. one of every kind.

SMALL FRUIT INSTRUCTOR

Just the paper, price 15 cents, post-paid. Tells how to plant and grow all kinds of small fruits successfully; best for farmer and amateur. Large stocks of the old and Henry Ward Beecher, Longworth, Wilson, Jucunda, Crescent, &c., by the one or thousand. Descriptive and practical works very cheap. Price list of Plants, tools, &c., sent free to all applicants. Address or PURDY & HASTE, 105 Nassau St., N. York.

A. M. PURDY, Palmyra, N. Y.

P. S.—specimen copies of The Fruit Recorder and Rural Record, a 32-page monthly, A. M. Purdy, editor; Price 25 cents per annum; 3 months on trial. To see a copy is equivalent to subscribing.

mh17

THE MONITOR.

SATURDAY, MARCH 23

Wholesale Market Report.

MONITOR OFFICE, SAN FRANCISCO, TUESDAY, MARCH 19, 1872.

FLOUR—The demand for family consumption has been quite a limited inquiry for export, at a decline in rates, since our last review. We quote standard brands of Oregon extra at $6 50@ and fancy brands as follows: Superfine, at $5 50@ $ 6 25; and extra at $6 50@6 to 6 75 per bbl.

BARLEY—The market has been inactive during the week under review, at unchanged rates. Sales of ordinary coast to choice for brewing at $1 40@ 1 to $ 1 90 bs, which is the range of the market at the close.

OATS—The demand has continued moderate for this grain during the past week, but at reduced rates. Ordinary to choice feed at $1 10@1 70 to 1 90 bs, which is the extreme at the close.

HAY—The receipts have been fair during the past seven days. Quotable at $15@18 for ordinary wild oat to choice wheat & tame.

STRAW—Quotable at $5 to $ 10 for cargo lots.

CORN—Quotable at $1 50 for yellow, and $2 for white, by the bs.

CORN MEAL—Sales at $3 50@3 to 100 bs from store.

BRAN—We note a fair demand, and prices following are the jobbing rates: Bran, $ 18@19; Middlings, $ 23@24; Chop Feed, $ 30@32 to 100 bs.

POTATOES—Receipts have been extensive during the past week. At this, we quote the range at 1@1 to 1 25 per 100 bs.

ONIONS—Quotable at $1@1 to 100 bs.

BEANS—Quotable at $4@5 to 100 bs.

BUCKWHEAT—Quotable at $2 75@3 to 100 bs.

BUCKWHEAT—Sales at $2 75@3 to 100 bs.

RYE—Quotable at $1 50@1 to 100 bs.

BARLEY—Quotable at $1 25@1 50 to 100 bs.

CHICKEN WHEAT—Quotable at $2 25@2 50 to 100 bs from the mills.

FLOUR—Quotable at $2 75@3 to 100 bs.

BUCKWHEAT—Sales at $2 75@3 to 100 bs.

RYE—Quotable at $1 50@1 to 100 bs.

BARLEY—Quotable at $1 25@1 50 to 100 bs.

BEANS—Quotable at $4@5 to 100 bs.

POTATOES—Quotable at 1@1 to 1 25 per 100 bs.

ONIONS—Quotable at $1@1 to 100 bs.

HAY—Quotable at $15@18 for ordinary wild oat to choice wheat & tame.

STRAW—Quotable at $5 to $ 10 for cargo lots.

CORN—Quotable at $1 50 for yellow, and $2 for white, by the bs.

CORN MEAL—Sales at $3 50@3 to 100 bs from store.

BRAN—We note a fair demand, and prices following are the jobbing rates: Bran, $ 18@19; Middlings, $ 23@24; Chop Feed, $ 30@32 to 100 bs.

POTATOES—Receipts have been extensive during the past week. At this, we quote the range at 1@1 to 1 25 per 100 bs.

ONIONS—Quotable at $1@1 to 100 bs.

BEANS—Quotable at $4@5 to 100 bs.

BUCKWHEAT—Sales at $2 75@3 to 100 bs from store

VERY REV. FATHER BURKE'S

LECTURE IN BROOKLYN, N. Y., ON

"THE CATHOLIC CHURCH THE MOTHER OF LIBERTY."

On Sunday evening, March 24, Father Burke lectured in St. Paul's Church, in Brooklyn. It is needless to say that the edifice was crowded. Within the sanctuary rails were seated Rev. Father Maguire, the pastor, a large number of clergymen from the neighboring parishes, and many lay men, among whom we noticed ex-Governor Lowe, of Maryland, and Mr. Cornelius Dever.

The Rev. gentleman spoke as follows:

My Friends: On last Tuesday evening, when I had the honor of addressing you, I proposed to you a subject for your consideration, which, perhaps, may have struck a good many amongst you as rather strange. We are such worshippers of this age of ours, that when the "man of the day," as he is called, is put before us in any other than an amiable light, no matter how true it may be, it seems strange, and it is a hazardous thing for me to attempt it. I fear there are many amongst you that will consider that they have undertaken a task this evening — a still more hazardous one, I should say — namely, to prove to you that the CATHOLIC CHURCH IS THE FOSTER-MOTHER OF HUMAN LIBERTY.

Was there ever so strange a proposition heard — the Catholic Church the mother of human liberty! If I undertook to prove that the Catholic Church was the instrument chosen by Almighty God to save Christianity, I might do it on the testimony of Protestant historians. I might quote, for instance, Guizot, the French statesman and historian, who repeatedly and emphatically asserts that only for the organization of society that only for the organization of bishops, priests, and monks, and that only for the Church — the Christian religion would never have been preserved; never been able to stand the shock of the incursions of the barbarians of the North upon the Roman Empire; and never have been preserved through the following ages of confusion, and, some people say, darkness. I could quote the great German historian, Neander, who was not only a Protestant, but bitterly opposed to the Catholic Church, who repeats again and again, the self-same proposition, the Christian religion, through the Church, the Christian religion must have perished during the time that elapsed between the fifth and the sixteenth century. I might, I say, again, find it easy to prove any one of these propositions, which are the fair law of civil life. But I am not going to do anything of the kind. I am not going to appeal to any one of these authorities, still less to that which I myself regard as the highest authority. I will not quote for you my friends, neither the words of God — I will not quote for you the Word of God — of God himself — who ought to know best, for God has himself, who made and gave him his intelligence and freedom — for God himself has also declared that the freedom of the human race lies in the possession of the truth — the knowledge of the truth, and the grasping of this knowledge — exclusion, by every fact, of all error.

Christ, our Lord, said: "You shall know the truth and the truth shall make you free." You shall know the truth, and, for "free." You shall know the truth, and, for the knowledge of that truth will be your freedom. Mind you, he did not say: "You shall know the truth, and the truth will send you groaning off your feet." He did not say but you shall know it — you shall have no doubt about it! He did not say — no doubt about it! He did not say — to doubt about it! He did not say — to doubt about it! He did not say — to

WEEKLY CALENDAR.
FOR THE WEEK ENDING APRIL 6.
March:
30—Saturday—Easter Sunday.
April:
1—Monday—Easter Monday.
2—Tuesday—Feast of the Annunciation.
3—Wednesday—Feast of the Ascension.
4—Thursday—Feast of the Ascension.
5—Friday—Feast of the Dolors of the Blessed Virgin.
6—Saturday—Feast of St. Celestine, Pope and Confessor.

THE MONITOR:
THE ONLY
Irish and Catholic Journal in California.
PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY,
AT
SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.
SATURDAY.....MARCH 30, 1872.

THE SACRAMENTO "RECORD" ON SENATOR CASSERLY.

It is very rarely, indeed, that we meet in a paper having the least pretensions to respectability, an article like that which appeared in the Sacramento Record of Thursday, March 21st, entitled "Casserly and the Japanese." Totally uncalled for, and strictly destitute of argument, it is simply a piece of scurrility of which even the most inflammable print might well feel ashamed. In fact, it is little more than a string of adjective epithets such as might be supposed to come from the mouth of an inebriated fishwife.

We are sorry to admit that Mr. Casserly has been unanimously conceded a "scholar" and a man of culture, but, of course, it is unable to find out on what his reputation rests. There are, we may say, a great many patent things that the rail-road king cannot find out, or does not choose to find out, but, according to this Sacramento authority, the Senator is "educated with a miserable narrowness of mind"—a splendid figure of speech this, truly! His arguments are "drawn from the armory of the Jesuits!" he talks not like a statesman, but like a "spoiled priest;" his ideas about the Japanese are "contemptible;" his arguments must pass—ought not to be placed on the same level with Christians is the language of "the thick-headed boor, the Quakeress, coarse as sage, the lodge-schoolmaster!" he would, if he "had sufficient nerve to say what he thinks, declare that Protestant children ought to be excluded from our educational schools! We could multiply these choice epithets, but we do not wish to either weary or disgust our readers. Yet there is one more which we cannot refrain from favoring with the benefit of our criticism. "Senator Casserly," says the Record, "may stand in mental terror of the Japanese, and not without reason; for they are, as a rule, more intelligent, and even better educated than he is. He may quail at the prospect of competition with Asiatic races."

The opponent of this last specimen of Record English literature, so far as any can be found in its pages, will be content to let the matter rest for any reader whatever. It is the "small-brained boorish egotist," "the fanatical bigot," "avowedly bigot," and a "fanatic" to imagine that the worshipp of the One True God is preferable to that of any higher morality. The inference follows that is as unpardonable error to regard America as a Christian nation, or to think that its laws and usages have any connection with revealed religion. To be sure it, so happens that a large number, perhaps even a majority, of its citizens profess faith in the Redeemer, but that is a mere accident, and does not concern our constitution as a people. Pagans have quite as much a right to come here, and the rights of the converts of our institutions, as the framing of our legislation and managing the affairs of the country as those to whom the gospel of salvation has been preached. And if by any chance those pagans should become very numerous and strong enough to make their idol-worship the dominant creed, why, no great harm would be done; Christian faith being, as Mr. Proctor would say, "a matter of no consequence at all."

The Record says that if Mr. Casserly wanted "historical illustrations" he could find instances of professing Christians disgracing themselves by mob cruelty. We do not understand what deduction is to be made from this, if it be not that mob cruelty is a consequence of Christianity, and a prominent feature in its ethics, at all events, as practiced in this land of freedom. Next we are informed that "paganism is relative;" and that the misspellers organ regards it as a most detestable pagan and man who believes Christianity by assuming for it prospective tenets, such as this pupil of the Jesuits (Mr. Casserly) asserts." What will the New York riots can bear to the propriety or impropriety of admitting Japanese students to the Military Academy we really cannot tell; but the Record knows all about it since it asks triumphantly why Mr. Casserly, or somebody else, did not attempt to exclude from West Point the children of those who had made the riots. "One would think," continues the fellow, "that Baptism conferred some absolute merit to bear Mr. Casserly."

What an insane notion, to think that the rites and ceremonies of a Christian Church are worth anything or mean anything. We quote again: "the world imagine that the Christian children of America were lifted altogether above and beyond the plane on which Japanese 'pagans' move." The Record quotes the word pagans as if to indicate that it was either a good joke or ridiculous mistake to confound the newly enlightened and lately civilized Asiatics with ordinary blockers. We wonder how will American fathers and mothers like the plain inference which must be drawn from the sentence we have just quoted. How incompatible of them to entertain the idea that their children are in any way superior members or morals. The conclusion the Record comes to is that Senator Casserly is a "monumental politician," and not a scholar or even a sincere man. We think we have troubled ourselves long enough with the foul diatribes of this wretched scribbler. The task of quoting his anathemian sentences is certainly disagreeable enough; but if we succeed in showing what manner of men are they who defame and vilify Senator Casserly we shall be amply repaid for the trouble we gave ourselves.

Because Mr. Casserly is true to his people, and strives to save them from plundering dercers, because he is the indefatigable enemy of monopolists under whatever guise they present themselves, he must subsidized and unprincipled scribblers, that such assaults cannot possibly do him any harm or lessen the esteem in which he is held by his fellow citizens. Nor do we think he will ever condescend so far as to make reply to these native calumnies. We would advise the railroad men if they want to damage their ably and vigilant foe to hire somebody of greater moral standing than the pagan of the Sacramento Record. Finally we would suggest to the writer of the article entitled "Casserly and the Japanese," that he betake himself as speedily as possible to the Yoke-hama. There he will be surrounded by his lucky pots, and he will never hear a word likely to stir up his anti-Christian bile. As he is evidently a pagan of the worst kind, he must feel strangely out of place in Christian America.

OUR REPRESENTATIVES ABROAD.

Whatever be the merits or demerits of General Grant's administration so far as relates to its management of the domestic affairs of this country, it cannot, at all events, flatter itself very much upon the choice it has made of men as representatives of this nation at the various European Courts. That the majority of them have been individuals deficient in educational acquirements, almost destitute of social polish and totally unversed in diplomacy, is a reproach well founded in truth, and justice. There was a time, indeed, when our ministers and diplomatists could bear comparison with the best trained statesmen of the old world, when they were scholars, men of high honor and of unimpeachable integrity, but that time, alas! is past. Take him outside his record as a soldier (how much of that he owes to good fortune, how much to genuine ability is a very vexed question), and General Grant is almost doubtfully a man of any sterling mental capacity. A good deal of power is certainly in the hands of the President, and with them well but then, how many days, they have had the large majority of Congress themselves with men of the stamp of General Grant has not the slightest trace, on the contrary, indeed, his conduct has been marked by all the vices of a small mind. His wants to have his administration, first, at home and abroad that may be said to compose his administration, men pretty much of the same mental mediocrity with himself. A really great man, a man of talent in any line, would be strictly out of place among his office-holders. This fact is so notorious that the present government has brought itself as an amount of popular contempt that would surely overwhelm it were it not for the corruption and dishonesty which keep it up. At no time, we may safely say, since American Independence was any accurate knowledge had this country been in worse odor abroad than it is at the present day, and for this our foreign representatives are undoubtedly to be blamed. We need say nothing of the role played in London by a celebrated mining swindle, for they are well known. And we need only briefly remind our readers of the misbehavior of our representative at the Court of Denmark. The career of the late Minister at Madrid was not such as to give the Spaniards a favorable idea of American honor and morality. Now we learn that Mr. Jolas is more openly accuses Minister Washburne of having complicity with certain Fenian spies during the days of Paris, and of abetting their designs against its French station. The Minister to Italy has been charged with something equivalent to libelling the Government to which he was accredited. All those things cannot have been the result of accident, and the conclusion is inevitable that most of our representatives abroad are simply the tools of their position. The shame of having placed them in it belongs to the party of "great moral ideas," the Republican party. To them we leave it very cheerfully.

FATHER BURCHARD'S LECTURE.—The Rev. Father Burchard's lecture on "Woman's Suffrage" in St. Francis Church, a couple of weeks since, besides being a rare intellectual treat to all that heard it, has also been eminently successful regarded from a pecuniary point of view. It has netted the very large sum of two thousand and fifteen dollars. As the proceeds were to be given for the payment of taxes on the Presentation Convent, Powell street, this result must be highly satisfactory to the Sisters and pleasing to their many friends. A few more lectures from Father Burchard would evidently more than compensate for the fifteen thousand dollars refused to the nuns by our niggardly Legislature.

It is again stated that Sumner is likely to be made President of the Cincinnati Liberal Reform Convention; also that he is bitterly opposed to the nomination of Judge David Davis, the Labor Reform candidate.

Lady Mayo receives a pension of $5,000, and her children a settlement of $100,000 from the British Government.

PATRICK'S DAY IN LOS ANGELES.

Gov. Downey's Oration.

[From the News of March 18.]

St. Patrick's Day fallig on Sunday, the celebration was postponed until yesterday. At about 10 A. M., the St. Patrick's Benevolent Society marched from the Temperance Hall, Arcadia Block, in procession to its Catholic church, where a panegyric on St. Patrick was delivered by the Rev. Father McGill of St. Vincent of the College. The procession numbered about 47 strong, and was preceded by a band playing old Irish airs, such as "St. Patrick's Day in the Morning," and "The Wearing of the Green." Leaving the church they paraded through the town, and at 2:30 P. M. repaired to the hall to listen to the Oration of the Day. The President of the Society, Mr. John Cashon—took the chair on the platform erected for the occasion, and introduced the Orator of the Day, Hon. A. G. Downey, who delivered the following

ORATION:

MY FRIENDS AND FELLOW COUNTRYMEN: I am glad to meet you here upon the anniversary of the natal day of the patron saint of Ireland. Every succeeding anniversary, while it adds to the number of years that have passed since the blood of Jesus Christ was shed upon the cross, and their lives and deeds have been recorded in the pages of history, only furnishes additional proofs of the wisdom of the selection of the day by the founders of the Society. The blood of Jesus Christ was shed for the redemption of the world, and their lives and deeds have been recorded in the pages of history for educational purposes and for the encouragement of succeeding generations, and for the benefit of mankind. Their lives and deeds are the standard of human excellence, and therefore proper models for imitation. Their lives were pure, their deeds were noble, their motives were unselfish, and their labors were for the benefit of mankind. They were men who were actuated by the highest principles, and who were governed by the purest motives. They were men who were willing to make any sacrifice for the benefit of mankind. They were men who were willing to suffer persecution, and even death, in the cause of truth and humanity

CONSTITUTION AND BY-LAWS
—OF—
THE CATHOLIC TOTAL ABSTINENCE UNION
OF AMERICA.

The following is the letter of the Rev. James McDevitt, President of the Catholic Total Abstinence Unions of America, to the Very Rev. John Dougherty, Administrator of the Archdiocese of Baltimore:

ST. MATTHEWS, WASHINGTON, D. C., March 1, 1871.

VERY REV. JOHN J. DOUGHERTY, ADMINISTRATOR OF THE ARCHDIOCESE OF BALTIMORE—DEAR SIR: I send you herewith a number of copies of the Constitution and By-Laws of the Catholic Total Abstinence Union of America, in connection with the following resolutions, passed by said Union at its Convention in Baltimore, on the 2d and 3d of October, 1870:

RESOLVED, That the Constitution and By-Laws of the Union be referred to the Ecclesiastical Authorities of the Archdiocese of Baltimore, for their approval, and that such approval be published with the proceedings of the Convention.

RESOLVED, That the Union premises, and hoping to hear from you soon and favorably, on this important matter, I remain, very respectfully and cordially Yours in Christ,

JAMES MCDEVITT, President C. T. A. U. A.

The Constitution and By-Laws of the Catholic Total Abstinence Union of America, is hereby approved. JOHN DOUGHERTY, Administrator of the Archdiocese of Baltimore.

CONSTITUTION.

NAME AND HOW COMPOSED.

SECTION 1.—The name of this organization shall be the Catholic Total Abstinence Union of America."

SEC. 2.—This Union shall be composed of such Catholic Total Abstinence Unions and Societies of America as are recognized by the Ecclesiastical authority, and comply with the Constitution of the Union.

OBJECTS.

The objects of this organization shall be: First—By means of its public meetings, publications and resolves, to unite societies connected with this Union in any part of America. Second—To encourage, establish and consolidate such societies in establishing new societies. Third—To liberalize the views of the public among members regarding Total Abstinence principles, through the instrumentality of Catholic Total Abstinence publications.

SEALS.

To accomplish the declared objects, the Union and its officers and members shall rely upon the following means: First—The practice of our holy religion by all members individually. Second—Earnest prayer upon our co-religionists of good example and influence, especially our clergy, that they may be induced by some of the motives for our guidance to practice the rejected clergy. Third—By our connection with the Association of Prayer in Honor of the Sacred Thirst and Agony of Jesus.

GOVERNMENT.

The government of this organization shall be vested primarily in a General Convention, to be held every year, which shall assemble once a year, within the jurisdiction of this Union, to enact proper Laws and Rules, and elect Permanent Officers to execute the same; and Standing Committees and Boards hereinafter mentioned.

OFFICERS.

SECTION 1.—The officers of this Union shall consist of a Spiritual Director, who, as such, shall preside during the year, the Ordinary of the Archdiocese or Diocese wherein the President resides, and during the sessions of the General Convention, the Ordinary of the Archdiocese in which the Convention may happen to be held; a President, First and Second Vice-Presidents, Recording Secretary, Financial Secretary, Corresponding Secretary, Treasurer, Sergeant-at-Arms, and one Deputy from each State or District, who shall be the President of a State or District Total Abstinence Council and a Board of Government.

SEC. 2.—The President of Subordinate Unions shall be an ex-officio Deputies of this Union.

SEC. 3.—The Executive Council shall consist of a Spiritual Director, President, Vice-President, Secretaries and Treasurer.

SEC. 4.—The Board of Government shall consist of the Spiritual Director, President, Vice-President, Secretaries, Treasurer and Deputies.

CONVENTION.

The General Convention of this Union shall meet at such time and place as may be fixed upon and agreed upon by any general Convention, or as the Executive Council may appoint, or decide, at such time and place as may be chosen by the Board of Government.

ELECTION OF OFFICERS.

The President, Vice-President, Secretaries, Treasurer and Sergeant-at-Arms, shall be elected annually by ballot, a majority of votes being necessary to a choice.

VACANCIES—HOW FILLED.

Whenever any vacancy occurs in case of President, which it does not provided for, such vacancy shall be filled by election by the President for the unexpired term.

DUTIES OF OFFICERS.

SPIRITUAL DIRECTOR.—The Spiritual Director shall have chief direction of the religious affairs of the Union; shall open and close all conventions with prayers for all—for the officers, a member of all Boards and Committees of the Union, and it shall be the duty of the officers to submit to him on account of the progress of the Union, and seek his council from time to time.

PRESIDENT.—The President shall preside at all meetings of the Union and Board of Government; shall enforce a strict obedience to the Constitution and By-Laws of the Union, and shall have the casting vote, in case of a tie, on any question; shall appoint all committees not otherwise provided for; decide all points of order; sign all drafts for due appropriations, and shall have a general supervision over the affairs and welfare of the Union. He shall, at the annual conventions of the Union, submit a written report, setting forth the general condition and requirements of the organization.

VICE-PRESIDENT.—It shall be the duty of the Vice-President to assist the President in the active discharge of the duties of his office, and in case of the resignation, removal or death of the President, the First Vice-President shall be vested with the power of the President until his successor be chosen.

RECORDING SECRETARY.—The Recording Secretary shall attend all Conventions of the Union and all meetings of the Board of Government, and keep accurate minutes of the proceedings thereof; he shall have charge of all the documents pertaining to the business of the Union. He shall procure for the Deputies of the several States a seal, and shall keep a statement of the strength, condition, and requirements of the organization under their immediate charge, and prepare, under direction of the President, a written report, therein, such general remarks, suggestions and information as he may deem calculated to spread the principles of sport and advancement among the Catholic people, and a full statement of the business and financial affairs of the general organization, the same to be printed for the use of the Convention; he shall, annually in the deputies of the several Unions, sending in their reports or names of officers, and is empowered in good standing in their respective organizations, to issue certificates of membership to the same. He shall furnish to the officers of the Union, or to deputies, all necessary blanks, documents and other papers that he may require, and shall make a report in writing at each annual Convention.

FINANCIAL SECRETARY.—The Corresponding Secretary shall attend to all correspondence under the direction of the President, and shall reside in the same place with the President.

TREASURER.—The Treasurer shall preserve all funds and property belonging to the Union, and pay the same immediately to the Treasurer, taking receipts therefor. He shall give bond in such amount as may be required by the Council; keep accurate accounts of all moneys received, and paid, and present a full statement of the same for examination at any time by the Council or President, and shall report annually to the Convention. He shall pay out of the funds in his hands only such sums as may be ordered by the Recording Secretary, and shall make an annual report to the Convention.

SERGEANT-AT-ARMS.—The Sergeant-at-arms shall have charge of the Hall and see that His properly kept and in order for the General Convention. He shall attend all General Conventions; see that all persons have properly passes, and execute all orders of the presiding officer with regard to preserving order. He shall receive a salary of $—— per day, which shall be paid out of the funds of the Union, and shall attend all subordinate meetings in any State that may be requested by the Board of Government. He shall keep a record of all meetings in any State that may be requested by the Board of Government. He shall keep a record of all meetings in any State that may be requested by the Board of Government. He shall keep a record of all

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

ENGLAND.

Prison Labor.

Rather a curious meeting was held on last Monday night at the Lambeth Baths, Westminster Road. The purport of it was to investigate into the system of monopoly of trade by prison authorities. It seems that in one branch alone of mat-making the prison competition had been so sweeping that outside honest hard-working operatives had had their wages reduced exactly one-half, from thirty shillings to fifteen shillings per week. In Wakefield prison eight hundred convicts are employed in mat-making, and, in addition, two power-ful steam engines are kept at work, the result of which is that they are able to undersell independent employers, who, having to pay not alone for material, but for labor, find it impossible to compete with the prison authorities. Of course the poor operative thrown out of employment will have either to starve and die, or, perforce, qualify themselves to receive employment at the hands of the more prosperous mat capitalists, the prison authorities. Who does say that honesty is the best policy when by an outlay of judicious thieving or brutish ruthlessness, one can be sure of food, lodging, washing and constant work?—Universe, March 2.

FRANCE.

Blanqui on Universal Suffrage.

The Fall Mall Gazette says that the conspirator Blanqui, writing lately to one of his friends, expressed himself thus on universal suffrage in France:

The Republicans have paid dearly for the premature application of an ideal, admirable for the future, but fatal for the present. The people, being disturbed with abundicies, do absurdities, and to expect anything else from them is as futile as seeking peaches on a plum tree. Universal suffrage derived its origin in the large towns which have not seen further than their own circle, and have thought France composed of the same elements as themselves. From this error the gloomy days of December, 1848, 1851, 1852 and 1870, resulted. Four times has rural ignorance proclaimed Bonaparte; and before Bonaparte it created the Legislative and Constituent Assemblies, which were scarcely worth more than he. Shall not the political manifestations of a country always be it.. reflection of the ideas which they have always imbibed, and can anything more than the seeds sown in the intellect and be produced by universal suffrage after twenty years of despotism and systematic demoralisation? The same thing happened in 1848 through the idiocy of Democrats. They wanted to erect a Republic in a field which was sown by Monarchy, and, to their great astonishment, they have not reaped the three varieties of the old plant, with the pleasure of the choice. Before the ex-peasants can undertake soil the earth must be ploughed three or four times, or else the crop will be lost. The peasant knows it well, and do not fall into the same error as the Republicans. Follow their example and apply to their intellects the means employed for purifying the soil; and, above all, do not risk the good seeds before having little by little destroyed the bad ones. After the revolution of 1848 several good and intelligent preparation ought to have proceeded and prepared popular suffrage, but by the time, and never by strength, that a nation must be conquered.

. . Universal suffrage is the sovereign principle and as well it for five minutes would be a sacrilege. The next result of that example is that universal suffrage and the vote by ballot, which would have, after fifteen years, produced a perfect and regular government, is already entirely killed in fifteen days by their immediate application, and will kill us altogether if the same extravagance be attempted anew.

More Executions.

The three men—Verdegoer, Lagrange, and Herpin—who were found guilty by court-martial of complicity in the murder of the Generals Thomas and Lecomte, and were shot each the other day at the Camp of Satory in pursuance of the sentence passed against them, certainly lost their fearful doom defiantly. They came up to the execution ground smoking cigars, and continued to smoke with all apparent calmness until the firing party shot them down. There is no ordinary trial of nerve when the line of shining rifle barrels gleamed only ten short steps—the length of a moderate-sized apartment—away from the doomed conspirators. One of them ached a by-stander to hold his pipe. He went was perfectly tranquil. Verdegoer alone knelt down, the others stood upright, as a moment before the word was given to "Fire," Herpin spoke and said, "I and my companions die innocent. The real murderers of Lecompte and Thomas are freely promenading the Boulevards, and are styled gentlemen." Then the line of rifles was emptied into the bodies of the three. The bullets of the men did instantly, but others rolled about in hideous agony until a sergeant stepped close behind them, and saved them further pain. It was a terrible scene. Innocent or not, these men, like several others accused of similar crimes, died with a terrible show of daring. No matter the cause which made them more the fear of death, the last is undeniable, and so long as such men are found in France to recruit the army of disorder, so long as such men continue to inspire a turbulent and sensitive population, like that of Paris, with admiration of revolt, and with hatred of settled rule, so long will the safety of France be an uncertain good, and a good government a work of special zeal and danger.

ITALY.

Sentence Lenitigence.

GENERAL CIALDINI, whose sudden and awful death in the Quirinal we noticed last week, has received an anti-Catholic ovation on his way to the tomb. His past history deserved such a death, for he was the right-hand man of the butcher Cialdini, and was distinguished at Castelfidardo and Ancona as one of the leaders of the pious slaughter of the noble children of the Church. Qualis vita finis ita, says the Univers Correspondence, quoting the Latin for the Catholic Hungarians. The only reason that he was not refused Christian burial was the fear of his sudden death; under such circumstances it is always charitably supposed that if the unfortunate person had had the opportunity he would have sought reconciliation with God and the Church. Victor Amin has resigned the office of Prefect of the Quirinal; another blow this for the House of Savoy. The untimely late years have been of such a nature that the revolutionary journals themselves have expressed disgust at the scenes there exhibited. The holocenries of religion were blasphemously parodied during the saturnalia at the Capranica and Quirino theatres and at the Flora pavilion. Even some of the churches were invaded by drunken masqueers, who went so far as to imitate, before the eyes of the horror-stricken Romans, the Catholic ceremonies of this holy season. No intervention of the authorities took place during all this profanation, yet it is supposed that the Piedmontese have passed a law of guarantees. All in Rome are in daily expectation of the seizure of the possessions of the Church and of the religious orders. Victor Emmanuel has been keeping the first week of Lent at Naples, whither he fled to escape from the ennui of his ministers, to true Protestant style. It is "Mardigras" all the year round with this anti-sacramentalist Catholic. For the hundredth time we announce with thankfulness to God that the Holy Father, surrounded as he is by a sea of troubles, is in perfect health, and preserves that wonderful tranquility and courage of soul that fills his adversaries with the most fatal disquiet. The boldest and most impious of them feel that they have no measure weapons with a power that is supernatural, and their wicked hearts fall them.—London Universe, March 2.

IRISH INTELLIGENCE.

The Mullagh Evictions.

A most interesting and significant scene took place at the Hill of Mullagh on Monday last. An advertisement had been issued inviting the people of the surrounding district to meet at Mullagh and till the ground of the tenants threatened with ev'ction. The gathering was an enormous one, upwards of ten thousand persons being present. Mighty ploughmen were at work from early dawn, and many of the stalwart ploughmen came from a distance of eighteen or twenty miles. The fields of the tenantry having been ploughed in thorough style—and it was characteristic the bill is an oasis of tillage in a vast green desert given up to flocks and herds—a number of ploughing matches were speedily inclulded a stag hunt, horse races, and cognate amusements. All the people had a most delightful time, the greatest good humor prevailed. At the conclusion of the sports the Rev. Mr. Higgins addressed the assembly, and the crowd then separated.—Freeman, March 1st.

Expensive Luxury of Irish Factory Girls to Belgium.

The Belfast Morning News has called attention to the exportation of factory girls to Belgium, and a few days ago a solicitor brought the matter under the notice of the magistrates of the town. He stated that a considerable number of young girls have been shipped to Belgium, where it was promised they would be provided with employment at wages in advance of those received in that town, and that in some instances the girls were embarked without the knowledge of their parents or other responsible protectors. He had been waited upon by many poor women in great distress, whose daughters, aged respectively 15 and 16 years, left home unknown to them, and had been sent to Belgium, where it was believed there was a surplus population of similar workers. The two women came forward and confirmed the statement of the solicitor. The passing magistrate said it was a monstrous piece of business to send those young girls in that way without the knowledge or consent of their parents or guardians, and directed the head constable to institute inquiries immediately, and bring before him such information as he could ascertain relative to the whole transaction. The statements of the solicitor and the evidence of the two women have excited a great sensation.

Persecution Against Cardinal Cullen.

DUBLIN, Feb. 25.—In the action of the Rev. Robert O'Keeffe, parish priest of Callan, against Cardinal Cullen for libel, a summons and plaint have been issued in the Court of the Queen's Bench. Damages are laid at £10,000. The charge, which consists of four counts, states that the defendant, contriving and intending to injure plaintiff, and to hold him up to public odium, infamy and disgrace, did write and publish in the Latin language, of and concerning plaintiff, as he is a priest of the Roman Catholic Church, and declares suspended the plaintiff from all spiritual jurisdiction, from administration of sacraments, and especially from celebrating the mass; from hearing confessions, preaching, &c., and from every ecclesiastical office until he shall come to his right mind, and making satisfaction to the right mind, and making satisfaction, in defendant's opinion, to the Church, and further depriving him of all benefices ecclesiastical or otherwise, conferred on him by the Church, and of all dignity or rank conferred on him by the same way." The plaintiff claims an additional £2,500 by way of special damage, asserting that the result of this so-called suspension was his dismissal from the office of Catholic chaplain to the Callan Union, by the Poor Law Commissioners. In the fourth count plaintiff is charged with having published of plaintiff words to the effect, that it has been told by credible witnesses that the church or parochial chapel, meaning the parish church of Callan, of which plaintiff is parish priest, he said to have possession, the censures of the Church are set at naught, and the mass is illegally celebrated, and the sacrament of the Eucharist administered contrary to the discipline of the Church, and contemning the without jurisdiction, and infringements of ecclesiastical law and episcopal are in several other libel daily committed.

Unfrocking an N. P.

The Castlebar Telegraph writes as follows in reference to the recent patriotic action of the Corporation of Tuam:

The rather unusual ceremony of unfrocking an M. P. took place lately at Tuam. The citizens of that ancient borough, in their collective capacity, made The O'Donoghue a Member of Parliament to represent their wants and wishes, and look after their interests generally. For a time he discharged his duties to the satisfaction of his constituents; but growing weary of well-doing, he lately became unmindful of the social compact, and seemed to study his own interests more than those of the people. We regret to say that The O'Donoghue is not the first Irish national representative whose departure from the principles he once professed we have been obliged to chronicle. Political apostacy is not a very new thing among us. The lucre and the bar afford many specimens of the full-grown apostate, and, indeed, various other branches of the public service are recruited from the tributarious ranks. However, though deserters in the commission, rare, traitors is rare; and hence the universal importance attached to the ceremony adopted by the good people of Tuam. They suffered long and patiently, till patience ceased to be a virtue, and then they resolved to strike down the false one, who had so impiously made the trust confided to his keeping. They did strike, and effectually, too—for, by calling on the traitor to resign the honored trust into the hands that gave it, they deprived by one blow, the apostate of all power to act among honest men. It is not to be supposed that any National representative would lower himself by admitting a party, thus formally at strips of character and denounced as an outcast, into his confidence. Here, then, we have got an example of what honest men can effect when properly organized and determined to stand by their country. Had other constituencies, years ago, struck at apostacy with the same vigor, some who are now living on the taxes would be among the producers of wealth, and the cause they betrayed would not be in its present prostrate condition. There is time enough, however, to recover much lost ground. Let the next backslider be subjected to the salutary discipline applied to the Chief of the Glens, and the next, and the next also; and the present generation will see no more of such scandalous delections. What concerns it is generally known that corruptionists cannot trust over the necks of the people to office, the game will be changed, and those who make professions will see the danger of swerving from them. It is quite probable that another Southern constituency will, before the end of the present year, see the propriety of imitating to the letter the patriots of Tuam.

The Maxima Controversy.

Mr. Ralph Varden, of Cork, in a letter to the Irish Daily Telegraph, makes the following contribution to the biography of the great Irish painter, Maclise:

Alexander Maclise, father of our great artist, kept, when I knew him, a very small shoemak r's shop in the South Main street of Cork, between Castle street and Tuckey street; a man of rather eccentric habits, very upright, independent mind; speculative in the turn of his mind; not on sphalis perfectly limited liability shares, but on all subjects of abstract philosophy an eminently interesting man to converse with. There was a weekly debating society connected with the Presbyterian Church, Prince's street, which he used to attend, and at which he was a frequent speaker. I seldom could restrain the inclination to laugh when he arose. His first action was to fill a soiled pocket handkerchief into a ball in one hand, and, gazing steadily at the soiled ball which he thus dalliberately made, commenced his oration. He was generally, in his speculative philosophy, the last speaker of all the other speakers, he lag thought by the less thinking to be quite satisfied to be an expounder of rather dangerous doctrines. His wife, the respected mother of the great artist, was a woman of very many and very great importance, and to endeavor to secure for a young reader of Maxima Controversy however humbles in her manner and however anxious in her simple-minded and undisguised admiration of the high and the solid dear to which her son had attained, the Brussels correspondent of the Times (to which she declared "she sank to her ankles," and her innocent effort to pay the first visit to the Queen of the Belgians, was misguised, counseling from servants and all employers, and to the public in the columns of the all this at the very instant of time when the door was opened for her, busying out with white explanations in good Munster mellifluous tones, "Where is my son, Dan"—all this so honored in the breaking is far and away better biography than the usual commonplace attempt at what is apparently called in modern degenerate days "good birth, respectable connections," which, when stated, is perhaps found to mean that the father was a speculator not in practical sciences nor abstract philosophy, but in money bonds.

Wholesale Market Report.

MONTGOMERY STREET,
THURSDAY, March 28, 1872.

FLOUR—The local demand has continued fair, with only a limited inquiry for export, at unchanged rates, since our last weekly review. We quote standard brands of Oregon extra at $5 12½@5 25, and less brands as follows: Superfine, at $4 12½@4 75, and extra at $4 75 to 5 00 @ 5 00 bs.

WHEAT—The market is generally inactive, with free offerings, at unchanged prices. All the close we quote the nearest full figures:

BARLEY—The Market has been inactive during the week under review, at unchanged rates. Sales of ordinary coast to choice bay brewing at 1 to 1 90 lbs, which is the range of low grades and fancy.

OATS—The market has remained dull, at unchanged rates, during the past week—feed being in moderate request.

ONIONS—We quote fair to choice at $1@1 $1 00 lb.

POTATOES—Sales at $2 50 @ 3 00 lb.

BUCKWHEAT—Dull at $1 25 @ 1 50 lbs.

BUCKEYE MEAL—Sales at $3 50 @ 3 75 from mill.

SEEDS—We quote Flax at 3c; Canary, 6@6½; Hemp, 6½@7c; Timothy, 12½@15c.

HONEY—We quote Los Angeles Comb at 13@16c, and Extracted at 8@10c lb.

HOPS—We quote new crop choice at 19@20c; old crop at 10@12c; inferior dry at 10@12c, and wet at 6@8c.

TALLOW—Quotable at 9@9½ cents lb.

WOOL—The market for Spring Clip has been very free. 40,000 lbs Spring clip are noted, which have been sold at high figures.

DAIRY PRODUCE.

BUTTER—California firkin, Bublic: fresh 28 to 30c; pickled, 19@20c; Eastern firkin, Boston, 25 to 26c; Goshen, 30 to 32c; Delaware, Dunlap, 30c; Goshen, 32c; Dutch, 30c.

CHEESE.

HAMS—California at 15c; 9 lb Oregon, 13@ 14c; Eastern sugar-cured Breakfast, 16@18c; do cured, 15@16c.

BACON—California, 12½@13c; 9 lb Oregon, 12 @13; Eastern sugar-cured Breakfast, 16@18c; do cured, 15@16c.

FRESH MEATS.

BEEF—For first quality, 11@12c per lb; for second do, 7@9c.

VEAL—At 10@12c lb.

MUTTON—At 10@12c lb.

LAMB—Dressed, grain-fed, 11@12c; do fed, grass-fed, 7@9c lb.

POULTRY AND GAME.

TURKEYS—Hens, large, at 25 @28; Spring Chickens, 20@22; Roosters, 17 @20; Ducks.

DUCKS—Tame at $12@13 ₱ dozen.

GEESE—Wild, $1 50@2 50 ₱ pair.

GEESE—Tame, $2@3 ₱ pair.

QUAIL—Mountain, $1@1 50 ₱ dozen.

RABBITS—$1@1 50 ₱ dozen.

MISCELLANEOUS.

INFORMATION WANTED—OF MICHAEL and JOHN CURRIHAN. Any information respecting them will be thankfully received by their cousin, ROWE. McGRATH, 807 Mrs. Rockford, parent to Michael Flood, Catholic bookstore, 804 Market street, San Francisco. 3t24

SCHOOL BOOKS,
PRAYER BOOKS,
TOY & JUVENILE BOOKS.

ALL THE TEXT BOOKS USED IN THE CATHOLIC and Public Schools of California can always be found at

RYAN'S OLD STAND,
No. 40 Fourth street; near Jessie.

Parents and guardians of limited means will find it to their advantage to trade where no advantage will be taken of their necessities, and at the lowest living rates. A full assortment of Fancy Goods has just been received from the publishers, to which attention is respectfully called.

☞ The Monitor always on hand.—tf8 mh2

New and Important Publications.

THE LIFE, PERSECUTIONS & REVELATIONS
—OF THE—
VENERABLE MARY ANNE TAIGI.

Her recently supposed connection with the prophecy of the Abbot Barbarion, will make the life of this venerable woman a most interesting book at this time.

VERONICA;
OR,
Devotions to the Holy Face of our Lord.
With pen-and-ink Indulgences.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL PRAYER AND HYMN BOOK, with 36 beautiful Illustrations, and Music. Just received and for sale by all booksellers.

CATHOLIC PUBLICATIONS.—Any books not descriptively enumerated above, will make the life of this venerable woman a most interesting book at this time.

EUGENE CUMMISKEY, Publisher,
mh2 1227 Chestnut street, Philadelphia.

Thirty-Two large Double-Columns Pages every Month for One Dollar a Year.

THE YOUNG CRUSADER,
ILLUSTRATED
CATHOLIC MONTHLY MAGAZINE
—FOR—
CHOICE READING
—AND—
Good Pictures.

Read with interest by all, and with special delight and profit by the younger members of the family.

The Crusader is now in its fourth year.

The Rev. Fathers say it is the best of the kind.

Sample Copies free to all who ask for them.

Back Numbers always on hand.

Handsome Premiums are given to those who get up Clubs.

☞ Liberal Discount to Sunday Schools.

Send One Dollar (one year's subscription) by mail, addressed to the Editor,

REV. WILLIAM BYRNE, Boston, Mass.

A. WALDTEUFEL,
IMPORTER AND DEALER IN
BOOKS, STATIONERY
—AND—
MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS,
207 MUSIC HALL,
FIRST STREET, SAN JOSÉ.

AGENT FOR

STEINWAY & SONS' PIANOS,
CHICKERING & SONS' PIANOS,
HITCHCOCK'S CELEBRATED ORGANS.
—ALSO—
MASON & HAMLIN ORGANS.

Agent for the CATHOLIC PUBLICATION SOCIETY
CATHOLIC WORLD,
YOUNG CATHOLIC,
BIBLIOGRAPHIA CATHOLICA AMERICANA.

NEW CATHOLIC BOOKS

Received once a week, both from England and the United States.

CHURCH ORNAMENTS,

Crucifixes, Rosaries, Scapulars, Water Pots, Sacred Pictures, Frames, Lithographs, and Steel Engravings—all sold at

Prices to Defy Competition.

☞ Orders from the East or Europe, in French, Spanish, Italian and German imported to order, as well as table or any other language, at short notice, and best manner, and most reasonable charges.

BOOKS

Having correspondents on the Continent as well as in the Eastern States, the undersigned can fill what ever order the Rev. Clergy or Catholic Families may wish to be filled.

mh16 A. WALDTEUFEL.

POLL TAX
Now Due,
AND PAYABLE AT THE
TAX-COLLECTOR'S OFFICE
OR TO A DEPUTY.
mh9-1m

IRISH AND AMERICAN
FLAGS AND BANNERS,
SILK OR BUNTING.

On hand, for sale or made and painted to order, by

O. J. BARRON,
815 Market street, San Francisco.

☞ Country orders promptly attended to. feb

EBERHART & LACHMAN,
MANUFACTURERS OF
CALIFORNIA SPARKLING WINES.

SWEET AND DRY CHAMPAGNES, Sparkling Muscatel and Catawba. Also, White and Yellow Wines all kinds and of all ages, Angelica, Muscatel, Madeira, Port, Sherry, Hock, Moselle, Vineyard, Malaga, Sweet and Dry Catawba, &c., Grape Brandies, 5 to 8 years old. All our Wines are made entirely from California Grapes, and are highly recommended as a cure for Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Debility, Fevers, and all diseases requiring a tonic.

YOUR QUACKS.—A VICTIM OF FAMILY indiscretion, causing nervous debility, premature decay, etc., having failed in vain every advertised remedy, has discovered a simple means of self-cure, which he will send free to his fellow-sufferers. J. H. Reed, 78 Nassau street, New York. mh9-4t

DRY GOODS, ETC.

GRAND
CONSOLIDATION
—OF—
KERBY, BYRNE & CO.
—AND—
TAAFFE & CO.
—AT—
7 Montgomery Street.

The undersigned now offer to the public the whole of

THEIR LARGE STOCK
—OF—
FANCY AND STAPLE
DRY GOODS,
Together with that of
TAAFFE & CO.,
—AT—
A GREAT SACRIFICE.

Having combined the Stocks of the Two Stores, we are determined to give our Customers and the Public generally
An opportunity to purchase
DRY GOODS CHEAPER THAN EVER BEFORE,
AND CALL PARTICULAR ATTENTION TO THIS SALE.

The combined Stocks comprise a Complete Assortment of

SILKS, DRESS GOODS, LACES,
SHAWLS,
HOSIERY, EMBROIDERIES,
ALL KINDS OF
Housekeeping Goods, Mourning Goods
And in fact every article kept by a first class Dry Goods Store, and at

PRICES TO SUIT EVERYBODY

☞ Call and examine our Goods and Prices, and we are satisfied we will guarantee our Goods CHEAPER than any ever before offered.

The stock of Dry Goods

MUST BE SOLD

To make room for

LARGE SPRING IMPORTATIONS.

KERBY, BYRNE & CO.,
7 Montgomery street.
mh9

STORE FIXTURES FOR SALE.

THE HANDSOME FIXTURES IN THE STORE No. 9 Montgomery street, lately occupied by Taaffe & Co., are offered for sale, low. Inquire at 7 Montgomery street. mh9

1872—SPRING ARRIVALS—1872

LANDERS, BYRNE & Co.

Have just opened and now offer for sale, their splendid stock of Spring

DRY GOODS,

Consisting in part of

PIQUES, in endless variety;
BRILLIANTES,
SATIN STRIPES, something new;
ORGANDIES, the latest out for wrappers;
CAMBRICS and LAWNS in all shades;
JAPANESE SILKS, brocaded and striped;
SUMMER SILKS, from $1 25 up;

BLACK SILKS

Of the very best makes, direct from Lyons;

And the World Renowned

IRISH POPLINS,

In all shades, direct from PIM BROS., Dublin.

IN OUR CORSET.

DRESS GOODS DEPARTMENT

Will be found goods direct from the Looms, from 25 cents upwards, suitable for suits, specially adapted for the coming season.

HOSIERY, GLOVES, HANDK'FS,
EMBROIDERIES,
LACES, and SMALL WARES,

HOUSEKEEPING GOODS

Being a specialty with us, our patrons can always depend on finding this department well worthy of their consideration.

☞ At the above stock of Goods will be purchased at the lowest cash prices, before the late sales are over, our numerous patrons and friends will have the benefit of the best selected stock of goods in our store at the very lowest prices.

LANDERS, BYRNE & CO.,
4 Third Street.

OILT, WALNUT & ROSEWOOD
Mouldings and Oval Frames,
ENGRAVINGS, LITHOGRAPHS
CHROMOS
AND LOOKING-GLASSES.

Depot for Currier & Ives' Pictures.

I AM CONSTANTLY ADDING TO MY STOCK the very latest patterns of Mouldings and all new and desirable goods in the trade. I am enabled to offer inducements to parties purchasing, to call and supply the trade at lower rates than any other house on this coast. Catalogues and price lists sent on receipt of stamp.

☞ Particular attention paid to country orders.

S. MAGUIRE,
202 and 204 Sansome street,
Between Sacramento and Commercial and Montgomery and Sansome streets, San Francisco. mh9

BANKING.

LAND MORTGAGE UN
OF CALIFORNIA,
OFFICE, 126 POST STREET, SAN FRA
GUARANTEE CAPITAL.....
President.....J. R.
DIRECTORS.
John Morton, John Nightingale,
Thomas R. Hayes, John M. Jones,
D. C. Mahoney, J. B. Van,
Henry Kimball.
INVESTMENT CAPITAL.....
Investing shares, $100 each. Entrance fe per share. Fortnightly subscriptions, $ share. Paid up shares, $47 50.
Interest allowed on fixed deposits from January.
Loans from 3 to 10 per cent. per month, JOHN T. CARTER, jy13 Secretary.

HIBERNIA SAVIN
AND
LOAN SOCI
Office—Northeast corner of Montgomery an streets.
OFFICERS:
President.....M. D.
Vice-President.....C. D.
TRUSTEES:
M. D. SWEENY, M. J. O'CON
C. D. O'SULLIVAN, P. McGRAT
JOHN SULLIVAN, JOS. DONOH
R. J. TOBIN, PETER DO
Treasurer.....EDWARD R.
Attorney.....RICHA

Remittances from the country may be made by Express, Wells, Fargo & Co., or Bank of California, backing bonds; but the Society will not be responsible for the safe transmission of funds. Certificates of deposit for the amount of each book will be delivered to the agent by whom deposit is made.

Office Hours—From 9 A. M. to 3 P. M.

JOS. A. DONAHOE, | DONOHOE, KELLY &
Banker, | BANKERS,
SAN FRANCISCO.

EUGENE KELLY & C
NEW YORK.

BANKER

EXCHANGE O
NEW YORK, LONDON, a BANK OF IRELAND.....
Payable at all the Branch
AND IN EVERY COUNTY TOWN IN I

LYNCH & COMI
MANUFACTURERS OF
Overstrung, Grand, Square & U
PIANOS
WAREROOMS,
Nos. 203, 205, 207 and 209 Post street,
NEW YORK.

THESE PIANOS ARE UNSURPASSED in Tone, Touch, Workmanship and Durability, and powerful Tone. Great Durability, and are warranted for Five Years. Call and examine.

Description and Price

(The Pianos will be delivered in San Fra prices given.)

No. 1—7 Octaves. Rosewood case, carved legs, plain legs, carved legs.....
No. 2—7 Octaves. Large Piano, round corners, handsomely polished, carved legs and lyre.....
No. 3—7 Octaves. Large Piano, finest and most expensive modelling, carved legs and lyre.....
No. 4—7 Octaves. Large Piano, finest and most expensive modelling, fretted top, carved legs and lyre.....
No. 5—7 Octaves. Grand.....
No. 6—7 Octaves. Grand.....
All the above Pianos are made with the Agraffe action, and are handsomely polished.

UPRIGHT PIANOS.

Screw Octave—Black Walnut case.....
Very fine. Rosewood case.....
PARLOR ORGAN—Walnut case, with 2 full Octaves and stops, as manufacturers' price list.

TESTIMONIALS.

Below will be found a few of many letters of unsolicited testimonials:

[From Mrs. General W. T. Sherman, wife of General Sherman, U. S. A.]

MESSRS. LYNCH & COMBS—Gentlemen: Each succeeding year the Piano you made for me really a fine instrument in every respect, retained its tone and beauty of finish in a remarkable degree, delicacy of touch and beauty of tone and elasticity of action, which I have never seen in the same degree in any piano, and which I have not found in any other instrument I have ever had in my own house. I can cheerfully recommend you to any who may wish to purchase. I am very truly yours, ELLEN M. SHERMAN.
204 J street.
The value of the above letter can be verified by

Hon. JOHN MONTGOMERY, Attorney-at-Law, No. 204 J street.

[From the World-renowned Artist, Carlo Macchi.]

MESSRS. LYNCH & COMBS—Gentlemen: I have much pleasure in recommending your Instruments to the public. Your Instruments possess rare merits, and are made of the best materials. Yours truly, CAMILLO MACCHI.

[From Rev. J. Shea, S. J., President of St. Ignatius College.]

PRESIDIO, N. Y., June 1, 1871.
Messrs. LYNCH & COMBS—Gentlemen: I am pleasure to state that the Pianos which you furnished for the College are entirely satisfactory. Yours truly, JOHN SHEA, S. J.

[From the Sisters of Charity, Academy of the Holy Family, corner Fifth and Howard streets, San Francisco.]

Having Lynch & Combs's Pianos in our Academy, we unanimously recommend them as not superior, to those of any other manufacturer.

[From Mr. James Sadlier, 599 West 29th street, New York.]

MRS. JAMES SADLIER has very great pleasure in stating that the Piano purchased of Messrs. Lynch & Combs, has given entire satisfaction, and is unsurpassed for sweetness of tone and elasticity of touch.

[Extract of a Letter from the Superior of a Convent in Oregon.]

I have much pleasure in stating that the Piano I had purchased from you is all that I could have wished. The beauty and finish of the instrument, together with its delicacy of touch, have elicited many praises from those competent to judge of its merits. The Piano has been tested in a climate of more than ordinary humidity, and yet it has not suffered in the least from the change. Please accept my thanks for the kind attention you have shown me in the selection of the instrument.

The Piano that I bought for my daughter is a treasure, last fall, is considered a first class Piano in tone, and decidedly cheaper than the Italian Piano I bought in this city.

SALMON

SALMON IN BARRELS AND KE
Now Smoked Salmon and Herring.
Herrings in Barrels and Half-barrels.
And all kinds of Pickled and Smoked Fish.
For sale by A. J. GILLESPI
No. 126 Washington street.

THE MONITOR:
A WEEKLY JOURNAL, DEVOTED TO
Irish and Catholic Literature
AND GENERAL INTELLIGENCE.
PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY, BY
LYONS & BARRY
DENIS LYONS. ..... JOHN T. BARRY.
DENIS LYONS. ..... BUSINESS MANAGER.
OFFICE—339 CLAY STREET, between Montgomery and Kearny sts. (Rooms 2, 7 and 5, up-stairs.)
☞ All communications, whether relating to the business or editorial departments, should be addressed to "LYONS & BARRY."
ONLY IRISH and CATHOLIC JOURNAL IN CALIFORNIA.
TERMS (Payable in Advance):
Served by Carriers, per week..... 10c
Single numbers, per year..... $4 00
Six months..... 2 25
The Sacred Heart Review, per year..... 3 00
The Catholic World's Library Book..... 3 00
The Catholic World's Publication Agency..... 3 00
The Illustrated Democrat's Fashion Magazine 3 00
☞ For Club rates, see page 7, ¶ 3.
Job Printing Executed Neatly and Obesply.

GOVERNOR DOWNEY'S ORATION.

MONITOR:—In last week's MONITOR you give J. G. Downey's oration on Patrick's Day at Los Angeles. If the latter be correct, as I presume it is, it will rank among the worst feats of those who long abused the orthodoxy of the "Government Party" by making it their stalking horse. Such a speech was calculated to make Victor Emmanuel the instrument of the destruction of their country, the Irish have no right to join in the cry of disloyalty, is undeserving of notice. It is worthy of the bitterest Protestant bigot, and could only proceed from a mind bitterly hostile to Rome, and filled with the poison of modern liberalism. But it will be a lesson to Catholics to learn that Ireland suffered as much at the hands of Catholic governments of England as she did at the hands of Protestant rulers. Oh, well. We had always thought that they were entitled to the palm in this respect, and think the Catholic Sovereigns of England never persecuted Catholics for conscience sake.

Farewell Protestant Orator of St. Patrick's Day. Farewell degenerate son of Ireland's sainted Apostle, rotten branch of that Church, which for eighteen centuries has fought the battle of truth against apostasy and error, that long suffering land, whose soil is red with the blood of its martyrs for truth and principle. The children of the age and the spirit of the world have sapped the foundations of that faith which should, by your most cherished memories of the past, as it ought to be your only hope for the future; and those foundations (purely hereticael) have instilled into your mind an antipathy to all principles with the leaven of infidelity. More recall of your long connection with them.

May the God of mercy remember in your behalf the sacrifices that you have made in the cause of right; and may the great Advocate, who pleads for us in heaven, when you attempted to pronounce, intercede for you. That you may obtain the grace to come back to the one true faith, which alone can give you unhappily strayed.

A CATHOLIC.

ANOTHER PICTURE.

Under the character of Jay Gay has given them in his geography—namely, that "they are ardent in their affections," until I read in your last MONITOR an account of the celebration of St. Patrick's day. But the eloquent and learned orator has clearly shown the ingratitude of the Irish to their best benefactor, the English nation! also, he has demonstrated that Irish priests are indebted to England for their national Apostle, St. Patrick, who was a subject of England! he has also proven that Ireland is no less indebted to England for her civilization in the twelfth century, when Henry II., with the sanction of Pope Adrian, came over to Ireland to reclaim the wild Irish. And again, after the "Reformation," during three centuries England, with the same parental solicitude, has watched over Ireland, and in ample opportunity of propagating their faith throughout the wide world, and opposed no obstacle to their departure for ever from the land of their sires. Pope Adrian and learned orator of last St. Patrick's Day is a living proof of the "best habitation and the name" which Irishmen have acquired in foreign lands. Were it not for the fatal terms for the vanquished. Again, the Orator of St. Patrick's Day laments "We Irish are proverbially improvident," and we do not attach much to many because it is strong: strong to principle and will fight for it. Improvident have become just now the Irish Republicans in consequence of their integrity and honesty? "many" is which are are attached (?), is unquestionably an Irishman himself. Such a man's religion is if it be to be friend, to trade with to vote for him. Much of this unorthodox arises from the fact that the Catholic laity are not sufficiently conscious of the various benevolent organizations which the civilization of this age seem to demand. These organizations are purely temporal in their character, their first assurance given to those who wish to join them, is that they shall not interfere with their duties to the religious body they profess, their duties to the state they owe allegiance to. And yet, because of political organizations in Italy, secret character, a general hall is issued to those of the most useful subjects in the Church, as the sanctity of the family, and consequently that England is, what Byron calls Rome, "the parent of his religion"—I could understand his feelings against his Anglo-Saxon mother. But ingratitude to the country that gave birth to St. Patrick is inexcusable by ingratitude to the Popes who sent him to preach the gospel in Ireland, and who subsequently exempted the green isle from the curse of England—whether she was true to her trust or not, is not the fault of Pope Adrian—and the crowning ingratitude of all is that which is exhibited in a country in whose laws and social elevation! Well, indeed, may Kegan and Paul's opinion, in the language of Dante to Ingatus, Et in quemque Brutus.

AND STILL ANOTHER.

SACRAMENTO, April 1, 1872.

EDITOR MONITOR:—Could that lover of "his people," Orator Downey, have dat-

THE MONITOR.
VOL. XV. SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., SATURDAY, APRIL 6, 1872. NO. 21.

FIRING THE DAY.

Says Patrick O'Brien to Kathleen Malvedin, (dis'nt
Now why won't you be a Miss Mac or Mrs. O'Brien?
Says Kathleen: Why, Pat, what a hurry you're in!
Sure the Pope will (if he wishes) or even (if he can)

"Oh, no, Kathleen," says Pat: "in all sense and all
The Sisters are the proper marrin' saints: (raisin
Sure I'll find (I'll forgive him—for it's he loves me best.
There's saints like wedain' in wisher, 'tis plain."

PATRICK.

IN Kathleen you're protection you mean from the cowld,
That for shame young men call the Equator, I'm told.
Where's the use of your marrin' I be off and you
PATRICK.

But there's also a spot not so frequently warmed,
Sure for cold weather, dear, double I'm fit.
Where now-a-days, if still she can't make up her
KATHLEEN.

A substantial coffee called Kathleen you'll find.

PATRICK.

Is it threaten' you are that, (I do as said and Sure I'll find (I'll forgive him—for it's he loves me best.
That isn't a man like a lamb till the summer came KATHLEEN.

Well, well not my dear Kathleen will die as cold
PATRICK.

And we'll bother no more about Larry McQuaide.

PATRICK.

Sir, Kathleen you're sure, owre there wedain's in spring,
Is over the Long Bridge, and not in the County Kerry,
Nor in Cork, Dublin, or simon in a wall.
Why, you ought to have been married at all.
Sure I'll find (I'll forgive him—for it's he loves me best.
Would he thought such a fuss about nothin' at all.
Now say "yes," for the sake of the Lord Mayor,

KATHLEEN.

Whisper Patrick, the contract I'll seal with—a promise.

PATRICK.

Will you really promise that, Kathleen, per cause?

KATHLEEN.

Whisper Patrick, the contract I'll seal with—a promise.

PATRICK.

Sure I'll find (I'll forgive him—for it's he loves me best.

ST. PATRICK'S DAY IN STOCKTON.

Hon. Robt. Ferral's Oration.

STOCKTON, April 2, 1872.

EDITOR MONITOR:—Believing that the able address of Hon. Robt. Ferral is worthy of a place in THE MONITOR, I send it to you for publication. T. C. M.

MR. PRESIDENT, LADIES AND GENTLEMEN:—Through the skeletons of the Irish-American Benevolent Society of Stockton, I have been selected to address the people on this occasion. The opportunity is thus presented, and I embrace it gladly, to speak a few words in favor of the Irish race, especially for the weak against the strong; for justice, charity, civilization, God and humanity. To speak, in short, for the right.

"More dear in its gloom, its tears and its shower
Than the rest of the year is one bright April hour."

This day set apart without intentionally wounding the feelings of any man, on matter what his religion or the land of his birth, for the purpose of giving vent to the heart-felt impulses that beat through the breast of the Irish race wherever they may be found, and the earth from chaos rolled into the first day, has been observed by the Irish people, whether in a great mansion, or schools or stood a lot, as a day of rejoicing, and of thanksgiving to God, for the blessings He has showered

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

ENGLAND.

Prison Labor.

Rather a curious meeting was held on last Monday night at the Lambeth Baths, Westminster Road. The purport of it was to bring inroads into the system of monopoly of trade by prison authorities. It seems that in one branch alone of mat-making they complain competition had been so sweeping that outside honest hard-working operatives had had their wages reduced exactly one-half, from thirty shillings to fifteen shillings per week. In Wakefield prison eight hundred convicts are employed in mat-making, and, in addition, one powerful steam engines are kept at work, the result of which is that they are able to undersell independent employers, who, having to pay not alone for material, but for labor, find it impossible to compete with the prison authorities. Of course the poor operatives thrown out of employment will have either to starve and die, or, perforce, qualify themselves to receive employment at the hands of the more prosperous mat capitalists, the prison authorities. Who dare say that honesty is the best policy, when by an outlay of shillings rifle barrels are turned out by the dozen, and when by a brutish rowdyism, one can be sure of board, lodging, washing and constant work!—Universe, March 2.

FRANCE.

Bianqui on Universal Suffrage.

The Pall Mall Gazette says that the conspirator Bianqui, writing lately to one of his friends, expressed himself thus on universal suffrage in France:

The Republicans have paid dearly for the premature application of an ideal, admirable for the future, but fatal for the present. The people, being nourished with absurdities, do absurdities, and to expect anything else from them is as futile as seeking peaches on a plum tree. . . . Universal suffrage had its origin in the large towns which have not seen further than their own circle, and have thought France composed of the same elements as themselves. From this error the plebiscites of 1851, 1852, 1857, 1865, and 1870, resulted. Four times has rural ignorance proclaimed Bonaparte; and before Bonaparte it created the Legislative and Constituent Assemblies, which were scarcely worth more than he. Shall not the political manifestations of a country always be the reflection of the ideas which have always existed, and not on anything more than the seeds sown in the intellects be produced by universal suffrage after twenty years of despotism and systematic demoralisation? The same thing happened in 1848 through the idiocy of Democrats. They wanted to reap a Republic in a field which was sown by Monarchy, and, to their great astonishment, they have only reaped the three varieties of the old plant, with the addition of the choice. Before the corn can grow on an unfertile soil the earth must be ploughed three or four times, or else the crop will be lost. The peasants know it well, and do not fall into the same error as the Republicans. Follow their example and apply to their intellects the means employed for purifying the soil; and, above all, do not risk the good seed before having little by little destroyed the bad ones. After the revolution of 1848 several years of intellectual preparation ought to have proceeded and prepared popular suffrage. It is by the idea, and never by strength, that a nation must be conquered.

Universal suffrage is a sentimental principle among us; it will be five minutes more before it will become a mockery. The next result of this acropole is that universal suffrage will add the vote by ballot, which would have, some fifteen years ago, made a representative assembly impossible, and would have killed us as a nation by their immediate application. We will still be altogether if the same extravagance be attempted anew.

More Executions.

The three men—Verdaguer, Lagrange, and Herpin—who were found guilty by court-martial of complicity in the murder of the Generals Thomas and Lecompte, and were shot to death the other day at the Camp of Satory in pursuance of the sentence decreed against them, certainly faced their fearful doom bravely enough. Arrived on the execution ground smoking cigars, and continued to smoke with all appearance of calmness until the firing party had shot them down. This was no ordinary trial of nerve when the line of shining rifle barrels gleamed only ten short steps—the length of a moderate-sized apartment—away from the doomed conspirators. One of them asked a by-stander to feel his pulse. Its beat was perfectly regular. Verdaguer, one of the others, was the first to fall. Lagrange, alone heard above the word "Feu!" the sharp report of the rifles, and died without a struggle. Herpin, the third, was a terrible coward. He struggled with the soldiers who bound him to the stake, and, after depriving him of all means of committing suicide, left him to his fate. Then he began to howl and shriek, and continued to do so until the bullets struck him. Two of them broke his jaw, and the rest passed through his body. The wounded man's howls were terrible even then. He was dragged from the stake, and, while still writhing in agony, was finished by a shot from the revolver of a gendarme. Three of the men executed in this terrible manner were Communists, and the fourth was a Bonapartist. Of the latter, Lagrange, it is said that he was a man of good family, and had been a captain in the army. He was a Bonapartist, and was condemned to death for having taken part in the attempt to assassinate M. Thiers on the Champs Elysées. Verdaguer was a Communist, and was condemned to death for having been a member of the Commune. Herpin was a Communist, and was condemned to death for having been a member of the Commune. Herpin was a Communist, and was condemned to death for having been a member of the Commune. Herpin was a Communist, and was condemned to death for having been a member of the Commune.

Piedmontese have passed a law of guarantees. All in Rome are in daily expectation of the seizure of the possessions of the Church and of its religious orders. Victor Emmanuel has been keeping the first week of Lent at Naples, whither he fled to escape from the cowl of his ministers, in true Protestant style. It is "Mardigras" all the year round with this excommunicated Catholic. For the hundredth time we announce with thankfulness to God that the Holy Father, surrounded as he is by a sea of troubles, is in perfect health, and preserves that wonderful tranquility and courage of soul that fills his adversaries with the most bad dismay. The boldest and most impious of them feel that they have to measure weapons with a power that is supernatural, and their wicked hearts fail them. — London Universe, March 2.

IRISH INTELLIGENCE.

The Mullagh Evictions.

A most interesting and significant scene took place at the Hill of Mullagh on Monday last. An advertisement had been issued inviting the people of the surrounding district to meet at Mullagh and till the ground the tenants threatened with eviction. The gathering was an enormous one, upwards of ten thousand persons being present. Eighty ploughmen were at work from early dawn, and many of the stalwart ploughmen came from a distance of eighteen or twenty miles. The fields of the tenantry having been ploughed in the usual style—and it may be remarked the hill is an oasis of tillage in a huge green desert given up to flocks and herds—a number of rural sports were indulged in. Those included a sack bust, horse races, and dramatic amusements. All went merry as a marriage bell, and the greatest possible humor prevailed. At the conclusion of the sports the Rev. Mr. Higgins addressed the assembly, and the crowd then separated.—Freeman's Journal.

Exportation of Irish Factory Girls to Belgium.

The Belfast Morning News has called attention to the exportation of factory girls to Belgium, and a few days ago a solicitor brought the matter under the notice of the Corporation of the town. He stated that a considerable number of factory girls have been shipped to Belgium, where it was presumed they would be provided with employment at wages in advance of those received in that town, and that in some instances the girls have embarked without the knowledge of their parents or other responsible protectors. He had been waited upon by two poor women in great distress, whose daughters, aged respectively 15 and 16 years, left home unknown to them, and had been sent to Belgium, where it was believed there was a popular population of similar workers. The two women came informed and confirmed the statement of the solicitor. The presiding magistrate said it was a monstrous piece of business to send away young girls in that way without the knowledge or consent of their parents or guardians, and directed the head constable to institute inquiries immediately, and bring before him such information as he could ascertain relative to the whole transaction. The statement of the solicitor and the evidence of the two women here excited a great sensation.

Action Against Cardinal Cullen.

DUBLIN, Feb. 25.—In the action of the Rev. Robert O'Keeffe, parish priest of Callan, against Cardinal Cullen for libel, a summons and plaint have been issued in the Court of the Queen's Bench. Damages are laid at £10,000. The charge, which consists of four counts, states that "The defendant, contriving and intending to injure plaintiff, and to hold him up to public odium, infamy and disgrace, did write and publish in the Latin language, of the tenor following," and proceeds to set out the libel. The defendant suspends and declares suspended the plaintiff from all spiritual jurisdiction, from administration of sacraments, and especially from celebrating the mass; from hearing confessions, from preaching, and from exercising any ecclesiastical office until he shall come to his right mind, and making satisfaction, in defendant's opinion, to the Church, and further depriving him of all benefits, ecclesiastical or otherwise, conferred on him by the Church, and of all dignity or rank conferred on him by the Church, and of all power of acting in that capacity." The plaintiff claims an additional £2,500 by way of special damage, asserting that the result of the publication complained of was his dismissal from the office of Roman Catholic chaplain to the Callan Union, by the Poor Law Commissioners. In the fourth count defendant is charged with having published of plaintiff words to the effect that he had been told by credible witnesses that in a church or parochial chapel, meaning the parish church of Callan, of which the priest, Robert O'Keeffe, is said to have possession, the censures of the Church are not as sanguine, and the mass is illegally celebrated, and the sacrament of baptism illegally administered, and the holy discipline of the Church, and confessions heard without jurisdiction, and intrigue and want of ecclesiastical law and episcopal care is in several other thing daily committed.

Forwarding an Address to the Pope.

The Castlebar Telegraph writes as follows in reference to the recent patriotic action of the electors of Tralee:

"The railway and ceremony of unfrocking Mr. M. P. took place lately at Tralee. The citizens of this ancient borough, to show their appreciation of the Pope's Encyclique a number of Parliament to represent their wants and wishes, and look after their interests generally. For a time he discharged his duties to the satisfaction of his constituents but growing weary of well-doing, he lately became unmindful of the social compact, and seemed to study the interests of more than those of the people. We regret to say that The O'Donoghue is not the first Irish national representative whose departure from the principles he once professed has been obliged to chronicle. Political apostacy is not a thing of yesterday. The bench and every new thing among us. The bench and bar afford many specimens of the full-grown apostate, and, indeed, various other branches of the public service are recruited from the traitorous ranks. However, though desertion is not uncommon, rewards there was a popular population of similar workers. The two women came informed and confirmed the statement of the solicitor. The presiding magistrate said it was a monstrous piece of business to send away young girls in that way without the knowledge or consent of their parents or guardians, and directed the head constable to institute inquiries immediately, and bring before him such information as he could ascertain relative to the whole transaction. The statement of the solicitor and the evidence of the two women here excited a great sensation.

Action Against Cardinal Cullen.

DUBLIN, Feb. 25.—In the action of the Rev. Robert O'Keeffe, parish priest of Callan, against Cardinal Cullen for libel, a summons and plaint have been issued in the Court of the Queen's Bench. Damages are laid at £10,000. The charge, which consists of four counts, states that "The defendant, contriving and intending to injure plaintiff, and to hold him up to public odium, infamy and disgrace, did write and publish in the Latin language, of the tenor following," and proceeds to set out the libel. The defendant suspends and declares suspended the plaintiff from all spiritual jurisdiction, from administration of sacraments, and especially from celebrating the mass; from hearing confessions, from preaching, and from exercising any ecclesiastical office until he shall come to his right mind, and making satisfaction, in defendant's opinion, to the Church, and further depriving him of all benefits, ecclesiastical or otherwise, conferred on him by the Church, and of all dignity or rank conferred on him by the Church, and of all power of acting in that capacity." The plaintiff claims an additional £2,500 by way of special damage, asserting that the result of the publication complained of was his dismissal from the office of Roman Catholic chaplain to the Callan Union, by the Poor Law Commissioners. In the fourth count defendant is charged with having published of plaintiff words to the effect that he had been told by credible witnesses that in a church or parochial chapel, meaning the parish church of Callan, of which the priest, Robert O'Keeffe, is said to have possession, the censures of the Church are not as sanguine, and the mass is illegally celebrated, and the sacrament of baptism illegally administered, and the holy discipline of the Church, and confessions heard without jurisdiction, and intrigue and want of ecclesiastical law and episcopal care is in several other thing daily committed.

Forwarding an Address to the Pope.

The Castlebar Telegraph writes as follows in reference to the recent patriotic action of the electors of Tralee:

"The railway and ceremony of unfrocking Mr. M. P. took place lately at Tralee. The citizens of this ancient borough, to show their appreciation of the Pope's Encyclique a number of Parliament to represent their wants and wishes, and look after their interests generally. For a time he discharged his duties to the satisfaction of his constituents but growing weary of well-doing, he lately became unmindful of the social compact, and seemed to study the interests of more than those of the people. We regret to say that The O'Donoghue is not the first Irish national representative whose departure from the principles he once professed has been obliged to chronicle. Political apostacy is not a thing of yesterday. The bench and bar afford many specimens of the full-grown apostate, and, indeed, various other branches of the public service are recruited from the traitorous ranks. However, though desertion is not uncommon, rewards there was a popular population of similar workers. The two women came informed and confirmed the statement of the solicitor. The presiding magistrate said it was a monstrous piece of business to send away young girls in that way without the knowledge or consent of their parents or guardians, and directed the head constable to institute inquiries immediately, and bring before him such information as he could ascertain relative to the whole transaction. The statement of the solicitor and the evidence of the two women here excited a great sensation.

Action Against Cardinal Cullen.

DUBLIN, Feb. 25.—In the action of the Rev. Robert O'Keeffe, parish priest of Callan, against Cardinal Cullen for libel, a summons and plaint have been issued in the Court of the Queen's Bench. Damages are laid at £10,000. The charge, which consists of four counts, states that "The defendant, contriving and intending to injure plaintiff, and to hold him up to public odium, infamy and disgrace, did write and publish in the Latin language, of the tenor following," and proceeds to set out the libel. The defendant suspends and declares suspended the plaintiff from all spiritual jurisdiction, from administration of sacraments, and especially from celebrating the mass; from hearing confessions, from preaching, and from exercising any ecclesiastical office until he shall come to his right mind, and making satisfaction, in defendant's opinion, to the Church, and further depriving him of all benefits, ecclesiastical or otherwise, conferred on him by the Church, and of all dignity or rank conferred on him by the Church, and of all power of acting in that capacity." The plaintiff claims an additional £2,500 by way of special damage, asserting that the result of the publication complained of was his dismissal from the office of Roman Catholic chaplain to the Callan Union, by the Poor Law Commissioners. In the fourth count defendant is charged with having published of plaintiff words to the effect that he had been told by credible witnesses that in a church or parochial chapel, meaning the parish church of Callan, of which the priest, Robert O'Keeffe, is said to have possession, the censures of the Church are not as sanguine, and the mass is illegally celebrated, and the sacrament of baptism illegally administered, and the holy discipline of the Church, and confessions heard without jurisdiction, and intrigue and want of ecclesiastical law and episcopal care is in several other thing daily committed.

MISCELLANEOUS.

INFORMATION WANTED—Of MICHAEL and JOHN CURRIHAN. Any information respecting them will be thankfully received by their cousin, ROSE HEGARTY, San Mateo, Redwood street, in Michael Flood's catholic bookstore, 641 Market street, San Francisco.

SCHOOL BOOKS, PRAYER BOOKS, TOY & JUVENILE BOOKS.

At the TEXT BOOKS USED IN THE CATHOLIC and Public Schools of California can always be found at

RYAN'S OLD STAND,

No. 40 Fourth street, near Jessie.

Parents and guardians of limited means will find it to their advantage to trade where no advantage will be taken, and all goods sold at the lowest living rates. A fine assortment of Prayer Books has just been received from the publishers, to which attention is respectfully called.

☞ The Monitor always on hand. 9 mh1

New and Important Publications.

THE LIFE, PROPHECIES & REVELATIONS —OF THE— VENERABLE MARY ANNE TAIGI.

Her recently supposed connection with the prophecy of the 5 days' Darkness, will make the life of this remarkable woman a most entertaining book at this time.

VERONICA; Or, Devotions to the Holy Face of our Lord. With prayers and Indulgences.

THE HOLY FACE PRAYER-BOOK AND HYMN BOOK, with 36 beautiful illustrations of the Mass; the Stations of the Cross; and other devotions.

CATHOLIC WORKS and articles of every description kept constantly on hand. Send for complete list of Catholic Books. Address

EUGENE CUMMISKEY, Publisher, 1937 Chestnut street, Philadelphia.

Thirty-Two large Quarto Colored Pages every Month for One Dollar a Year.

THE YOUNG CRUSADER, AN ILLUSTRATED CATHOLIC MONTHLY MAGAZINE —FOR— CHOICE READING —AND— Good Pictures.

Read with interest by all, and with special delight and profit by the younger members of the family.

The Crusader is now in its fourth year.

Specimen Copies free to any one of the kind.

Back Numbers can always be supplied.

Handsome Premiums are given to those who get up Clubs.

A Liberal Discount to Sunday Schools.

Send One Dollar (one year's subscription) by mail, addressed to the Editor,

REV. WILLIAM BYRNE, Boston, Mass.

A. WALDTEUFEL, IMPORTER AND DEALER IN BOOKS, STATIONERY —AND— MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS, 927 MUSIC HALL, FIRST STREET, SAN JOSE.

STEINWAY & SONS' PIANOS, CHICKERING & SONS' PIANOS, SHERLOCK, MANNING & CO.'S PIANOS.

MASON & HAMLIN ORGANS.

Agent for the CATHOLIC PUBLICATION SOCIETY CATHOLIC WORLD, YOUNG CRUSADER, BIBLIOGRAPHIA CATHOLICA AMERICANA.

NEW CATHOLIC BOOKS Received once a week, both from England and the United States.

CHURCH ORNAMENTS, Crucifixes, Rosaries, Scapulars, Water Fonts, Sacred Pictures, Crosses, Lithographs, and Steel Engravings. All Sold at

Prices to Defy Competition.

☞ Orders from the East or Europe, "S

French, Spanish, Italian and German

BOOKS

Imported to order, as well as Latin or any other language, at short notice, and best usual remuneration.

☞ Correspondence on the Continent or in the Eastern States, the undersigned can fill what he is filled. 9 mh1 A. WALDTEUFEL.

POLL TAX Now Due, AND PAYABLE AT THE TAX-COLLECTOR'S OFFICE OR TO A DEPUTY. mh1-1m

IRISH AND AMERICAN FLAGS AND BANNERS, SILK OF BUNTING.

Always on hand, for sale or made and painted to order, by

C. J. BARRON, 828 Market street, San Francisco.

☞ Country orders promptly attended to. fe1

EBERHART & LACHMAN, MANUFACTURERS OF CALIFORNIA SPARKLING WINES.

SWEET AND DRY CHAMPAGNES, Sparkling Muscatel and Catawba, Still Muscatel and Catawba, Claret, Sherry, Angelica, Muscatel, Madeira, Port, Riesling, Hock, Mineral Vineyard, Malaga, Brandy, Rectified Cognac, etc., etc., for sale by the manufacturers, 14 Battery street, San Francisco. Principal depot, corner of Pine and Market streets, San Francisco.

VITIS CALIFORNICA.—A VICTIM OF RAILWAY and other accidents, suffering nervous debility, prostration, etc., having tried in vain every advertised remedy, has discovered a simple means of self-cure, which he will send free to his fellow-sufferers. Address, 16 Nassau street, New York. mh16-1y

DRY GOODS, ETC.

GRAND CONSOLIDATION —OF— KERBY, BYRNE & CO. —AND— TAAFFE & CO. —AT— 7 Montgomery Street.

The undersigned now offers to the public the whole of THEIR LARGE STOCK —OF— FANCY AND STAPLE DRY GOODS, —AT— A GREAT SACRIFICE.

Having combined the Stocks of the Two Houses, we are determined to give our Customers and the Public generally an opportunity to purchase

DRY GOODS CHEAPER THAN EVER BEFORE,

AND CALL PARTICULAR ATTENTION TO THIS SALE.

The combined Stocks comprise a Complete Assortment of SILKS, DRESS GOODS, LACES, SHAWLS, HOSIERY, EMBROIDERIES, RIBBONS, LACES, and SMALL WARES.

HOUSEKEEPING GOODS

Being a specialty with us, our patrons can always depend on finding this department well worthy of their unbounded confidence.

☞ As the above stock of Goods were purchased at the lowest cash prices, before the late advance, our numerous patrons and friends will have the benefit of the most select stock of goods in town at the very lowest prices.

KERBY, BYRNE & CO., 7 Montgomery street.

THE HANDSOME FIXTURES IN THE STORE 7 Montgomery street, lately occupied by Taaffe & Co., are offered for sale at a bargain. Inquire as above. 9 mh1

1872—SPRING ARRIVALS—1872

LANDERS, BYRNE & Co.

Have just opened and now offer for sale, their splendid store of styles

DRY GOODS,

Consisting in part of

PIQUES, in endless variety: BRILLIANTES, SATIN STRIPES, something new: GRENADINES, the best out for wrappers; CAMBRICS and LAWNS in all shades; JAPANESE SILKS, brocaded and striped; SUMMER SILKS, from $1 25 up;

BLACK SILKS

Of the very best makes, direct from Lyons;

And the World Renowned

IRISH POPLINS,

In all shades, direct from PIM BROS., Dublin.

IN OUR GENERAL DRESS GOODS DEPARTMENT

Will be found a splendid line of throds, from 25 reals upwards, suitable for suits, specially adapted for the coming season.

HOSIERY, GLOVES, HANDK'FS, LACES, and SMALL WARES.

HOUSEKEEPING GOODS

Being a specialty with us, our patrons can always depend on finding this department well worthy of their unbounded confidence.

☞ As the above stock of Goods were purchased at the lowest cash prices, before the late advance, our numerous patrons and friends will have the benefit of the most select stock of goods in town at the very lowest prices.

LANDERS, BYRNE & CO., 4 Third Street.

GILT, WALNUT & ROSEWOOD Mouldings and Oval Frames, ENGRAVINGS, LITHOGRAPHS CHROMOS AND LOOKING-GLASSES.

Depot for Currier & Ives' Pictures.

☞ Circulars and full particulars can be obtained at The Monitor Office.

SALMON

SALMON IN BARRELS AND KITS. Also, Mackerel, Herring, Codfish, Etc. And all kinds of Pickled and Smoked Fish. For sale by J. GIL No. 110 Washington street.

BANKING.

LAND MORTGAGE OF CALIFORNIA. OFFICE, 123 FONT STREET, SAN F. GUARANTEE CAPITAL.

President..... DIRECTORS. John Morton, John Mackey, Thomas R. Hayes, John M. Horner, E. G. Maloney, J. H. Fish, Henry Kimball.

INVESTMENT CAPITAL..... Investing Shares, $100 each. Mortgages per share. Fortnightly subscriptions per share. Paid up shares, $47 50.

Interest allowed on fixed deposits payable on demand.

Loans from 3 to 12 per cent. per annum. 1y13 JOHN T. CARTER, Secretary.

HIBERNIA SAVI —AND— LOAN SOCI Office—Northeast corner of Montgomery and Sutter streets.

OFFICERS: President..... M. D. Sweeny. Vice-President..... C. D. O'

TRUSTEES: M. D. SWEENY, M. J. O'CO. C. D. O'SULLIVAN, P. MCAULA. JOHN SULLIVAN, GUSTAVE. D. J. TOBIN, JAMES PETER DUNNE.

Treasurer..... EDWARD Attorney..... E. MCGL.

Remittances from the country may be made through Wells, Fargo & Co.'s Express, or any banking house; but the fortnightly subscription of $1 per share, or the monthly subscription of 50 cents per share, must accompany the deposit, or it will be returned to the agent by whom it was sent.

Deposits received from $1 upwards.

OFFICE HOURS—From 9 A. M. to 3 P. M.

JOS. A. DONAHUE, Secretary pro Tempore.

DONOHOE, KELLY & CO. SAN FRANCISCO. EUGENE KELLY & CO. NEW YORK

BANKERS

EXCHANGE ON NEW YORK, LONDON, BANK OF IRELAND.....

Payable at all the Branches AND IN EVERY COUNTY TOWN IN

LYNCH & COM MANUFACTURERS OF Overstrung, Grand, Square & PIANO

Nos. 908, 910, 912 and 914 POST STREET, NEAR JONES, SAN FRANCISCO.

THESE PIANOS ARE UNSURPASSED for Elastic Touch, Singing quality of tone, Even Scale, and Great Durability, and combine that rendere a PIANO FIRST CLASS in every particular.

Description and Prices

The Pianos will be delivered to any part of the State, free of cost.

No. 1—Rosewood, Large French, round corners, Carved Legs and Lyre..... $ 350 No. 2—7 Octaves, Large front, round corners, Carved Legs and Lyre..... 375 No. 3—7 Octaves, Large front, round corners, Carved Legs and Lyre..... 400 No. 4—7 Octaves, Large front, round corners, Carved Legs and Lyre..... 425 No. 5—7 Octaves, Large front, round corners, Carved Legs and Lyre..... 450 No. 6—7 Octaves, Large front, round corners, Carved Legs and Lyre..... 475 No. 7—7 Octaves, Large front, round corners, Carved Legs and Lyre..... 500

These Pianos are all in Rosewood, handsomely polished.

UPRIGHT PIANOS.

Seven Octaves—Black Walnut case..... Very fine, Rosewood..... PARLOR ORGANS AND MELODEONS of all sizes and styles, at manufacturers' prices.

TESTIMONIALS

Below will be found a few of many complimentary testimonials received:

[From Mrs. General W. T. Sherman.]

MANSE, LYNCH & COMPANY—Gentlemen: The Piano you sold me is a splendid instrument, and really a fine instrument in every respect. Its tone is sweet, powerful, and of great volume, delicacy of touch and beauty of finish. I have been in our parlor, and all who have seen it has been in our parlor, and all who have heard it play pronounce it a splendid instrument. We consider it an ornament to our parlor, and will always recommend your instruments to any one who may wish to purchase. I am very truly yours, MRS. GEN. W. T. SHERMAN. 924 J street.

The original of the above letter can be seen at the office of Mr. Monstrue.]

[From the World-renowned Artist, Dr. Louis Gottschalk.]

NEW YORK, March 1, 1871. MESSRS. LYNCH & COMPANY—Gentlemen: I have great pleasure in stating that the Piano which you sold me has given entire satisfaction to myself and Pupils in Music. I can recommend it to the public as a first-class instrument. Yours, etc., L. GOTTSCHALK.

[From the Sisters of Charity, Academy of the Immaculate Conception, Santa Clara.]

Having Lynch & Gunnen's Pianos in our Academy, we take pleasure in recommending them as not surpassing, by those of any other manufacturer.

From Mrs. James Sadlier, 128 West 38th street, New York.

Mrs. James Sadlier has very great pleasure in recommending the Pianos of Messrs. Lynch & Gunnen. Mrs. Sadlier has had them in her parlors for several years, and finds them excellent instruments—mellow, rich, and sweet in tone.

[Extract of a Letter from the Superior of the Academy of the Sacred Heart, Grass Valley.]

I have much pleasure in stating that the Pianos purchased from you for this Academy have given entire satisfaction to the Community and Pupils. They are justly admired for their rich, sweet tone, and for the perfect manner in which they stand in tune. I shall take pleasure in recommending them to all friends. I am, sir, very respectfully yours, SISTER M. [illegible].

The Piano that I bought for my daughter, last fall, is considered a fine instrument in tone, and decidedly cheaper than can be bought in this city.

☞ Circulars and full particulars can be obtained at The Monitor Office.

SALMON

SALMON IN BARRELS AND KITS. Also, Mackerel, Herring, Codfish, Etc. And all kinds of Pickled and Smoked Fish. For sale by J. GIL No. 110 Washington street.

PERSONAL.—MICHAEL GARVIN will oblige by calling on or addressing his brother, JOHN, at DR. VER MEHR, Granville, Napa county, Cal. mh2-4t

PERSONAL.—MICHAEL GARVIN will oblige by calling on or addressing his brother, JOHN, at DR. VER MEHR, Granville, Napa county, Cal. mh2-4t

THE MONITOR:

A WEEKLY JOURNAL, DEVOTED TO Irish and Catholic Literature AND GENERAL INTELLIGENCE.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY, BY LYONS & BARRY

JOHN LYONS..... JOHN T. BARRY. JOHN LYONS..... BUSINESS MANAGER.

OFFICE—522 CLAY STREET, between Montgomery and Kearny sts. (Rooms 11 and 1, up-stairs.)

☞ All communications, whether relating to the editorial or business departments, should be addressed "LYONS & BARRY."

THE ONLY IRISH and CATHOLIC JOURNAL IN CALIFORNIA.

TERMS (Payable in Advance):

Single Copy, per week..... 10c. Single Copy, per year..... $4 00. Six Months..... 2 25. Monitor and Catholic World, per year..... 7 00. Monitor and Sadlier's Lady's Book, per year..... 5 00. Monitor and Peterson's Magazine..... 4 50. Monitor and Demorest's Fashion Magazine..... 5 00.

☞ For Club rates, see page 7.—ED. Printing Executed Neatly and Cheaply.

GOVERNOR DOWNEY'S ORATION.

EDITOR MONITOR:—In last week's Monitor you give Jr. G. Downey's oration on St. Patrick's Day at Los Angeles. If that be correct, as I presume it is, it will class the worst fears of those who long feared the orthodoxy of the "tolerant" States. We who could stand before a public audience and utter such anti-Catholic sentiments while calling himself a Catholic, must have lost the very meaning of the word. He was told that he was roundly applauded by his hearers. To me shame to it said. To the shame of Catholics who could listen unmoved to the expression of such blasphemy as that set against the Church and its Supreme Head.

It cannot follow him through this ramification, but it will not take a long time to pass from his own words that J. G. Downey is a far better Protestant than he is glory in the name, and is every day enabled to join the "old Catholic"—Protestants—under the leadership of Cranmer and Loyson.

Upon his batteries by stating how the Protestant element of Henry II. were and abetted by his courtiers, obtain of the grace of God (mind you) Pope!" King O'Brian expostulated with him. All-for permitting them unto let suffer the treatment they were receiving at the hands of Henry II. of Rome. He surely must have known the matter of sliding and abetting is to grave doubts, as the authenticity of whose members are under an investigation. The "inventor" as they are purely benevolent, and the political possible aids to religion, of public virtue. The Church does not to be hostile to religion and to faith and morals. But as the greatest possible aids to religion and to public virtue. The first have made a great mistake in the them, and consequently in the and "Philanthropic" men, like

J. G. Downey, has become unpopular. But whoever willfully asserts that the Church erred in her decisions in matters relating to faith and morals, is guilty of heresy, and consequently is outside its pale. But this J. G. Downey has done; therefore,

The assertion that (?) 35,000,000 of Italians will be made Victor Emmanuel the instrument of the liberation of their country, the Irish have to join in the cry of robber king, is undeserving of notice. It is worthy of the bitterest Protestant, and could only proceed from a mind bitterly hostile to Rome, and filled with the spirit of modern liberalism. But it will be news to Catholics to learn that Leonard suffered as much at the hands of Catholic Governments as Protestant. He did at the hands of Elizabeth and Cromwell. We had always thought that they were entitled to the palm in this respect, and that the Catholic Sovereigns of England never persecuted Catholics for conscience sake.

Farewell Protestant Orator of St. Patrick's Day. Farewell degenerate son of Ireland's saintly Apostle, rotten branch of the Church, which for eighteen centuries has fought the battle of truth; apostate child of Erin, that long suffering land, whose soil is red with the blood of the martyrs for truth and principle. The liberalism of the age and the spirit of the world have sapped the foundations of that faith which should, be your most cherished moments of the past, as it ought to be your only hope for the future; and those first principles (heavily underscored) have instilled into your mind an anti-Catholic principle with the leaven of infidelity. Sure result of your long connection with them.

May the God of mercy remember in your behalf the sacrifices made by your fathers in the cause of right; and may the great Saint, whose panegyric, in your own way, you attempted to pronounce, intercede for you, that you may obtain the grace to come back to the one true fold, which you have unhappily strayed.

A CATHOLIC.

EDITOR MONITOR:

BOSTON MONITOR:—I gave the Irish credit for the character which Gay has given them in their geography—namely, that "they are ardent in their affections," until I read in your last MONITOR ex-Governor Downey's oration (?) on St. Patrick's Day. But the ancient and learned orator has clearly shown the ingratitude of the Irish to their best benefactor, the English nation! He has demonstrated that the Bonaparte Government of England for their national Apostle, St. Patrick, who was a native of England; he has also proven that Ireland is no less indebted to England for her civilization in the twelfth century, when Henry II., with the sanction of Pope Adrian, sent Strongbow & Co. to reclaim the wild Irish. And again, after the "Reformation" during three centuries England, with the same generous solicitude, gave the Irish, priests and people, an ample opportunity of propagating their faith throughout the wide world, and opposed no obstacle to their departure for ever from the land of their nativity. The eloquent and learned orator of last St. Patrick's Day has told us that the loyal habitation and the name" which Irishmen have acquired in foreign lands. Were it not for the fatality of emigration afforded them by England, Ireland would have wasted their awestricken in the desert as at home!" they might have lived and died

"Except, sabonsest and unsung."

Instead of being raised to the dignity of "druggists" in the land of the free—yes, and of Governors! and even of "vice-presidents" (shades of Johnson and Webster such honors!)

Yet, with an ingratitude which is inaccountable, every anniversary of St. Patrick's Day is made the occasion of an attack on England by renegade Irishmen who are indebted to her for the little civilization they have, for their civilization and elevation to the chief government of States! Simply under the rule of her Most Holy Pontiff, and at the approach of the first spirit of revolution, hastened to avow her fidelity to her Pontiff and King. Given to those Bishops of St. Peter's was filled for three consecutive days with a multitude of the faithful imploring the succor of Almighty God, and this after the troops of General Victor Emmanuel had entered the gates of Rome, while the representatives of neutral countries looked on. Such was the conduct of the Catholic Sovereigns of England never persecuted Catholics for conscience sake.

Farewell Protestant Orator of St. Patrick's Day. Farewell degenerate son of Ireland's saintly Apostle, rotten branch of the Church, which for eighteen centuries has fought the battle of truth; apostate child of Erin, that long suffering land, whose soil is red with the blood of the martyrs for truth and principle. The liberalism of the age and the spirit of the world have sapped the foundations of that faith which should, be your most cherished moments of the past, as it ought to be your only hope for the future; and those first principles (heavily underscored) have instilled into your mind an anti-Catholic principle with the leaven of infidelity. Sure result of your long connection with them.

May the God of mercy remember in your behalf the sacrifices made by your fathers in the cause of right; and may the great Saint, whose panegyric, in your own way, you attempted to pronounce, intercede for you, that you may obtain the grace to come back to the one true fold, which you have unhappily strayed.

A CATHOLIC.

EDITOR MONITOR:

BOSTON MONITOR:—I gave the Irish credit for the character which Gay has given them in their geography—namely, that "they are ardent in their affections," until I read in your last MONITOR ex-Governor Downey's oration (?) on St. Patrick's Day. But the ancient and learned orator has clearly shown the ingratitude of the Irish to their best benefactor, the English nation! He has demonstrated that the Bonaparte Government of England for their national Apostle, St. Patrick, who was a native of England; he has also proven that Ireland is no less indebted to England for her civilization in the twelfth century, when Henry II., with the sanction of Pope Adrian, sent Strongbow & Co. to reclaim the wild Irish. And again, after the "Reformation" during three centuries England, with the same generous solicitude, gave the Irish, priests and people, an ample opportunity of propagating their faith throughout the wide world, and opposed no obstacle to their departure for ever from the land of their nativity. The eloquent and learned orator of last St. Patrick's Day has told us that the loyal habitation and the name" which Irishmen have acquired in foreign lands. Were it not for the fatality of emigration afforded them by England, Ireland would have wasted their awestricken in the desert as at home!" they might have lived and died

"Except, sabonsest and unsung."

Instead of being raised to the dignity of "druggists" in the land of the free—yes, and of Governors! and even of "vice-presidents" (shades of Johnson and Webster such honors!)

Yet, with an ingratitude which is inaccountable, every anniversary of St. Patrick's Day is made the occasion of an attack on England by renegade Irishmen who are indebted to her for the little civilization they have, for their civilization and elevation to the chief government of States! Simply under the rule of her Most Holy Pontiff, and at the approach of the first spirit of revolution, hastened to avow her fidelity to her Pontiff and King. Given to those Bishops of St. Peter's was filled for three consecutive days with a multitude of the faithful imploring the succor of Almighty God, and this after the troops of General Victor Emmanuel had entered the gates of Rome, while the representatives of neutral countries looked on. Such was the conduct of the Catholic Sovereigns of England never persecuted Catholics for conscience sake.

Farewell Protestant Orator of St. Patrick's Day. Farewell degenerate son of Ireland's saintly Apostle, rotten branch of the Church, which for eighteen centuries has fought the battle of truth; apostate child of Erin, that long suffering land, whose soil is red with the blood of the martyrs for truth and principle. The liberalism of the age and the spirit of the world have sapped the foundations of that faith which should, be your most cherished moments of the past, as it ought to be your only hope for the future; and those first principles (heavily underscored) have instilled into your mind an anti-Catholic principle with the leaven of infidelity. Sure result of your long connection with them.

May the God of mercy remember in your behalf the sacrifices made by your fathers in the cause of right; and may the great Saint, whose panegyric, in your own way, you attempted to pronounce, intercede for you, that you may obtain the grace to come back to the one true fold, which you have unhappily strayed.

A CATHOLIC.

AND STILL ANOTHER.

SACRAMENTO, April 1, 1872.

EDITOR MONITOR:—Could that lover of "his people," Orator Downey, have distorted himself that he prated of anything new when admonishing his countrymen and lovers of their folly for not saying well done to Victor Emmanuel, Bismarck (or any other one), their unholy crusade against the Pope? "It is just what we Irish want," quoth His ex-Excellency. This gentleman can't distinguish between the legitimate aspirations of Irish patriots and the unhallowed doings of the Carbonari of Continental Europe. No; not even Bismarck at Rome is obnoxious to Pius IX., neither could he be sent to Rome, by the Pope could only observe with regret the stupidity of a misguided and learned orator his Sacred Majesty is apparently put forward seriously, we will hope in jest.

1. That most assuredly we would have a proper self-respect would have followed Victor Emmanuel from Turin to Florence.

2. That if Europe has committed itself to its cost, it has only done so under the power, transitory as it has proved, of Napoleon III. That Bismarck, against the imperial policy, its violent and persistent enemy, ought not now to assume as their own a policy and hatred so much denounced as one of compromise and exasperation.

3. It is important to observe that the fall of the Grand Duke of Tuscany, although a severe blow to public right and to civilization, cannot for a moment be compared to the fall of the Papacy, a blow indeed to the same principles, but, by reason of the position of the dethroned Prince, full of the direst consequences to both the Catholic nations of the earth. It is one thing to lop off even the principal limb of a tree, but quite another to strike at the root, and entirely a different thing to cut down the tree, and eradicate it root and branch. This is a self-evident truth that requires no demonstration.

4. It must not be forgotten that between the fall of the Throne of T

Father Burke on St. Patrick's Day.

The great Dominican preacher, Father Burke, delivered the Oration on Sunday, March 17th, at St. Patrick's Cathedral, in New York. He began by saying words on the commencement of the faith of Christ on earth. Coming thence to St. Patrick, he said:

The conversion of Ireland from the time of St. Patrick's landing to the day of his death, is in many respects, the strangest fact in the history of the Church. The fact is the history of the Church. The fact is the history of the Church. The fact is

Father Burke on St. Patrick's Day.

The great Dominican preacher, Father Burke, delivered the oration on St. Patrick's Day, March 17th, at St. Patrick's Cathedral, in New York. He began by some words on the commencement of the faith of Christ on earth. Coming thence to St. Patrick, he said:

The conversion of Ireland from the time of St. Patrick's landing to the day of his death, is, in many respects, the strangest fact in the history of the Church. The whole island was converted to the faith in a single day with no opposition; his enemies became more the instruments of progress than the most difficult labor of a mile. The Gospel, with its issuance and adjuncts—prayer, or purity, penance, self-discipline, which refines on heaven, is not congenial to fallen man. His pride rebels against the blindness of his understanding, and his darkness of heart, all opposed the spread of the Gospel; so that the very fact that mankind had so universally received it, is adduced as a proof that it must be from God. The work of the Catholic Church, therefore, ever since, and especially in modern times, has been a work of great labor and difficulty, and it is wonderful that it ever been among all the nations that it has been a great exception. She is the most unpopular thing in the world; perhaps, the only country in the world that entirely rejects her is that country which was converted by her. He found her in every country where Christianity was established, and in every country he left her. He found her in Italy, pagan; he left it, again, the only nation Christian. He found it the seat of sorrow; he left it the seat of joy. She welcomed the pagan; he left it a Christian. She found Rome, made it the fountain of knowledge for Augustine, pagan; she saint and doctor of the West. She found Ireland, and took the blood of her children to bring it to the knowledge of God, and made it the fountain of knowledge and love; she found Ireland, pagan; she left it Christian and made it the source of light to the world. She found Ireland, pagan; she left it Christian and made it the source of light to the world. She found Ireland, pagan; she left it Christian and made it the source of light to the world. She

WEEKLY CALENDAR.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING APRIL 13, 1872:

Saturday—Low Sunday.
Sunday—Annunciation of the B.V. M.
Monday—St. Francis of Paula, Confessor.
Tuesday—St. Isidore, Bishop, Confessor and Doctor of the Church.
Wednesday—St. John B. de la Salle, Confessor.
Thursday—St. Leo, Pope and Doctor.
Friday—St. Victorin Yeretz, Professor.
Saturday—St. Hermenegild, Martyr.

THE MONITOR!

THE ONLY

Irish and Catholic Journal in California.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

SATURDAY.....APRIL 6, 1872.

GOVERNOR DOWNEY'S ORATION.

It was our intention to say a few words last week concerning the very curious oration delivered on 18th March by the Hon. John G. Downey, ex-Governor of California, before the Saint Patrick's Benevolent Society of Los Angeles. The report of the speech, however, did not reach us until a few hours before our time of going to press, so we had no opportunity of carrying out our purpose just then. We deal with the subject to-day, although it may appear rather late, because the errors committed by Mr. Downey are too numerous and too grave to be passed over in silence coming from a person of his position and character.

Taken as a whole the speech is decidedly un-Catholic in tone, and it must be a matter of surprise that any man professing to be or aspiring to be a child of Peter could be capable of delivering it. Shorn of a few sentences apologetic in nature, the oration might readily be mistaken for that of the sayings of a modern latitudinarian, bitterly opposed to the Church, yet cunning enough to veil his hostility under a semblance of liberality. Consequently, although Mr. Downey may not think himself a Catholic, and even may make outward profession of his faith by going to Mass, if he really hold the opinions indicated in his speech, his orthodoxy is far worse than questionable.

In the first place, we impeach his oration as imprudent at the very outset. What, we would ask, was the advantage to be derived from a revival of the controversy about Pope Adrian's Bull? Did the orator expect to strengthen Ireland's case against England thereby; or did he think it would strengthen Rome in the estimation of Ireland? Was representing one of Christ's vicars as an enemy to Ireland and a friend to tyranny, part of a plan to make his countrymen more attached to the Holy See? We doubt it exceedingly. Well and truly did Sir Charles Ogilvie, "an enemy built done this." Governor Downey of course must be taken to be a better instructed man than any of the audience on Saint Patrick's Day, and therefore he may be excused for overstaring to teach them political and ecclesiastical history. But we deeply regret to say he proved, by ignorance, that his knowledge was not sufficient to warrant him in assuming the role of an instructor.

He continues—"our religion, to which we are attached, is unpopular, although Irishmen themselves never inquire what a man's religion is if he wants to be his friend, to trade with him or to vote for him." The first clause is a mere platitude; truth must always be unpopular with error to the very end of time; that is to accordance with the nature of things and cannot possibly be changed. The latter half of the sentence demonstrates another glorious verity, viz; that the Irish are the most tolerant and neighborly people in the world. Immediately after this we get the astounding declaration—"Much of this unpopularity arises from the fact that the Church prohibits its members from belonging to any institutions or disinterested. It appears to us that he went to Ireland with one or the other of two intentions, neither of them free from reproach. He may have gone to win a kingdom for himself, in which case his claim would be even poorer than that of the English sovereign; or he may have gone simply to create a diversion in favor of his brother in Scotland, in which case he would have been guilty of wantonly aggravating the sufferings and adding to the misfortunes of our Catholic country. Moreover, in coming to the assistance of Ireland, in itself a good and laudable action, may have been rendered criminal by the attendant circumstances. We have not read this alleged Bull, nor are able to lay our hands upon it at the present moment, therefore we are unable to state positively the grounds upon which the Excommunication was launched. But judging from the character of the illustrious Pontiff to whom it is attributed, we are strong in our conviction that the anathema Bruce did not fall under Papal anathema because he went to the assistance of our countrymen against the English despoilers. We shall, we trust, be able to bring undeniable proof of the correctness of what we say, before long. It would assuredly be a dereliction of duty on our part if we allowed Mr. Downey's defamation of the Supreme Pastors of God's Church pass unchallenged.

When the orator quits the theme of medieval history and comes down to modern, he is equally erroneous and unfortunate in his teachings. He says—"We Irish are proverbially an impolitic people. We do not attach ourselves to party because it is strong, but we cling to a principle and will fight for it. We, therefore, have become fight for it. We, therefore, have become unpopular." This is all correct enough. Irishmen are not trimmers or time servers; they support principles, not men; they are ready when called upon by proper authority to make any earthly sacrifice for a good cause. But we fancy this redounds to their praise and ought to be their glory, yet from Mr. Downey's words it is hard to judge whether he does not consider this a fault. Says Mr. Downey: "If the clergy of Ireland had kept aloof from politics, and confined themselves to the discharge of their spiritual functions, they would fall under the same censure as the "political organizations" in Italy and other countries. But are they not identical? Has there ever been any protest made either publicly or privately by American Masons against the abominable doctrines taught by their European brethren? Is not the bond of union between them in full force and vigor at the present moment? Do they not recognize each other as members of the same great body, governed by the same rules and working for the same object? What justification would the Supreme Head of the Catholic Church have in drawing a line of distinction between Masons at the one side of the Atlantic and Masons at the other?

If by chance it does not suit the high clerics in this country to enunciate for the benefit of their disciples, all these splendid and social and religious principles, words the accomplishment of which the organization is being directed, because the said disciples are not sufficiently "advanced"—sufficiently divested of Christian principle to be led into the revelation, is American Masonry on that account to be held blameless and sequitted of complicity in the intrigues of its European sister? Does Mr. Downey wish to shield American Freemasons to show only the "purely benevolent" part of their programme, and to keep the rest for discussion at some future time when they are prepared to receive it? Such words as these are evasive, and will have deprived Christian faith of all vitality. Mr. Downey must know well enough that the Catholic Church would never brand with its anathema associations of a purely benevolent nature. He totally ignores the great and cardinal fact that secret societies are not evil because they are prohibited, but they are prohibited because they are evil. The difference between these two things is immense, and should not be left out of view by any man discussing such questions.

Mr. Downey's liberalism seems to have shaken his principles of rectitude. He asks: "If 35,000,000 of Italians want to make Victor Emmanuel the instrument of the liberty of their country, what right have we, Irish, to join in with the cry and style him the Robber King." Here a false hypothesis is assumed and on it a conclusion is necessarily erroneous. It is not by any means true to say that thirty-five millions of Italians demand Victor Emmanuel as the truth is that his throne is propped up by the bayonets of his army. If it were a "liberty" of Italy, we cannot understand how that has been secured by merely making one large monarchy where there were several little ones; moreover, it has never been proved that King Victor's Government is anything better than the worst of those it replaced, while there is at least some evidence to show that it is even more oppressive. The present ruler of Italy intrigued against his brother sovereigns; he made their capitals the theatre of his and the Pope's territory in time of peace, in contravention of solemnly entitled treaties, and even without the poor formality of a declaration of war; he confiscated the property of monks and nuns, and drove them penniless upon the world—the man who does these things is very justly styled a "robber." The fact of the criminal being a king does not entitle him to any more delicate treatment than if he were a mere vulgar burglar. So Irishmen are perfectly justified in stigmatising him as "the Robber King."

The crowning calumny of all is the last, to which we shall allude. Says Mr. Downey: "If the clergymen want an unity of the Great Germanic Empire, let them; we have no Irish to complain." None if the Germans do want it; but we complain, or rather cry out in indignation, when "unification" is forced upon them at the point of the bayonet. It is nonsense to assert the Germans wanted unity, the Prussians wanted it for their own national aggrandizement. The Orange continues: "Would not Louis Napoleon and Pio Nono's Prime Minister (a dexterous shuffle to avoid saying the Pope himself, which might enrage his authority, and you to Bismarck for the simple establishment of their temporal powers? I who speak to you assure you they would. They have done similar things before and would do it again."

It is hard to keep within the bounds of courtesy while characterising such a monstrous slander as this. There is not the smallest justification for it, and if Mr. Downey were on the spot asked his reasons for making such an assertion, we believe he could give none. He simply followed a dignitary of the Church he professes to revere, for the sake of making a point in a popular address. We need not say how low a man sinks when he assails his neighbor's character, and unless it declares him capable of the very basest treachery and dishonesty. He might as well have said that Pius IX. himself would embrace his aged hands in innocent blood in order to regain his lost sovereignty. But one statement is equally creditable and credible as the other. Both are simply scandalous and blasphemous defamations. It would require no great physical exertion to utter either; it would require nothing but—a great deal of audacity and a shocking disregard of truth.

We do not really know what could have tempted Mr. Downey to deliver such a speech. He cannot surely have thought it would advance the glory of God or the welfare of the Irish people. It contains no useful lesson; it inculcates no praiseworthy moral. On the contrary, it rouses us to all kinds, how "liberal" and "enlightened" an enlightened Catholic could be, and How fearlessly he could expose the "knaveries" of Pontiffs who for centuries have been unmasked by their graves. But we can tell the Orator of Los Angeles that the day of this false liberalism is past. There is no reason why Catholics should conceal their principles or "take the cross off the Cross" to propitiate any sect or any party. We can stand up in the light of day and cry out, "Those are the doctrines we hold; those are the principles I am glad to avow." People may differ from us; they may even condemn us; but, at all events, they must respect us.

At Brother Justin of St. Mary's College, we put it to Mr. St. Patrick's Day's generation, fidelity to principle has been, is and ever will be, the greatest characteristic of the Irish race. Therefore, we shall have no compromise with Catholicity, no cutting or pruning to make it fit nicely into the angularities of other people's principles. Mr. Downey will, we are confident, find that last "principle" of his "liberal Catholic" oration was not only most heterodox in spirit, but was a gross mistake in policy.

IWAKURA IN A NEW CHARACTER.

The existence of such a being as Iwakura was totally unknown in the United States a few months ago, now his name is frequently on every lip. He figures in the newspapers, and leading articles innumerable have been written about him. He has been feasted and lionized and lionized generally in many of our great cities; he has been presented to General Grant, and interviewed by intelligent and inquisitive reporters. And it is not right that this distinguished foreigner should be made much off. He is the official head of the Japanese Embassy and Japan, as we are told pretty nearly every morning, has entered on the path of progress and desires to be received among the brotherhood of civilized nations. The Tycoon, or Mikado, or Tenno, or whatever may be the proper appellation of the personage that exercises sway over Japan, has abandoned the traditional policy of excluding "outer barbarians" from communication with his dominions, and to Joseph Barbadette and to Francoise Richer and Joseph Rebout is the honor of Fontmain. 2. That he authorizes in his due to Nagasaki and to raise their remonstrances, as in one voice, against our Christian powers tolerating in the future such an influencement to the meritus Gouvernement of Japan as that while the absence from our treaties of any clause protecting the Christian religion now presents. It is clear that two thousand victims have been marked out for slaughter, and that sixty-five heads of families had already (at the time the article was written) been disposed of. The Christians are to be seized and carried off in small drafts so as to be operated upon, and imported off the face of the Empire in as quiet and unobtrusive a manner as possible. We quote another sentence from the private letter with which we have been favored, as it affords a curious evidence of advanced civilization was being carried out, the miserable victims were being playfully tortured this winter. "This time your friends," the foreigners add, "will know nothing of your torturings and sufferings."

Now here we have it upon authority which is indisputable, that Iwakura, whom we have been feting and honoising, has been recently playing the part of Nero, and condemning to horrible sufferings thousands of his countrymen simply because they dare to profess the faith for the true God. We wonder very much whether this distinguished foreigner, as he sat on honored guest at the tables of men who professed themselves Christians, ever felt any remorse of conscience for his infamous treatment of the forlorn and wretched of his entertainers. Would it not be a very desirable thing that some American would go out and through him tell the Lord's Day; yet you could plenty wherewith to feed your children, of our poverty and crime;" Dr. Gallitzin writes strongly against the Freemasons of the United States, and states that Roman Catholic countries it is all but impossible to bring a Freemason to a public confession, and states that in Rome itself, under the auspices of the Catholic Sunday School Union.

ST. PETER'S.—We understand the painting has in preparation a series of pictures calculated to interest all. At present we are unable to state further than that they will be delivered in English.

AMUSEMENTS.

METROPOLITAN THEATRE. This popular place of amusement has been very well attended during the past week. The attraction has been the Tycoon Troupe of Japanese Jugglers and acrobats. The troupe as a whole are not superior to others of the same nationality that we have already had in this city. But the performance of the twelfth boys, we might say almost infants, are simply astounding, and have never, we think, been surpassed by even adult contortionists. They alone are sufficient to warrant a visit to the theatre. Next week the celebrated "Lotta" will commence an engagement, and, no doubt she will draw large audiences.

THE HIBERNIAN.—We have been requested by the gentleman about to produce "The Hibernian" in Platt's Hall next week, to assure the public that his entertainment is the original and genuine one. That, under the same auspices, it was exhibited here some time ago, though good as it in any way, was only a copy and reproduced only a few of the characteristic features of the real Hibernian. If this be so, the public can rest thoroughly satisfied that the performance in Platt's Hall, when begins on Monday evening, will be exceedingly well worth a visit.

"Gaibrie's Sundays Abroad."

On this subject a "Manchester Catholic" writes: The doctor is certainly candid, as in general writes in a fair and impartial manner, but at times he exhibits no little considerable amount of bigotry. The London Tablet says—"The Glasgow bigot bell tolls down his blind on a Sunday, and goes blind drunk." I trust there are not many such, though it is well known that some do things quite as incongruous. I have often seen the terrible stealing of the Bible conformable to the spirit of the age.

It is stated that M. Thiers has spontaneously refused his offer of the hospitality of the Pope. Similarly the Emperor of Austria, has placed the chateau of Laxenburg at the disposal of Pius IX.

Mantalk has published a pastoral regarding mixed marriages, and stating that the Church has been and hatred to the children, issues of such marriages, be brought up in the Catholic faith.

The Duke, Rte. Victoria in religion, Governor of the Sisters of Mercy, at Sydney, has been presented with the Legion of Honor, in acknowledgment of her devoted attendance to the sick.

The recent deputations to the Holy Father from the Roman parishes have been of a touching character. With the fall and outrages of the brigand supports of the robber government, many of the many officers of the Piedmontese are now noticeable.

The Belgian French Assembly on questions against the nomination of an Minister to the Court of Italy at Rome, have again postponed. In the mean time the nomination of M. Fournier to the is confirmed.

The Silesian Gazette states that the agitation against Bismarck's new law for the introduction of civil marriage is greater than ever in Prussian Poland. The Polish people is immensely excited, and are ready to take any measures against the movement.

The Archbishop of Paris lately celebrated the Fête de Notre Dame, in order to beg the help of God on the patriotic subscription for the relief of Catholic Ireland in the occupied departments. The was delivered on the occasion by Abbé Langenieux.

OLD CATHOLICS IN AUSTRIA.—The Old Catholic Ministry is opposed to the fact that, in the present state of affairs, peace between the so-called Old Catholics and the Church by Old Catholics cannot be recognised as legal unless previously celebrated according to the forms required for legal marriage.

OLD CATHOLICS IN AUSTRIA.—The Old Catholic Assembly at Vienna.—The Old Catholic Assembly at Vienna recently Michael was held at Vienna recently. Its Bullifred, as usual, presided, and Cardinal Rauscher, Count Leo Thun, Carlon, Archbishop Rauscher, and Herr Huber, Professor of Schönbrunn.

CONVERSATIONS IN SPAIN.—The Spanish Protestants is that of Rev. F. Nunez de Prado, formerly Professor of the Geneva school of Theology. It has been stated by several of the Spanish papers, who have re to the ancient faith that they were promised a present of 1,000 reals, on the part of the Emperor of Germany, on their return to the Catholic Church.

Consular Projects in France.—The Catholic Committees of France, the annual meeting of deputies from all Catholic Committees of France, which will open on April 2nd, when questions will be discussed in cases of calling together a grand meeting, to be called the Congress of the Catholics of France, and also the best mode of the greatest possible development to the schools of the various Catholic Com-

The Belgian Ambassador to the Vatican.—During the debates on the budget in foreign department, discussion arose on the Chamber of Deputies with regard to mission whether it was desirable that there should retain a Minister at the Vatican, on the part of the Government conviction was expressed that a Minister should be maintained at the Court of the in order to defend the moral and interests of the majority of the

The Old Catholics in Austria.—A decree of the Minister of Public Worship orders that some of the documents issued by Old Catholic parties or the actions of priests shall by recognized by the Courts of the Reichsrath by the Government. The Minister of Public Worship declares that the measure is necessitated by the present state of affairs, which is already in a forward state.

Reynold Stathbien. — The Superior General of the Ignatian Society of Jesus has instituted a permanent Catholic Commission. This body intends to hold a Catholic annual. 2d, an inof all Catholic associations. 3d, communication of all the various Catholic of every nation. In order to carry last idea most effectually, the pastors of all Catholic publications are requested to send two copies of one of their journals for the present year to Dr. Arnaud Acquaderni, 210 Maggiore, 209, Bologna, Italy.

The German official papers are highly pleased at the spirited conduct of Marshal Canrobert, the grand chancellor of the German army, in having forbidden the celebration of the Holy Sacrifice in any of the churches of Paris by the Old Catholic party. According to these journals, Marshal Canrobert and the chaplains under his command are but an unimportant State institution, whose duty it is to celebrate Mass whenever and wherever they are ordered to do by the military authorities. Threats were openly avowed of abolishing the Catholic chaplains, and of again forcing the Catholic soldiers to attend the Lutheran

Apparition at Pontmain.—The Bishop of Laval, in consequence of the reports circulated to him by several commissions legally, has issued a pastoral letter declaring us, that he judges that the Immaculate Virgin Mary, Mother of God, did really on January 17th, 1872, appear to Eugene and Something New.—H. C. Bateman, Catholic Bookseller, 76 Kearny street, corner of Sutter, has a magnificent display of Holy Pictures, which will remain for 30 days, and Prayer Books in fact everything all through Holy Week. He has on hand a splendid stock of Catholic articles.

FOREIGN CATHOLIC NEWS.

(CLIPPED FROM CONTINENTAL JOURNALS.)

The Papal Nuncio has left Paris for Madrid in order to see his brother who is ill.

The Bishop and Clergy of Calahorra, Spain, have petitioned for Catholic interests have been

The Catholic association of Spain has the Queen of Grenada as its representative at the court of the Holy Father.

The Russian Government has prohibited, it is said to have openly expressed admiration of the Pope, after his late at the Vatican.

The Spanish Ministry has published, which orders the reserva- of the palaces of all cathedrals for the in- of non-Catholics.

A recent reports as to the re-nomination of the Vatican Council and the prob- departure of the Pope for Malta are positively contradicted.

The Protestant proselytizing agencies in have adopted the system of buying children of poor parents, and sending to be educated at Geneva.

Number of German Protestant pastors have signed a petition to the Government praying for an issue of a new edition of the Bible conformable to the spirit of the age.

It is stated that M. Thiers has spontaneously refused his offer of the hospitality of the Pope. Similarly the Emperor of Austria, has placed the chateau of Laxenburg at the disposal of Pius IX.

Mantalk has published a pastoral regarding mixed marriages, and stating that the Church has been and hatred to the children, issues of such marriages, be brought up in the Catholic faith.

The Duke, Rte. Victoria in religion, Governor of the Sisters of Mercy, at Sydney, has been presented with the Legion of Honor, in acknowledgment of her devoted attendance to the sick.

The recent deputations to the Holy Father from the Roman parishes have been of a touching character. With the fall and outrages of the brigand supports of the robber government, many of the many officers of the Piedmontese are now noticeable.

The Belgian French Assembly on questions against the nomination of an Minister to the Court of Italy at Rome, have again postponed. In the mean time the nomination of M. Fournier to the is confirmed.

The Silesian Gazette states that the agitation against Bismarck's new law for the introduction of civil marriage is greater than ever in Prussian Poland. The Polish people is immensely excited, and are ready to take any measures against the movement.

The Archbishop of Paris lately celebrated the Fête de Notre Dame, in order to beg the help of God on the patriotic subscription for the relief of Catholic Ireland in the occupied departments. The was delivered on the occasion by Abbé Langenieux.

The Old Catholics in Austria.—The Old Catholic Ministry is opposed to the fact that, in the present state of affairs, peace between the so-called Old Catholics and the Church by Old Catholics cannot be recognised as legal unless previously celebrated according to the forms required for legal marriage.

The Old Catholic Assembly at Vienna.—The Old Catholic Assembly at Vienna recently Michael was held at Vienna recently. Its Bullifred, as usual, presided, and Cardinal Rauscher, Count Leo Thun, Carlon, Archbishop Rauscher, and Herr Huber, Professor of Schönbrunn.

Conversations in Spain.—The Spanish Protestants is that of Rev. F. Nunez de Prado, formerly Professor of the Geneva school of Theology. It has been stated by several of the Spanish papers, who have re to the ancient faith that they were promised a present of 1,000 reals, on the part of the Emperor of Germany, on their return to the Catholic Church.

Consular Projects in France.—The Catholic Committees of France, the annual meeting of deputies from all Catholic Committees of France, which will open on April 2nd, when questions will be discussed in cases of calling together a grand meeting, to be called the Congress of the Catholics of France, and also the best mode of the greatest possible development to the schools of the various Catholic Com-

The Belgian Ambassador to the Vatican.—During the debates on the budget in foreign department, discussion arose on the Chamber of Deputies with regard to mission whether it was desirable that there should retain a Minister at the Vatican, on the part of the Government conviction was expressed that a Minister should be maintained at the Court of the in order to defend the moral and interests of the majority of the

The Old Catholics in Austria.—A decree of the Minister of Public Worship orders that some of the documents issued by Old Catholic parties or the actions of priests shall by recognized by the Courts of the Reichsrath by the Government. The Minister of Public Worship declares that the measure is necessitated by the present state of affairs, which is already in a forward state.

Reynold Stathbien. — The Superior General of the Ignatian Society of Jesus has instituted a permanent Catholic Commission. This body intends to hold a Catholic annual. 2d, an inof all Catholic associations. 3d, communication of all the various Catholic of every nation. In order to carry last idea most effectually, the pastors of all Catholic publications are requested to send two copies of one of their journals for the present year to Dr. Arnaud Acquaderni, 210 Maggiore, 209, Bologna, Italy.

The German official papers are highly pleased at the spirited conduct of Marshal Canrobert, the grand chancellor of the German army, in having forbidden the celebration of the Holy Sacrifice in any of the churches of Paris by the Old Catholic party. According to these journals, Marshal Canrobert and the chaplains under his command are but an unimportant State institution, whose duty it is to celebrate Mass whenever and wherever they are ordered to do by the military authorities. Threats were openly avowed of abolishing the Catholic chaplains, and of again forcing the Catholic soldiers to attend the Lutheran

Apparition at Pontmain.—The Bishop of Laval, in consequence of the reports circulated to him by several commissions legally, has issued a pastoral letter declaring us, that he judges that the Immaculate Virgin Mary, Mother of God, did really on January 17th, 1872, appear to Eugene and

Something New.—H. C. Bateman, Catholic Bookseller, 76 Kearny street, corner of Sutter, has a magnificent display of Holy Pictures, which will remain for 30 days, and Prayer Books in fact everything all through Holy Week. He has on hand a splendid stock of Catholic articles.

LOCAL CATHOLIC INTELLIGENCE.

CONFIRMATION.—His Grace Archbishop last Thursday morning in the chapel attached to St. Mary's Hospital. Three young ladies renounced the world to devote their lives to deeds of mercy and charity. Their names are Sister Mary Aguin Marlyne, Sister Mary Emmanuel Spellman and Mary Francis and Hugh Murphy. The altar was tastefully decorated, the select choir was in attendance composed of Misses Gleason, Henry and Hopkins, and Messrs. Barry, Hughes and Hopkins. The Archbishop was assisted by Father Langer as chief deacon, Father Caverly as sub-deacon, Father Scollard as master of ceremonies, and Father Gallagher as deacon of the cross. The ceremonies were conducted by Father Hall, the Archbishop's private secretary.

British Discontent.

An imposing demonstration against Royal Parks and Gardens Bill was made through in Hyde Park last Sunday, assembled upon the appointed and marched in procession, headed by a band of music, conveyed upon the appointed of meeting from different parts of the city, and when Mr. Odger, who had arrived about four o'clock, took their stand upon the platform of the Reformers' and began simultaneous speeches on the hill, it appears from the testimony of several observers of the scene, that not less than twenty thousand persons were in attendance. The number of Mr. Odger's only one we find reported at any and we print some extracts, as they will be useful to refer to in future words, and that the most powerful opposition to the Government will be the clamour in his speeches while hailed with the most vociferous applause, "Down with the aristocracy!" "Down with the monopolists!" Mr. Ayrton was a disgrace respectable assembling on the Sabbath-day, and the disturbing and the dead. Though the separation seems immense, are not the prayers and sympathies of those in heaven and those on earth, ever uniting the happy spirit and the sad and bound within the veil of the beloved tenderly to the life of the young lady over whom the Church commenced her last benediction as being indeed "a blameless life," and asked the prayers of the congregation for the repose of her soul. The coffin was then carried to the hearse, and the long procession of carriages moved from the Calvary Cemetery, and there the dead was consigned to rest. But the memory of her goodness, her sacred sheerful disposition, her holy resignation during a painful illness, and the calm trust in which she yielded that spirit unreservedly free from human imperfections, will remain green in the hearts of those who knew and loved her.

A Pleasing Compliment.

We are very glad to notice a graceful compliment paid by the Pensionat Bishop of Derry to the Catholic Bishop of the diocese of Hadloe, in which this town of Derry is included. Speaking at one of the meetings of local congratulation which have been held in each parish of the diocese, Dr. Alexander said:—I do not wish to speak in the language of flattery, but I do think it just to say a more eloquent, touching, and Christian letter than that of the Right Rev. Dr. Mellevin I never heard." The excellent Bishop's speech was all through distinguished by manly feeling, by affectionate liberality, and by that thanking abeyance of which the tender and generous man alone is master. A tribute of praise from such a critic as Dr. Alexander is a thing of which any one may well be proud, but such a tribute from him to the Catholic Bishop of Derry must be a pleasing to the distinguished receiver of it as it is honorable to the distinguished giver.

CATHOLIC ITEMS.

Eastern.

Very Rev. P. J. Ryan, V.G. of St. Louis, Mo., has been appointed Coadjutor Bishop of St. Louis, with the right of succession to Archbishop Kenrick.

The new Diocese of Providence, R. I., will contain 110,000 Catholics and 54 priests. Rev. Thos. F. Hendricken, Waterbury, Conn., is to be the new Bishop.

Rev. J. J. Dougherty, Chancellor of the Archdiocese of Baltimore, has been appointed Administrator of the vacant Archiepiscopal See, by Rt. Rev. R. V. Whelan, Bishop of Wheeling, and Senior Bishop of the Province.

Conversions in Long Island City.—A very interesting ceremony took place in St. Patrick's Church, Long Island City, on Sunday, March 3. On that occasion a family consisting of Mrs. Gertrude Baldine, her son John, and two daughters, Mary Ann and Mary Josephine, were received into the bosom of the Church. This family were members of the Lutheran persuasion, and their conversion is hailed with joy by the good pastor, Father Marco, and the Catholics under his charge.

On Sunday, March 10th, the new Dominican Church of St. Vincent Ferrer, Sixty-sixth and Lexington avenue, New York, was opened for divine service. It was commenced over four years ago, and after the years war scattered that the completion took place. Since that time the Passionist Father Lilly, procured the services of Messrs. Lang & Kinkelen, of Munich, to execute ten fresco paintings on the walls of the interior. This alone cost $4,500 and paintings and decorations were carried out to the amount of $15,000. The entire cost of the edifice foote up $150,000.

Foreign.

The death is announced, with deep feeling of regret, of the Rev. Father Sewer, S. J., of Gardiner street Church, Dublin, and Rector of Clongowes College, and Rev. J. P.

Rev. Patrick Brady, the indefatigable and zealous parish priest of Castleblaney, Ireland, has been promoted by His Holiness Pope Pius IX. to the Canonry of Dromore, vacant by the lamented death of the Rev. John O'Hara.

The Rt. Rev. Francis Kelly, C. C., nephew of the distinguished prelate who presides over the See of Derry, died suddenly at Clonmacnoise, County Donegal, recently. We learn that the deceased, who has been long suffering from ill health, on the day of his death had been more than usually appreciating to his office, and that he was riding along the road when his horse became weak. He was conveyed into a house near at hand, where he shortly afterwards expired. His death was unexpected. He was a clergyman of great promise, and well beloved by his people.

On February 13th, the obsequies of the Rev. J. Conaty, P. P., Mullagh, County Cavan, took place in the beautiful Church of St. Killian, which was erected by the reverend deceased. The Very Rev. Dr. Duffy, Bishop of Kilmore, presided at the solemn rite, which was attended by a large number of the clergy and laity from Kilnamore and Meath dioceses.

The Late Earthquake.

Arcata, April 2.—By a gentleman just arrived from Lone Pine, we are informed of the following additional particulars concerning the recent earthquake: Fifty two buildings were shaken down, about three-fourths of the entire town, but seven buildings were left on one side of Main street, and three on the other, and they are all wrecked.

No Deaths.—We do not wish to inform you, reader, that Dr. Wonderful, or rather mad, has discovered a remedy that cures diseases of mind, body or estate, and is designed to do our unbelief before a blissful Paradise, in which no sickness shall be but a side show. Dr. Wonderful, or rather mad, has cured more than all the Sages of Church in short, forms and kind of complaints. He will prove for a case of dyspepsia the disease that he will cure. Sold by druggists.

Weak hair is strengthened by the use of Hall's Vegetable Sicilian Hair Renewer.

DEAF CITY ITEMS.

Be peton against the Goat Island grist has served about 25,000 signatures, so will I forwarded to Washington in charge of general Alexander, Professor Isidoneal Caleb T. Pay.

St Sunby afternoon last the remains of Bishe F. Sheahan took place from the Ish-Amican Hall on Howard street. It ve verjlargely attended. Members of Divisions of the Ancient Order of Hibernians, of hich Order the deceased was a pectedmember, attended to the number chapran of six hundred. The cortege wa lerced by the presence of three or for horsed other friends of the deceased onfoot ven vehibles. A band headed the sesrufol procession, playing a dead march. he burial took place in Calvary Cemetary Tuesnal election of officers of Division No. 1 of the Ancient Order of Hibernians, va held at the Hibernia Hall, on Monday evening, March 27th, with the following result: P. M. Wallin, President (elected); William Gillerain, Vice-President; Frank Mahon, Recording Secretary (elected); James Reed, Financial Secretary; Michael McEnenny, Treasurer (elected). After the election, Mr. M. Wardshe had acted in the capacity of Grand Secretary since the date of its consenta. It is said that the following are the names of their successors: Recording Secretary, Patrick Walsh; Financial Secretary, Michael McEnenny; Treasurer, Thomas Ryan; Sentinel, Patrick Gaffney; Sergeant-at-Arms, Thomas Gallagher; Trustees, Michael Ryan, John Cooney, Patrick Walsh, Michael McEnenny, Thomas Ryan.

Division No. 2, A. O. H., March 1872.

Cincinnati, March 28.—The Committee of Arrangements for the Pope's Jubilee have issued a circular inviting voters, without regard to party, to join in sustaining the action of the Board of Aldermen, in refusing to execute ten fresco paintings on the walls of the Market. This alone cost $4,500 and paintings and decorations were carried out to the amount of $15,000. The entire cost of the edifice foote up $150,000.

Foreign.

The death is announced, with deep feeling of regret, of the Rev. Father Sewer, S. J., of Gardiner street Church, Dublin, and Rector of Clongowes College, and Rev. J. P.

Rev. Patrick Brady, the indefatigable and zealous parish priest of Castleblaney, Ireland, has been promoted by His Holiness Pope Pius IX. to the Canonry of Dromore, vacant by the lamented death of the Rev. John O'Hara.

The Rt. Rev. Francis Kelly, C. C., nephew of the distinguished prelate who presides over the See of Derry, died suddenly at Clonmacnoise, County Donegal, recently. We learn that the deceased, who has been long suffering from ill health, on the day of his death had been more than usually appreciating to his office, and that he was riding along the road when his horse became weak. He was conveyed into a house near at hand, where he shortly afterwards expired. His death was unexpected. He was a clergyman of great promise, and well beloved by his people.

On February 13th, the obsequies of the Rev. J. Conaty, P. P., Mullagh, County Cavan, took place in the beautiful Church of St. Killian, which was erected by the reverend deceased. The Very Rev. Dr. Duffy, Bishop of Kilmore, presided at the solemn rite, which was attended by a large number of the clergy and laity from Kilnamore and Meath dioceses.

The Late Earthquake.

Arcata, April 2.—By a gentleman just arrived from Lone Pine, we are informed of the following additional particulars concerning the recent earthquake: Fifty two buildings were shaken down, about three-fourths of the entire town, but seven buildings were left on one side of Main street, and three on the other, and they are all wrecked.

No Deaths.—We do not wish to inform you, reader, that Dr. Wonderful, or rather mad, has discovered a remedy that cures diseases of mind, body or estate, and is designed to do our unbelief before a blissful Paradise, in which no sickness shall be but a side show. Dr. Wonderful, or rather mad, has cured more than all the Sages of Church in short, forms and kind of complaints. He will prove for a case of dyspepsia the disease that he will cure. Sold by druggists.

Weak hair is strengthened by the use of Hall's Vegetable Sicilian Hair Renewer.

FOUR MORE DEATHS HAVE RESULTED

From injuries received on the night of the 26th inst. making a total of twenty-seven deaths in Lone Pine, one at the Eclipse mine, and one at Independence. Thirty-four are seriously injured, and many others slightly.

At Port Independence

The hospital was shaken down, but fortunately it was unoccupied at the time. Chimneys were all thrown down, crockery broken and many other articles opened to the earth.

At Cerro Gordo.

No one was badly hurt at Cerro Gords. Windows were broken, goods pitched from shelves and counters, and large cracks opened in the ground.

At Swansea

The furnaces were all thrown down, and every adobe house levelled to the ground, including the principal hotel, but no person was seriously injured.

Thrilling Incident at an Interment.

On Wednesday afternoon while the survivors at Lone Pine were hurrying their dead, an incident was in a measure thrilling, and occasioned shocks. While burying one family of five persons, there were three children and a couple, a severe shock occurred which filled the grave, and each of the coffins which would fit mourners, some six inches.

Preparing to Leave.

Much excitement still exits at Lone Pine. Many are preparing to save as soon as they have the means.

Changes in Water Curses.

Four miles south o Lone Ine a small lake has entirely disappeared. Grass rise has largely decreased in volume since the shake; where formerly we two fathoms of water, there is now only a small stream. A large creek with a with current, has ceased to flow afternoon by a drop of water was to be found.

Continued Shock

On Friday morning, when or informant left Lone Pine, the shocks we quite frequent, and the last hour he was in town's River valley, before the stage-coach left the mountains, he experienced the severe shake.

Two or three light shockswere felt here during last evening, but not severe enough to cause any alarm.

San Diego, April 3.—In Temecula Valley, the late earthquake it opened the ground in such an extent, it the flow of water increased over four-fold. The reservoir, which it formerly took on three days to fill, now fills in twenty hours. There is now a sufficiency water to irrigate the whole valley. T earthquake, three years ago, had the eff of partially closing these springs.

The Coercion Act.

A "warning" under the provisions of the Coercion Act has been given to the Leinster Independent, published at Maryborough, Queen's county, for the publication of an article which is said to contain "incitements to the commission of felony, to wit, murder." The article in question, if it contains "incitements to felony, to wit, murder," must be a bad one; but we understand it contains the following sentences:—"Of course, no one should be killed. National liberty can never be obtained by murder, nor sustained by assassination." This does not look very like an incitement to felony, to wit, murder. If, however, the allegation of the Castle officials be still true, we ask why was not the paper proceeded against in the ordinary form of law? Surely, long before the Coercion Act of 1870 was invented, there were laws in accordance with which the publishers of alleged "incitements to the commission of felony, to wit, murder," could be tried for the offence, and if found guilty, punished. Yes, punished if found guilty, but not otherwise, and that is precisely the condition, the check upon arbitrary power, the safeguard of the subject, which the Coercion Act was designed to remove. There is now no trial for a newspaper writer, the sole question is as to the question of wrongful accusation. There must be no surrender of democratic principles. It was advised that no Democrat should sit in the Cincinnati Convention. There was less disposition to endorse Judge Davis than was expected. The names of Senator Trumbull and Charles Francis Adams were discussed, and also those of General Logan and Governor Palmer.

Cincinnati, March 28.—The Committee of Arrangements for the May Convention have issued a circular inviting voters, without regard to party, to join in sustaining the action of the Board of Aldermen, in refusing to execute ten fresco paintings on the walls of the Market. The paintings, as described arrived at by a few Governmental officials in a back room of the Gaff, are to be placed in the basement of the Coercion Act constitutive one of the most flagrant violations of liberty effected or attempted to be by an English Government for a long series of years, and now that its repeal is being made the occasion for passing many of the Act is quite a thing of the past, it would be well to keep it there as a warning to other authorities" at the Castle not to have made a show of or arbitrary an occasion of the Act, as in the case of the Coercion Act.

Stetson, March 9.

The Lake Washington Coal Company, of Seattle, will hereafter ship from that place 2,000 tons of coal a month.

Subscriptions Received.

Brooklyn—John Carey.....$2 00
" " Mackey.....2 00
Hayes—Jeremiah Sullivan.....2 00
Hayes—Jeremiah Sullivan.....2 00
Hayes—Jeremiah Sullivan.....2 00
Hayes—Jeremiah Sullivan.....2 00
Hayes—Jeremiah Sullivan.....2 00
Hayes—Jeremiah Sullivan.....2 00
Hayes—Jeremiah Sullivan.....2 00
Hayes—Jeremiah Sullivan.....2 00
Hayes—Jeremiah Sullivan.....2 00
Hayes—Jeremiah Sullivan.....2 00
Hayes—Jeremiah Sullivan.....2 00
Hayes—Jeremiah Sullivan.....2 00
Hayes—Jeremiah Sullivan.....2 00
Hayes—Jeremiah Sullivan.....2 00
Hayes—Jeremiah Sullivan.....2 00
Hayes—Jeremiah Sullivan.....2 00
Hayes—Jeremiah Sullivan.....2 00
Hayes—

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

ENGLAND.

A Narrow Escape.

The passengers by a certain railway train from Liverpool to Crewe got recent for some distance a few nights ago. They left the Lichfield Station apparently all right, but had not gone much further when the rate of motion began to slacken very sensibly, and gradually became slower and slower still, until the train came at last to a dead stop. The passengers looked out in some anxiety, as nothing but darkness met the roadside. There was no sign of a station anywhere, and no indication of any thing like a reason why the train should not go on. After waiting for some time the passengers sent a deputation. A gentleman walked out and went up to the engine. No steam came from the chimney, no fire was under the boiler and there were the driver and fireman stretched out in a drunken sleep on the footplate of the engine. The alarm was given instantly, and it fortunately fell out that no other train came on until a good engine was procured to take that one on to Crewe. The lives of all the passengers were in the hands of those two men, who cast off all their dreadful responsibility as lightly as one might brush away a straw. The escape of all concerned must certainly be regarded as a piece of singular good fortune, and in this instance of misconduct we doubtless have the key to many a railway tragedy. When men who have nothing dependent on them but their own good fame and success in the world, stoop to brutalize themselves to this degree, the spectacle of their degradation is a grievous thing to see. But that shall we say of those upon those on all of unconcerned must certainly be regarded as a piece of singular good fortune, and in this instance of misconduct we doubtless have the key to many a railway tragedy. When men who have nothing dependent on them but their own good fame and success in the world, stoop to brutalize themselves to this degree, the spectacle of their degradation is a grievous thing to see. But that shall we say of those upon those on whom the lives of their fellow-creatures depend? It ought to be a special care of the higher officials to ensure the sobriety of their engineers; and if the poor of servants of overwork be the plea for the drunkenness in the present case, that fact would not diminish, but would much increase the responsibility of their employers before the public.

The Tow Boiler Bill.

The principal provisions of the bill may be enumerated as follows: 1. Public notice must be given of day of election (or nomination) the name of the candidate or his writ is annexed. 2. The day of election (or nomination) must not be above four days after the writ, and not less than two days after. 3. Candidates must be nominated in writing by two persons of the same and eight voters. 4. The same electors may nominate any number of candidates up to the number to be chosen. 5. Candidates may withdraw by giving written notice during the time of the election by nomination. 6. Not less than between ten and three are allotted for election (or nomination). 6. The returning officer is the head bailiff. 7. The polling place shall give voter a paper with private mark on back, and the names of candidates. The voter must be marked in private compartment, and returned to officer, folded so as to show mark, but back. 8. Any public elementary school free of costs, or an unconnected building may be used to take the poll. 9. A private compartment to mark voting paper shall be provided for every 150 voters on the list. No voter who is blind, or who is physically unable to fill up the paper, may have it filled up by any returning officer or deputy. (This excludes a man from voting who cannot read). 10. Any person or clerk who discloses anything about the election while polling is going on, or any person who applies for a voter, or who discloses who a voter has voted for, if from information obtained in the booth, is liable to imprisonment for three months. 11. If a voter applies for a voting paper, and some other person has already voted in the name, he shall take an oath that he is the true person; he will a mark his vote as another voter, but the vote will not be counted. 12. Any person applying for voting paper in a false name is liable to imprisonment.

The principal provisions of the bill may be enumerated as follows: 1. Public notice must be given of day of election (or nomination) the name of the candidate or his writ is annexed. 2. The day of election (or nomination) must not be above four days after the writ, and not less than two days after. 3. Candidates must be nominated in writing by two persons of the same and eight voters. 4. The same electors may nominate any number of candidates up to the number to be chosen. 5. Candidates may withdraw by giving written notice during the time of the election by nomination. 6. Not less than between ten and three are allotted for election (or nomination). 6. The returning officer is the head bailiff. 7. The polling place shall give voter a paper with private mark on back, and the names of candidates. The voter must be marked in private compartment, and returned to officer, folded so as to show mark, but back. 8. Any public elementary school free of costs, or an unconnected building may be used to take the poll. 9. A private compartment to mark voting paper shall be provided for every 150 voters on the list. No voter who is blind, or who is physically unable to fill up the paper, may have it filled up by any returning officer or deputy. (This excludes a man from voting who cannot read). 10. Any person or clerk who discloses anything about the election while polling is going on, or any person who applies for a voter, or who discloses who a voter has voted for, if from information obtained in the booth, is liable to imprisonment for three months. 11. If a voter applies for a voting paper, and some other person has already voted in the name, he shall take an oath that he is the true person; he will a mark his vote as another voter, but the vote will not be counted. 12. Any person applying for voting paper in a false name is liable to imprisonment.

The Police in England.

In this concrel Ireland we know that the policeman is a very moral personage, over whose person the "law" extends its protecting arm and assures to him the full advance for much possible wrong-doing. We are all painfully aware of the fact that when we hold public meetings we are under the rigid surveillance of those virtual leaders to our eight are the busy "eyes," as they improve the shining hour by taking notes for possible future use, and by storing up, in the receptacles of their memories, the total lineaments of orators suspected of Fenian proclivities. They manage these things better in England. In London, on Friday week, two constables appeared at the public meeting held to prepare for the demonstration in Hyde Park on Sunday last, against the Parks' Bill, whereupon the Chairman asked their business, and whether they were there officially. They declined to give an answer, but made some remarks about the demonstration which were well received. They were then ordered to leave the room, but this they refused to do for some time, and angry words ensued. Ultimately, however, they left. Fancy a chairman in Dublin having such audacity as this! Why, he would very likely be indicted for high treason, and the meeting dispersed by the bludgeonmen of the force—always at hand—after the manner in which the Phœnix Park anniversary meeting was "prevented." In Ireland, however, it is the police who rule—hence their inviolability; in England they occupy their proper and subordinate position—therefore they are not shorn, and so acquire respect for the law.—Irishman, March 9.

INDIA.

An Attack on an Indian Magistrate.

We hear from Mutra (says the Pioneer) of rather a sensational event for that usually peaceful district, nothing less than a murderous assault upon a magistrate while seated in open court. On the afternoon of February 21st a Hindoo fanatic wanted to visit one of the temples in the city, but was turned back by the armed sentries at the gate, who told him that the god was asleep, and there was no admittance. He went away in high dudgeon, and that same evening, when there was a crowd on the spot to witness the arrival of a procession, and the guard who had repulsed him was loading his gun to fire a salute, the ruffian stole behind him, and, snatching the sword from his belt, swung it round, intending, as the afterwards stated, to cut off his head. He had insulted him, and say two or three more, and then die fighting like a hero. He was captured by the police, and, on the 24th, brought up before the assistant magistrate, who was then out in the district in camp. The prisoner was placed at the door of the tent, without handcuffs, but between two constables; and the sword, the corpus delicti, was produced and laid on the table at which the magistrate was writing. Only a few words of the first witness's deposition had been taken, when the prisoner made a rush forward, and, getting possession of the sword, with one hand drew out the wedge, and with the other aimed a violent blow at the magistrate's head. Fortunately, the aim was so small as to prevent the action of the arm, and the only injury was a blow from the flat of the sword on the left temple. The fatty outer layer protected the skull from the edge. The

IN MEMORIAM.—(GEO. F. MARCHAND.)

"Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord."

Friend of my early years, farewell!
Since last I clasped thy hand
Thy spirit winged its flight from earth
To the immortal land.

Quickly the winds are sighing,
Loudly the storm king raves,
And the wintry rain is falling
Upon thy lonely graves.

Those hearths not its wailing,
Stilled is thy wasted breath,
Naught shall e'er arouse thee
From the calm repose of death.

But no eternal slumber
Is to thine be heeded,
In the land beyond us,
Where graves are paved with gold.

Thou hast fought life's tedious battle,
Those art gone to the "better land,"
In the land of the Eternal,
The kingdom of the Lord.

Bereaved and lonely mother,
Mourn not the release of dear,
Rejoice that from this world of woe
His lasting spirit fled.

Weep not while he sits triumphant
Beneath the throne of love,
Wait both resigned, prepared to meet
His Maker and his God.

And when thy native snow clad hills
Shall greet thine eyes once more,
Weep not for him who sleeps upon
A far off western shore.

Oakland, May 8, 1872. MARY O. MARTIN.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

ENGLAND.

French View of the London Celebration.

It was not only natural, as one may say, that the jubilee week should be filled to bursting of London the other day a goodly number should be French. It was also natural that from the hundreds of writers who went into ecstasies about the grandeur of the spectacle not a few should be French. The many arise from the fact that there scribes had to stay in one place just like other people, and saw of the crowd what was in reach; and of the procession as much as their craning necks allowed. Besides they may be used to see bibulous folks in crowds. A French eye has always a long lodging, pointers and in the columns of the Figaro we find a photograph not at all flattering to Londoners there are a considerable number of women from 15 to 30 years of age employed in the manufacture of cigars. Many there in large numbers, already drunk and uttering the coarsest language on the streets. Others, on the workman's wives of all ages singing along the street, and holding their children by the hands, others dancing that from one moment to another they might both roll on the ground together. It could not be imagine what an ignoble spectacle this presented in an immortal top-heavy, the procession in an immortal top-heavy, the procession in an immortal top-heavy, the procession

IN MEMORIAM.—(REV. P. MARCHAND.)

"Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord"

Friend of my early years, farewell!
Since last I saluted thy hand
Thy spirit winged its flight from earth
To the immortal land.

Calmly the winds are sighing,
Lowly the stars fling their rays,
And the watery tide is falling
Upon thy lonely grave.

Then hasten not to waiting,
Patient is thy wearied breath,
Gently shall thy weary head
Repose the calm repose of death.

But no eternal morning
It is mine to behold,
In His new Jerusalem
Where crowns are paved with gold.

Upon that fearful path I soon must enter,
Where all must go to thy reward,
In the land of the living,
The kingdom of the Lord.

Removed and lonely mother,
Mourn not the cherished dead!
Rejoice that from this world of woe
His hoping spirit fled.

Brother take up his emblem,
Beneath the dreary sod,
Wear forth rejoiced, prepared to meet
His Maker and his God.

And when thy native snow clad hills
Shall greet thine eyes once more,
Weep not for him who sleeps upon
A bed of roses there.

Rockford Chr, March 2,1872. MARY O. MARTIN.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

ENGLAND.

French View of the London Celebration.

If we not only natural, as one may say, but also supernatural eyes, we should see that from the other day a goodly number of saints in Heaven. We have heard nothing of what from the hundreds of writers who would join occasion about the grandeur of the ceremony and the nobility of its demeanor. This may arise from the fact that these writers, tied to stay in one place just during about a quarter of an hour, could not see it well; and of the procession as a whole they have known nothing. Happily we find a photograph not at all fatiguing, which will supply to the lack of information. Here are a couple of Archbishops of ages employed in the manufacture of the Cross, and blessing the earnest intentions of the worshipers. Then the worthy Archbishop of Canterbury, at the age of eighty-four, holding their children in their arms, and begging their frees for new men in another they might both roll on the ground together. You could never have imagined, by looking at this picture, the opposition presented in its monarchial toyalty to the moving to shall learn that many persons have been killed, many injured, and, probably that a certain number of persons in London will shortly die from fire-engines traverse the streets, and even when a sermon. The people are not to be burned in—and with what surprising celebrations of the anniversary of which it has been performed."—Quoted from an article by the Times' Paris Correspondent.

The Grand Procession.

The procession of the saints and the Queen's earliest became known, there was a cry of "Please, sovereign," and when the address was presented, "Long live the queen!" The people of Irish birth, the province grow! Irish race in general. The Orgies of opinion could have had the intention had we not been told that the Irish people are Irish nationalities, instead of being received by rudeness in London, by the Queen and the Prince of Wales, who, like the parents, brought their children with them, and found it as much an event as the Queen herself. It remains the immortal honor of the Irish people that, in the midst of their highest fever of age, has been solely from the Queen, and to be able to continue at the head of men for the length of his reign. He was carrying a picture of society encourage work to effort in an age of wealth, and of luxury, and sloth, and the crushing effort work were mostly spent, and the people in the palaces like the palaces of men, and read papers as Lloyd's and Reynolds'. Every circumstance of his reign was such as the people to feel that their wrath brought him into such exceptional position was the result of some aberrant judgment, and not of a suggestion from any other person. When brought up before the magistrate, the persons of his time, which is described as rather good-looking, was one of silly pride in what he had done. He wanted to appear as an Act of the 5th year of the Queen, which makes Dublin Improvement Act seven years any person who may present at her Majesty, with intent to cause injury or fright, is liable to six months' and not seven years' hard labor. Queen Victoria, may read, "Lord Erin hope," "Faith and Old Ireland," "God save Ireland," "Hurrah for Old Ireland," and "Long live the people." Of course, Allison, and repeated to the accident round town, and the dogs, and boys, and others, and all the inscription, addressed to the St. Patrick's Mutual Alliance by the Sun of Kenmore," especially the part of the speech and drive, the banner with the address of which we gave a copy in our issue. It is in a comfy manner, and is as follows: "Most Reverend Sir, Most Rev. Dr. Cullen, Most Rev. Dr. Moran, Lord Bishop elect of Ossory, attended by Most Rev. Dr. Lynch, Coadjutor Archbishop of Kildare and Leighlin, and Most Rev. Dr. Furlong, Lord Bishop of Ferns, the Lord Bishop of Wexford, Most Rev. Dr. Leahy, Lord Bishop of Cashel, and his Eminence the Cardinal Archbishop of Dublin, the Prelates Ireland and then the Dean and Chapter of the Cathedral. The procession, having entered the sanctuary, his Eminence was conducted to the episcopal throne, where he assumed his robes.

The assembled clergy occupied the thrones were The Very Rev. Mgr. M'Cabe, V. G., and the Very Rev. Mgr. Forde, V. G. The Masters of the Ceremonies were—The Rev. Joseph M'Swiggen, C. C., and the Rev. Dr. Butterfield, Dean of Hsiyorose College. The Rev. N. Murphy, and the Rev. Dr. Bookridge were chaplains to the Bishop Elect, and the Rev. Dr. Nolan, P. P., Kildare, and the Very Rev. Dr. Cavanagh, President of Carlow College, were the chaplains of the Archbishop. The choir consisted of students of Holyerose College, led by the Very Rev. Michael Verdon, President. The Very Rev. Canon Murphy, as Secretary of the Consecration, having read the Apostolic Mandate, the oath was administered by the rivnal. After the Communion His Grace the Lord Archbishop of Cashel preached the sermon. He said every age had its own peculiar trials, and indeed a most diligent discourse, taking for history: "Then Philip, going down to the city of Samaria, preached Christ unto them." (Acts viii. 5.) "Going therefore teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost—and behold I am with you all days, even to the consummation of the world"—(Matthew xxviii. 19, 20).

At the termination of the sermon the ceremonies proceeded to their close, and his Eminence was conducted to the throne, announced the Pontifical Benediction. The Archbishop-elect immediately and, in full canonicals, wearing his mitre and bearing the pastoral staff, gave his blessing to the vast congregation, and, the students, clergy, and prelates retired to the side chapel in the order observed on the occasion. The solemn sanctuary and the altar platform were richly carpeted, and the seats for the prelates and clergy were covered with crimson cloth. The high altar was splendidly decorated with flowers, interspersed with lighted candles, and the altar of the prelate stood in the south aisle was most tastefully decorated. The most magnificent of the altars and sanctuary were executed with great taste and in the most generous manner by Mr. John Hogan, of Sackville street.

The ceremonies commenced at ten o'clock by the procession entering the cathedral from the side chapel of St. Kevin, headed by cross bearer, acolytes and thurifer. First came the students of Holycross College, walking two and two, then the clergy in their proper order wearing soutans and surplices, and then the following prelates attended by their chaplains: Most Rev. Dr. M'Evilly, Archbishop of Galway; Most Rev. Dr. Gilooly, Lord Bishop of Elphin; Most Rev. Dr. Conroy, Lord Bishop of Ardagh; Most Rev. Dr. Whelan, Lord Bishop of Bombay; Most Rev. Dr. Conroy, Lord Bishop of Down and Connor; Most Rev. Dr. Reilly, Lord Bishop of Meath; Most Rev. Dr. Butler, Lord Bishop of Limerick; Most Rev. Dr. Walshe, Lord Bishop of Ardagh and Clonmacnoise; Most Rev. Dr. Moran, Lord Bishop elect of Ossory, attended by Most Rev. Dr. Lynch, Coadjutor Archbishop of Kildare and Leighlin, and Most Rev. Dr. Furlong, Lord Bishop of Ferns, the Lord Bishop of Wexford, Most Rev. Dr. Leahy, Lord Bishop of Cashel, and his Eminence the Cardinal Archbishop of Dublin, the Prelates Ireland and then the Dean and Chapter of the Cathedral. The procession having entered the sanctuary, his Eminence was conducted to the episcopal throne, where he assumed his robes.

The assembled clergy occupied the thrones were The Very Rev. Mgr. M'Cabe, V. G., and the Very Rev. Mgr. Forde, V. G. The Masters of the Ceremonies were—The Rev. Joseph M'Swiggen, C. C., and the Rev. Dr. Butterfield, Dean of Holycross College. The Rev. N. Murphy, and the Rev. Dr. Bookridge were chaplains to the Bishop Elect, and the Rev. Dr. Nolan, P. P., Kildare, and the Very Rev. Dr. Cavanagh, President of Carlow College, were the chaplains of the Archbishop. The choir consisted of students of Holycross College, led by the Very Rev. Michael Verdon, President. The Very Rev. Canon Murphy, as Secretary of the Consecration, having read the Apostolic Mandate, the oath was administered by the rivnal. After the Communion His Grace the Lord Archbishop of Cashel preached the sermon. He said every age had its own peculiar trials, and indeed a most diligent discourse, taking for history: "Then Philip, going down to the city of Samaria, preached Christ unto them." (Acts viii. 5.) "Going therefore teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost—and behold I am with you all days, even to the consummation of the world"—(Matthew xxviii. 19, 20).

As

THE SONG-BIRD'S SUMMER.

[For The Monitor.

Ere the sun had lit the skies,
Or the violets oped their eyes,
All the pure, still air was stirred
By the warble of a bird,
Thrilling through the early dawn,
While the dew-drops gemmed the lawn!
And its ringing notes of glee,
Floating out so far and free,
Told to account sweet and clear
That the glorious Spring was near.

On the hill-top far away
Snow-wreaths crowned the gates of day,
And the earlier leaves of March
Rimmed each bough with arched arch.
What the glad song-sparrow's lays
Sounded from the copse among trees,
And the burden of his joy
Echoed in my brain all day.

"Brighter! hazy thy greasy nest,
Shake the dew-drops from thy breast,
Let the music in thy heart
All its melody impart,
While the glorious accents ring
Welcome! welcome to the Spring!

"Wild flowers! ope your dreamy eyes,
Lift your faces to the skies;
Let the morning tremble the most,
Be no laggard at the feast.
Sunset your fragrant censers swing,
Yield your perfume to the Spring.

"Poet dreamer! why delay?
Join the song-bird's roundelay!
Lift aloft thy watery eyes,
Where the starlight gilds the skies,
Strike the lyre the while and sing
A sweet song to greet the Spring."

MAGDALEN A. FITZGERALD.
MOUNT WOODLAWN, March, 1872.

The Crisis in the Catholic Church.

Under this heading the Nation has an elaborate article from Metropolitan point of view, an able article on the present position and aspect of Catholic affairs. To one who is not familiar with ecclesiastical history, and does not believe in the Church as the infallible teacher under the supernatural protection of the Holy Ghost, it may well seem that there is a crisis in the Catholic Church. But to us who have studied history and hold the Church to be supernaturally founded and supernaturally protected, there are signs, indeed, of an impending crisis in consequence of none in the Church herself. The Church has been from the first face to face with the world, or what is the same spirit of the world which she has always struggled to subject to the law of God, but which has always and everywhere resisted Him with a more or less fierceness, and obstinacy, and will continue to do till the end of time, as long as the world stands. The Church can never accept the spirit of the age, which is only another name for the "prince of this world," or Satan, the adversary of God and man, and who has been under his prince had always been and always will be hostile to the Church, and seek by all possible means to hinder and spoil her divine work.

We see nothing new or extraordinary in the present position of the Church, and the only alarm we feel is not for her, but for secular society, which needs her and cannot consist without her. The Lord brings as his agents those things, that the secular powers have all possibly ceased to be Catholic, and "Christian" and Anti-Christian. The whole history throughout every European State are rapidly tending, as they are in this country, to the violent crisis in which there can be no free and stable government or real social well-being or progress. The Nation gives some account of what it calls the "Liberal Catholic movement" in Belgium, in which the Holy Father is implicated. It is impossible to know nothing of the facts in the case; but we suppose them to be as stated by the Nation, they prove nothing but that the Holy Father in matters in which he has not the assistance of the Holy Ghost, and does not claim to be infallible, has erred in judgment like other men. The Nation should know that which does ripples on the surface of the stream do not affect the general current of events.

The Nation seems to see a defect of the Church in regard to popular education, and says:

"In this matter of popular education the Church and the state are in fact on the point of joining hands, and have joined hands all over Europe. In Ireland, in Austria, in Prussia, in France, and in Italy, both sides are preparing for and engaged in a struggle which must have a serious influence on the future of the human race. Into the issues of it, it is driven out of its last stronghold. It has lost the middle classes and the town artisans in every country; if it loses the peasantry, it will have lost everything."

The fact is as stated, and the great battle now to be fought is, we suppose, in the Alps, and the future of secular society in no small measure depends on the party that in the battle shall win. But even, if at the first Papacy should be worsted, its cause is not lost, but is necessarily overruled by God. It still has all it had on the day of Pentecost, when the Holy Ghost descended on the Apostles in seven tongues of fire, and which, sallied to conquer and subject to the Cross of Christ all the world could enlightened, not less powerful, nor less Loyalty to the Kingdom of God than the present. The head of the Lord is not wounded unto death it cannot serve; neither is His ear heavy that it cannot hear. If the iniquities of Catholics do not continue to call down chastisement from the Lord, the Papacy will not be worsted. But has the Nation reflected what generally will be the fate of secular society if the Papacy should be worsted? We fear nothing for the Church, but we confess that we do fear for secular society.—N. Y. Tablet, March 30.

HIS MAJESTY'S SERVANTS.—We read the following in the Times of Wednesday: "The queen, who has so constantly failed in testing a medal as a reward for long or faithful service among her majesty's domestic servants, has inaugurated the institution by conferring on Mr. John Brown, the Queen's personal attendant, a medal in gold, with an annuity of £25 attached to it, as a mark of her appreciation of his prudence of mind and of his devotion on the occasion of the attack made upon her majesty in Buckingham Palace Gardens, on the 29th of February, 1872." This is too bad, for the fact is, that had the mad boy been really intent upon serious mischief, and had his weapon been loaded, her majesty would have been a corpse before her "personal attendant," the "long legged importation from Scotland," was ready with the "presence of mind." John Brown is no friend with the English people the latter are more than jealous of his fortunate "gillie," and it is a terrible faux pas to confer upon him the honor of being his conduct upon an occasion when all the world imagines that he was anything but on the "look out." His "presence of mind" and his "devotion" to the queen on the 29th of February consisted in this, that with half a dozen other attendants he succeeded, after the attempt, in holding fast the miserable crazy-headed youth who made it. If this system of rewards is allowed to go on, the steepled and most negligent constable in the metropolis may hope for promotion and a pension.—London Universe, March 9.

Month's Mind of Archbishop Spalding.

On Wednesday, March 20, the Month's Mind of the late venerable and beloved Martin John Spalding, took place in the Metropolitan church, in Baltimore. The Solemn Mass of Requiem was celebrated by Rt. Rev. James F. Wood, D.D., Bishop of Philadelphia, assisted by Rev. Edward McColgan, of St. Peter's, assistant priest; Rev. B. J. McManus, of St. John's, as deacon; Rev. F. E. Boyle, of St. Peter's (Washington), as sub-deacon; and Rev. James A. McCallen, S.S.S., as master of ceremonies. The sermon, a most eloquent and appropriate one, was delivered by Rt. Rev. James Gibbons, D.D., Vicar Apostolic of North Carolina, and Administrator of the Diocese of Richmond. Among the clergymen present we noticed Very Rev. John Dougherty, Administrator of the Archdiocese; Very Rev. Jean Paul Bayley, D.D., S.S.S.; Rev. Thomas Lee, Secretary of the late Archbishop; Rev. John Foley, D. D.; and Rev. Fathers (Ashley, Lloyd and Duncan, together with representative from the different religious houses in Baltimore. Rev. Father P. O'Neill, from the Cathedral, Philadelphia, was also present.

The sanctuary in which the body of the deceased Archbishop rested on the occasion of his funeral, was used on this occasion. Upon the shelf were the usual insignia of the archiepiscopal office.

The absolution was performed by the Rt. Rev. Bishop of Philadelphia, assisted by the Rev. clergy present.

The procession of clergy up the Holy Sacrifice of the Mass for the repose of the souls of the faithful departed, at the conclusion of thirty days after the decease of the person, is one of great antiquity, having been introduced into the Christian Church at a very early period. For the information of those of our readers who are not acquainted with its history, we will give a few facts hastily gathered from the authorities that are at our disposal.

A lively compassion for suffering humanity is one of the first and most beautiful attributes of the Christian religion. The suffering souls in purgatory stand in need of the greatest compassion, and the doctrine of the "communion of Saints" clearly points out how the faithful can assist the principal object of a Month's Mind. It is taught in the Apostle's Creed.

Customs, disciplinary rules and forms of devotion may change, and have changed as regards the outward sort, but the spirit of charity is always the same. "Nothing unclean shall be admitted into the kingdom of heaven," and there is no salvation except through the virtue of the Cross and the merits of Jesus Christ, as applied to the souls through the Holy Sacrifice of the Altar.—Catholic Standard, March 30.

THE POPE OF AFFAIRS IN ITALY.—At a public audience on Monday, speaking of recent events, his Holiness said that the misfortunes of the Church date principally from 1846. Before then both Rome and Italy applauded the Papacy. The Pope said: "A deputation offered me the Presidency of the Government, but I replied—the Pope wished to preserve his rights, but not to injure those of others." In conclusion, his Holiness stated that the coexistence of two Powers at Rome was impossible, but that he hoped for the restoration of tranquility.

"At Last!"

It is wonderful what a depth of true philosophy there is in that homely saying, that it makes all the difference in the world "whose ox is gored." And this truth our contemporary, the N. Y. Tribune, strikingly illustrates in its issue of the 21st inst. In an article reviewing the leading public latelouts of Senator Sumner's career, since the inauguration of General Grant, it points out the cause of the assaults made on that statesman by the Administration faction in Congress, which it refers to under four grounds: 1st—Mr. Sumner's exposure of the impropriety of General Grant's nomination of A. T. Stewart, as Secretary of the Treasury; Second—His opposition to the San Domingo swindle; Third—His tipping up of the Custom House and Civil Service enormities of Gen. Grant's parasites; Fourth—His raid upon the Grant "Military Ring"—in the matter of the "French Arms Scandal." As a fifth source of aggravation the Tribune vaguely glances in the existed we give below, but does not go into an exposition of it, probably from a feeling of personal modesty, since it is generally understood that Mr. Greeley is not only opposed to the renomination of Gen. Grant as Presidential candidate, but is also an aspirant himself for that distinction in the coming struggle. And here, it looks as though the shoe is getting the wrifter; for the article lapses into a style of language which, however customary in the columns of the Tribune, was not wont to be applied by that journal to the co-laborers of the Journal of Civilization. Here are the words of wrath which show how the ira mentis may have carried the editor of the Tribune beyond the lines of those with whom he has been so long allied:

"Meantime, the Two-Term journals were let loose on Mr. Sumner. Harper's periodical has outdone itself in assaults upon him, from week to week, as though he were a second Tweed or Connolly. If he were a thief, he could not have received more vituperation than he has only received in the Americans to pick a quarrel with Great Britain, and what advantage would they be likely to gain by such a step? It is now generally told that Canada is defenseless, and that it is no laughing matter to dream of invading it

WEEKLY CALENDAR.

FOR THE WEEK BEGINNING APRIL 14, 1872.

14—Sunday—Second Sunday after Easter.
15—Monday—Of the Feria.
16—Tuesday—Of the Feria.
17—Wednesday—St. Anicetus, Pope and Martyr.
18—Thursday—Valley of the Blessed Sacrament.
19—Friday—Of the Feria.
20—Saturday—Octave of the Immaculate Conception.

THE MONITOR:

THE ONLY

Irish and Catholic Journal in California.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

SATURDAY.....APRIL 13, 1872.

THAT "MARE'S NEST."

The Sacramento Union has been kind enough to favor our article entitled "Swindlers in a new Character," Our respected contemporary is gravely funny over some mistakes which it insists we committed, and seems as if having discovered "a mare's nest." One mistake, in truth, it seems we did make, and we hasten to make atonement therefor. We alleged that our distinguished visitor, Takaru, spoke exclusively English, and was in the habit of delivering speeches at the banquets to which he and his companions are being treated. Upon the, in this particular, unquestionable authority of our Sacramento friend, we now confess that the aforementioned personage speaks nothing but the purest Japanese, and has to avail himself of the services of an interpreter whenever he wishes to convey his ideas to men of Anglo-Saxon race. If we have unconsciously hurt the feelings of the noble Takaru in attributing to him an accomplishment which he does not possess, we humbly apologize for our error and pray to be forgiven.

In the course of our article we made two other assertions, both of which the Union attempts to controvert and falls utterly to disprove. We said that an active persecution of native Christians was being carried on at the present time in Japan, that revolting cruelties were being practiced upon unoffending men, women and children, and that Iwakura, before he started on his travels, was in the life and soul of this persecution." Our contemporary denies the persecution in toto. It blandly assures us that, during the stay of the embassy in Sacramento, it "made an effort to investigate the matter and received assurances that nothing of the kind was going on, but that the story was manufactured out of whole cloth." The Union knows very well that this is not evidence. A denial on the part of the persons implicated certainly counts for nothing; and, besides, those sayable or permitting or countenancing the infamies reported from Japan would not rescind their edicts to conceal their "Again it says: "Those who have visited the American Mission, who has been many years in Japan, and is thoroughly conversant with the affairs of the Empire, frankly say that no cruelties under surveillance, but that they were not caged or barbarously treated. They were watched and confined to certain districts, because, from their tenets, the Japanese believed they were aiming at sovereignty, and were inimical to the existing government." We are charmed with the frankness of this Mr. Rice, as much as with the simplicity of the Union editor who accepted his "explanation" of the persecution story. Now, we do not know that there are any Jesuits at all in Japan; but, if there are, they assuredly do not number more than three or four. The idea of keeping a couple of peaceful missionaries "under surveillance" and confining them to "certain districts," because they were "aiming at sovereignty," is as ludicrous, as farcical, and as nonsensical, that our contemporary ought really feel ashamed of setting it before intelligent readers. How the throne of the Mikado can be in any danger, because a few defenseless Catholic priests preach the Gospel of the Crucified, is a thing that can only be understood by Mr. Rice and the wise men of the Sacramento Union.

Our contemporary is clear in its wrath from the accusation of having acted as superintending torturer of Christians in his native country, slyly hints that we have been led astray by a "coincidence of names." Well, that may be. We confess with regret that we are not profoundly posted upon Japanese cognomens; and, for aught we are aware of, "Iwakura" may be the Asiatic equivalent for the British "John Smith." But unfortunately for the Union the authority from which we quoted described the gollity party as "Head of the Western Embassy," so unless there are two or more Western Embassies, each with an Iwakura at its head, we are afraid our distinguished visitor must be set down as the real Simon Pure.

Now the presentation of which we spoke did not consist in keeping Jesuits, or men of any other religious order, "under surveillance," (carefully refraining from "caging" or "barbarously treating" them) but in the subjection of thousands of native Japanese to tortures at the very mention of which humanity must shudder. That this persecution is a real one, that the harrowing story was not "manufactured out of whole cloth," we proved on the combined authority of two respectable journals, one of them published on the very spot where the persecution is raging, neither of them having any sympathy whatever with Catholic missionaries or the Catholic religion. Neither the Overland Monthly nor the Nagasaki Gazette can be suspected of having "manufactured out of whole cloth" a tale of suffering and death for the purpose of exciting sympathy in favor of men of our faith. Still less could either be suspected of calling upon the Christian powers of Europe to send fleets and armies for the protection of "Jesuits" who, though "aiming at the sovereignty" of Japan (!) and "inimical to the present Government" of the Mikado, were "not caged or barbarously treated," but merely "placed" under surveillance" and "confined to certain districts."

For our own part we have never been guilty of, as the Sacramento Union says, struggling to "depreciate a race struggling for a higher civilization." For the efforts of the Japanese to elevate themselves, socially and politically, we shall never have anything except words of encouragement and admiration. What we condemn is that detestable spirit of worldliness, that cold-blooded indifference to religion, which would make persons like the writer in the Union prefer Mammon to God, and condone the most flagrant outrages upon fellow Christians, outrages inflicted solely because of their faith in the Gospel, provided only that trade was encouraged, and commerce received extensive developments!

UNFABRONABLE RUDENESS.

Tois Republic of ours is often sadly disgraced by the conduct of its citizens who And their way into the various European capitals. Indeed so frequently in this the case that rudeness and rowdyism have come to be regarded as natural characteristics of American behavior. There was a time when English tourists were the great offenders and examples of rudeness and etiquette. When an individual, male or female, indicrously attired, was remarked promenading the streets of Paris, Vienna, Berlin, Madrid, Florence or Rome; or became conspicuous for rude or boisterous behavior in church, elbowing the worshippers aside, talking or laughing loudly during the most solemn portions of the divine service, rushing to and fro in search of eating fruit and cakes to the discomfort as well as the disedification of all around, that individual was pretty certain to be set down as English or, if he chanced to be not drunk at the time, was announced to storm and swear and threatened to throw the porter out of the window; and of an American "lady" who, when prevented by a Swiss guard from entering a portion of St. Peter's set apart for church dignitaries, began by abusing him at the top of her voice, and ended by slapping him in the face. Even within the very walls of the Vatican, the Pope's private residence, to which strangers are admitted purely by the courtesy of the Holy Father, where they have no more rights of their own than they would have in the house of an American merchant, they do not hesitate to mock and sneer at everything, insult the domestics, and actually pilfer small articles to carry away as souvenirs! Scoundrelous has been conduct even on many occasions, that it has caused his Holiness much annoyance, and, only lately, discussing this "American rudeness" with a visitor, he quietly, yet significantly, remarked, "Whatever their opinions about us may be, they (the Americans) have no right to bring their bad manners here."

But the Supreme Head of the Catholic Church must know very little of the way in which most of these nouveaux riches have been brought up, or he would not express any surprise at their demeanor. They are at once "free Americans," "enlightened Protestants," and, as such, they feel absolved from all obligation to be polite towards "benighted papists," even when the house of these papists and enjoying the benefits of their hospitality. To Americans, the gentlemen and polished manners, the graciousness and suggestion of these are "shoddyites" must be truly a source of pain and humiliation. If so, they should take some steps towards putting a stop to them, because their repetition in the whole nation is to a certain extent at stake. Perhaps the means which have proved so efficacious in the case of the British delinquents, may be equally successful when applied to their New England imitators. The press of the United States should speak out and speak boldly.

Hitherto there has been a kind of condonation granted to these offenses against good taste and decorum. They have been censured, but it has been after the manner in which the forwardness of a spoiled child might be blamed. Such things were, to be sure, deserving of reproof; but then they were so funny and so indicative of American independence of spirit. It would be better if that style of comment were dropped altogether, for it is more mischievous than would be severely letting them alone. If Americans will not reprove in some decided way the misconduct of their own countrymen, and are willing that free institutions and republican government should be accused of generating cowardice and vulgarity, then the people whose hospitality has been so often betrayed should, in sheer self-defense, let their doors against every man and woman hailing from that country which claims the glorious title of the Great Republic of the West.

CITY CATHOLIC NEWS.

MISSION AT ST. FRANCES' CHURCH.—A very successful and most edifying Mission is now being conducted in St. Francis' church, Vallejo street, by the Very Rev. Father Hennebery, of the Order of the Precious Blood. The religious exercises proper to the occasion commenced on last Sunday, when Father Hennebery delivered a most powerful and impressive discourse concerning the great spiritual advantages which might be derived from the Mission by those who attended it, and fulfilled the duties required by it, and exhorted with a pious disposition. He classified the several grades of humanity, regarded from a religious point of view, as reprobate, predestined and just. His discourse was upon subjects such as Interpretation of Scripture, Predestination, Cessation of the Saints, Sin and Death, topics calculated to arouse his hearers to repentance and amendment. The Very Reverend Father's discourses were also adapted to peculiar states and conditions in life. Thus there were addresses to married and single ladies and also to married and single men. Each general address was followed by a private interview, during which the pious and forcible language to [illegible] from mitted marriages, [illegible] ally cautioned his hearers. While speaking on this head the very reverend missionary was more than usually eloquent and impressive. The Mission will continue for ten days from the date of opening, and on its conclusion a Spiritual Retreat will commence for the spiritual benefit of the children who are preparing for their First Communion. The final services of both Mission and Retreat will take place on Sunday (second) week, 21st inst., when the Baptismal Vows will be renewed. The Very Rev. Father Hennebery, who has charge of the Mission at St. Francis' church, is endowed with many of the most zealous and indefatigable preachers of the Gospel who have ever blessed California with their presence. His first Mission in California was that which commenced at St. Mary's Cathedral on 20th Sept., 1865. Since then he has conducted no less than fifty-five similar exercises in all parts of the State. Tens of thousands of men and women received Holy Communion during these missions, and there can be no doubt whatever that immense good has been wrought by them. The amount of labor—mental and physical—undergone in the performance of the duties appertaining to them, it would almost be impossible to overestimate. Besides the long and weary journeys undertaken in carrying out these missions, and the unwonted attendance in the confessional, Father Hennebery usually preaches two or three times a day, and always extemporaneously, inasmuch as it is quite out of the question for him to find time wherein to prepare anything. The only respite, we may say, he took from this paternal labors of the missions, was in May, 1870, when he left for Europe for the purpose of establishing a colony of missionaries and students of the Congregation of the Precious Blood at Eureka, Humboldt county. The colleges founded at this place may now be reckoned among the leading educational institutions of California. It can boast of a staff of professors of all branches of learning unsurpassed for efficiency or zeal, and they have at their command scientific apparatus, imported at great expense directly from Germany. The locality is most salubrious, and the buildings are admirably situated, so that the health of the students may be regarded as provided with every safeguard. Such has been the career, such have been the labors of the highly-gifted and indefatigable servant of God who is winning souls for salvation by his mission in St. Francis' church.

ST. PETER'S CATECHISM.—Last Sunday the examination of the Sunday school children by the teachers of the Union, passed off very creditably. In almost every instance the children answered correctly the different questions propounded, evincing a decided knowledge of the catechism. The church was crowded to its full capacity by the friends of the pupils and teachers from other Sunday schools. The Bishop was present during the examination. He said High Mass at 10½, and administered confirmation to a large number. At the close of the examination, he gave a short sermon on the catechism and the benefits to be derived from its study. He congratulated the pastor and teachers on the efficiency displayed by the children, and hoped they would persevere in the good work and make their pupils still more efficient in this proper knowledge. After the examination, which lasted about an hour and a half, the choir discoursed some excellent selections. A solo, by one of the ladies, was very well rendered. After singing by the choir, the children in unison sang a very good style a beautiful hymn. Benediction by the Bishop closed the exercises.

REV. FATHER PRENDERGAST will lecture next Thursday afternoon in the Catholic Church, San Pablo, on "The Duties and Rights of Christian Parents." The proceeds will be devoted to the sustainment of the Catholic Day School in that town. We hope the lecture will be well attended; for the object is one that intimately concerns every parent.

SUNDAY SCHOOL UNION.—The second quarterly re-union of the Society will be held Sunday, April 21, at St. Mary's Cathedral, at 3½ o'clock, P. M. Brother Justin, President St. Mary's College, will deliver the address.

THE POPE AT ROME.

ROME, March.—"To go to Rome and not see the Pope" used to be a synonym for the height of absurdity. It is now of daily occurrence. Since the Italians came into Rome the Pope has never left the precincts of the Vatican, nor taken part in any public religious ceremony, except on the occasion of the celebration of the Catholic festivals of its imposing ceremonies.

THE GUARDIA NOBILE,

For instance, is still recruited from among the nobles of Rome, who would have to buy off their service in the army, and who, moreover, say they were required to do duty for the State. They act as the Pope's body-guard, and on the days of high festival corps still rank as officers in the Papal army—the rank and file of which, by the way, are the Zouaves now disbanded, is composed of nothing but the Swiss Guard. At the ceremonies of Holy Week, when the pontifical ex-et-rexit of Cardinals, who all congregate in a small chamber until the Pope's approach, they proceed to present themselves to him when he comes out, and to follow in the wake of his throne, pulling the hand up to his chin just below his mouth, "the waters are as you only up here, and the waters" are as you only up here, and the waters rise any higher I must either go away or be drowned." Again, when the Pope is at dinner, "Many people, Catholics as well as Protestants, seem to have an altogether false idea of my position here. They say that I am not really a prisoner. It is true that there are no garrisons here, no bolts of iron, no bars to the windows, no sentinels pacing the corridors—there is indeed the notion to the world; but I am obliged to remain in the Vatican. Every night I go into the areas of St. Peter's, where all sorts of immorality would meet my eyes; where all the exercises, all the passeggiate of Italian society, and of the world are collected together!" This seemed to remind his Holiness of the American nouveau riche to which I have already alluded, and asked me if I had heard of its asking that it showed what sort of people they were. Now-a-days. "Whatever their opinions may be," he went on to remark, "they are not justified in bringing their bad manners to me." I could not discuss with the Holy Father the morality of Rome, or the advisability of his going out—especially as I happen to know the ideas of the clerical party on the subject. They believe that he would be welcomed with enthusiasm by the people at large, but the some few might insult him, and that in such case bloodshed would ensue.

THE UNLUCKY YANKEES,

that were nameless sorts of every nation, and that, as one of those fellows spoke German, he had been chosen to serve as the Pope's body-guard. Whereupon the Holy Father is presented to the Pope, who asks him if he is a Roman Catholic. He answers that he is a German settled in America—a confession from which the Pope, I feel alright the expression of his face, did not augur much good. "There were many Germans professed in America who did not forget," he added with as much severity as feasible, "the demeir de foi." He then suddenly remarked that he remembered corresponding with the President—the one who died, meaning Lincoln; and he as suddenly asked what had become of the President of the South. "He is a rebel, he was a long time in prison, and then I heard of his being in England, and I think he is now back again." "Is he a Catholic?" "No, he is not." "Then why did you not bring him to me?" "Because I was not supposed to belong exclusively to the Catholic religion." "Ah! well, I am sorry for it, very sorry indeed." Gov. Downey says he was very naughty, because, when Victor Emmanuel climbed the property of Catholic Christendom, we have been calling him names. Perhaps we have been too open to hold with Governor Downey that there is no such thing as a Catholic state, for we do not define "success" as he does "to be the measure of greatness and the road to happiness of men and of nations in this utilitarian age." We happen to believe there is a new Heaven and a new Earth in our Sacred Mind, while thunder rolled in loudest peals and the lightning of heaven blazed around it; and Victor Emmanuel climbed the property of Catholic Christendom, we have been calling him names. Perhaps we have been too open to hold with Governor Downey that there is no such thing as a Catholic state, for we do not define "success" as he does "to be the measure of greatness and the road to happiness of men and of nations in this utilitarian age." We happen to believe there is a new Heaven and a new Earth in our Sacred Mind, while thunder rolled in loudest peals and the lightning of heaven blazed around it; and Victor Emmanuel has been looked upon like the holy image of God: he would have dragged into schism, as an impudent usurper of her "chattels," the Church of France: he would have torn the "seamless garment" of Christ. But he himself, thanks to the magnificent discourses of the immortal Boanet, on "The Unity of the Church of God." Indeed, since "Governments" kings and emperors fancy that the indez student of history" knows anything about, would have scurped and wielded a power which can be exercised only by him who holds the keys of the kingdom of heaven. Governor Downey was born in England, and the people of England must look to it." So they do, and there are man now living who looked to it "fresh, and who will droop mournfully in withering leaves from a tree always green, and ever beautiful and ever green. And Gladstone, says the Los Angeles News, "is a prominent interrupted by enthusiastic applause from the multitude that listened.

* * If this report be true, the more pity for the multitudes that listened to it. It is not on the face of it a likely story, for I have it on the most authority that some walked away at the sickening scene, the only way in which they thought proper to manifest their disgust at the insolent blasphemy of the demoralized beasts strongly," of the evil lamp, and it is passing strange during his preparation it never occurred to the orator to remember that it is not good taste to talk of the position given him by fellow-Catholics, would bring pain to many a friend in California.

Governor Downey has been [illegible] branch of faith with the Irish people of Los Angeles, and I protest in name and in the name of all the orthodox Catholics in the State, against his [illegible] and assertions of blunderings [illegible] having abused his privilege for confession of Freemasons' and other of our religion. When he raised his voice to strike the Mother that bore him, he ought to have known that he had either or who would paralyze it and leave closed, as was his of old who stretched it against the prophet of God. Mr. Downey's undigested contempt for the rules of decent history made easy."

Now, Governor Downey, his ignorance notwithstanding, has knowledge experience enough to know that the Pope is not a prisoner, and that he does not go into any court of justice, would be [illegible] as a witness. Governor Downey is the man who "has the greatness of Henry IV., of Elizabeth, by the grace of God, Pope of Rome, and Defender of the Faith," and who, before, a leader, showing up by extracts from the proceedings of the Masonic press "exhibiting the devil's showy teeth grinning through the [illegible] of Christ. But Governor Downey has not learned another lesson from the damning fact that ten thousand "brothers of the mystic tie" are banded together in Christendom for the express purpose of destroying the Church of God, and that the Pope is the [illegible] Governor Downey is not aware of the fact, he is ignorant of the history of the [illegible] Governor Downey has been [illegible] Governor Downey has been [illegible] Governor Downey has been

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

ENGLAND.

English Morality.

The most bitter comment on the social state of England, the most scathing denunciation of English civilization that we have seen, is a Bill, which, on the motion of Mr. Charley, member for Salford, passed its second reading on Tuesday evening in the House of Commons. It is called "the Infant Life Protection Bill," and its provisions are sufficiently indicated by its title. To such an extent is the horrible and inhuman art of "baby-farming" being carried on just now in England that it has become a regular British institution, required to be suppressed by an Act of the Legislature, and, accordingly, proposes that persons who, for a money consideration, place themselves in loco parentis towards two or more infants for a longer time than a day shall obtain a certificate of good character and fitness from a medical practitioner, minister of religion, or justice of the peace; that a register shall be kept of persons so licensed of infants intrusted to them; that in case of death a Coroner's inquest shall be held unless a certificate is furnished by a registered medical practitioner that the death arose from natural causes; that no burial shall take place without a Coroner's certificate; and so on, the most elaborate precautions being taken to prevent the murder of little children by women who are supposed to be civilized and Christian. We hardly think there is another country in the world besides England in which such a Bill would be necessary.—Nation, March 9.

A New Idea in Religion.

In a journal entitled the West Londoner Advertiser we find mention of so odd a case as to pass the Rev. Dr. Threshan Gregg. Our readers are aware that the reverend gentleman has delivered a series of lectures in this city some time ago. He has changed his views, and now proclaims the extraordinary doctrines in Euston square. As we have never enjoyed even a thing like a distant examination of Dr. Gregg's views, we readily reprint from the journal above named the following passage which may prove of interest: "The extraordinary principles announced by this distinguished divine have been exciting some attention in the metropolis. He has for the last three years had his sermons published in the columns of the Times as 'debuts,' in which the object has been to give an inconsistencies of his startling views. To show what these are we quote from a pamphlet of the denomination the following passage. He say there 'that there are certain prescriptions in the Sacred writings, but not to be disclosed till now—last. For not merely prolonging life to the duration of some eight hundred years or more, which was reached in the time of the Patriarchs, but for perpetuating it altogether, not, however, in the condition of sin and frailty which belongs to it as at present constituted; but so that it shall be consonant of advancing to higher degrees of excellence and glory. That these prescriptions involve the absolute extinction of pain and sickness, which are but circumstances of a dying nature. Why, then, the preparation for the aged the powers which have been worn out by senility, or rather gradually translating the Frame of believers into a framework of a higher order of existence than that which now clothes them. Silly. For perpetuating the freshness and beauty that belongs to the state of youth, so that it shall not fade away into a disturbing state of exhausted debonnity, but bloom for ever in connection with a sanctified nature, with a brightness ever increasing. Why, then, should any of the Christ who sleep in Him, or have so slept for ages, and for whose resurrection the allotted period was to come at this time."—Dublin Evening Telegram.

FRANCE.

French Workmen.

Just now, when we hear so many strikes, and when our workmen advocate their claims with so much prudence and temper, we regret to recall to the French artisans the evidence given by the police before the commission of inquiry into the recent outbreak in Paris. One witness said: "I have had considerable experience of Paris workmen and those who influence them: they do not seek to improve their position by work or frugality—they dream only of appropriating in their own interest the workshops and machinery possessed by their hated rich masters. I have always found them envious, revengeful, enemies of superiority and authority. They fancied for a moment that by cooperation, they might enforce the payment of a higher salary; while, at the same time, doing less work. They soon found that, in order to earn and retain money, labor and economy were necessary; and that the master was not, as they imagined, making capital out of his workmen, or living at their expense. They became convinced that a cooperative society never succeeded in its objects unless it had an intelligent workman at its head, who directed the institution while playing his part of the manual. When they found that it was necessary to obey either the one or the other, to work assiduously without realizing considerable sums of money, they became disgusted; and, from time to time, thought and dreamed of nothing but the wholesale appropriation of property and capital, which they always regarded as their natural enemies."

Imperialist Corruption.

The trial brought to a close at the commencement of the week at Rouen, throws by no means a flattering light on the secret working of society under the recent Imperial and political life. That Monsieur Javier de la Motte, Prefect of the Eure, could, during a period of twelve years, succeed in "cooking accounts" without being detected, or brought to account for his malpractices, is a fact that speaks for itself and reflects anything but credit on the administration to those days he served so well. We are too dull to comprehend the equity of the logic which exempts the prefect on the ground that he only acted as every one else acted; our conscience is not altogether so indiarubber as to believe that universal morality excuses the crimes of an individual. If there be any excuse for this prefect, it is that in spite of the brazen audacity with which he paraded his immoralities in full view of the public, and boasted of his success in all the good folks of his department had the doubtful taste to side with him and applaud him on hearing of his verdict of acquittal. But what could one expect from unofficial disinterested people, when no less a person than the Minister of Finance came to court to defend the Emperor after a swindling Prefect. — London Universe, March 9.

Prisons and Accidents in Paris.

A curious case has occurred in the Rue Glacière of a whole family—father, mother and three children—being poisoned, though not fatally, from eating unwholesome mussels. About half-an-hour after breakfast, at which the unfortunate individuals had partaken heartily of these shell-fish, the youngest child, a girl of eight, was seized with frightful pains in the stomach; and, while her parents were doing their best to relieve her the two boys, aged respectively ten and twelve, became similarly affected. The father and mother soon followed suit, whereupon the neighbors fetched the doctor in hot haste, who, seeing at a glance what was the matter, administered a strong emetic, which had the desired effect of bringing the sufferers to. The man of physic then turned his attention to the mussels, which had been fortunately left on the dish, and discovered the cause of the mishap. He observed that some of them were black in parts, and found, on applying the usual test that they were saturated with oxide of copper, which they had doubtless imbibed while adhering to copper-bottomed vessels at sea or to portions of wrecks. No doubt for the result of indulging in poisoned mussels. An instance of the consequences of eating nothing at all was furnished in the case of a poor young woman, a seamstress, who fell exhausted on the pavement in front of a restaurant in the Rue Lepic. She had tasted nothing for three days. She was taken into a chemist's shop where attempts were used to restore her, and a small collection sufficient to place her above immediate want, was made among the charitable bystanders. Unlike this good young French woman, who preferred starvation to going wrong, a smart Yankee distinguished himself by a bold though unsuccessful attempt to raise the wind by illegitimate means. The office of the Minister of Finance having floor of the Ministry of Finance having been burnt by the Communists, the business has been removed to the Palais de l'Industrie, and as one of the clerks was passing from one door to another with a roll of bank notes amounting to 5,000 francs, the individual in question, quick as thought pounced upon him and snatched away one note of 1,000 francs and one of 500 francs. Though taken unawares, however, the active Frenchman was on the alert, and collared the man, who dropped his notes broke away and ran down stairs, flinging away in the scuffle a pair of beautifully finished implements for picking the locks of doors and safes. At the bottom of stairs he was arrested, and gave, through an interpreter, the name of Henry Charles Stanley, thirty years of age. Two sovereigns and nine francs were found upon him, together with a handsome gold watch, a locket containing the portrait of his wife, and a card-case with the address of a hotel in the Rue de Paris, and had put up at the Hotel du Louvre. It will be interesting to watch the result of his trial, and to see what difference will be made between a stranger, and the talented native who really wonderful and oft-repeated exploits in the pocketing line have been going the round of the French and English press. The latter has got off with the extremely light penalty of a few years imprisonment, if the expiration of which sentence he is at liberty to resume his raids upon society, should he feel disposed to adopt that adventurous and somewhat dangerous course. The French are very fond of finishing off even murderers on the ground of "extenuating circumstances!" considering, therefore, that this is the first offence of which the American has been guilty in this country and that he has a wife to support, he will doubtless be treated with a leniency which he will it is hoped appreciate.—London Register, March 9.

The Murdered Hostages.

On Sunday I had an opportunity of visiting the prison of La Roquette, and was allowed to enter the cell in which the late Archbishop of Paris was at first consigned, then to which all his effects were removed, which was more commodious, with a wooden peg to hang his hat on, and the wide square window. Here it was that he was about to kneel down to address a prayer to Heaven, when his brutal murderers prevented him, by telling him that they would not hear what he would soon be there. They were about to shoot him on the spot, but observing that the windows of the prison overlooking the spot was crowded with spectators, they led him along the passage formed by the main building and the outer wall into that which the sacrifice was consummated. A marble slab has been placed on that part of the wall against which the victims were placed, with their backs engraved upon it, and the Abbé Crosse, the chaplain of the jail, has applied to be allowed to enclose with an iron railing the spot on which they stood, which was saturated with their blood. The permission, however, declined to accede to his request, as, indeed might have been expected from such a prison, stimulated free-thinking lot. Now, that I am on the subject of La Roquette, I may as well find a place to mention that the demon in female form who took the life of the Abbé Surat, has been discovered and arrested. It will be remembered that the Abbé Surat was one of those who were unwillingly decided by the gaize of the prison having been thrown open by the Communards just before the arrival of the Versaillais, and that he unfortunately fell into the snare. The Abbé Lamazon, who remained behind, sang out to him that to go was certain death: to remain afforded a chance for life," but unhappily his advice was not followed. On the very threshold of the jail the Abbé Surat was seized, and while he was struggling with his assailants in the vain attempt so escape, a young girl of sixteen, dagger and revolver in hand, rushed through the throng, and shrieked out, "Allow me the honour of giving him his first blow." The wretch pistol stretched his hands before him, instinct of self-preservation, and exclaimed, "Oh, grace, grace!" but the fury discharged her revolver point-blank into his face, adding insult to injury, by perforating a wretched pun at the same time. "Grace," said she, "grace, then, on this an assassin, and as such I dereceive him." Well, this choice specimen of womankind has been discovered, thanks, curiously enough, to the fashion of wearing high-heeled boots, which her sex patronize for the time being. It has been the subject of remark that she wore boots of this description, as it was very unusual for persons of her price of life to indulge in such a luxury. Nothing more was thought of it for a time, but one day a detective happened to notice a person answering her description, and seeing her enter the establishment of a bandmaker where she worked, followed her in and put some questions to her. The answers proving unsatisfactory, further inquiries were made, which ended in her arrest. She will be tried in due time, but as the only convictal it is to be feared that she will escape capital punishment, for, although some women were put to death by the Versaillais in the heat of the moment on their entering Paris, they were uniformly spared the punishment of death when sentenced by a court-martial. A considerable number of these were liberated with a view to erect a building for charitable purposes on the very spot in the Rue Haxo, where the sixty-five hostages were slaughtered. Contributions for this pious end are received at No. 18, Rue Isidor de Mantrip, the head office of the committee, and at the Credit Industrial et Commercial, No. 72, Rue de la Victoire.—Paris Cor. Weekly Register, March 9.

What is the difference between a great coal and a baby? One you wear, the other you wear.

IRISH INTELLIGENCE.

Royal Uncertainty.

The "glorious uncertainty of the law" has been again proved in the case of the Hertford estate in Ireland. These estates are worth about £60,000 a year, and on the late Marquis of Hertford died, litigation commenced, as the will was open to some doubt. In the first argument, the Irish Court of Common Pleas decided unanimously one way, and in the second argument the Irish Appeal Court has decided by four to three in an opposite direction. There is, therefore, a majority of seven judges overruled by a minority of four. The case is sure to come on to the House of Lords, where perhaps the decision of the first court will be set up again. How true is the old saying, "the law is only a game of battledore and shuttlecock."

Father Lavelle on the Dublin Express.

Father Lavalle, the patriotic Irish priest of Partry, in Connaught, has sent the Dublin Orange Express a nut to crack.

It seems that that journal in an unguarded moment, joked about St. Peter ever having been in Rome, and that a copy of the paper was sent to Father Lavelle, specially marked. He lost no time in giving the editor material for another lucubration:

An anti-Papal and anti-Catholic organ says the reverend writer in his able letter) has given its views on the truth of the discussion, and I ask you in fairness to publish its estimable learned. The Portland Bond thus proclaims its convictions: "Judgment has been given by every one present which is given in our mind and reason. They all asks simply—Who has carried the day? I answer, "Those who have proved and convinced and persuaded you most. For instance, the writer of these lines came to the discussion in doubt and complete ignorance of the matter in question. Well, then he went away with a full conviction that the historic personage called the Apostle St. Peter, in the records of the great Christian revolution, did really come to Rome, and was martyred in the reign of Nero, A.D. 66, at the same place.

"San Francisco, February 15, 1872.

JAMES F. KELLY,
P. CASSERLY,
Trustees in Bankruptcy of said Estate.

Gallagher & Burnett, Attorneys for Trustees, northwest corner of Montgomery and Commercial streets.

SMALL FRUIT INSTRUCTOR

Sixty-four pages, prices in cents, post-paid. Tells how to grow all kinds of Small Fruit successfully. Invaluable to all who have a garden. Published by

A. M. PURDY, Palmyra, N.Y.
Or PURDY & HANCE, South Bend, Ind.

P. S.—Specimen copies of the Fruit Recorder and College Gardener, a dollar monthly; A. M. Purdy, editor. Free to all applicants. If speaks for itself. To use a copy is equivalent to subscribing. 3t

AVOID QUACKS.—A VOLTAIC BELT for nervousness, causing serious debility, premature decay, &c., having great in vain every advertised remedy has discovered a simple means of self cure, which he will send free to his fellow-sufferers. J. H. Reeves, 78 Nassau street, New York. 1y

HOTELS.

Removal.

THE SECOND STREET HOUSE

Has Removed to 116 Second street, Opposite the Academy of Design. Furnished Rooms to let, with or without board, on the most reasonable terms. Call and examine. ap6 P. CONLAN, Proprietor.

CENTRAL HOTEL,

214 AND 216 BROADWAY,

Between Broadway and Pacific.....San Francisco

THIS NEW, LARGE AND COMMODIOUS House has been thoroughly furnished by the well known proprietor, M. FARRELL, late proprietor of the Brooklyn House, where he will be happy to receive his numerous friends and the public in general. Thankful for past favors, he respectfully solicits a continuance of their future patronage.

There is a fire-proof safe in the House, where money and valuables can be kept at the risk of the proprietors.

The United States Hotel Coach will be at each car depot on the arrival of each train, to convey passengers to the House free of charge.

Free of board to suit the times.

Parties sending for their friends to the States, as the expect any, will please notify MICHAEL FARRELL, and he will attend to them on their arrival, and forward them to their friends with due care, and at the most reasonable rates.

The strictest attention will be paid to the comfort of the patrons of this House. 1y6-tf MICHAEL FARRELL, Proprietor.

FRANKLIN HOTEL,

218 AND 216 PACIFIC STREET,

Between Sansome and Montgomery.....San Francisco.

HUGH CUNRAN.....Proprietor.

Board, per week.....$6 00
Board and Lodging, single room.....8 00
Single Meals.....50 cents. Lodging, 25 cents.

Family accommodations on reasonable rates. Passengers to and from the Steamers, Cars and Ferries, free of charge. Omnibus on the city paper taken.

RAILROAD HOUSE,

Corner of Sansome and Pacific streets, San Francisco,

IS NOW OPENED BY

P. CASSERLY,

(Late of the Tremont House; where he will be happy to receive his friends and the public. The Tremont House is thoroughly fitted up on the latest improved plan, and will be conducted in the best manner. The rooms are large and airy, and the provisions the best the market affords. A fire-proof safe will be placed in the office for the safe keeping of valuables, and will be under the immediate and constant supervision of the proprietor.

Board and Lodging, per week.....$8 to $10
Board and Lodging, single room.....10
Single meals.....50c

P. CASSERLY, Proprietor.

CITY HOTEL,

K street, between Third and Fourth, Sacramento.

THIS HOUSE IS CENTRALLY LOCATED, THE rooms are commodious, well ventilated and newly furnished throughout. Supplied with the best meats are vegetables in the market.

Board and lodging, per week.....$4 00
Board and lodging, per week.....$5 to $7 00
Lodging, single room.....50c
Single meals.....25c

F. CONLAN, Proprietor.
6t17

AN UNSOLICITED

Testimonial.

CHICAGO, Dec. 5, 1871.

TO THE OFFICERS OF THE

GERMANIA, HANOVER, NIAGARA AND REPUBLIC

Insurance Co.'s

OF THE CITY OF NEW YORK,

COMPOSING THE

UNDERWRITER'S AGENCY.

GENTLEMEN:—The course pursued by your Committee in the adjustment and payment of our own losses by the late fire, and the liberal manner in which the great fire of Chicago, has been so highly honored, and the confidence reposed in us, and marked by such apparent desire to deal justly towards all parties, so far all circumstances, that we cannot, voluntarily, but acknowledge it to the general public. We conceive the manner in which the Secretary of the Board of Underwriters and the integrity of an insurance organization, and the high character of its officers, is a public and material responsibility, and a record for its future settlement and preservation. We therefore congratulate you upon the career of future prosperity to which your actions have so justly entitled you, and remain, yours very respectfully,

Field, Leiter & Co.
John V. Farwell & Co.
Kinsley, Tatt & Co.
Hayden & Kay.
Lord & Smith.
Farrington, Brewster & Co.
Richards, Cumbaugh & Co.
Wm. Deering.
Crosby, Osgood & Co.
W. M. & A. Keith & Co.
C. M. Haddock & Co.
C. P. Haddock & Co.
Wm. H. Haskell & Co.
Markley, Alling & Co.
Wright, Kerfoot & Co.
Nathan Ross.
Sexton, Sons & Co.
Hall, Aiden & Co.
Tabb, Wampold & Co.
Allen & Mackay.

PUBLISHED ISSUED BY

W. J. STODDART,.....Agent.

310 California street, San Francisco.

CALIFORNIA BUILDING and LOAN SOCIETY.

In Bankruptcy.

NOTICE OF SECOND DIVIDEND.

UNDER AND BY VIRTUE OF OUR ACTION and order of the District Court of the United States of the California Building and Loan Society, bankrupt, we do hereby declare a second dividend of twenty per cent. on the proofs of debt proved and allowed against the estate of the said bankrupt, payable on and after the first day of April, A.D. 1872, at the office of the said Society, 310 California street, San Francisco, and all creditors who have not proved their debts are required to do so forthwith.

Dated this 1st day of March, A.D. 1872, at the office aforesaid.

JAMES F. KELLY,
P. CASSERLY,
Assignees.

GROCERIES, WINES AND LIQUORS.

WILLIAM B. DOLAN,

105 Third Street.....San Francisco.

Importer and Dealer (Wholesale and Retail) in

French Wines and Brandies,

AND

Irish Whiskey,

Imported direct from Ireland.

HE HAS ALSO ON HAND A LARGE AS-sortment of Fine Old Whiskies of every description, which he will dispose of, in bulk or in case, for the convenience of families.

All orders left at the store, 105 Third street, will be promptly attended to, and delivered free of charge in any part of the city. j728

JOHN FLANAGAN & CO.,

Importers and Jobbers of

Fine Brandies, Wines, Liquors, etc.,

Fire-proof Store, 421 Front street, bet. Clay & Washington

San Francisco.

Foreign Liquors in bond. Fine Brandies, Holland Gin Port, Claret, etc., sold in quantities to suit the purchaser Also, Gutierrie native California Wines and Brandies. 6m8 tf

H. H. KELLY. JOHN EGAN.

Kelly & Egan,

IMPORTERS AND DEALERS IN

FINE WINES AND LIQUORS

No. 604 Battery street,

San Francisco.

E. Commins & Co.

(Successors to T. Riley & Co.,)

WHOLESALE LIQUOR MERCHANTS

my6 No. 506 Front street.

A. P. HOTALING & CO.,

IMPORTERS AND DEALERS IN

FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC

WINES AND LIQUORS.

AGENTS FOR THE J. B. CUTTER

OLD BOURBON WHISKY,

C. P. MOORMAN & CO., DISTILLERS,

LOUISVILLE, KENTUCKY.

OWING TO THE DESERVED REPUTATION of the celebrated brand of Whisky, many unprincipled parties, at sundry times, and in many ways, are in connection with the undersigned, the well known and popular name of CUTTER, and the similarity of the name of Cutter to that of Cutting, proposed to them selves to palm off upon the unsuspecting public their base counterfeit.

The guard so far as possible the public against fraud and imposition, we notify the trade and consumers that this is the only genuine brand of Cutter Whisky, and that we are the sole Agents for the same on the Pacific Coast.

A. P. HOTALING & CO.,
421 Jackson street, San Francisco.

McMAHON'S SALOON

P. J. McMAHON, FORMERLY THE PROPRIETOR of the Occidental Saloon, Third street, has recently fitted up a fine resort at

318 Bush Street,

Opposite the Academy of Design, where he will be happy to see his former patrons and the general public. The Bar is supplied with the choicest Wines and Liquors, and the very best brands of Cigars, among which may be found the celebrated brand of CUTTER'S. Unlimited extra fine old Bourbon selected expressly for this house. Also, constantly on hand, the celebrated brand of RUMMERMANN'S VIRGINIA MIXED CHEWING TOBACCO, the only genuine brand of CHEWING TOBACCO in the market, and which has been selected for Mr. McMahon by a special agent to the factory.

☞ A SUPERIOR LUNCH always ready. 6t9

CITY SALOON,

K street, between Third and Fourth, Sacramento

(adjoining CITY HOTEL.

P. S. QUAID.....Proprietor.
6t17

PAINTS, OILS, ETC.

A. WASON. T. C. MORRIS.

WASON & MORRIS,

(Successors to R. REILLY,

PLAIN AND DECORATIVE

HOUSE AND SIGN PAINTERS,

GILDING AND GLAZING,

Imitations of Wood and Marble.

Sagnors, Flags and Military Standards painted to order.

PAINTS, OILS,

TURPENTINE, VARNISHES,

BRUSHES, GLASS, Etc.,

NO. 28 CALIFORNIA ST.,

Two doors below Davis street, San Francisco.

SULLIVAN, KELLY & CO.,

Northwest corner Pine and Front Sts.,

Where they offer for sale

THE LARGEST STOCK OF

PAINTS,

OILS,

GLASS,

ETC., ETC., ON THE PACIFIC COAST,

AT THE LOWEST MARKET RATES.

101, 103 and 105 FRONT STREET,

and 110 PINE STREET. tf

DONNOLLY'S CALIFORNIA

PREMIUM

YEAST POWDER.

ANOTHER GREAT REDUCTION.

Only $16 per gross in lots to the trade

THIS SUPERIOR YEAST POWDER has been in the preparation of its present, cause, for

USE DONNOLLY'S YEAST POWDER,

The best and cheapest ever offered to the public; made fresh every day at the Factory, 121 and 123 Second st., San Francisco, Cal.

D. CALLAGHAN, Proprietor.

TROY BELLS.

Old Established Troy Bell Foundry.

TROY, N. Y. (Established 1826.)

A LARGE ASSORTMENT OF CHURCH, Academy Fire Alarm and other Bells constantly on hand, and made to order. Made of genuine Bell Metal (copper and tin.) Bung with Rotary Mountings, the best and most durable ever used. All Bells warranted satisfactory.

Large Illustrated Catalogues and Price Lists sent on application to

JONES & H., Troy, N. Y.,
Or 199 Lake street, Chicago, Ill.

EDUCATIONAL.

COLLEGE OF NOTRE DAME,

SAN JOSÉ, CALIFORNIA.

YOUNG LADIES' INSTITUTE.

THIS INSTITUTION, WHICH IS INCORporated according to the laws of the State, and empowered to confer academical honors, will open on the Tuesday first Annual Session on MONDAY, August 21, 1871. The course of instruction embraces the branches of a thorough education.

TERMS:

Entrance, to be paid on first entrance.....$10
Board and Tuition, per quarter.....60
Washing, per quarter.....12 50

All orders left at the store, 105 Third street, will be promptly attended to, and delivered free of charge in any part of the city. j728

JOHN FLANAGAN & CO.,

Importers and Jobbers of

Fine Brandies, Wines, Liquors, etc.,

Fire-proof Store, 421 Front street, bet. Clay & Washington

San Francisco.

Foreign Liquors in bond. Fine Brandies, Holland Gin Port, Claret, etc., sold in quantities to suit the purchaser Also, Gutierrie native California Wines and Brandies. 6m8 tf

H. H. KELLY. JOHN EGAN.

Kelly & Egan,

IMPORTERS AND DEALERS IN

FINE WINES AND LIQUORS

No. 604 Battery street,

San Francisco.

E. Commins & Co.

(Successors to T. Riley & Co.,)

WHOLESALE LIQUOR MERCHANTS

my6 No. 506 Front street.

A. P. HOTALING & CO.,

IMPORTERS AND DEALERS IN

FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC

WINES AND LIQUORS.

AGENTS FOR THE J. B. CUTTER

OLD BOURBON WHISKY,

C. P. MOORMAN & CO., DISTILLERS,

LOUISVILLE, KENTUCKY.

OWING TO THE DESERVED REPUTATION of the celebrated brand of Whisky, many unprincipled parties, at sundry times, and in many ways, are in connection with the undersigned, the well known and popular name of CUTTER, and the similarity of the name of Cutting, proposed to them selves to palm off upon the unsuspecting public their base counterfeit.

The guard so far as possible the public against fraud and imposition, we notify the trade and consumers that this is the only genuine brand of Cutter Whisky, and that we are the sole Agents for the same on the Pacific Coast.

A. P. HOTALING & CO.,
421 Jackson street, San Francisco.

McMAHON'S SALOON

P. J. McMAHON, FORMERLY THE PROPRIETOR of the Occidental Saloon, Third street, has recently fitted up a fine resort at

318 Bush Street,

Opposite the Academy of Design, where he will be happy to see his former patrons and the general public. The Bar is supplied with the choicest Wines and Liquors, and the very best brands of Cigars, among which may be found the celebrated brand of CUTTER'S. Unlimited extra fine old Bourbon selected expressly for this house. Also, constantly on hand, the celebrated brand of RUMMERMANN'S VIRGINIA MIXED CHEWING TOBACCO, the only genuine brand of CHEWING TOBACCO in the market, and which has been selected for Mr. McMahon by a special agent to the factory.

☞ A SUPERIOR LUNCH always ready. 6t9

CITY SALOON,

K street, between Third and Fourth, Sacramento

(adjoining CITY HOTEL.

P. S. QUAID.....Proprietor.
6t17

PAINTS, OILS, ETC.

A. WASON. T. C. MORRIS.

WASON & MORRIS,

(Successors to R. REILLY,

PLAIN AND DECORATIVE

HOUSE AND SIGN PAINTERS,

GILDING AND GLAZING,

Imitations of Wood and Marble.

Sagnors, Flags and Military Standards painted to order.

PAINTS, OILS,

TURPENTINE, VARNISHES,

BRUSHES, GLASS, Etc.,

NO. 28 CALIFORNIA ST.,

Two doors below Davis street, San Francisco.

SULLIVAN, KELLY & CO.,

Northwest corner Pine and Front Sts.,

Where they offer for sale

THE LARGEST STOCK OF

PAINTS,

OILS,

GLASS,

ETC., ETC., ON THE PACIFIC COAST,

AT THE LOWEST MARKET RATES.

101, 103 and 105 FRONT STREET,

and 110 PINE STREET. tf

DONNOLLY'S CALIFORNIA

PREMIUM

YEAST POWDER.

ANOTHER GREAT REDUCTION.

Only $16 per gross in lots to the trade

THIS SUPERIOR YEAST POWDER has been in the preparation of its present, cause, for

USE DONNOLLY'S YEAST POWDER,

The best and cheapest ever offered to the public; made fresh every day at the Factory, 121 and 123 Second st., San Francisco, Cal.

D. CALLAGHAN, Proprietor.

TROY BELLS.

Old Established Troy Bell Foundry.

TROY, N. Y. (Established 1826.)

A LARGE ASSORTMENT OF CHURCH, Academy Fire Alarm and other Bells constantly on hand, and made to order. Made of genuine Bell Metal (copper and tin.) Bung with Rotary Mountings, the best and most durable ever used. All Bells warranted satisfactory.

Large Illustrated Catalogues and Price Lists sent on application to

JONES & H., Troy, N. Y.,
Or 199 Lake street, Chicago, Ill.

EDUCATIONAL.

COLLEGE OF NOTRE DAME,

SAN JOSÉ, CALIFORNIA.

YOUNG LADIES' INSTITUTE.

THIS INSTITUTION, WHICH IS INCORporated according to the laws of the State, and empowered to confer academical honors, will open on the Tuesday first Annual Session on MONDAY, August 21, 1871. The course of instruction embraces the branches of a thorough education.

TERMS:

Entrance, to be paid on first entrance.....$10
Board and Tuition, per quarter.....60
Washing, per quarter.....12 50

Payments must be made semi-annually in advance. No deduction will be made for absence except in case of protracted illness.

Physicians fees will be charged to the parents, unless in cases of necessity and where it is sufficient inconvenience.

For further particulars apply to

1y8 REV. J. J. O'KEEFE, O.S.F.

ST. JOSEPH'S COLLEGE,

Rohersville, Humboldt County, Cal.

CONDUCTED BY THE FRIENDS OF THE CELEBRATED FATHER MOST PRECIOUS BLOOD.

THIS INSTITUTION IS SITUATED ON A pleasing elevation at the confluence of Eel and Van Duzen rivers, in the county of Humboldt. It is accessible from the chief towns in the State by steamers, which ply daily to and from the port of Rohersville, the San Francisco and Humboldt Bay Steamboat Company's steamers touching at Rohersville for landing the material answers.

TERMS PER SCHOLASTIC YEAR:

Board and Tuition, payable quarterly in advance.....$150
Bed board, bedding, tuition, washing and mending.....200
Entrance fee, to be paid only once.....10
Graduation fee.....10

Junior class.....$50 00
Senior class.....60 00

Music, vocal and instrumental, drawing and painting, with gymnastic extra charges. The use of the scientific and philosophical apparatus, $10 per session. Session opens on the 15th of August and the 15th of January.

All communications regarding the College to be addressed to the Secretary, Rev. P. ANTHONY.

Very Rev. P. BENNET, Superior.

da23

DAY SCHOOLS

FOR

Boys and Girls.

THE SISTERS OF MERCY HAVE JUST OPened a Day School for Boys and Girls, on Bush street, near Hyde, which possesses all the facilities for a thorough English education. Terms moderate, and will be placed in charge of competent teachers. Both schools will be under the direction of the

SISTER MARY B. RUSSELL,
Superior Sisters of Mercy.

San Francisco, May 1, 1871. 1y

ST. VINCENT'S SCHOOL.

THIS INSTITUTION IS SITUATED IN MARket Harbors, a short distance from the sea, in one of the most healthy portions of the city. The grounds are extensive, and the building is large and commodious.

The course of instruction embraces the English language, Mathematics, Book-keeping, Plain and use of instrument, per month, $1 00

No extra charge for Plain bowing. Fancy Drawing extra.

The scholastic year of ten months and a half commences on the first Monday in August, and ends on the last Thursday in June.

For further particulars apply to

SISTER IN CHARITY,
Santa Barbara, Cal.

ST. VINCENT'S COLLEGE,

LOS ANGELES, CAL.

DEGREES CONFERRED

Rev. JAMES MAGILL, C.M.,
President.

FRANCISCAN COLLEGE,

SANTA BARBARA.....CALIFORNIA.

THE FIFTH SESSION OF THIS INSTItution, conducted by the Fathers of the Franciscan Order, will commence on August 16th, 1871.

The object of the Institution is to give a good Mathematical, Classical and Philosophical education to such youths as may be entrusted to its care.

Terms, including Board, Bedding and Washing, per session.....$250

Payments to be made semi-annually in advance.

Parents will be advised as to the clothing necessary for pupils.

Further particulars can be had on application to the President.

Rev. Thisbert Marie Biron, pastor of St. Peter's Church, in the city parish of St. John the Baptist, New Orleans, died Sunday, Feb. 26th, at the ripe age of seventy-six. Father Biron was born in the parish of Nantes, France, where he had received a liberal education. His natural calling, and had been in this country only six months. Sent temporarily to St. Peter's during the illness of Father Lacour, upon the death of that good priest he was unanimously elected by the Catholic parishioners appointed pastor.—Propagateur Catholique.

T. J. BRODERICK,

(Late Broderick & Dow)

IS RE-ESTABLISHED AT

NO. 24 THIRD STREET,

West Side, two doors below Stevenson.

THE LARGE SUPPLY OF FASHIONABLE boots and shoes, which he has just received, will be kept in large stock at the above place.

Fashionable Boots and Shoes,

All other rates than any other house in the city.

Ladies' Gaiters and Children's Boots and Shoes made to order of the best material and workmanship.

Please call and judge for yourself, as I will be pleased to show them.

T. J. BRODERICK,
24 Third Street.

IRISH AND AMERICAN

FLAGS AND BANNERS,

SILK OR BUNTING.

On hand, for sale or made and painted to order, by

C. J. BARRON,
815 Market street, San Francisco.

☞ Country orders promptly attended to. fe2

POLL TAX

Now Due,

AND PAYABLE AT THE

TAX-COLLECTOR'S OFFICE

OR TO A DEPUTY.

ma9-1m

Moderation.

One of our most talented weekly papers are expression last week to certain sentiments, and which at this time are worth noting. The Spectator — a decidedly clever and yet broad-sided paper—did its best to say that it should hardly condemnable English society on the decline of loyalty and hearty hating when it remembered how Whigs and Tories fell foul of each other in the days of the Emancipation Bill, for the restoration of the bishops of the Oxford tuition that had been in Italy has had to do with it—the rise of Methodism. Moderates have no more inextricably than the ultra-liberals of their day have been continually with the Church's enemies, while professed friends. The past, it has always been—"We must not commit ourselves," and they have vanquished the "fanatics" of the Holy Ghost by the "fanatics" of the Holy than of the excess of the Liberals. Liberals have often twitted them with their want of principle, but what they really hold that sort of a Church they were fighting for—a compromise. And in this Chamber when a Moderate Government is in power, and a great question is on, the Liberals are insulted and betrayed by the rulers of indefectionness. Then is produced the cry of the Church and Count Rechardi, a warm friend of His turned to the Ministers and Whose cry is that all the Catholic the chamber were as honest and outspoken as Mr. Disraeli or Mr. Gladstone, and then Dr. Vindex Reggio had been the loyal and steady advocate of the Papal languages, with first-class masters in the chief property, half-a-year a hair's breadth. At this utterance Count Ricciardi's a loud burst of laughter from the Opposition rang through the Left and Left Centre, and was echoed from the Right, and the proper reflection—in one of which admission is shook it up with such a shout of applause, that the President in vain rose to clear the tribunes. We have allowed, too, that the fiery Pietro Cullen was respected by the most ultra-Protestant.

None of no more powerful master of speaking at this moment than our Father the Right, and the proper subject what the Moderate Catholic must be his later utterances, and though he is not likely to be neither on one side or the other, that does not always follow it is hard to be neither on one nor in the things religious. As an example of what we mean, let us take the speeches and discussions that took place in the Chamber of Deputies on the 1,500 people—we take them from the Catholic Opinion of Paris, which says: "The Duvil has come to Jerusalem, and has said to it: 'If you will but fall down and adore me, I will give you these kingdoms, these empires, these riches.' Not only Italy has the power to give, but other places also well known to you. The devil has not changed his principles and his tactics, but his bargain has been struck. The barbarian possession of this Peninsula; there are persecution of Churches, her, persecuting her ministers, blasphemy, spreading immoral-ness, spreading it broadcast, hearts adored." And this the Holy Father said as proof of the reality of his work in the world in which he has to labor in rather trying to Moderate the Liberal party abroad spoken of in such unmistakeable language. Language of this kind is, however, salutarily refreshing. In our days the tendency is to compromise everything, to make an alliance, as the Holy Father has well put it, between Christ and Belial. This is the spirit of the age, and it has crept into Catholic as well as Protestant society. It is something to know at the head of the army of right one who never hesitates to describe things exactly as they are, one who does not rely on hearty hating—that is, on a real disregard for it, rests his cause solely on right, and who sees the line between right and wrong as plainly as if it were traced in diamonds. To Catholics the Holy Father represents on earth the Divine Master, and it is cheering, in such faithless days, to have unmistakeable utterances as to the ideas of that Master. In our own country we run especial risks from this spirit of compromise. That moderation is a sort of incarnation of the spirit of our age, is, we fear, too true. Its measure is not that in the therefore, more to be dreaded than the more open hostility of Liberalism. One can surely afford to be just to a bad cause, to allow for what is good in it, without giving the slightest credit to its badness. No bad human cause is without some streaks of good in it. It is possible, therefore, to be just to it without being false to truth, and without being timorous or moved by human respect in defending the right. And we think, with the Spectator, that the decline of hearty hating is not at all to be regretted as a measure. For where the hearty hating would argue the decline of hearty loving. And, with the decline of strong feeling for a cause, the chivalry, and the loyalty, and the faith of men would be lost in a system and a mass. Hostility and respect are born of want of faith, it is to reason, then, that the opposite qualities are born with liberalism much else than with the right. There were many instances of this during the reign of the Vatican Council. The Moderates were at war with the ultramontanes—in one of which admission is struck it up with such a shout of applause, that the President in vain rose to clear the tribunes. We have allowed, too, that the fiery Pietro Cullen was respected by the most ultra-Protestant.

None of no more powerful master of speaking at this moment than our Father the Right, and the proper subject what the Moderate Catholic must be his later utterances, and though he is not likely to be neither on one side or the other, that does not always follow it is hard to be neither on one nor in the things religious. As an example of what we mean, let us take the speeches and discussions that took place in the Chamber of Deputies on the 1,500 people—we take them from the Catholic Opinion of Paris, which says: "The Duvil has come to Jerusalem, and has said to it: 'If you will but fall down and adore me, I will give you these kingdoms, these empires, these riches.' Not only Italy has the power to give, but other places also well known to you. The devil has not changed his principles and his tactics, but his bargain has been struck. The barbarian possession of this Peninsula; there are persecution of Churches, her, persecuting her ministers, blasphemy, spreading immoral-ness, spreading it broadcast, hearts adored." And this the Holy Father said as proof of the reality of his work in the world in which he has to labor in rather trying to Moderate the Liberal party abroad

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE MONITOR—1872.

REDUCTION IN PRICE

FO

THE HOUSEWIFE.

FRENCH HOUSEKEEPING.—Cookery is made one of the fine arts in France, as all the world knows. But all the world don't know that economy is one of the marked excellencies of it. No other housekeepers make a little money go, at the same time, so far and so well as the French. A part of their secret is, that they make their purchases at market in small quantities, figuring carefully how much will be wanted at each meal, and buying no more than will be eaten up. A favorite method of saving is to use small quantities of dearer articles in the form and the zeal of the cook and make the bulk of the meal of the cheaper food, as, for instance, a small piece of choice meat, with a large allowance of bread and vegetables. Delicious dishes also are made out of the coarser pieces of meat that no American housekeeper would think of serving up to company." To this saving in providing against all waste and in adjusting the proportions of food cheaply, is added a special economy in fuel for cooking. A fire is built just large enough to do the work required, and it is found that small dishes can be cooked with very little fuel indeed when it is properly managed. American domestics probably waste from ten to fifty times as much heat as they actually utilize.

WASHING CALICOES.—Black calicoes should be washed in water in which potatoes have been boiled. The starch water made by having two or three potatoes scraped in it; or good boiling water in which bran is steeped, and when lukewarm wash them strain it, and when lukewarm wash them in it, using no soap. Before washing any calico, rub soap on the grease spots—hard soap, or soft soap a year old. Alum is good to set the color of green; and put in the rinsing water of blue, black, or green calicoes, will prevent the colors running into each other. Use weather-woman linsey-woolsey, and the colors will not fade. Soak all light gilts of salt in four quarts of boiling water, and put the calicoes to a white boil. Starch, if used, should be mixed cold, and boiled in flour; a small teaspoonful of salt and a white spoon to roll out very thin; prick and cut it with a tin scallop, and bake brown.

GRAHAM PUDDINGS ON PUFFS.—Melt 2 oz. of butter in a pint of cream; let it stand till nearly cold; then mix 2 oz. of fine flour and 2 oz. of sugar, four yolks and two whites of eggs, and a little rose, or orange flower water. Bake in little cups, buttered; half-an-hour. They should be served the moment they are done, or they will not be light. Turn out of the cups, and serve with white wine and sugar.

DEATH OF THE ARCHBISHOP OF LIMA.

—A correspondent of the Panama Star and Herald of March 5th gives the following: The Archbishop of Lima died on February 19th. The event, though not wholly unexpected, created a profound impression in the capital. The body was laid out in state; the different religious communities relieved each other in the performance of the customary rites; the numberless church bells of Lima and the guns of the fortress of Santa Catalina announced the event at extremely short intervals, and the funeral was announced for the 24th. Dr. Goyeneche was appointed Bishop of Arequipa during the reign of Ferdinand the Seventh, and after holding that position for forty years was made, some ten years ago, Archbishop of Lima. At the age of eighty-eight he was the eldest Bishop and oldest Archbishop in the Catholic Church; the first by reason of seniority, the second by reason of age. Another more agreeable circumstance, to those strongly interested, is the fact that the deceased prelate was probably the richest man in South America, his property at the lowest estimation amounting to twenty millions. His life was spotless and his virtues many; his skill, if fault it be, was a remarkable degree to increase his wealth. In countries like Peru, where the Church is dependent upon the State, and the poor are so literally provided for, it is hardly necessary to extol privately employ private means in charitable objects.

A later date has the following: The funeral services of the late Archbishop of Lima were conducted on a very grand scale, the numerous religious communities, the President and his cabinet, Diplomatic Corps, the Supreme Court, and a division of the army took part in the ceremonies. The total cost of the pageant was upwards of twenty-five thousand soles. As yet the will of the deceased Prelate has not been opened, but it is supposed that his large fortune, variously estimated from ten to thirty millions of soles, is left to his immediate family.

TELEGRAPHIC.

Eastern.

PROVIDENCE, April 5.—Full returns of the State election show a majority of 1,176 for Padelford, Republican candidate for Governor, and 160 majority for Cutler, Democratic candidate for Lieutenant-Governor. The remainder of the Republican State ticket has about 2,100 majority.

NEW YORK, April 10.—Greely prints in this morning's Tribune his programme for the Presidential campaign. If two Republican tickets and one Democratic are in the field, he will support the stronger of the former. If the campaign hinges on Protection vs. Free Trade, he will support Protection. Finally, if the only two tickets that have a chance of success are Republican, he will support the one best calculated to promote a return to purity of legislation and of administration. The Tribune will be no one organ, and will issue no campaign sheet, but will support the candidates may be.

TOPEKA (Kansas), April 10.—The Liberal Republican State Convention met here today, elected delegates to the Cincinnati Convention, and adopted resolutions embodying the principles set forth in the call for that Convention. M. J. Parrot heads the list of delegates.

ST. LOUIS, April 6.—A prominent Illinois politician now in this city states that Senator Trumbull has recently written a letter to his brother-in-law, Dr. Jayne, of Spring field, Illinois, in which he fully commits himself to the Liberal movement, and expresses the opinion that the nominee of the Cincinnati Convention will be the next President.

NEW YORK, April 6.—It is generally known that Fenian favors the Cluskinsky movement. Though he has not publicly committed himself to it; he admits that he is one of the leading men in that locality. Among his associates is Judge Heard. The Judiciary Committee yesterday heard further testimony against Judge Heard. Among the witnesses examined was one that the Judge corruptly disposed of some $20,000 Fenian funds.

Washington Matters.

WASHINGTON, April 5.—On motion of Pomeroy, from the Committee on Public Lands, the bill granting right of way to a railroad from Salt Lake to Portland, Oregon was passed.

Cole yesterday introduced a bill authorizing the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, of California to construct, instead of the line of road situated north of Kern River, the line of road situated north of Kern River, the following route: one railroad to connect with the completed portion of its road, via Fejaro and Salado Valleys and Pacheco Pass, to intersect with original line between Kern River and Tulare Lake; also a railroad to connect with the San Joaquin Valley Railroad at Visalia, thence on the original line of the Southern Pacific Railroad, as near as practicable to the junction aforesaid; twenty miles per year to be constructed by each road; the Company to hold the lands already granted on the original line, but to receive no additional.

Cole withdraws his recommendation of Lewis for Hardenbergh's successor, and urges Lewis F. Jones, of Mariposa.

It is now certain that Cole intends to demand the removal of Collector Phelps, but the name of his proposed successor has not transpired.

Cassery will move an Australian steamship subsidy as an amendment to the pending bill.

Another attempt to pass the Texas Land scheme is intended to be made about the middle of next week. Its friends claim a reaction in its favor, caused by the hanging in effigy of a California Congressman, which is considered logical, nor evidence that the opposition is intelligent. Nevertheless, if the measure straightens, it will be because lobby pressure simply; without it, it would not command ten per cent. of Congress' votes.

The House has passed Sargent's bill authorizing joint entries on public lands, or the entry for several settlers on subdivisions less than quarter sections.

LONDON, April 4.—The Globe to-day calls attention to a rumor of an extraordinary character, but as obtained, entirely credible. London, that the case of the American Government before the Geneva Tribunal assumes the form of claims of the United States, by capture and destruction of American ships and cargoes by Confederate cruisers built or fitted out in English waters to the full amount of the expenses of the United States Government in pursuing said privateers, at two hundred millions, and a demand is made with some severity on this statement, and expresses a hope that Gladstone will be speedily called on in Parliament for an explanation of its truth or falsity.

LONDON, April 7.—The Queen has returned from her visit to Germany.

The trial of Arthur Orton, for his attempt on the Queen, is set down to commence on the 19th. The prisoner has made no effort to secure counsel for his defense. It is probable that the trial will be postponed, perhaps indefinitely, as convicting Orton would be giving ground that he is insane.

A serious fight took place at a meeting in Cork which had been convened to denounce the International. The opposite faction, after a severe struggle, remained masters of the situation, deciding that the International might become useful as an ally of the Fenian organization.

LONDON, April 10.—Gladstone accepted Newcastle by the invitation, signed by three thousand citizens of Belfast, to accept the hospitalities of the city and deliver an address. The invitation was presented by a deputation of citizens, and Gladstone spoke for an hour in explanation and defence of his Irish policy. He would be greatly disappointed if pressure of public duties prevented his visit.

Subscriptions Received.

| | |
|---|---|
| Sonoma Valley—M. Burns | $ 50 |
| " James Bagley | 1 00 |
| Jackson—Edward Muldoon | 1 00 |
| " James Carroll | 1 00 |
| " Mrs. Mary Ann Shaw | 1 00 |
| " James Flemming | 1 00 |
| Buena Vista—Rev. Father McNamee | 1 00 |
| " Patrick Neilly | 1 00 |
| Mokelumne Hill—James Shirley | 1 00 |
| " Mr. Forbes | 1 00 |
| San Andreas—Rev. Father McNamee | 1 00 |
| " Mr. Hayes | 1 00 |
| " James W. Shanklin | 1 00 |
| " P. Martin | 1 00 |
| " Thos. Silver | 1 00 |
| " Mrs. Mary Ann Shaw | 1 00 |
| Camanche—Thos. Finnerty | 1 00 |
| " John Clarke | 1 00 |
| " Wm. Wetzell | 1 00 |
| Lockeford—Patrick Mahoney | 1 00 |
| " Jenny Lind Trief Hotel | 1 00 |
| " Angelo Antonio Mackey | 1 00 |
| City P. H. N. King | 1 00 |
| Stockton—Patrick John McDonald | 1 00 |
| Red Bluff—Mrs. N. Smith | 1 00 |
| " Mrs. Mary Ann Shaw | 1 00 |
| Petaluma—Michael Verdon | 1 00 |
| Sonoma—Mrs. Mary Ann Shaw | 1 00 |
| Sonoma—Martin Barry | 1 00 |
| Sonoma—Mrs. Mary Ann Shaw | 1 00 |
| Santa Rosa—Mrs. Mary Ann Shaw | 1 00 |
| Santa Rosa—John Sutton | 1 00 |
| Healdsburg—A. B. Hopkins | 1 00 |
| Lower Lovelock, Kansas—Michael Jordan | 1 00 |
| Milpitas—James Kelly | 1 00 |
| Donovan's Mills—James Kean | 1 00 |

Send to R. F. Hall & Co., Nashua, N. H., proprietors of Hall's Vegetable Sicilian Hair Renewer, for a copy of their treatise on the Hair. A valuable little book, free to all.

MINING NEWS.

ALPINE.—The Tarshish miners, says the Alpine Chronicle, of March 30th, have struck the richest and finest body of ore ever opened in any part of this lode. Ore from the mountain mine, on the slope of Red Mound, pays $70 per ton.

AMADOR.—The Kennedy mine, says the Ledger of April 9th, made a clean-up of 305 ounces a few days since. A new ledge about two and a half feet in thickness has made its appearance on the 400-foot level, which surpasses in richness any rock yet discovered.

The Ledger says that there are many first-class veins in the Amador which only require a few good and energetic mechanical men to take hold of them to make the gold yield of Amador county superior to any in the State.

CALAVERAS.—The Calaveras Chronicle, of April 6th, says: The survey for the ditch to convey water from the Union mining is completed and the stakes stuck. We are not learned when the work of digging the ditch will be commenced. Operations have been resumed upon the Whisky Slide mine.

Should the quartz now being crushed pay as well as it is expected to, it will be a long time before we have to chronicle another suspension.

NEVADA.—The Grass Valley Union has the subjoined: A lot of black sand, containing gold covered with rust and slime, 220 pounds, from the place known as Weber's claim, from which the gold could not be saved by ordinary sluice washing, was yesterday cleaned up at the Cox mill, from Justin Michel's amalgamating pan.

The Michel pan is different from all the well-known amalgamating pans, and it is confidently believed that it will prove successful in saving fine gold.

The Republican, of April 5th, says a party of prospectors a few days ago discovered a rich pocket on Wood's Ravine, and took out about $700 worth of gold quartz. The ledge is said to belong to the owners of Rising Sun, known as the Wyoming, and is a continuation of the same. Another assay chute on the Rising Sun is known to be 900 feet in length, and the discoveries in this to the place where the mine has finished crushing the rock taken from that mine, at the St. Patrick's mill. The amount of ore reduced was 429 tons, and the yield was some $16,000, an average of over $40 per ton.

PLUMAS.—Charles Rogers informs us that the mines in the vicinity of Greenville are prospecting finely this spring, and, as a consequence, times in that section of the country are improving. From the same source we learn that the Pennsylvania mill, (Halwell & McIntyre) is paying at the rate of $200 per day from rock taken out of their ledge at a depth of 400 feet.

SHASTA.—An Olympia paper has struck a gold mine in the rear of his premises in Shasta county. The name of the discovery was a Mexican named Porker, which, while rooting on the north bank of Clear Creek, in the quarries edge of the bank, threw up a quantity of gravel, in which examination this proved to contain a large percentage of gold, and straightway parties commenced washing out the precious metal.

There was a heavy frost in the vicinity of this city on Wednesday night. In Mission and in the vicinity of the Laguna Merced, the bean and potato vines were considerably damaged. Passengers from San José report that the vineyards near that city ware a little nipped.

MISCELLANEOUS.

INFORMATION WANTED.—Of JOHN DRIVER, who left Liverpool, England, in November, 1868, on board ship Scotsman Lassie, bound for Melbourne or some other port in Australia. When last heard from he was working his passage from San Francisco and Sacramento on a steamer. Any person corresponding him will be liberally rewarded by his mother, Catherine Doyle, or by address of Hugh Doyle, Lowell, Mass.

INFORMATION WANTED.—Of JOHN NEE, a native of Dublin Bridge, county Westmeath, Ireland. When last heard from, about five years ago, he was in San Francisco. Any one corresponding with will be thankfully received by his sister, Richard Nee, of the office of the San Francisco Monitor. mh9-3m

SCHOOL BOOKS, PRAYER BOOKS, TOY & JUVENILE BOOKS.

ALL THE TEXT BOOKS USED IN THE CATHOLIC and Public Schools of California can always be found at

RYAN'S OLD STAND,

No. 49 Fourth street, near Jessie.

Parents and guardians of limited means will find it to their advantage to trade here, for no goods will be taken, and all goods sold at the lowest living rates. Catholic Publications of every kind can be had, received from the publishers, to which additions is constantly made.

☞ The Monitor always on hand. ☜ mh9

EBERHART & LACHMAN,

MANUFACTURERS OF

CALIFORNIA SPARKLING WINES.

SWEET AND DRY CHAMPAGNES. Sparkling Hock, Sparkling Muscat, Also, White and Red Wines, Hock, Sauterne, Angelica, Muscatel, Madeira, Port, Sherry, Claret, Rhine Wine, Cognac Brandy, Wine and Jerry Cocktails, etc. Grape Brandies are made exclusively from Mountain and Valley Grapes, corner of First and Market streets, San Francisco.

LAND for SALE IN LOS ANGELES.

THIRTEEN ACRES OF LAND IN THE city of Los Angeles, it is subdivided into small lots. This property has a large frontage on the principal street of the city, is of a superior quality, and well adapted for the growing of oranges and other tropical fruits. The land is watered from two city ranges, and the title is perfect.

For further particulars apply to

JAMES GORMAN,

mh12 3m Los Angeles

QUITE AN ATTRACTION

—AT—

MRS. RIORDAN'S

MILLENARY EMPORIUM,

121 Kearny Street,

☞ One door from the corner of Sutter street. ☜

The latest assortment of EUROPEAN AND AMERICAN STYLES just opened for Spring. Ladies, please call and examine for yourselves, which will be cheerfully done. mh16-3m

Wholesale Market Report.

MONITOR OFFICE, SAN FRANCISCO, THURSDAY, April 11, 1872.

FLOUR.—The local demand has been up to the average, with a steady tone for export, at unchanged rates, since our last weekly review. We quote standard brands of Oregon extra at $5 12½@5 25; $4 75, and extra at $4 12½ to $4 50 ₱ bbl.

WHEAT.—The market has ruled firm, with a good demand, at advanced prices. At the close we quote the range at $1 70@2 ₱ 100 lbs.

BARLEY.—The market has ruled fair for this grain during the week under review, at advanced rates. Sales of ordinary quartz to-day at feeding at $1 45 @1 50 ₱ 100 lbs, which is the range of the market at the close.

OATS.—The market has remained quiet, but at improved rates, during the past week. Ordinary to choice sold at $1 40@1 70 ₱ 100 lbs, which is the range at the close.

HAY.—The receipts have been fair during the past week, and the demand moderate, dry. Quotable at $13 @22 for ordinary wild oat to choice wheat ₱ ton.

BRAN.—Quotable at $18 @20 ₱ ton for cargo lots.

CORN.—Market quiet at $1 45@1 60 ₱ 100 lbs.

CORN MEAL.—Sales at $1 62½ @1 75 ₱ 100 lbs from store.

BARLEY MEAL.—Sales at $1 62½ @1 75 ₱ 100 lbs from store.

BUCKWHEAT.—Sales at $2 @2 25 ₱ 100 lbs from store.

POTATOES.—We note sales of Early Rose at 60@75c ₱ 100 lbs; Peach Blows, 60@75c; Burbank Seedlings, 75c@$1 ₱ 100 lbs; Small White, $1 50@1 60 ₱ 100 lbs; Peas, $1 50@2 75 ₱ 100 lbs.

ONIONS.—The receipts have been excessive during the past week. At the close we quote the range at $2 50 @3 00 ₱ 100 lbs.

BEAN.—Quotable at 4@5 lbs from mill.

BEESWAX.—Quotable at 25@27½c ₱ lb for prime to choice.

HONEY.—We quote in the comb at 12½@15c ₱ lb; extracted, 7@8c ₱ lb.

HIDES.—We quote new crop calfskins at 20@22c ₱ lb; dry hides, 18@19c; kips, 18@19c; sheepskins, 50@75c ₱ lb.

TALLOW.—Quotable at 4½@5½c ₱ lb.

WOOL.—The spring clip is coming forward more freely.

DAIRY PRODUCE.

BUTTER.—California choice, 30@32½c; fresh roll, 20@25c; packed, 18@20c; Eastern fresh, 30@37½c; Oregon, 25@30c; Sonoma, 30@32½c.

CHEESE.—California, 15c ₱ pound.

EGGS.—California, 20c ₱ dozen.

POULTRY AND GAME.

HENS.—Large, $6@6 75; small, $4@5.

ROOSTERS.—Old, $5@6; young, $6@7.

BROILERS.—Large, $4@5; small, $3@3 50.

GEESE.—$1 50@2 ₱ pair.

GOSLINGS.—$1 50@2 ₱ pair.

DUCKS.—Tame, $5@6 50 ₱ dozen.

TURKEYS.—Gobblers, 20@22½c; dressed 22½@25c ₱ lb.

HARE.—$1@2 50 ₱ doz.

RABBITS.—$1 50@2 ₱ dozen.

QUAIL.—$1 50@2 ₱ dozen.

PIGEONS.—$1 50@2 ₱ dozen.

FRESH MEATS.

BEEF.—For first quality, 10@11c; ox, 9@10c; for second quality, 7@8c.

VEAL.—At 12@13c ₱ lb.

LAMB.—Spring, 12@13c ₱ lb.

MUTTON.—Wether, grain-fed, 10@11½c ₱ lb; ewe, grain-fed, 9@10c ₱ lb.

PORK.—At 10@12c ₱ lb.

DRY GOODS, ETC.

1872—SPRING ARRIVALS—1872

LANDERS, BYRNE & Co.

Have just opened and now offer for sale, their splendid stock of spring

DRY GOODS,

Consisting in part of

PIQUES, in endless variety;
BRILLIANTES,
SATIN STRIPES, something new;
ORGANDIES, the latest out for wrappers;
CAMBRICS and LAWNS in all shades;
JAPANESE SILKS, bleached and striped;
SUMMER SILKS, from $1 25 up;

BLACK SILKS

Of the very best makes, direct from Lyons;

And the World Renowned

IRISH POPLINS,

In all shades, direct from PIM Bros., Dublin.

IN OUR GENERAL

DRESS GOODS DEPARTMENT

Will be found a splendid line of goods, from 25 cents upwards, suitable for suits, specially adapted for the coming season.

HONIERY, GLOVES, HANDKE'FS, EMBROIDERIES,

LACES, and SMALL WARES.

HOUSEKEEPING GOODS

Being a specialty with us, our prices cannot help but depend on finding this department well worthy of their consideration.

☞ As the above stock of goods were purchased at the lowest cash prices, before the late advance, and sold on commission, our friends will have the benefit of the best selected stock of goods to be found in the very lowest prices.

LANDERS, BYRNE & CO.,
3 Third Street.

mh9

FANCY AND STAPLE

DRY GOODS!

J. HANIFIN,

350 THIRD ST., near HARRISON.

One Price Store.

BANKING.

LAND MORTGAGE UNION

OF CALIFORNIA.

OFFICE, 132 POST STREET, SAN FRANCISCO.

GUARANTEE CAPITAL.....$500,000

DIRECTORS:

President.....J. H. [illegible]
John Horton, John Nightingale,
Thomas R. Hayes, John M. Jackson,
E. G. Waldron, C. H. Fair,
Henry Kimball.

INVESTMENT CAPITAL.....UNLIMITED

Investing shares $100 each. Entrance fee, $1 per share. Periodical subscriptions, $1 per share. Paid up shares $12 50.

Interest allowed on Bank deposits from [illegible] quarterly.

Loans from 3 to 15 per cent. per annum.

JOHN T. CARTER, Secretary.

1p12

HIBERNIA SAVINGS

AND

LOAN SOCIETY

Office—Northeast corner of Montgomery and Jackson streets.

OFFICERS:

President.....M. D. SWEENY
Vice-President.....C. D. O'CALLAGHAN

TRUSTEES:

M. D. SWEENY, M. J. O'CONNOR,
C. D. O'CALLAGHAN, P. MCGLYNN,
JOHN SULLIVAN, DANIEL SCOTT,
R. J. TOBIN, PETER DONAHUE,
EDWARD MAHONY.

Treasurer.....RICHARD TOBIN
Attorney.....RICHARD SPECK

Remittances from the country may be sent by Wells, Fargo & Co.'s Express or through the banking house; but the safest way will be to open an account, when depositors of the Society should accompany the first deposit. A pass book will be delivered to the agent by whom deposit is made.

Dividends received from 25th upwards.

OFFICE HOURS—From 9 A. M. to 3 P. M.

JOS. A. DONAHUE, Secretary.
ROBERT TOBIN, Assistant Secretary.

DONOHOE, KELLY & CO.

SAN FRANCISCO.

EUGENE KELLY & CO.

NEW YORK.

BANKERS.

EXCHANGE ON

NEW YORK, LONDON, AND
BANK OF IRELAND.....DUBLIN

Payable at all the Branches,

AND IN EVERY COUNTY TOWN IN IRELAND.

LYNCH & COMIN

MANUFACTURERS OF

Overstrung, Grand, Square & Upright

PIANOS

WAREROOMS,

Nos. 629, 984, 936 and 938 Broadway,

NEW YORK.

THESE PIANOS ARE INDEPENDENT in their Powerful Tone, Elastic Touch, and powerful Tone, Perfect Workmanship, and in everything that constitutes a first-class Piano.

Description and Prices

The Pianos will be delivered in San Francisco at prices given:

No. 1—7 Octaves. Large front, round corners, carved legs, carved lyre.
No. 2—7 Octaves. Large front, round corners, sounding or plinth, carved legs and lyre, [illegible] trusses.
No. 3—7 Octaves. Large front, round corners, sounding or plinth, carved legs and lyre, [illegible] trusses.
No. 4—7 Octaves. Large front, round corners, sounding or plinth, carved legs and lyre, [illegible] trusses.
No. 5—7 Octaves. Large front, round corners, sounding or plinth, carved legs and lyre, [illegible] trusses.
No. 6—7 Octaves. Four large round finished bars like front, [illegible] carved legs and lyre, [illegible] trusses.
No. 7—7½ Octaves. Grand.
Some Octaves. Grand, with Boudoir and Parlor Scales.

WERIGHT PIANOS.

Boston Orders—Black Walnut case.
" " Very fine Rosewood case.
PARLOR ORGANS AND MELODEONS, of the latest and styles, at manufacturers prices.

TESTIMONIALS.

Below will be found a few of many hundred complimentary notices received:

From Mrs. General W. T. Sherman, Washington, D. C.

MESSRS. LYNCH & COMIN—Gentlemen: I have much pleasure in informing you that the Grand Piano purchased of you by me has given entire satisfaction in every respect. Its tone is rich, powerful, and sympathetic, and its touch delicate, delicacy of touch and beauty of tone being the two points in which it excels. Since it has been in use it has been in constant requisition, and I shall not hesitate to recommend it to my friends who may wish to purchase. I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

MRS. GENERAL W. T. SHERMAN.

The above letter can be seen at the office—No Monitor.

From the World-renowned Artist, Charles Kinkel.

MESSRS. LYNCH & COMIN: I am happy to express to you my entire satisfaction with the Grand Piano purchased of you. Its tone is powerful and sympathetic, and its touch delicate. I consider it a most excellent instrument, and shall not hesitate to recommend it to my friends. Yours, CHARLES KINKEL.

From Rev. J. Shea, S. J., Professor of Belles Lettres, Santa Clara College.

SANTA CLARA, N. Y. 1872.

MESSRS. LYNCH & COMIN—Gentlemen: I am pleasure to state that the Piano purchased of you by the Rev. President of Santa Clara College, has given entire satisfaction to Professors and Pupils in Music. Yours, truly,

J. SHEA, S. J.

From the Sisters of Charity, Academy of the Immaculate Conception, San José.

Having lunch d thoroughly Pianos in the Academy of the Immaculate Conception, we have much pleasure in stating that the Grand Piano purchased of you has given entire satisfaction to Music Teachers and Pupils.

Patron of a Letter from the Superior of the Academy of the Immaculate Conception.

I have much pleasure in stating that the Grand Piano purchased of you has been tried and heard it. The beauty and firmness of its tone, and the delicacy of its touch, have delighted me. I feel that I am only made in the discharge of a duty, when I express to you my satisfaction at the choice of the being present which I have made. Whilst the Piano is in the Academy, I shall take pleasure in recommending it to my friends.

The Piano that I bought for my daughter, is a beauty, and fully justifies all I have said of it. Please accept my thanks for the prompt manner in which you have executed my order, and for the moderate manner in which you have executed my order, and for the moderate manner in which you have executed my order, and for the moderate

THE HOUSEWIFE.

FRENCH HOUSEKEEPING.—Cookery made one of the fine arts in France, as all the world knows. But all the world don't know that economy is one of the marked excellencies of it. No other housekeepers make a little money go, at the same time, so far and so well as the French. A part of their secret is, that they make their purchases at market in small quantities, figuring carefully how much will be wanted at each meal, and buying no more than will be eaten up. A favorite method of saving is to use small quantities of dearer articles and make the bulk of the meal of the cheaper food, as, for instance, a small piece of choice meat, with a large allowance of bread and vegetables. Delicious dishes also are made out of the coarser pieces of meat that no American housekeeper would think of serving up to company." Tuthis think of serving up to company." Tuthis saving in providing against all waste and in adjusting the proportions of food cheaply, is added a special economy in fuel for cooking. A fire is built just large enough to do the work required, and it is found that the small dishes can be cooked with very little fuel indeed when it is properly managed. American domestics probably waste from ten to fifty times as much heat as they actually utilize.

WASHING COLLODS.—Black calloes should be washed in water in which potatoes have been boiled, or starch water made from them. Some add a little sugar, and by having two or three potatoes scraped in the water boiling, you get a wheat bran, starch, and when lukewarm wash them in it, using no soap. Rinse in water not very cold, with soap on the grease spots—hard soap, or soft soap a year old. Alum is good to set the color of green calico, and a little vinegar in the rinsing water of blue, black, or green calico, will prevent the colors running fast. Some ladies wash their woolen flannels in eight gills of salt in four quarts of boiling water, and put the articles in while hot, leaving them until cold, which process is to render the flannels unshrinkable, so they will not be shrunken by washing. Cotton not fade by subsequent washing. Cotton goods (except pure white) should never remain in water a moment longer than necessary, and should be dried in the shade.

COLD SLAW.—Take nice fresh cabbage-heads, cut them up coarsely, drain it, and cut off the stalks. Shave the head into very fine shreds with a sabbage cutter or sharp knife. Place it in a deep china or earthen dish, and prepare for it the following dressing: To half a pint of cider vinegar add a quarter of a pound of butter, cut in five or six bits and rolled in flour; a large spoonful of salt and the same of cayenne pepper. Stir well together and put in a saucepan. Set it nearly to the yolks of four eggs well beaten. When the mixture comes to boil remove it from the fire and stir in the sour cream. Pour the boiling hot over the cabbage, stir it thoroughly through the bowls, spoon, and set it by to be cold, or some other cool place to get thoroughly cold before being served at the table.

MINCED COLLOPS.—Mince a fleshy piece of beef (free from skin and gristle) very fine, season with salt and pepper. Mix a good piece of butter in a saucepan, with some flour; when this is well browned put in the meat to it, and beat it well among it with a wooden spoon or chopper to keep the collops from getting into lumps. When all is browned add as much boiled water as will make gravy, season them as you like. It is soon till done. If liked, an onion may be added. Venison and hare collops will make an elegant dish. Mince collops will keep some time well packed in a jar and covered with clarified suet.

AN EXCELLENT WAY OF PRESERVING TOMATOES TO EAT COLD.—Scorce with cold water. Take off the skin, and cut in a little vessel, half-an-hour. They should be served the moment they are cut up, or they will not be red. Turn out of the cups, and serve with white wine and sugar.

DEATH OF THE ARCHBISHOP OF LIMA.—A correspondent of the Panama Star and Herald of March 5th gives the following account of the death of Lima on February 12th. The event, though not wholly unexpected, created a profound impression in the capital. The body was laid out in state, the different religious communities relieved in the performance of the customary rites, and the numberless church bells of Lima and the guns of the fortress of Santa Catalina announced the event at extremely short intervals, and the funeral was announced for the 24th. Dr. Goyeneche was appointed Bishop of Arequipa, during the reign of Pertlanet the Seventh, and after holding that position for many years was made, some ten years ago, Archbishop of Lima. Dying at the age of eighty-eight, he was the oldest Bishop and oldest Archbishop in the Catholic Church; the first by reason of age. Authority, the second by reason of age. Another more agreeable circumstance, to those strongly interested, is the fact that the deceased prelate was probably the richest man in South America, his property at the lowest estimation amounting to twenty millions. His life was spotless and his virtues many; while his wealth, if built up, was a remarkable demonstration of the ability of the Church to increase his wealth. In countries like Peru, where the Church is dependent upon the State, and the poor are so liberally provided for, it is hardly necessary to extensively employ private means in charitable objects.

A later date has the following: The funeral services of the late Archbishop of Lima were conducted on a very grand scale, the numerous religious communities, the President and his cabinet, Diplomatic Corps, the Supreme Court, and a division of the army took part in the ceremonies. The total cost of the pageant was upwards of twenty-five thousand soles. As yet the will of the deceased Prelate has not been opened, but it is supposed that his large fortune, seriously estimated from ten to thirty millions of soles, is left to his immediate family.

TELEGRAPHIC.

Eastern.

PROVIDENCE, April 8.—Full returns of the State election show a majority of 1,176 for Padelford, Republican candidate for Governor, and 140 majority for Cutler, Democratic candidate for Lieutenant-Governor. The remainder of the Republican State ticket has about 2,100 majority.

NEW YORK, April 10.—Greely prints in this morning's Tribune his programme for the Presidential campaign. If two Republican tickets and one Democratic are in the field, he will support the stronger of the former. If the campaign hinges on Protection vs. Free Trade, he will support Protection. Finally, if the only two tickets that have a chance of success are Republican and Democratic, he will support the one best calculated to promote a return to purity of legislation and of administration. The Tribune will not be an organ, and will issue no campaign editions, whoever the candidates may be.

TORSKA (Kansas), April 10.—The Liberal Republican State Convention met here today, elected delegates to the Cincinnati Convention, and adopted resolutions embodying the principles set forth in the call for the Convention.

M. J. Parrott heads the list of delegates.

ST. LOUIS, April 6.—A prominent Illinois politician now in this city states that Senator Trumbull has recently written a letter to Governor Brodhead, Dr. Jayne, of Springfield, Illinois, in which he fully commits himself to the Liberal movement, and expresses the opinion that the nominee of the Cincinnati Convention will be the next President.

NEW YORK, April 6.—It is generally known that Fenton favors the Cincinnati movement. Though he has not publicly committed himself to it, he declares that he ought to follow his constituents; and it is said that if they support the movement, he will attend the Cincinnati Convention.

The Judiciary Committee yesterday heard further testimony against Judge McCunn. Among the charges examined was one that the Judge corruptly disposed of some $20,000 Panama bonds.

Washington Matters.

WASHINGTON, April 5.—On motion of Nunnery, from the Committee on Public Lands, the bill granting right of way to a railroad from Salt Lake to Portland, Oregon passed.

Cole yesterday introduced a bill authorizing the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, of California, to consruct, instead of its line of road situated north of Kern River, a line of following roads: one railroad to connect with the completed portion of its road, via Visalia and Tulare Valleys and Pacheco Pass, to intersect with original line between Kern River and the Tulare Lake; also a railroad to connect with the San Joaquin Valley Railroad at Visalia, thence on the original line of the Southern Pacific Railroad, as near as practicable to the junction aforesaid; twenty miles per year to be constructed each road; the Company to hold the lands already granted on the original line, but to receive none additional.

Cole withdraws his recommendation of Lewis for Hindenmyn's successor, and urges Lewis F. Jones, of Mariposa.

It is now certain that Cole intends to demand the removal of Collector Phelps, but the name of his proposed successor has not transpired.

Cameron will move an Australian steamship subsidy as an amendment to the pending bill.

Another attempt to pass the Utes Inland Indian bill is intended to be made about the middle of next week. Its friends claim a reaction in its favor, caused by the hanging in effigy of a California Congressman, which is not considered logical, nor attributable to the Indian bill agitation. Nevertheless, if the measure strengthens, it is because of lobby pressure simply; without it, it would not command ten per cent. of Congress' votes.

The House has passed Sargent's bill authorizing joint entries on public lands, or the issuing of joint scrip for such lands, or subdivisions less than quarter sections.

LONDON, April 4.—The Globe to-day calls attention to a rumor of an extraordinary character, which has obtained currency in London, that the case of the American Government before the Geneva Tribunal has been given to citizens of the United States, by capture and destruction of American ships and cargoes by Confederate cruisers built or fitted out in English waters to the full amount of the expenses of all fourteen millions, and that the United States Government in pursuing said privateers, at two hundred millions. The Globe comments with some severity on the statement, and expresses a hope that Gladstone will be specially called on in Parliament for an explanation of its truth or falsity.

LONDON, April 7.—The Queen has returned from her visit to Germany.

The trial of Arthur Orton (claimant), for his attempt on the Tichborne estate, is set down to commence on the 16th. The prisoner has made no effort to secure counsel for his defense. It is probable that the trial will be postponed, perhaps indefinitely, as the prisoner seems to be ignorant of the ground that he is insane.

A serious fight took place at a meeting in Cork which had been convened to denounce the Internationale. The opposite faction, after a severe struggle, remained masters of the situation, deciding that the International might become useful as an ally of the Fenian organization.

LONDON, April 10.—Gladstone accepted Noyes, McNeil and Badger, and appointed Captain Wilkes's brother-in-law, Judge Sherwood, Charles Nelson of the firm of John Kentfield & Co., and Captain Wells, an old sea captain.

PORTLAND, April 10th.—A telegram from the Democratic State Convention, at the Dalles, to-day, says that Hurnan will undoubtedly receive a nomination for Congress.

Dr. Dillinger completed his 73d year on 29th February.

Where can happiness always be found? In the cellar.

THE TRUE GROUND OF CONFIDENCE.—Whence comes that firm reliance, that absolute, unbounding faith in the efficacy of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters as a remedy for all diseases of the stomach, intestines and remittent fevers, which notorious] pervail in the interior of the United States? The confidence is the unvarying knowing for twenty years and it is still extending it by the power of credibility it has not been engendered by any human device, but is the spontaneous and natural consequence of its pertinence. What people see daily going on under their eyes they believe. Hostetter's Bitters are found to unhesitatly disarm that resort to this vegetable tonic and a physician is rendered a perfect fixture, and truly immediate relief is the result. In this preparation we believe the public have found it possible that the Creator has at last vouchsafed to man a remedy for disease which, while routing on the edge of the dark, three dreaded scourges, dyspepsia, of nervous weakness, and of general debility, can even inoffensively dwell withhold its endowments. By eyewitnesses of the marvelous effects claimed for it are to be found in every civilized country in the world. The discovery is made known to them by their own proclamation to friends and strangers, or their physicians, and the extraordinary spontaneous properties are enthusiastic in the praise of the article, who recommend it in a scrupulously fair and honest manner, and the testimony of the people who make public their estimate of its virtues, are always ready to state their reasons for the favor that is in them. They have all either felt or witnessed its beneficent operations.

MINING NEWS.

ALPINE.—The Tarshish miners, says the Alpine Chronicle, of March 30th, have struck the richest and finest body of ore ever opened in any part of this lode. Ore from the Mountain mine, on the slope of Red Mountain, assays $70 per ton.

AMADOR.—The Kennedy mine, says the Ledger of April 5th, made a clean-up of 395 ounces a few days since. A gang of about two and a half feet in thickness has made its appearance on the 400-foot level, which surpasses in richness any rock yet discovered.

The Ledger says that there are many first-class veins in the Amador which only require a little capital and energetic monied men to take hold of them to make the gold yield of Amador county superior to any in the State.

CALAVERAS.—The Calaveras Chronicle, of April 6th, says: The survey for the ditch to convey water from the tuwin mine is completed and the stakes stuck. We have not learned when the work of digging the ditch will be commenced. Operations have been resumed upon the Whisky Slide mine.

Should the quartz now being crushed pay as well as it is expected to, it will be a long time before we have to chronicle another suspension.

NEVADA.—The Grass Valley Union has the subjoined: A lot of black sand, containing gold covered with rust and silver, to the amount of $200 pounds, from the Webster gravel claim, from which the gold could not be saved by ordinary sluice washing, was recently cleaned up at the Coe mill, from Justin Michel's amalgamating pan.

The Reno Crescent has learned from all the well-known amalgamating pans, and it is confidently believed that it will prove superior to any of them.

The Republican, of April 5th, says: A party of prospectors a few days ago discovered a rich pocket on Wood's Ravine, and took out about $6700 worth of specimens. The ledge is said to belong to the owners of Rising Sun, known as the Wyoming, and the discovery was made on the present pay chute on the Rising Sun is known to be 900 feet in length, and the specimens were found in 1,500 feet.

A gold brick weighing 520 ounces made its appearance at Delano's banking house yesterday. It came from the Empire mine, and was valued at $8,900. It was the product of less than a month's run.

The Empire now has a ten-stamp mill.

PLACER.—From the Placer Herald of April 6th we cull the following: Superintendent Jones of the Rising Sun mine has finished crushing the rock taken from that mine, at the Mr. Patrick's mill. The amount of ore reduced was 429 tons, and the yield was some $18,000, an average of over $40 per ton.

PLUMAS.—Charles Rogers informs us that the mines in the vicinity of Greenville are prospecting finely this spring, and, as a consequence, times in that section of the county are lively. From the same source we learn that the Pennsylvania mill, (Riddell & McIntyre) is paying a dividend of $250 per day upon each taken out of their ledge at a depth of 400 feet.

STEILACOOM.—An Olympia paper tells us that "Phillips and party struck a gold mine in the rear of his premises in Steilacoom. The richness of the discovery was a disappointed porker, which, while routing on the edge of the bank, threw down a quantity of rock containing gold. Phillips and party will be on hand with the necessary machinery when it is set. Indications are also of quite a rich deposit of quartz on the land of Mr. Bowman, adjoining on the north."

MISCELLANEOUS.

INFORMATION WANTED.—Of JOHN DOYLE, who left Liverpool, England, in November, 1861, on board ship Northern Ocean, bound for Melbourne or some other port in Australia. When last heard from he was in Melbourne, Australia. Any San Francisco and Sacramento papers please copy. Any one making communication will be rewarded. Address his mother, Catherine Doyle, or by address of this office. mh8 10t

INFORMATION WANTED.—Of JOHN NEW, native of Sackville Bridge, county Westmeath, Ireland. When last heard from, about five years ago, he was in San Francisco. Any one knowing him will be thankfully received by his sister, Richard New, at the Mission Woolen Mill, city, or at the office of the San Francisco Monitor.

Some parties have questioned the constitutional power of the Legislature to extend the term of our municipal officers. The Supreme Court, however, has already decided that the Legislature has the power, in the case of the election of the Board of Supervisors of Sacramento County, in the January term, 1870.

Senator E. Tomkins has been reelected Regent of the State University. He will hold his office for the full term, sixteen years. John Swift has also been elected for the term of sixteen years, vice John T. Doyle, term expired.

Governor Booth has removed Captains Noyes, McNeil and Badger, and appointed Captain Wilkes's brother-in-law, Judge Sherwood, Charles Nelson of the firm of John Kentfield & Co., and Captain Wells, an old sea captain.

PORTLAND, April 10th.—A telegram from the Democratic State Convention, at the Dalles, to-day, says that Hurnan will undoubtedly receive a nomination for Congress.

Dr. Dillinger completed his 73d year on 29th February.

Where can happiness always be found? In the cellar.

THE TRUE GROUND OF CONFIDENCE.—Whence comes that firm reliance, that absolute, unbounding faith in the efficacy of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters as a remedy for all diseases of the stomach, intestines and remittent fevers, which notorious] pervail in the interior of the United States? The confidence is the unvarying knowing for twenty years and it is still extending it by the power of credibility it has not been engendered by any human device, but is the spontaneous and natural consequence of its pertinence. What people see daily going on under their eyes they believe. Hostetter's Bitters are found to unhesitatly disarm that resort to this vegetable tonic and a physician is rendered a perfect fixture, and truly immediate relief is the result. In this preparation we believe the public have found it possible that the Creator has at last vouchsafed to man a remedy for disease which, while routing on the edge of the dark, three dreaded scourges, dyspepsia, of nervous weakness, and of general debility, can even inoffensively dwell withhold its endowments. By eyewitnesses of the marvelous effects claimed for it are to be found in every civilized country in the world. The discovery is made known to them by their own proclamation to friends and strangers, or their physicians, and the extraordinary spontaneous properties are enthusiastic in the praise of the article, who recommend it in a scrupulously fair and honest manner, and the testimony of the people who make public their estimate of its virtues, are always ready to state their reasons for the favor that is in them. They have all either felt or witnessed its beneficent operations.

Wholesale Market Report.

MONITOR OFFICE, SAN FRANCISCO, } TUESDAY, April 11, 1872.

FLOUR—The local demand has been up to the average, with a fair inquiry for export, at unchanged rates, since our last weekly review. We quote standard brands of Oregon extra at $5 75@$5 86, and local brands as follows: Superfine, at $5 12½@5 25, and extra at $5 25 to $6 00 @ bbl.

BARLEY.—The Market has ruled fair for this grain during the week under review, at advanced rates. Sales of fair feed to-day for shipping at $1 45@1 50 @ 100 lbs, which is the range of the market at the close.

OATS.—The market has remained quiet, but at improved rates, during the past week. Ordinary to choice sold at $1 40@1 75 @ 100 lbs, which is the range at the close.

HAY.—The receipts have been fair during the past seven days, and the demand active. Quotable at $13 @21 for ordinary wild oat to choice wheat @ ton.

MIDDLINGS.—Quotable at $1 @@25 @ ton for carge lots.

CORN.—Whether yellow or white at $1 @@1 @ 100 lbs.

CORN MEAL—Sales at $1 @@1 @ 100 lbs from the mill.

BRAN.—We note a fair demand, and the following are the jobbing rates: Bran, $1 @@1; Shorts, $1 @@1; Chops, $1 @@1; Feed, $1 @@1. Small Wheat, $1 @@1 @ 100 lbs.

POTATOES.—The supply has been excessive during the past week. At the close we quote the range at $1 @@1 @ 100 lbs.

BEAN—Quotable at $2 @ ton from mill.

BEANS.—We quote at $2 @@2 @ 100 lbs from the mill.

BUCKWHEAT—Sold at $2 @@2 @ 100 lbs.

RYE—Sales at $1 @@1 @ 100 lbs from mill.

HOPS.—We quote Flat at 8c; Canary, 9@9½c; Altas, 9@9½c; Pacific, 9@9½c; Peerless, 9@9½c.

HONEY.—We quote Los Angeles Comb at $12 50@13.

BEESWAX.—We quote at 25@26c.

TALLOW.—Quotable at 5½@6½c P lb.

WOOL.—The stock on hand in the market has been very firm. The spring clip is coming forward more freely.

DAIRY PRODUCE.

BUTTER—California, fresh, pickled: fresh roll, 20@28c; pickled, 18@20c; Oregon, 18@20c; Nevada, 18@20c; Arizona, 18@20c; Sonora, 18@20c; Mexican—California, 15c @ dozen.

CHEESE—California, at 12½@16c @ lb; Oregon, 13½@16c; Eastern sugar-cured Brook Trade, 16@16c; do clear, 14@14½c.

LARD—California, 12½@13½c @ lb; Oregon, 13½@14c; Eastern sugar-cured Brook Trade, 16@16c; do clear 14@14½c.

FRESH MEATS.

BEEF—For first quality, 10@11c; cow @ lb; for second quality, 9@10c.

MUTTON—Wether, 10@11c @ lb; Ewe, 9@10c.

PORK—Dressed, grain-fed, 10@11½c; on foot, grain-fed, 7@8c @ lb.

POULTRY AND GAME.

CHICKENS—Live, Mexican, 12½@13½c; Spring Chickens, in Market, 9@10c; @ dozen.

DUCKS—Live, 12½@13½c @ dozen.

GEESE—Tame at $1@$1 @ dozen.

TURKEYS—Live, Mexican, dressed 25@26c @ lb.

HARE—$1@$1 @ doz.

RABBITS—$1@$1 @ doz.

Retail Prices of Poultry and Game.

HENS—Large, $1@$1 12½ each.

CHICKENS—Large, $1@$1 each.

BROILERS—Large $1@$1 each.

DUCKS—Large, $1@$1 each.

GEESE—$1@$1 each.

TURKEYS—Large, $1@$1 @ doz.

PIGEONS—Tame, $1@$1 @ doz.

RABBITS—$1@$1 @ doz.

QUAIL—$1@$1 @ doz.

VENISON—Saddle, 12½@15c @ lb.

JEWELRY, SILVER WARE AND WATCHES are active. Purchasers will find a large assortment with former prices at Tucker & Co's. They are determined at whatever sacrifice to close out their stock. Any one wishing to purchase will find it to their interest to call at once, as they are offering their stock at such low prices as will be sure to make room for a new goods just about to arrive.

"O. M. P."—Don't stand aghast with awe and fear, eyes wide open, hair on end and fingers tightly clinched with the idea that liver sickness or nervous prostration signs and represent some secret organization of masked demons, who carry terror and distress to the heart of their victim. Don't be afraid of the dawn of morning. No! Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, that pleasant medicine and tonic, will dispel the gloom and restore you to health. Its effectiveness in Chagles, Colds, Coughs, Influenza, Rheumatism, Kidney Complaints and Dyspepsia is too well known to need repetition.

DRY GOODS, ETC.

1872—SPRING ARRIVALS.—1872

LANDERS, BYRNE & Co.

Have just opened and now offer for sale, their splendid stock of Spring

DRY GOODS,

Consisting in part of

PIQUES, in endless variety;
BRILLIANTES,
SATIN STRIPES, something new;
ORGANDIES, the latest out for wrappers;
CAMBRICS and LAWNS in all shades;
JAPANESE SILKS, brocaded and striped;
SUMMER SILKS, from $1 25 up;

BLACK SILKS

Of the very best makes, direct from Lyons;

And the World Renowned

IRISH POPLINS,

In all shades, direct from PIM BROS., Dublin.

IN OUR GENERAL

DRESS GOODS DEPARTMENT

Will be found a splendid line of Goods, from 25 cents upwards—suitable for visits, specially adapted for the coming season.

HOSIERY, GLOVES, HANDK'FS, EMBROIDERIES,

LACES, and SMALL WARES,

HOUSEKEEPING GOODS

Being a specialty with us, our patrons can always depend on finding this department well worthy of their consideration.

☞ At the above stock of Goods we offer them at the lowest cash prices; before the sale advance, our numerous patrons and friends will have the benefit of the best selected stock of goods in town at the very lowest prices.

LANDERS, BYRNE & CO.,
4 and 6 Third Street.

mh8

FANCY AND STAPLE

DRY GOODS!

J. HANIFIN,

350 THIRD ST., near HARRISON.

One Price Store.

New and Important Publications.

THE LIFE, PROPHECIES & REVELATIONS OF THE VENERABLE MARY ANNE TAIGI.

Her recently supposed miraculous cure, and the wonderful cures that have followed, will make the life of this venerable woman a most entertaining book at this time.

VERONICA!

Or,
Devotions to the Holy Face of our Lord.

With prayers and indulgences.

THE SUNDAY MISSAL, PEILER AND HYMN BOOK, with 36 beautiful illustrations of the Mass; the most perfect book for children yet published.

CATHOLIC WORKS and articles of every description, at retail, and by the dozen, constantly on hand at the Catholic Book Depot.

EUGENE CUMMISKEY, Publisher,
1022 Chestnut street, Philadelphia.

mh13

TEMPO-Two large Double-Column Papers every Month for One Dollar a Year.

THE YOUNG CRUSADER,

AN ILLUSTRATED

CATHOLIC MONTHLY MAGAZINE

CHOICE READING

Good Pictures.

Read with interest by all, and with special delight and profit by the younger members of the family.

The Crusader is now in the fourth year.

The Crusader is in the best of its kind.

Sample Copies free to all who ask for them.

Back numbers always on hand.

Liberal terms to Agents, and premiums given to those who get up clubs.

A Liberal Discount to Sunday Schools.

Send one Dollar (one year's subscription) by mail, addressed as above.

REV. WILLIAM BYRNE, Pastor, Mass.

SCHOOL BOOKS, PRAYER BOOKS, TOY & JUVENILE BOOKS.

ALL THE TEXT BOOKS USED IN THE CATHOLIC and Public Schools of California can always be found at

RYAN'S OLD STAND,

No. 46 Fourth street, near Jessie.

Parents and guardians of limited means will find it to their advantage to trade with us, as our prices are low, and all goods sold at the lowest living rates. Catalogues furnished on application. Orders by mail received from the publishers, to which attention is solicited.

☞ The Monitor always on hand ☜ mh

EBERHART & LACHMAN,

MANUFACTURERS OF

CALIFORNIA SPARKLING WINES.

SWEET AND DRY CHAMPAGNES,
Sparkling Muscat and Catawba,
White and Clarets of all kinds,
Port, Sherry, Madeira, Muscatel, Madeira, Port, Sherry, Hock and Sauterne, Burgundy, Malaga, Tarragona, Tokay, Angelica, Rhine Wine, Cordials, Brandy, Etc., Etc.

All our Wines are made exclusively from Mountain Grapes. Depot, corner of First and Market streets, San Francisco.

LAND for SALE IN LOS ANGELES.

THIRTEEN ACRES OF LAND IN THE city of Los Angeles, 1½ miles from the Court House. This property has a large frontage on the principal street of the city, is of a superior quality, and well adapted for the growing of grapes and other tropical fruits. The land is watered from two city ranges, and the title is perfect.

For further particulars address

JAMES GORMAN,
Los Angeles.

mh13 2m

QUITE AN ATTRACTION

AT

MRS. RIORDAN'S MILLENARY EMPORIUM,

121 Kearny Street,

☞ One door from the corner of Sutter street. ☜

The latest assortment of EUROPEAN and NEW YORK PATTERNS, selling at the lowest figures. Ladies, please call and examine for yourselves.

BANKING.

LAND MORTGAGE UNION

OF CALIFORNIA.

OFFICE, 123 POST STREET, SAN FRANCISCO.

GUARANTEE CAPITAL ..... $500,000

President ..... J. B. HAGGIN.

DIRECTORS.

John Morton, John Nightingale,
Thomas R. Hayne, John M. Jessup,
C. G. Mellus, J. H. Flint,
Henry Kimball.

INVESTMENT CAPITAL ..... UNLIMITED.

Investing Shares, $250 each. Entrance fee, $5 per share. Fortnightly subscriptions, $5 per share. Paid up shares, $37 50.

Interest allowed on fixed deposits from maturity.

Loans from 1 to 10 per cent. per annum.

JOHN T. CARTER, Secretary.

mh9 1972

HIBERNIA SAVINGS AND LOAN SOCIETY,

Office—Northeast corner of Montgomery and Jackson streets.

OFFICERS:

President ..... C. H. O'NEILL.
Vice-President ..... M. D. SWEENY.

TRUSTEES:

M. D. SWEENY, M. J. O'CONNOR,
C. O'NEILLAN, P. MARKS,
JOHN SULLIVAN, ESTEVE TORRES,
D. J. OWEN, JOS. A. DONAHUE,
EDWARD BOSQUI.

Secretary ..... EDWARD BOSQUI.
Attorney ..... RICHARD TOBIN.

Remittances from the country may be sent by Express, Post-office Order, or Express office, or by banking house in the vicinity. Certificates will be issued on delivery. The signature of the depositor must be in the Signature Book of the Society before it will be delivered to the agent by whom the deposit is made.

Deposits received from $1 to $5,000.

OFFICE HOURS—From 9 A. M. to 3 P. M.

JOS. A. DONAHUE, Secretary.
San Francisco, Nov 1

DONOHOE, KELLY & CO.

SAN FRANCISCO,

EUGENE KELLY & Co.

NEW YORK

BANKERS

EXCHANGE ON

NEW YORK, LONDON, AND

BANK OF IRELAND.....DUBLIN

Payable at all the Branches

AND IN EVERY COUNTY TOWN IN IRELAND.

LYNCH & COMIER

MANUFACTURERS OF

Overstrung, Grand, Square & Upright

PIANOS

WAREROOMS,

Nos. 203, 205, 207 and 209 Post street,
NEW YORK.

THESE PIANOS ARE UNSURPASSED for Power, Quality of Tone, Elasticity of Touch, and powerful Tone, Great Durability, and in everything constitute a first-class Piano.

Description and Prices

(The Pianos will be delivered in San Francisco at prices given.)

No. 1—7 Octaves. Large front, rosewood, plain legs, carved trusses ..... $ 300
No. 2—7 Octaves. Large front, rosewood, carved legs and trusses ..... 350
No. 3—7 Octaves. Large front, rosewood, carved legs and trusses, serpentine mouldings ..... 400
No. 4—7 Octaves. Large front, rosewood, carved legs and trusses, serpentine mouldings, beveled fronts ..... 450
No. 5—7 Octaves. Large round corners, rosewood, carved legs and trusses, serpentine mouldings, beveled fronts ..... 500
No. 7—7½ Octaves. Grand ..... 1000
No. 8—7½ Octaves. Grand, and in Rosewood, Mahogany or Walnut, handsomely carved and richly finished ..... 1200

UPRIGHT PIANOS.

Seven Octaves—Rich Walnut case ..... 500
Very fine Rosewood case ..... 550

PARLOR ORGANS BY MELODEON, sizes and styles, at manufacturers prices.

TESTIMONIALS.

Below will be found a few of many testimonials complimentary to our Pianos:

From Mrs. General W. T. Sherman:

SAN FRANCISCO, Dec. 1, 1871.

MESSRS. LYNCH & COMIER—GENTLEMEN: I am pleased with the Piano you sent me, and especially a fine instrument in every respect. Its tone, delicacy of touch and beauty of finish are unsurpassed. I shall certainly recommend it to my friends. Please send me a bill of the amount, that I may remit you the money. I shall most certainly purchase from you in the future. I am very respectfully yours,
MARIE T. SHERMAN.

From Rev. J. Shea, S. J., President of Santa Clara College:

SANTA CLARA, Feb. 1, 1872.

MESSRS. LYNCH & COMIER—GENTLEMEN: It is a pleasure to state that the Piano purchased from you by the Rev. Father Prefect of Studies, for the Academy of Music, has given entire satisfaction to Professors and Pupils in Music. Yours very truly,
JOSEPH SHEA, S. J.

From the Sisters of Charity, Academy of the Immaculate Conception, Santa Clara:

Having purchased a Piano from Messrs. Lynch & Comier's Piano House in San Francisco, we take pleasure in recommending it to the public, as one of many other manufactured.

From Mrs. James Sadlier, the Well Known Author:

Mrs. James Sadlier has very great pleasure in recommending the Pianos of Messrs. Lynch & Comier. Those manufactured by Messrs. Lynch & Comier, of this city, she has used in her family for the last three years, and it is with the greatest satisfaction she can say that they are excellent instruments.

Extract of a Letter from the Superior of the Sisters of Charity, Los Angeles:

I have much pleasure in stating that the Piano has given satisfaction to the Sisters and pupils of the Academy. The beauty and finish of the instrument, and the sweetness of its tone, have elicited [illegible] that any taste in this line should prefer it to any other. I have also had the opportunity of hearing it tuned from time to time after being removed from the Academy to the residence of the Sisters, and I am pleased to say that it has always given satisfaction.

Extract of a Letter from the Superior of the Sisters of Charity, Benicia

"CHRIST ON CALVARY."

Good Friday Sermon of Very Rev. Father Burke, O. S. D.

The Church of St. Vincent Ferrers, says the New York Irish-American, was filled on Good Friday evening by even a more densely crowded congregation than those which have, during the whole Lent, thronged to listen to the preaching of the eloquent Dominican, Father Burke. Not only was the church packed with the parishioned multitude, but outside the doors were congregated hundreds who could not gain admission, yet lingered in the hope of catching even the echoes of the voice of the preacher. After the office of the Tenebræ had been chanted by the Dominican Fathers, Very Rev. Thomas N. Burke ascended the pulpit, and amid the breathless attention of the vast audience, delivered the following discourse:

"CALL YOU THAT PASS THIS WAY COME AND SEE IF THERE BE ANY SORROW LIKE UNTO MY SORROW."

These words are found in the Lamentations of the Prophet Jeremias. There is a festival, dearly beloved brethren, ordained by the Almighty God, for the tenth day of the seventh month of the Jewish year; and this festival was called the "day of Atonement." Now, among the commandments of the Almighty God gave concerning the "Day of Atonement," there was this remarkable one: "Every soul," said the Lord, "that shall not be afflicted on that day shall perish from out the land." The Jewish commentator that He gave them was a

> "THIS IS MY BELOVED SON, IN WHOM I AM WELL PLEASED."

Hitherto, it is sin, no defaulty, no vileness was there, but the beauty of Heaven itself in that finest form of human body—in that beautiful soul, and in the fullness of the divinity dwelt in Jesus Christ. Well might the Father exclaim: "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased!" Sin, to-day—oh, to-day!—the sight of the beloved Son excites no pleasure in the Father's eyes—no longer forth no word of consolation or of love from the Father's lips. And why? Because the all-holy and all-beloved Son of God on this cloud Friday took upon Him the garment of our sins—of all sins! His Father looked upon this earth; all that ever raised the quick anger of the Eternal God; all that ever made Him put forth His arm, strong in judgment and in vengeance—all this is concentrated upon the sacred person of Him who became the victim for the sins of men. How fair He seems to us when we look up to that beautiful figure of Jesus—how fair He seemed to His Virgin Mother, even when no beauty or comeliness was left in Him—how fair He seemed to the Magdalen again, who saw Him robed in His own white garment, that He had in Heaven saw no beauty, no fairness in His Divine Son, in that hour in His only saw in Him and on Him all the sins of mankind, which He took upon Himself that He might become for us a Saviour. Picture to yourselves, therefore, first, this mighty fountain of divine wrath that was poured out upon the Lord! It was the Father's hand—the hand of the Father's justice—outstretched to assert His rights, to real in to Himself the honor and the glory of which the sins of all men, in all ages, in all climes, had deprived Him. Picture to yourselves that terrible hand of God drawing back the bolts of Heaven, and letting out on His own Divine Son the fury of this wrath that was pent up for four thousand years. We stand shrinken with fear in the contemplation of the anger of God, in the first great punishment of sin, the Universal Deluge. And all the sins that in every age roused the Father's anger were certainly laid on the Father's eyes on the person of His Divine Son. We stand astonished and frightened when we see with our eyes of flesh, and of revelation, the living fire descending from Heaven upon the cities of Gomorra—the balls of fire floating in the air, thick as descending flakes in the snowstorm—the blazing of the flames as they came rolling down from Heaven, like the hail that comes down in the leaf-storm—the rending of those mountains as they filled the atmosphere—the terrible lurid light of them—the shrieks of the people who are overwhelmed—the howling of the beasts that were burned up alive—the howling of the tortured beasts in the fields—the birds of the air falling, and sending forth their plaintive voices as they fall to the earth, their plumage scorched and burned. All the ships that Almighty God in Heaven saw in that hour of His wrath, when He rained down fire—all those did He see on this cloud Friday morning upon His own divine and adorable Son. All the sins that were committed were upon Him; in the hour of His humiliation and of His agony, because He was truly man; because He was a voluntary victim for our sins; because He stepped in between our nature that was to be destroyed, and the avenging hand of the Father filled for our destruction; and these things upon Him became an argument to make the Almighty God in Heaven forget, in that hour, every attribute of His mercy, and put forth against His Son all the omnipotence of His justice. Consider it well; let it enter into your minds—the strokes of the divine vengeance that were to have fallen on you and me, and souls as into hell for all eternity were rained by the unsparing hand of omnipotence in that hour upon our Lord Jesus Christ.

> THE SECOND FOUNTAIN AND SOURCE

From which came forth the deluge of His sufferings, was the malice of men. His own divine heart, and His own immaculate nature, were formed for the exercise of the love of God. From the moment that the Second Person of the Most Holy Trinity took upon Himself flesh, the nerves of His body, the sensitiveness of His soul, were created in the highest degree of perfection. From the moment of His Incarnation a human soul was created, and a human body was formed for it. But that took was the purest and most perfect that God could design—a tabernacle of sanctity, a temple of the quickness and comprehensiveness of his intelligence—in the large heart of that human soul, which was made to love the great depth of its generosity and exalted human spirit. Consider well, for a moment, what the Word was made flesh in Mary's womb—from the moment when the Eternal God became man—even before his birth—the cross, the thorny crown, and all the other instruments of suffering, were brought before the eyes of Jesus. The instrument of His life. The infant in Bethlehem saw them; the Child in Nazareth saw them; the Young Man toiling to support His mother saw them; the Preacher on the mountain-side beheld them. Never, for a single instant, were the horrors that were fulfilled on Good Friday absent from the mind or the contemplation of Jesus Christ. Oh, dearly beloved brethren, well did the Psalmist say of Him: "My grief and my sorrow is always before me!" well did the Psalmist add: "I have, during my whole life, walked in sorrow! I was scourged the whole day!" Nay, more than that, the mighty fountain of divine wrath that was poured out upon the Lord! It was the Father's hand—the hand of the Father's justice—outstretched to assert His rights, to real in to Himself the honor and the glory of which the sins of all men, in all ages, in all climes, had deprived Him. Picture to yourselves that terrible hand of God drawing back the bolts of Heaven, and letting out on His own Divine Son the fury of this wrath that was pent up for four thousand years. We stand shrinken with fear in the contemplation of the anger of God, in the first great punishment of sin, the Universal Deluge. And all the sins that in every age roused the Father's anger were certainly laid on the Father's eyes on the person of His Divine Son. We stand astonished and frightened when we see with our eyes of flesh, and of revelation, the living fire descending from Heaven upon the cities of Gomorra—the balls of fire floating in the air, thick as descending flakes in the snowstorm—the blazing of the flames as they came rolling down from Heaven, like the hail that comes down in the leaf-storm—the rending of those mountains as they filled the atmosphere—the terrible lurid light of them—the shrieks of the people who are overwhelmed—the howling of the beasts that were burned up alive—the howling of the tortured beasts in the fields—the birds of the air falling, and sending forth their plaintive voices as they fall to the earth, their plumage scorched and burned. All the ships that Almighty God in Heaven saw in that hour of His wrath, when He rained down fire—all those did He see on this cloud Friday morning upon His own divine and adorable Son. All the sins that were committed were upon Him; in the hour of His humiliation and of His agony, because He was truly man; because He was a voluntary victim for our sins; because He stepped in between our nature that was to be destroyed, and the avenging hand of the Father filled for our destruction; and these things upon Him became an argument to make the Almighty God in Heaven forget, in that hour, every attribute of His mercy, and put forth against His Son all the omnipotence of His justice. Consider it well; let it enter into your minds—the strokes of the divine vengeance that were to have fallen on you and me, and souls as into hell for all eternity were rained by the unsparing hand of omnipotence in that hour upon our Lord Jesus Christ.

> THE SECOND FOUNTAIN AND SOURCE

From which came forth the deluge of His sufferings, was the malice of men. His own divine heart, and His own immaculate nature, were formed for the exercise of the love of God. From the moment that the Second Person of the Most Holy Trinity took upon Himself flesh, the nerves of His body, the sensitiveness of His soul, were created in the highest degree of perfection. From the moment of His Incarnation a human soul was created, and a human body was formed for it. But that took was the purest and most perfect that God could design—a tabernacle of sanctity, a temple of the quickness and comprehensiveness of his intelligence—in the large heart of that human soul, which was made to love the great depth of its generosity and exalted human spirit. Consider well, for a moment, what the Word was made flesh in Mary's womb—from the moment when the Eternal God became man—even before his birth—the cross, the thorny crown, and all the other instruments of suffering, were brought before the eyes of Jesus. The instrument of His life. The infant in Bethlehem saw them; the Child in Nazareth saw them; the Young Man toiling to support His mother saw them; the Preacher on the mountain-side beheld them. Never, for a single instant, were the horrors that were fulfilled on Good Friday absent from the mind or the contemplation of Jesus Christ. Oh, dearly beloved brethren, well did the Psalmist say of Him: "My grief and my sorrow is always before me!" well did the Psalmist add: "I have, during my whole life, walked in sorrow! I was scourged the whole day!" Nay, more than that, the mighty fountain of divine wrath that was poured out upon the Lord! It was the Father's hand—the hand of the Father's justice—outstretched to assert His rights, to real in to Himself the honor and the glory of which the sins of all men, in all ages, in all climes, had deprived Him. Picture to yourselves that terrible hand of God drawing back the bolts of Heaven, and letting out on His own Divine Son the fury of this wrath that was pent up for four thousand years. We stand shrinken with fear in the contemplation of the anger of God, in the first great punishment of sin, the Universal Deluge. And all the sins that in every age flood of suffering and sorrow that rushed upon the Son of God, made as man! We find that His blood burst forth from three distinct sources. First of all, from Heaven, by the Sweat of Blood during the three sacred hours of Jesus, to strike His own divine heart. Secondly—From Christ our Lord Himself. As from the hidden fountains of the earth, sending forth their springs, so from amid the very heart and soul of Jesus Christ—from the very nature of His being—we gather the greatness of His suffering. Thirdly—From the scourging—that is to say, from the malice and wickedness of men. Behold, then, the three several sources of all the sufferings that we are about to contemplate. A just and angry God in Heaven; a most pure and holy and loving Man-God upon earth, having declared that hell could produce of most wicked and most demoniacal rage against Him. All the sins that ever rose up for, remember, God was angry on Good Friday—the Eternal Father—for we in Heaven in all His power—He rose up to all, His justice. Before Him was a Victim for all the sins that ever had been committed; before Him was a Victim of a fallen race, that were never, never to see Him, as long as they remained upon this earth; before Him, in the very person of Jesus Christ Himself, were represented the accumulated sins of all the races of mankind. Hitherto, we read in the Gospel that, when the Father from Heaven looked down upon His own Divine Child upon the earth, He was never known to send forth His voice in such language as this:

> "THIS IS MY BELOVED SON, IN WHOM I AM WELL PLEASED."

Hitherto, it is sin, no defaulty, no vileness was there, but the beauty of Heaven itself in that finest form of human body—in that beautiful soul, and in the fullness of the divinity that dwelt in Jesus Christ. Well might the Father exclaim: "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased!" Sin, to-day—oh, to-day!—the sight of the beloved Son excites no pleasure in the Father's eyes—no longer forth no word of consolation or of love from the Father's lips. And why? Because the all-holy and all-beloved Son of God on this cloud Friday took upon Him the garment of our sins—of all sins! His Father looked upon this earth; all that ever raised the quick anger of the Eternal God; all that ever made Him put forth His arm, strong in judgment and in vengeance—all this is concentrated upon the sacred person of Him who became the victim for the sins of men. How fair He seems to us when we look up to that beautiful figure of Jesus—how fair He seemed to His Virgin Mother, even when no beauty or comeliness was left in Him—how fair He seemed to the Magdalen again, who saw Him robed in His own white garment, that He had in Heaven saw no beauty, no fairness in His Divine Son, in that hour in His only saw in Him and on Him all the sins of mankind, which He took upon Himself that He might become for us a Saviour. Picture to yourselves, therefore, first, this mighty fountain of divine wrath that was poured out upon the Lord! It was the Father's hand—the hand of the Father's justice—outstretched to assert His rights, to real in to Himself the honor and the glory of which the sins of all men, in all ages, in all climes, had deprived Him. Picture to yourselves that terrible hand of God drawing back the bolts of Heaven, and letting out on His own Divine Son the fury of this wrath that was pent up for four thousand years. We stand shrinken with fear in the contemplation of the anger of God, in the first great punishment of sin, the Universal Deluge. And all the sins that in every age

> THE FULFILLED THING THAT PROPHECY HIS SAW.

In eating the Paschal lamb; and as he was last evening, in the Holy Eucharist, he fed his own body and blood, and fed His Apostles with that of which the Paschal lamb was but a figure and a promise. Now they are about to separate in this world. Now, for the last time, He is to console Him. But no help, no consolation from Heaven! Heaven, indeed, is only silkscreen, was absent. He then after an hour. No scourge, no crown of thorns was seen by Him. No executioner's hand was profaned Him as yet. No nail had been driven through His hands. And yet, in the blood covered His body—for His Passion began from the source in which His sacred spirit! His Passion—His pain—began from within. He rises in the night, He goes to the brook of Cedar! There is a sound, as of the voice of a rabble. There are horns and lanterns and flambeaux, and there the followers with clubs in their hands and lanterns lighted. They are coming to find Him. He is betrayed, and the universal voices, "Where is he? Where is he?" Ah, there is one at the back of Him, and He feels the weapon of the coward entering into His heart. He is betrayed by a kiss! He is, with three of His friends. When you see me taken man in my arms—in His agony, He is betrayed—sold of Him at once, and dear Him away with you—and do with me you please!" Who is he that says this?

> WHO ARE THEY THAT COME LIKE BULLS-HEADED MEN?

The assembled company of the divinity and the unclean powers of the Father's kingdom of light, and of the rabble of Jerusalem was with them—an in the midst of them was the silent, unseen God! He knew that the cup and horrible hour of his crucifixion was upon him. Brought before Pilate and accused of the most frightful crimes that ever were heard of in the world! A man—a man—a man—a

"CHRIST ON CALVARY."

Good Friday Sermon of Very Rev. Father Burke, O. S. D.

The Church of St. Vincent Ferrers, says the New York Irish-American, was filled on Good Friday evening by even a more densely crowded congregation than those which have, during the whole Lent, thronged to listen to the promising of the eloquent Dominican, Father Burke. Not only was the church packed with the earnest multitude; outside the doors were congregated hundreds who could not gain admission, yet lingered in the hope of catching even the echoes of the voice of the preacher. After the office of the Tenebrae had been chanted by the Dominican Fathers, Very Rev. Thomas N. Burke ascended the pulpit, and amid the breathless attention of the vast audience, delivered the following discourse:

"FAIL YOU NOT THIS WAY COME AND SEE IF THERE BE ANY SORROW LIKE UNTO MY SORROW."

These words are found in the Lamentations of the Prophet Jeremiah. There is a festival, dearly beloved brethren, ordained by the Almighty God, for the tenth day of the seventh month of the Jewish year; and this festival was called the "day of Atonement." Now, among the Commandments that the Almighty God gave concerning that day, the Sabbath Day of Atonement," there was this, the Sabbath of Sabbaths, the most remarkable one: "Every soul," said the Lord, "that shall not be afflicted on the day shall perish from out the land." The commandment that He gave then was

> "A FOUNTAIN AND SOURCE
> From which came forth the deluge of His sorrow and His suffering, was His person and His suffering, was His person and His humanity. Behold, my brethren, the Word! Behold, my brethren, the Word! Behold, my brethren, the Word!

WEEKLY CALENDAR.
FOR THE WEEK ENDING, APRIL 27
April
21—Sunday—Third Sunday after Easter. Patronage of St. Joseph.
22—Monday—SS. Soter and Caius Popes and MM
23—Tuesday—St. George, Martyr
24—Wednesday—St. Fidelis of Sigmaringen
25—Thursday—St. Mark Evangelist. Patronage of St. Mary's Church and Benevolent Society
27—Saturday—St. Anselm, Bishop, Confessor and Doctor.

THE MONITOR:
THE ONLY
Irish and Catholic Journal in California.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

SATURDAY..... APRIL 20, 1872.

THE DANGERS OF MONOPOLY.

Any one who has read the daily papers of San Francisco during the past month or two, must have noticed that their leading columns have been largely given over to the discussion of what is elegantly termed "The Goat Island Grab." There is no necessity of wasting many words in explanation of what is meant by this expression. Everybody knows by this time that the Central Pacific Railway Company are endeavoring to secure a grant of Goat Island; that, if they get it, they intend to make their terminus and build warehouses, depots, etc., on that spot; that they intend to connect the island with the main land by means of a bridge; and, finally, that back of this bridge they intend to build a city which shall in time eclipse and destroy San Francisco.

These are vast projects truly, but they are not beyond the range of possibility, and money can accomplish each and all of them. Consequently, so far as the realization of these schemes is concerned, there are only three questions to be asked. First—Have the Railway Company sufficient money? Secondly—Are they willing to spend it? Thirdly—Can they overbear all opposition likely to come from the Irish in Cork, and has already found its way to the chief cities and townsof Ireland, having for its object the presentation to John Francis Maguire, Esq., M. P., of a suitable testimonial on the occasion of his completing a term of twenty years' parliamentary service. This movement has the warm support of the hierarchy and priesthood: it is strongly favored by such of the gentry as take a liberal opinion, and is endorsed by at least a large portion of the intelligent and respectable citizens. In consequence of this almost universal good-will a large sum of money has already been collected, and it is augmenting rapidly every day. If we may judge from the subscription lists published.

It is expected very confidently by the gentlemen who first ventilated the idea of a National Testimonial—and they are men of high social standing and of good political respect—that Irishmen at home in Ireland as well as en it, will subscribe cheerfully and generously. The ground upon which they bass their confidence is, that the services of Mr. Maguire are national in the sense of the word, and that he has been the champion and defender of his country men all over the world. We feel that there are hundreds who are willing to recognize these claims and to subscribe something towards this testimonial. Therefore it is that we bring the matter under their notice.

At the same time we are well aware that there are many of our fellow-countrymen who entertain such a horror of the British Parliament that they would not at all recognise as "services" any duties performed by an Irishman in connection with that body. The best thought of the country claims to be a nationalist, or to love Ireland, taking an oath of allegiance to a British sovereign and participating in the debates of an alien legislature, is repugnant to their minds. We respect those people, but we must say we differ from them very widely. If being a member of Parliament and sitting in the hall of St. Stephens be sufficient to condemn a countryman in their estimation and cause him to be numbered among Ireland's enemies, then they must strike from our head-roll of patriots some of the names that we have been taught to revere from our infancy. Grattan, O'Connell, Smith O'Brien, George Henry Moore were members of Parliament, and voted for or against the reigning ministry according as their consciences directed them, and we have yet to learn that they were anything the less patriots on that account, or the less entitled to our affectionate remembrance.

It is perfectly true, indeed, that the British Parliament is from its very nature incapable of redressing what we consider to be the one great grievance of our country—foreign domination. It is perfectly true, moreover, that there are seven minor wrongs of which it would be arrant folly to expect an a.justment from a legislature sitting in London. Nevertheless, there are many, very many, important reforms the granting of which would be of incalculable benefit to our people, that can be wrested from the Government by what is called "peaceful agitation," conducted and represented in the council chamber of our enemies by members of Parliament. We need only specify freedom of education, extension of the franchise, tenant right, improvement in the grand jury la s, repeal of the convention and conspiracy acts, equitable distribution of the public funds, extension of the principle of popular election to office, &c., &c. The individuals who would decry all attempts to gain any of these reforms, who would sullenly stand aloof from any intercourse with the British Government until they were able to demand their national independence at the bayonet's point, are in reality foolish and ill advised. They act on the principle of the lunatic who starved himself to death rather than accept half a loaf when he thought he was entitled to a whole one.

We do not believe, as some affect to do, that it is a "wasting of popular strength," or a "misdirection of energies," to work for the accomplishment of even the least amongst these social or political improvements. Still less do we believe that if the Irish were granted these reforms they would become contented with foreign rule and cease to agitate after independence! With the illustrious Grattan we hold firmly that the more our people get the more they want, and the more determined they become to obtain, practically or ourselves, the full measure of their rights. And we have too high an opinion of the honor, spirit and bravery of our countrymen to fancy for a moment they would be contented with the British Government under any shape that either men or angels could give it. No! a thousand times no! The more prosperous Irishmen will become, the greater the privileges they may be accorded, just so much the more stern and indexible will they be in their resolve to become masters of their own destinies, and to enjoy as rights those advantages which a calculating foe yielded to them as concessions.

We maintain, therefore, that it is no reproach to John Francis Maguire that he has spent twenty years of his life working for those reforms which he does might be extorted from some ministry, Whig or Tory. His record as a member of Parliament is certainly unimpeachable. We do not mean to say that he has never given an erroneous vote, because we do not want to claim infallibility for him; but the whole tenor of his conduct proves him to be a man who loves his country and has always been anxious to serve it to the utmost of his ability. He has been faithful and conscientious in the policy which he adopted when first he entered the hall of St. Stephens as member for the borough of Dungarvan.

There has been no concession, no redress of grievance granted to Ireland during the past twenty years on behalf of which his calm and logical eloquence has not been exerted. Catholic interests, not only in Ireland, but we may say throughout the world, have ever been gallantly defended by his tongue and by his pen. As the Rome See he has been a strenuous supporter even in the worst crises, and of his earnestness in this particular his fine work, "Rome and its Rulers," will long remain as a memorial. He has been the champion of the race, ever ready to defend it against slander or contumely; and of this fact his book entitled "The Irish Abroad" is an excellent proof. His fidelity to the cause of Ireland and Fatherland is put beyond question by the single circumstance that no British minister has ever been able to seduce him by the bribe of place and position. That he could have such if he were so inclined, has been acknowledged a hundred times over by friends and foes. Men of far inferior intellectual calibre have been deemed worthy of purchase at a high price.

These are the claims which John Francis Maguire can put forward to the esteem and gratitude of his countrymen at home and abroad—claims which may be recognized by the humblest of the Catholics of Ireland without any sacrifice of principle. When his enemies of the Catholic church wish to arouse against it the hostility of a whole people they invariably cry out that it is aiming at "sovereignty." For the "pillar and ground of truth" if it did not. Moreover we maintain, and we think we shall be able to prove, that every creed, church or sect which professes to teach the word of God, claims and aims at the very same kind of supremacy, and endeavors with equal persistency to gain political ascendancy. Scarcely a sermon is preached or a pamphlet published in the Protestant interest which does not stand alone in criminality, and only the blindest malice could venture to fix the charge specially upon Catholicity or even the laxness of faith in this country. The object sought to be achieved by these uncharitable accusations is plain enough, and indeed can hardly be concealed. The saying that "everything is fair in war" receives a most liberal interpretation when applied to theological controversy, and few men there are who have any scruples about the kind of weapons they employ against the enemies of their own designing, and to enjoy as rights those advantages which a calculating foe yielded to them as concessions.

We maintain, therefore, that it is no reproach to John Francis Maguire that he has spent twenty years of his life working for those reforms which he does might be extorted from some ministry, Whig or Tory. His record as a member of Parliament is certainly unimpeachable. We do not mean to say that he has never given an erroneous vote, because we do not want to claim infallibility for him; but the whole tenor of his conduct proves him to be a man who loves his country and has always been anxious to serve it to the utmost of his ability. He has been faithful and conscientious in the policy which he adopted when first he entered the hall of St. Stephens as member for the borough of Dungarvan.

There has been no concession, no redress of grievance granted to Ireland during the past twenty years on behalf of which his calm and logical eloquence has not been exerted. Catholic interests, not only in Ireland, but we may say throughout the world, have ever been gallantly defended by his tongue and by his pen. As the Rome See he has been a strenuous supporter even in the worst crises, and of his earnestness in this particular his fine work, "Rome and its Rulers," will long remain as a memorial. He has been the champion of the race, ever ready to defend it against slander or contumely; and of this fact his book entitled "The Irish Abroad" is an excellent proof. His fidelity to the cause of Ireland and Fatherland is put beyond question by the single circumstance that no British minister has ever been able to seduce him by the bribe of place and position. That he could have such if he were so inclined, has been acknowledged a hundred times over by friends and foes. Men of far inferior intellectual calibre have been deemed worthy of purchase at a high price.

These are the claims which John Francis Maguire can put forward to the esteem and gratitude of his countrymen at home and abroad—claims which may be recognized by the humblest of the Catholics of Ireland without any sacrifice of principle. When his enemies of the Catholic church wish to arouse against it the hostility of a whole people they invariably cry out that it is aiming at "sovereignty." For Therefore we maintain that there is no need whatever to sacrifice principle in the slightest degree. Principle, which is significant it may be, which is not "aiming at supremacy," and endeavoring to direct the policy of the nation through the instrumentality of its citizens. If the Catholic church be really in the respect it certainly

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

ENGLAND.

Rooster Legislators.

The latest accomplishment which a British Senator should possess in order to make his mark upon the tiffanies, it appears, the noble art of cock crowing. Upon the occasion of Sir C. Dilke's motion it is stated that the great sensation of the evening was the crowing of an honorable member who answered himself behind the the Speaker's chair, and quite charmed the staid Senators by the fidelity of his imitation. The member who thus distinguished himself was that haughty aristocrat, Sir H. Bruce, the "representative" of the borough of Cirencaine, and we have no doubt that his constituents will rejoice in his triumph. Somehow some people do not appreciate such a remarkable performance, and even go the length of saying that it was very undignified, and even the "Speaker" himself, though accustomed to the rampant cowdyism in which "chorocraft" numbered of indulge, expressed himself quite shocked at the Tory baronet's display. But nevertheless, our opinion is, that the gentleman is a fair type of the average English member.—Irishman, March 23.

Muscular Christianity.

The Church Defence Institution is evidently composed of muscular Christians with a considerable sprinkling of bludgeonmen. At one of its meetings, which took place on Tuesday last in the Borough, several clergy of the Church of England assembled, one or two being among the speakers. The object of the gathering was "to defend the tyranny of factions opposed to the Established Church." The Rev. Wm. Curling, rector of St. Olave's, Southwark, having spoken in support of the motion, the Rev. G. M. Murphy presented himself to refute some of the statements made against the dissenters, and said he should conclude by moving the previous question. The proceedings of the person became very tumultuous, and the sager rose to such a height that Mr. Murphy was taken by the throat and forcibly dragged from the platform, notwithstanding the declamation of the Chairman that he was perfectly in order, and had a right to be heard. One man in the garb, at least, of a gentleman, roared out, "Let us serve him like his namesake," but even the roughs of the assembly hesitated at following this counsel, and the storm having at length subsided, the resolution was put and carried with only one dissentient. The Rev. J. Bourchier, Vicar of Southwark, proposed a resolution affirming that disestablishment and disendowment must be resisted to the last, which was seconded by Mr. Crisp, who did not hesitate to add his conviction that, if necessary, blood would be shed in defence of the Church. Mr. Russell, a working man, supported the resolution, which was carried in the same manner as the first, and a vote of thanks to the chairman concluded the somewhat uproarious proceedings. After the treatment Mr. Murphy received at the hands of the so-called gentlemen and Christians, we were not surprised at the conduct of the publicans and sinners who covered the bishop of Exeter with four bucketsful of the slime of Sir Wilfrid Lawson's Bill. In each case the craft was in danger and the purse imperilled, and we all know how direful is the wrath excited in the English mind when he is menaced by the threat of cutting off his beer, or of stopping his pecuniary supplies.—London Review.

The Southwark meeting was held to defend sacred things, when we read the report of the riotous proceedings of those fervid upholders of a system which professes to inculcate the doctrines of the Prince of Peace, we could not refrain from murmuring to ourselves

Tantus animis cœlestibus iræ?

—Weekly Register, March 23.

FRANCE.

The Death of the Jost.

M. Cochin, Prefect of the Seine-et-Oise, died at 2 P. M. on Friday night. His family was among the most respectable of the Paris bourgeoisie. Elected Adjoint to the Mayor of the 10th Arrondissement in 1850, and Mayor in 1855, he resigned his post to present himself as Catholic and Independent candidate at the general elections of 1863 and 1869, failing both times but with a very creditable minority. He was not more successful in 1871, but shortly afterwards accepted the Prefecture of Versailles, offered him by M. Thiers. Through M. Cochin's death France has lost a worthy citizen, and the Church a most indefatigable servant. For the last three weeks, his intimate friends, and those who were about him, had despaired of his ultimate recovery; nor was the sufferer himself unaware of his danger, which he had, indeed, realized from the first, and accepted with courage and submission to the will of God. As soon as he felt the near approach of death he banished from his mind all thoughts of politics and business, and gave himself up entirely to religious exercises, and the last months of sweet intercourse with his family. He grieved, however, to think that his hopes of his dear native land had proved vain. To his wife he said, alluding to the distressing topic, "I will repeat the words of St. Theresa, Lord, it is also time for me to depart, for all my friends are dead." And when the Bishop of Orleans administered Extreme Unction to him, he added to the usual response, "May the Lord receive me with Lacordaire, Montalembert and Perreyve." His mind was continually possessed with this idea, and he lived to say over and over again, "I am going to rejoin my friends Montalembert, the Abbé Perreyve and Father Lacordaire." Then he would add, "The woes of the Church, the misfortunes of my country have exhausted me, and done me to death." Some days before his death he prostrated himself in Supernatural Contrition for Versailles, for having watched all night beside his bed, telling her that she owed it herself to the poor and to the destitute of the hospital. "St. Vincent de Paul," she thought, "implied also, charged me also to care for the benefactors of the poor." "The benefactors of the poor!" exclaimed M. Cochin; "I am not worthy to be called a noble title; it is only one that I have ever aimed ambition of." On Thursday evening, just when his attendants thought they perceived a slight improvement, he suddenly said, "I deeply sorrow, in consequence, possibly, of a chill which was the result of incessant applications of ice to my head (an ice filled with water, and during the past fifteen hours he struggled faintly with the king of terrors. At 4 A. M. on Friday he lost consciousness; at 10 the death agony began, and by 2 in the evening all was over. Those who saw him in the morning stretched on his bed of death became calm in the midst of suffering translated on his calm, grave and composed features. On Saturday morning, at ten o'clock, the Bishop of Orleans celebrated Mass for the deathroom, while M. Bernet d'Ary, father-in-law of the deceased, assisted as server. The whole of the family who had watched by the corpse all night received Holy Communion from the hands of the Bishop. In the course of the day M. Bernet d'Ary, and also many private friends of his late wife, published, repaired to the Committee on the Budget, of which he is President. Madame Cochin left for her chateau of La Roche, near Corbeil. The sad event has plunged Versailles into deep mourning, for during his short term of office M. Cochin has made himself generally beloved. The Journal de Paris, the Moniteur Universel, the Univers, the Temps, in a word the whole of the Paris press, unite to pay him a well-deserved tribute of sincere and respectful eulogy. The Francais of Monday contains a most touching and interesting leading article on the subject of his death, which it concludes as follows: "What were the shocks that he endured before this last death blow, the less cruel of all, is known to God alone. All the dear objects of his affection—Lacordaire, Perreyve, Montalembert, admired with such simplicity, and loved with such depth of feeling, Father Gratry, that bright and charming soul—carried off prematurely. That other one, on whom we reckoned, all at once absorbing the Church, then so many public afflictions coming on the back of private griefs, and the calamities and the humiliation of France, the crimes of Paris, sadder still than her misfortunes, such accumulated, so many hearts in the past, such a dark cloud over the present and the future; what room was there for hope! The Christian will not on hope held out no longer." The obsequies of M. Cochin took place on Monday, at the Church of St. Louis, Versailles, and was so numerously attended that many people were unable to enter the church, but remained standing outside. The Curé of St. Louis performed Mass.—London Inquirer, May 23.

RUSSIA.

Russia and the Poles.

The St. Petersburg correspondent of the Eastern Budget says that the reports of an understanding between Russia and the Poles, though all Russian politicians know that there can be no truth in them, are nevertheless regarded there as made light of. The notion that Russia's power is about to be deposed of in the most unfeasible point by a reconciliation with the Poles affords a fine field for diplomatic, and it might also perhaps accommodate the Poles themselves to the idea that it is their fate to be absorbed in Russia, whether they will or not. But what is seen more important for Russia is that these rumors might induce the Polish Catholics to set their grandees so high that the Government at Vienna would have to break off the negotiations with them. The Journal de Petersburg Gazette, after briefly depicting the political contentedness of the subjects of the Czar, offers a word of advice to other and less fortunate communities. Among these it says that England and Ireland, the question in India, thinks the Gazette, is most perilous, and the only way to save it would be to abandon the system of "blood, violence, and execution," which has been adopted hitherto, and to replace it by constitutional institutions. As for Austria, the Constitution there will only be a reality when the various fundamental articles—which, by the way, would entirely abolish the Constitution—are accepted and carried out.

Fortification of Sebastopol.

The Times correspondent at Berlin telegraphs that the Russian Government has determined to reopen Sebastopol as a military and commercial harbor. Barracks, arsenals, and docks for repairing men-of-war are to be constructed there, and all the bays and inlets of the Chersonese are to be protected by forts, for, if any, inland fortifications are to be erected on the peninsula.

IRISH INTELLIGENCE.

Republican Principles.

Mr. Bigger, of Belfast, preferred attending Home Rule meetings in Scotland to presiding over the deliberations of the Belfast Water Board, and we admire his preference. In a letter addressed to the Commissioners he makes renewed profession of Republican faith. He says: "The only serious difference between the opinion of the noblemen and gentlemen and myself was exhibited on the occasion of preparing an address for presentation to the Queen on the Prince of Wales, and I may say, after having sufficient time for reflection, I do not see any reason to modify or alter a single word I used on that occasion. The characters of the Queen and Princess of Wales are not the slightest bearing on the main question at issue. Whether their characters are to be truly said to be good, bad or moderate, I do not care. What I contend for is that in this country we should not be governed by an hereditary monarchy or House of Lords. I further contend that in this country we are entitled to, and must have, an Irish Parliament to legislate for Irish affairs. The present system of legislation for this country by a mixed Parliament, free-sixths of the members to which are Englishmen, is not what Ireland wishes and wants, cannot be defended on any principle of fair play or expediency. I expect that the Water Board of Belfast will join with me in a unanimous expression of their opinion in favor of Home Rule for Ireland."—Irishman, March 23.

Honorable Perfidy.

"Horrible perfidy" was the appellation given to a very curious piece of political strategy done when lately was in office, and Whitbread Irish Solicitor, in June, 1872. The government seems to have desired that a memorial should be got up on behalf of the Irish exiles of that day. O'Brien and others—and when it was got up and presented, Lord Eglinton roughly refused it, plaintively observing that the escaped prisoners had not expressed contrition for their crimes, or gratitude for the lenity which only transported them. This seems to have been the idea that it is their fate to be absorbed in Russia, whether they will or not. But what is seen more important for Russia is that these rumors might induce the Polish Catholics to set their grandees so high that the Government at Vienna would have to break off the negotiations with them. The Journal de Petersburg Gazette, after briefly depicting the political contentedness of the subjects of the Czar, offers a word of advice to other and less fortunate communities. Among these it says that England and Ireland, the question in India, thinks the Gazette, is most perilous, and the only way to save it would be to abandon the system of "blood, violence, and executions," which has been adopted hitherto, and to replace it by constitutional institutions. As for Austria, the Constitution there will only be a reality when the various fundamental articles—which, by the way, would entirely abolish the Constitution—are accepted and carried out.

Fortification of Sebastopol.

The Times correspondent at Berlin telegraphs that the Russian Government has determined to reopen Sebastopol as a military and commercial harbor. Barracks, arsenals, and docks for repairing men-of-war are to be constructed there, and all the bays and inlets of the Chersonese are to be protected by forts, for, if any, inland fortifications are to be erected on the peninsula.

IRISH INTELLIGENCE.

Republican Principles.

Mr. Bigger, of Belfast, preferred attending Home Rule meetings in Scotland to presiding over the deliberations of the Belfast Water Board, and we admire his preference. In a letter addressed to the Commissioners he makes renewed profession of Republican faith. He says: "The only serious difference between the opinion of the noblemen and gentlemen and myself was exhibited on the occasion of preparing an address for presentation to the Queen on the Prince of Wales, and I may say, after having sufficient time for reflection, I do not see any reason to modify or alter a single word I used on that occasion. The characters of the Queen and Princess of Wales are not the slightest bearing on the main question at issue. Whether their characters are to be truly said to be good, bad or moderate, I do not care. What I contend for is that in this country we should not be governed by an hereditary monarchy or House of Lords. I further contend that in this country we are entitled to, and must have, an Irish Parliament to legislate for Irish affairs. The present system of legislation for this country by a mixed Parliament, free-sixths of the members to which are Englishmen, is not what Ireland wishes and wants, cannot be defended on any principle of fair play or expediency. I expect that the Water Board of Belfast will join with me in a unanimous expression of their opinion in favor of Home Rule for Ireland."—Irishman, March 23.

Honorable Perfidy.

"Horrible perfidy" was the appellation given to a very curious piece of political strategy done when lately was in office, and Whitbread Irish Solicitor, in June, 1872. The government seems to have desired that a memorial should be got up on behalf of the Irish exiles of that day. O'Brien and others—and when it was got up and presented, Lord Eglinton roughly refused it, plaintively observing that the escaped prisoners had not expressed contrition for their crimes, or gratitude for the lenity which only transported them. This seems to have been the idea that it is their fate to be absorbed in Russia, whether they will or not. But what is seen more important for Russia is that these rumors might induce the Polish Catholics to set their grandees so high that the Government at Vienna would have to break off the negotiations with them. The Journal de Petersburg Gazette, after briefly depicting the political contentedness of the subjects of the Czar, offers a word of advice to other and less fortunate communities. Among these it says that England and Ireland, the question in India, thinks the Gazette, is most perilous, and the only way to save it would be to abandon the system of "blood, violence, and executions," which has been adopted hitherto, and to replace it by constitutional institutions. As for Austria, the Constitution there will only be a reality when the various fundamental articles—which, by the way, would entirely abolish the Constitution—are accepted and carried out.

HOTELS.

Removal.

THE SECOND STREET HOUSE

Has Removed to 113 Second street, Northeast corner of Mission. Furnished Rooms to be with or without board, on the most reasonable terms. M. O'NEIL, Proprietor.

CENTRAL HOTEL,

614 AND 616 SANSOME STREET,

Between Broadway and Pacific.....San Francisco.

THIS NEW, LARGE AND COMMODIOUS Hotel has been thoroughly renovated by the present proprietor, and will be kept in the style of the best Hotels of the city. The bar will be supplied with the choicest brands of Liquors and Cigars. The table will be provided with the best the market affords. The proprietor hopes by strict attention to business to merit a liberal share of the public patronage. Charges reasonable. Board and Lodging, per week.....$6 00 Board, per month.....$25 00 Single Rooms, per week.....$1 50 to $2 00

Transient Boarders, per day.....$2 00

Meals, single.....50 cents

Meals, per ticket.....$5 00

Lunch at all hours.

Free Coach to and from the House.

P. CASSERLY, Proprietor.

CITY HOTEL,

K street, between Third and Fourth, Sacramento.

THIS HOUSE IS CENTRALLY LOCATED. THE rooms are commodious, well ventilated and furnished throughout. The bar is supplied with the best brands and the table is furnished with the best the market affords.

Board and lodging, per week.....$6 00

Board and lodging, per month.....$25 00

Board, per week, single room.....$7 00

Board, per month, single room.....$30 00

P. SINNAIN, Proprietor.

oct7

AN UNSOLICITED Testimonial.

CHICAGO, Dec. 5, 1871.

TO THE OFFICERS OF THE

GERMANIA, HANOVER, NIAGARA AND REPUBLIC Insurance Co.'s

OF THE CITY OF NEW YORK,

COMPOSING THE

UNDERWRITER'S AGENCY.

GENTLEMEN: The matter pressed by your Committee regarding payment of our loss on the great fire of Chicago, has been so highly honorable to your Companies, and so satisfactory to the assured, that I feel it a duty to myself to express my appreciation thereof. Your action has been marked throughout by such promptness, liberality and fairness, that I am sure you have established a new standard for the settlement of losses by Fire Companies, and I am glad to say that the experience of our house has been shared through you, as I learn from others, in the same prompt, liberal and unprejudiced manner, and a record for settlements established, which, I trust, will be permanently maintained. I am sure that I express the sentiments of all the assured when I say that we appreciate your course in the premises, and shall be pleased to have you make use of this letter in any way you may desire.

Yours truly,

JOHN C. HAINES,

Of the late firm of Haines, Bro. & Co.

Bowen, Hall & Wilson,

Hall, Kimball & Co.,

Hall, Kimball & Co.,

Chas. P. Kellogg & Co.,

Wm. M. Ward and Co.,

Hall, Kimball & Co.,

Hall, Kimball & Co.,

Hall, Kimball & Co.,

Hall, Kimball & Co.,

Richards, Chamberlain & Co.,

Hall, Kimball & Co.,

Hall, Kimball & Co.,

Hall, Kimball

MINING NEWS.

California.

The Amador Dispatch of April 13th says: Work is progressing finely at the Markley mine, says the Ledger, and the rock taken out is very rich.

Workmen in the Barlow mine have struck a rich rock on the level, and there are indications of a fine lead ahead.

BUTTE.—The editor of the Yolo Mail has seen some specimens of gold quartz, obtained by William Campbell from his brother, who lives near Chico. He states that the location of the ledge is some twenty miles northeast of Chico, and the prospecting so far gives indications of rich quartz. The parties have commenced operations, and will soon prove whether it is profitable or not.

'CALAVERAS.—An effort is making to reduce the wages of laborers in the mining claims to $2 per day. It augurs ill-feeling.

Clark's mill, at Red-rock Flat, says the Mokelumne Hill Chronicle of April 13th, is now crushing a lot of rock from the old Frank Barney mine, at Mesquite. We are informed that the yield will be large.

The shaft on the Hudson mine at Central Hill has reached a depth of 220 feet. The ledge continues to develop most favorably.

A correspondent of the Chronicle, writing from Camanche, under date of April 10th, says that all the Poverty Bar claims are in operation.

FRESNO.—The Gilroy Advocate of April 13th says: Robert Stanyon & Co. of this place have discovered what promises to be a rich quicksilver mine on the headwaters of the Los Ilatos, in the mountains of Fresno county. The cinnebar assays the equivalent of $222 50 per ton.

INYO.—The Inyo Independent of April 6th has the following: Dr. Hiram A Wooters and his associates opposite our office, are developing a most remarkable mine. A wasting so with rather inconsiderable results. A ways of rock is reported they found a ledge of two feet, is reported they found a ledge of two feet, is reported they found a ledge of two feet,

ERIN'S VINDICATION.

Rev. Father Burke's Great Lecture.

"The History of Ireland, as Told in Her Ruins."

[Continued from last week.]

During these three hundred years, the combat for Ireland's nationality was still continued. The O'Neill, the O'Brien, the O'Donnell, the Maguire, the O'More, kept the national sword waving in the air. The Franciscans and the Dominicans cheered them, entered into their feelings, raised their voices in favor of the Irish throne the Irish themselves, because they were the heart's blood of Ireland. They were the light of the national devotion, of the nationality of Ireland, as their historians were the faithful annalists of the glories of those days of combat. They saw the trouble; and yet—for three hundred years the Franciscans and the Dominicans had not discovered what the real mission to Ireland was. But at the end of the three hundred years came the 15th century. Then came the cloud of religious persecution over the land. All the hatred that divided the Saxon and the Celt, on the principle of Nationality, was now heightened by the additional hatred of religious hatred and division; and Irishmen, if they hated the Saxon before, as the enemy of Ireland's nationality, from the 15th century hated him still more, as additional hatred, to the enmity of Ireland's faith and Ireland's religion. The sword was drawn. My friends, I speak not in indignation but in sorrow; and I speak not in fear of those strong feelings of my fellow-countrymen, here to-night—if there be a man who differs with me in religion—to that man I say: "My brother and friend, you and I are one in the feeling of indignation and of regret for the religious persecution of our nation." No man knows better than I do the grave moral history the element of religious bloodshed, the terrible persecution of these times, through which Ireland—a Catholic Ireland—has been obliged to pass her history. And this more than the high and noble, honest, kind-hearted Irish Protestant. And why should we not feel it? It is the Irish Protestant that persecuted Protestant Ireland for that time, and with sanguinary cruelty, it dipped its hand in the blood of its children.

Why, just mild, scrupulous, holy man, Henry the Eighth, in the middle of the fifteenth century got a scruple of conscience about his wife; it was his wife's sister who was living—and he should not have been living at that time, for he was before the Lord Chief Justice of England, and transported for life. Well, the Lord, the O'Brien, the O'Donnell, the Maguire, the O'More, kept the national sword waving in the air. The Franciscans and the Dominicans cheered them, entered into their feelings, raised their voices in favor of the Irish throne the Irish themselves, because they were the heart's blood of Ireland. They were the light of the national devotion, of the nationality of Ireland, as their historians were the faithful annalists of the glories of those days of combat. They saw the trouble; and yet—for three hundred years the Franciscans and the Dominicans had not discovered what the real mission to Ireland was. But at the end of the three hundred years came the 15th century. Then came the cloud of religious persecution over the land. All the hatred that divided the Saxon and the Celt, on the principle of Nationality, was now heightened by the additional hatred of religious bloodshed, division, and Irishmen, if they hated the Saxon before, as the enemy of Ireland's nationality, from the 15th century hated him still more, as additional hatred, to the enmity of Ireland's faith and Ireland's religion. The sword was drawn. My friends, I speak not in indignation but in sorrow; and I speak not in fear of those strong feelings of my fellow-countrymen, here to-night—if there be a man who differs with me in religion—to that man I say: "My brother and friend, you and I are one in the feeling of indignation and of regret for the religious persecution of our nation." No man knows better than I do the grave moral history the element of religious bloodshed, the terrible persecution of these times, through which Ireland—a Catholic Ireland—has been obliged to pass her history. And this more than the high and noble, honest, kind-hearted Irish Protestant. And why should we not feel it? It is the Irish Protestant that persecuted Protestant Ireland for that time, and with sanguinary cruelty, it dipped its hand in the blood of its children.

Why, just mild, scrupulous, holy man, Henry the Eighth, in the middle of the fifteenth century got a scruple of conscience about his wife; it was his wife's sister who was living—and he should not have been living at that time, for he was before the Lord Chief Justice of England, and transported for life. Well, the Lord, in His mercy, kept the head of Henry safe on his shoulders, and he wrote a letter to the Pope, and he said: "Holy Father, I have got a scruple of conscience." And the Pope, who was a very nice young lady in this world, and not very much behind the time either. Her Holiness was a Borgia—a woman of great beauty. Henry got very fond of her, and he wanted to marry her. He wrote a letter to the Pope, and he said: "Holy Father, I have got a scruple of conscience about my wife; I am afraid I am living in a state of adultery with her

WEEKLY CALENDAR.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING MAY 11.

MAY.
5—Sunday—Fifth Sunday after Easter. St. Pius V., Pope and Confessor.
6—Monday—St. John before the Latin Gate. Holy Day.
7—Tuesday—St. Stanislaus, Bishop and Martyr. Holy Day.
8—Wednesday—Apparition of St. Michael, Archangel. Vigil of the Ascension. Regular Day.
9—Thursday—Ascension of our Lord. Holiday of Obligation.
10—Friday—St. Antonius, Bishop and Conf. not. Gordian & Epimachus, MM.
11—Saturday—St. Gregory Nazianzen, Bishop, Conf. and Doctor of the Church.

THE MONITOR:
THE ONLY
Irish and Catholic Journal in California.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

SATURDAY.....MAY 4, 1872.

STANFORD AND SAN FRANCISCO.

It is quite plain that Stanford knows very well he will get beaten in his struggle with San Francisco if the citizens are only true to themselves. Accordingly, though the word has not been said about it publicly, there is a general impression that he would gladly accept a compromise. No doubt there are a few people weak-minded enough to offer him such, but we are satisfied an immense majority of the inhabitants of this city would declare for carrying out to the bitter end the struggle which he inaugurated. We have already given the Railroad Company too much, and no more must be granted, no matter how vehement the threats which may be employed. In fact, Stanford has an assured victory within his grasp, so it would be unpardonable weakness to offer any terms to those who sought to compass her destruction. We should, in this particular case, at all events, oppose the policy of monarchical governments when dealing with civil disturbers, and refuse to treat on any basis with rebels who have weapons in their hands.

The arrival of the St. Louis delegation has entirely revolutionized the aspect of affairs. Now, we find that we shall not be led alone in our battle against the monopolists, but may count on their support upon the subject of another powerful, wealthy and enterprising city. Even without any exterior assistance, we maintain that San Francisco would prove rather more than a match for the Central Pacific dictators, unless, indeed, she were betrayed by traitors; but in alliance with St. Louis her force must become overwhelmingly preponderant. This is a very satisfactory outlook. Nevertheless, before we finally commit ourselves to the alliance, it would be wise to learn what are the precise terms upon which it is granted, and whether those terms are such as we are to stand. There is not very much benefit to be derived from a mere change of masters, even if the second be somewhat more considerate or generous than the first. The chief thing which we want to preserve, is our independence, and this is equally lost under an indulgent despot as under an imperious one. Therefore, it behooves the citizens and those who represent them to act cautiously and to take no steps likely to imperil their own interests. The slaughter is to-day. It is an actual necessity for the country, and, even if San Francisco made no stir at all in the matter, the construction would only be deferred a few years, inasmuch as the people residing along the proposed route would be sure to take it in hands. But events march so rapidly now-a-days, the fate of cities and even nations is so quickly decided, that these few years if lost might entail the ruin of our city. For those reasons we feel justified in assuming that the contemplated railroad will be built as speedily as possible, and that our citizens will bear a considerable portion of expense.

The reflection next suggesting itself is how the expense is to be met. Shall we vote a special subsidy to be raised by a tax on real estate; or shall we leave the affair to the spirit and enterprise of our capitalists, merchants and traders? It is certain that, if a canvass were diligently made, men whose interests are inseparably bound up with the welfare of San Francisco, would be found willing to subscribe for a large percentage of the stock. But in whatever shape the assistance to the Southern Pacific Railroad be rendered, it must be made an indispensable condition that our citizens hold the value of their money in shares, and be properly represented in the management. Unless only thus can they secure themselves against the chances, we will not say the probabilities, of their generously being turned into a weapon for their own punishment, as it has undoubtedly been in more instances than one. We sincerely trust that the gentlemen who are acting for San Francisco in these negotiations with the St. Louis delegates will be equal in every sense to the responsibility which has been imposed on them. It is necessary that our visitors should return home with precise knowledge of what we may be depended upon for doing and a conviction that we shall be prepared to work promptly and vigorously when the time comes. Mr. Stanford and his worthy colleagues must be taught that the Directorship of San Francisco, or even of the Southern Pacific, the chief American city on the Pacific coast, is not necessary of accomplishment as they think.

THE Mayor of St. Louis and the Directors of the Southern Pacific Railroad on the 35th parallel, arrived in this city on Friday of last week. They are in consultation with the Committee of One Hundred, and we understand arrangements have been made whereby the Southern Road will establish its terminus in this city, in the neighborhood of Mission Bay. When this road is built, as built it will be, our citizens need not stare a continental whether Stanford gets Goat Island or not, and the people of the State at large will be benefitted by having a rival to the grasping Central.

THE INTERNATIONALS IN IRELAND.

The Internationals have made their descent upon Ireland, and, according to their own confessions, failed lamentably. The delegates who were sent thither for the purpose of organizing sections have had to return with the sorrowful tale that they were unable to establish even one. And yet there were many circumstances connected with the country which, one would imagine, would have a favorable influence on their designs. In the first place, the people are suffering from the domination of foreigners, and are, in fact, preparing for revolution as quietly, but as efficaciously, as they can. Hence it might naturally be supposed they would rapturously welcome the aid of a widespread and powerful society which proclaimed itself the deadly enemy of all existing governments. Again, there is no place in the world where labor is more wretchedly paid, or where the toiler occupies an humbler position, and consequently an organization professing to seek improvement of the workingman's condition might expect a favorable reception. Finally, the Irish are heartily tired of monarchical rule, and would, if they could, establish an independent and republican government in their country. For this reason one might suppose they would be willing to join a democratic association which declared war to hereditary privileges and maintained the equality of all men.

It is only doing them common justice to say that the International delegates set about their work very cunningly. They supposed in the first instance that the boot-shakers of Cork and their employers, so the apostles of scarcely hatched thither to offer their advice and support to the oppressed artisans. They declared the International was nothing but a trades-union society upon a large scale, and that it cherished no design save the defense of labor against the tyranny of the capital. The man who were "out on strike" were to receive, if they joined the society, a certain weekly allowance until their employers agreed to their demands, but this payment could only be made by the bootsh

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

ENGLAND.

Rumored Intended Abdication of the Queen.

The London correspondent of the Dundee Advertiser writes: "Several extraordinary rumors have for some time been afloat concerning the object of the Queen's visit to Germany. The majority of them have been disbelieved, and have died away; but one of the most startling continues to be repeated in certain quarters where the information is likely to be correct. It is to the effect that her Majesty intends at no late period to abdicate in favor of her son; that she will reside as little as possible in London, where her health is never at its best; and that, freed from the cares of State, she will live at Balmoral during the greater part of the summer and fall, and on the Continent during the winter. I give the rumor as it is going, and your readers may think of it what they like. It is not the first time such a report has been circulated. (Once before — when the Crown Prince of Germany visited the Queen — it was said he had come to be co, ulted on this very question, and perhaps this visit of her Majesty now may have given strength to the present curious rumor. This, at all events, may be added, that the Prince of Wales was never more popular than now; and that, if there is to be a change, the present time is an opportune one."

Preventive Punishments.

The Dethi Gazette makes certain suggestions with a view of inflicting a more adequate punishment than that of hanging on the murderers of European girls, which certainly did not err on the side of mercy. After pointing out that by hanging out the sessions of the late Viceroy of India, the object of the criminal—namely immediate transit to paradise—is, according to his views, attained, the Gazette proposes that in future any native of India who murders a European girl shall, upon conviction, be dealt with as follows: 1st. He shall be branded in the forehead with a large M, to denote his crime. 2. Both his arms shall be amputated above the elbow. 3. He shall be transported to England for twenty-one years, sent around the Cape in an iron cage, whipped once a month, on the same day of the month and at the same hour of the day on which he committed the murder and exhibited in a wild beast's den in the Tower of London during the period of his transportation; then, if he survive, put to death by decapitation. The body after dissection, and burnt if the felon be a Mussulman, or buried if a Hindoo." Such an enactment, if widely circulated in the vernacular, will have the effect of preventing such deeds of blood as have recently laid a Viceroy and a Chief Justice low. The life of a "white Romanoff" was taken by a third chord, and the strongest motives which can actuate those most likely to imitate it. In short the primary end of criminal legislation will be answered; the most desperate pharisaee will be deterred from crime by the prospects of a doom from which the boldest of them must shrink. "Great severity in such cases is but true mercy to all concerned, except the wretch to whom some such example would be useful in safeguarding the State. The magistrate is "the minister of God," and is commanded not to bear the sword in vain." — Delhi Gazette does, not however, point out any reason why the Holy Scripture command ing magistrates to amputate people's arms above the elbows, and if forgets that there are no wild beasts at present in the Tower of London.

GERMANY.

Old Catholic Curiosities.

The Germanic museum at Nuremberg is varerous and unique objects (contributed by some of the most exalted personages of German culture as a token of gratitude towards the Reichstag for its adoption of the well-known penal paragraphs, and in support of the Old Catholic movement in general):

1. The yoke of the Jesuits, under which the Catholics were sighing until now.—Contributed by Bismarck.

2. The cables with which Rome has shackled knowledge and liberty of thought during 1800 years.—Contributed by Fr. Bahr.

3. The jaws of the lion into which all the new-made Old Catholics will be thrown.—Gerlach.

4. A finely revised Bible, containing the faith of the fathers.—Tafel.

5. The remote floor of the Tridentine Council, whereupon the Old Catholics are standing to-day.—Drs. Dollinger.

6. Staff of the first Old Catholic wandering priest, and "Knaur" used for the baptism of the first Old Catholic Hinkelbein.—Straglitza.

7. Club to break the power of the hierarchy and for securing Old Catholic majorities at elections.—Hermesdorf.

8. A lot of baptismal certificates.—Heller & Co.

9. The accidentally discovered secret plans and correspondence of the Jesuit General Beltz and the General of the International, Marx.—Brass, Girardon, Tust & Co.

10. Model for the German national Church.—Bismarck-Jahn.

11. Cudgel for killing off the slimy anti social Democrats, now become obsolete through the adoption of penal paragraphs. —Crump and Stahl.

12. The identical breech-loader used for making the breach into the indifferentism of the old-school.—Schulte.

13. Cotton wool used at Oggersheim by the Confirmation of the first Old Catholic wandering apostle.—Lehr.

14. Fauxel for the introduction of Old Catholic piety and heresy into the minds of nonbeads, made simple by their wives.—Salinger.

All these relics will be exhibited in the Lutheran Church at Kaiserslautern previously to their dispatch to Nuremberg, and a special visit is recommended by the Central Committee. All the offerings of the faithful to be applied to the conversion of the obdurate Ultramontanists and for the purpose of expelling the Jesuits. Should there be a surplus it will be used for the purchase of church paraments.

New Commandments for a New Party.

A German paper, the Rheinpfalz, has the following draft of commandments for the Old Catholic, or more properly the new Protestant Church:

1. Thou shall keep St. Monday, and if possible Tuesday as well.

2. Thou shalt daily at 11 a. m. go to a public house and there vow the perdition of the Ultramontane and Jesuits.

3. Thou shalt not drink as much and whatever thou canst, and shall not despise beer or ham on Ash Wednesday or Good Friday.

4. Thou shalt never crowd any Confessional, but dispatch yourself to the other world by means of drowning, hanging or shooting.

5. Thou shalt subscribe at least for one Liberal paper, yearly or quarterly, for that it may lead you by your nose about the fog of Old Catholicity.

It is added that all those who personally know the participants in the Old Catholic movement will in the foregoing recognize a correct likeness.

ITALY.

American Proselytising.

A Miss Emily Gould, lady superintendent of the Evangelical School in Trastevere, has issued her six-monthly report. This is an American thing, and has no connection with the concerns started by Arnaud and Sciarelli. The report and prospectus printed in England, are intended for circulation in the States, and contain an appeal for pecuniary aid to be forwarded through New York and Boston banking firms. Miss Gould informs her friends and the Transatlantic public generally that, with the assistance of two Vaudois teachers, she succeeded in opening, last March, her establishment in Via Vicolo Sodetti, and in Italio-American Schools. She found that the Roman children entrusted to her care were ignorant even of the days of the week and months of the year. They had, it is true, been taught to read, but not one of them, after spelling through a page of an easy author, had the smallest conception of its meaning. With regard to religious knowledge, Miss Gould's supporters are informed that she believes Italian boys and girls of fifteen or sixteen—the juvenile preachers of the singular Christmas sermons included—had never heard of the birth of the Infant Saviour, of the Star in the East, or of the Massacre of the Innocents. "I asked them who this Child was: not one of them knew." The public is next invited to look at the same children in 1871, after only six months at the Italo-American Schools. They sing English hymns, and thoroughly understand them. They have learned geography, history and national philosophy, and are very forward in arithmetic and grammar. Some who, a few months before, could not read a line are now fully ready to read a regular course in mathematics. Several pupils have finished their arithmetic course, and will be fully prepared to match her boys of eleven and twelve against any pupils turned out by other establishments at present. In fine, she has already a dozen scholars qualified to act themselves as monitors in the primary school. Bible history classes on an improved plan will be opened shortly, and moral culture will occupy a due share of attention. The latter must have hitherto been sadly neglected in Rome, as the children sent to the Italio-American schools are quarrelsome, apt to lie, and wanting in truthfulness. The able educational staff has even to teach the pupils to play at games which children know by instinct in America. A moderate capital is at present the great desideratum, and Miss Gould appeals to the charitable and wealthy in her countrymen will be well and conscientiously laid out. This circular appears to be nothing more than a puff for a few American royal road to learning; but as the supposition that the alleged success is based implies that the Papal Government was grossly neglectful of public instruction, it may be as well to set the matter right in mind. In 1869, the year before the invasion, Rome had probably less than 200,000 inhabitants. Educational tables compiled from the official returns show that the proportion of children attending the elementary schools was—boys, 5,600; girls, 9,190; while the high class of schools, for which no payment is required, were frequented by 5,816 boys and 2,661 girls. Lastly, in the Universities and Sapienza College 1,355 male pupils received gratuitously a complete educational course, embracing as much Greek, Latin and mathematics as are taught in any English public school. I have no comparative educational statistics at hand, but I think this percentage of children in attendance at schools will stand favorably with I am sure that the facilities afforded for university studies are unparalleled elsewhere. A Roman boy with no other recommendation than an honest face and a sufficiency of pence can enter, as a matter of course, a course of Sixtions, and secure Father Perrone's lectures.

The Romans are, as a rule, well educated. Without speaking of the fine arts, of which Italians are born connoisseurs, one almost invariably finds them well versed in their own literature, not devoid of popular scientific knowledge, and competent to understand and give an opinion upon contemporary political and social questions. Such have been impressions of the Italio-Arab can Schools would never have come into existence but for disgraceful misgovernment given by the Municipality. Protestantism is at times a handy weapon for the enemies of the Catholic Church, and has the advantage of cheapness. Liberal journals, enthusiastic mobs, and even public deputies receive pecuniary remuneration; but Wesleyan missionaries and Waldensian preachers are gratifully provided for by home remittances, and do not even ask for their keep.—Cor. Weekly Register.

OUR EDUCATIONAL GRIEVANCES.

Father Herbert Vaughan's Views on the American School Question.

The Rev. Dr Herbert Vaughan, who is now in this country superintending the work of the great Catholic Mission to the negroes, has addressed a letter to the editor of his paper, the London Tablet, describing the educational fight in which the Catholics of America are engaged. In the course he points out what we have to contend against and how we are fighting. He says:

I spent a few days in Cincinnati, Ohio, to study the object of my visit was not the inspection of schools, yet my natural interest in the school question in England led me to make some inquiries as to the system pursued by the Catholics in that city. The Archbishop and his clergy are what are called in this country "live men" on the subject of public education. And I suspect that there is no city in the Union in which Catholic education is on a firmer and more satisfactory basis, or in which it has tougher difficulties to encounter from enemies. I think we can learn more than one lesson from the experience of the Catholic Church in America in the matter of popular education. The Catholic Church, being essentially one in all countries, has this advantage over every other body: she is always in perfect sympathy and harmony with herself. Her experience in her own country and under her own system is the same; only that in some parts it is a little earlier, some a little later. In America she is now face to face with Protestantism in the throes of dissolution; that is to say with secularism and private reading book—the Bible—

THE CONTEST IS IN THE SCHOOL.

Every process in America is more rapid in its development than in England. But this process is logically the same in both countries. The democratic and rationalistic tendency in education in England follows very much the course traced out by the young and impetuous people in the United States. They have by this time their wheels of so called "progress," such as hereditary Government, an old aristocracy, a State Church, and ancient and venerable traditions. The Conservative element in America has none of these advantages with which to clothe and trick itself out. The American people boast that their appeal is to reason, common sense and self interest; and it professes that these are incorporated in, and them in turn nurtured by the Public State School system. That system began by professing to be religious; and they then called the religion the least system. But when the religion became a subject of discord they agreed to banish the teaching of religion from the school; and then they called its banishment the best system. For a long time they respected those schools where religion was taught, but which were not supported by the State. They encouraged and praised them; and excluded them from taxation; they gladly admitted that they contributed to the public weal, and this through private bounties and voluntary subscriptions, instead of by rates and taxes levied upon the community. But seed must bring forth its proper fruit. It is but a question of time.

CINCINNATI,

Which is one of the large and liberal communities of the Union, affords a striking and instructive instance of this. A public school board is in existence there, much on the same principle as your new London School Board in England, only that it is controlled by the Municipal Council and the Central Government. The public schools in Cincinnati for last year amounted to $10,000. Of this the Catholics contribute their proportion in that community—contributed $250,000, or more than one fifth of the whole rate. The large sum of $162,000 goes to the management and formation of public schools, in which Catholic children are debarred by their consciences from attendance. They have therefore their own schools, which they have built and support entirely at their own expense, without any assistance whatever from the State. And the education which they give is known to be excellent; but it is based upon religion, and is not controlled by the State and paid officials. The consequence is, that not only are they not encouraged, but are actually taxed by the State. Thus, for instance, the Cathedral school is obliged to pay to the State the annual tax of $120, and the schools of another parish $200. The people—or the Archbishop and clergy—think that "penalty," or rather those who manipulate the majority and pull the strings, or, in other words, the public administrators of the system—perfectly consistent with itself. Having decreed that religious should give way to secular education—which is called the best—that system is now asserting and perpetuating itself by relentless aggression. It is enabling it to absorb and destroy every other system.

BY DOUBLY TAXING CATHOLICS.

First, by levying a heavy tax upon them for the support of schools which they cannot use, and of a system which they cannot tolerate; and secondly, by taxing another heavy burden upon them in the shape of a tax, which is levied upon their Catholic school buildings. The advocates of the public school system might give one more reason for this tax, which is that it is managed to place the religious system—and that would be to make education in public State schools compulsory on all, and so shut up the purely religious schools. This has been actually under consideration, and would be carried, but that it is impossible to impose a tyranny of this kind upon the Catholics of Cincinnati, who form at least one-third of the population. I need not point out to you how this system recently introduced in England—nominally by way of supplementing, but really with the intention, on the part of its chief advocates, of supplanting the denominational system, especially the Catholic system—is working in opposition to the Catholic religious schools altogether. You have less power building grants; you will lose your support greatly; you will have to contend with Catholics of Cincinnati for your school buildings; and in addition to this, no effort will be made to force your children into the State schools, on the ground of that last tyranny of the modern Liberal or Protestant government—that the people belong to the State, and that their education must be taken out of the hands of the clergy, who are and must remain in professed and open hostility to the new principles and modern form of progress. The speeches lately made by Liberal and Conformist leaders in England, on a visit from followed to interfere with the school. I inquired of one who was in a position to answer—Whether young priests, for instance, coming fresh from college, do not imagine that a priest's work lies not so much in the school as in the parish, and whether they do not object to the confinement and monotony of constant attendance in the schools and shirk it as far as they may? I was assured, on the contrary, that the general and predominant feeling is, that the chief pastoral work of the church is to be done in the schools, and that no such thing would be tolerated as shirking the school work, or discharging it in a mere perfunctory way by occasional flying visits. In fact,

THE SCHOOL HAS BECOME THE CHIEF CHURCH.

Of the bishops and priests. The whole future depends upon it. It is foreseen that the struggle of the future will be centered in, or at least concentrated upon, this question—the merely secular or religious education of the children. Besides the personal labor and instruction undertaken by the priests, the expense of maintaining schools is immense. Thus, to take a single illustration, the Catholics of the Cathedral parish have not only to pay the State School-tax and the heavy tax laid on their school-buildings, but they have to find the $5,500 annually asked by the current school expenses. All this has to be collected by the clergy as best they can. Half the Archbishop and his priests are counted the lost to souls in the public schools, and are determined to make every effort and sacrifice in order to provide Catholic education for their children. Of course, they do not limit their proportion in that community—contributed $250,000, or more than one fifth of the whole rate. The large sum of $162,000 goes to the management and formation of public schools, in which Catholic children are debarred by their consciences from attendance. They have therefore their own schools, which they have built and support entirely at their own expense, without any assistance whatever from the State. And the education which they give is known to be excellent; but it is based upon religion, and is not controlled by the State and paid officials. The consequence is, that not only are they not encouraged, but are actually taxed by the State. Thus, for instance, the Cathedral school is obliged to pay to the State the annual tax of $120, and the schools of another parish $200. The people—or the Archbishop and clergy—think that "penalty," or rather those who manipulate the majority and pull the strings, or, in other words, the public administrators of the system—perfectly consistent with itself. Having decreed that religious should give way to secular education—which is called the best—that system is now asserting and perpetuating itself by relentless aggression. It is enabling it to absorb and destroy every other system.

BY DOUBLY TAXING CATHOLICS.

First, by levying a heavy tax upon them for the support of schools which they cannot use, and of a system which they cannot tolerate; and secondly, by taxing another heavy burden upon them in the shape of a tax, which is levied upon their Catholic school buildings. The advocates of the public school system might give one more reason for this tax, which is that it is managed to place the religious system—and that would be to make education in public State schools compulsory on all, and so shut up the purely religious schools. This has been actually under consideration, and would be carried, but that it is impossible to impose a tyranny of this kind upon the Catholics of Cincinnati, who form at least one-third of the population. I need not point out to you how this system recently introduced in England—nominally by way of supplementing, but really with the intention, on the part of its chief advocates, of supplanting the denominational system, especially the Catholic system—is working in opposition to the Catholic religious schools altogether. You have less power building grants; you will lose your support greatly; you will have to contend with Catholics of Cincinnati for your school buildings; and in addition to this, no effort will be made to force your children into the State schools, on the ground of that last tyranny of the modern Liberal or Protestant government—that the people belong to the State, and that their education must be taken out of the hands of the clergy, who are and must remain in professed and open hostility to the new principles and modern form of progress. The speeches lately made by Liberal and Conformist leaders in England, on a visit from

GROCERIES, WINES AND LIQUORS

WILLIAM B. DOLAN,
163 Third Street.....San Francisco.
Importer and Dealer, Wholesale and Retail in French Wines and Brandies,
Irish Whiskey,
Imported direct from Ireland.

HE HAS ALSO ON HAND A LARGE AS-sortment of California Wines of every description, which he will dispose of, in bulk or in case, for the convenience of families.

All orders left at the store, 163 Third street, will be promptly attended to, and delivered free of charge in any part of the city. 1728

JOHN FLANAGAN & CO.,
Importers and Jobbers of
Fine Brandies, Wines, Liquors, etc.
Fire-proof Store, 622 Front street, bet. Clay & Washington
SAN FRANCISCO.
Foreign Liquors in bond. Fine Brandies, Holland Gin Port, Claret, etc., sold in quantities to suit the purchaser
Also, Agents for the celebrated California Wines and Brandies. 6ct 17

M. H. KELLY. JOHN EGAN
Kelly & Egan,
IMPORTERS AND DEALERS IN
FINE WINES AND LIQUORS
No. 604 Battery street,
Near Jackson, SAN FRANCISCO

E. Commins & Co.
(Successors to P. Riley & Co.)
WHOLESALE LIQUOR MERCHANTS
No. 805 Front street.

A. P. HOTALING & CO.,
IMPORTERS AND DEALERS IN FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC
WINES AND LIQUORS.
AGENTS FOR THE J. H. CUTTER
OLD BOURBON WHISKY
C. P. MOORMAN & CO., DISTILLERS,
LOUISVILLE, KENTUCKY.

OWING TO THE DESERVED REPUTATION of the celebrated brand of Whisky, unprincipled persons have, at sundry times, and are now, engaged in counterfeiting the brands of the same, under the popular name of CUTTER, and the consequence of which is that we can use the name, expressed in no less an the genuine article.

To guard as far as possible the public against fraud and imposition, we notify the trade and customers that this is the only genuine brand of Cutter Whisky, and that we are the sole Agents for the same on the Pacific Coast.

Cutter, A. P. HOTALING & CO.
6011 421 Jackson street, San Francisco.

P. J. McMAHON. DAN KEEFFE.
McMAHON & KEEFFE
SALOON,
318 Bush Street,
Opposite the Alhambra Theatre, where they will be happy to see their friends and the public generally call for. For family use they have bottled specially some of the finest Liquors and Cigars ever imported. They would be mentioned a superior article of J. P. CUTTER'S celebrated rye. Also our Bourbon selected expressly for the use at an advanced price. Also, that celebrated brand of CHURCHILL & BLANCHARD'S OLD RYE, seven years old; and also a superior brand of CHURCHILL & BLANCHARD'S Bourbon, bottled specially selected for McMahon & Keeffe by a special agent to Kentucky. 1736

THE CONSTANT ATTENTION OF THE PROPRIETOR
Will be paid to the comfort of the patrons of the House.
1736 EMMANUEL FARRELL, Proprietor.

FRANKLIN HOTEL,
615 AND 616 PACIFIC STREET,
Between Sansome and Montgomery....San Francisco
HUGH CURRAN.....Proprietor.
Board, per month.....$5 00
Board and Lodging per week.....1 50
Single meals.....25
Family accommodations on reasonable rates.
Passengers conveyed to and from the Steamers FREE; also from the House to the boats and cars.
Free Coach to the House from the Steamers.

RAILROAD HOUSE,
Corner of Sansome and Pacific streets, San Francisco.
P. RILEY,
(Late of the Tremont House; where he will be happy to receive his friends and the public in general.
The House is thoroughly fitted up on the latest principles, with Hot and Cold Baths, Reading and Sitting Rooms, Billiard Saloon, Bar, and can be had either single or in suite for families.
The best markets will be kept to the comfort and convenience of boarders.
Board and Lodging per week.....$5 to $7
Board and Lodging per month.....$20 to $25
There is a free-proof Safe in the House, in which valuables can be kept at the risk of the proprietor.
1736 Fire Coach to the House. P. RILEY, Proprietor.

CITY HOTEL,
K street, between Third and Fourth,
Sacramento.
THIS HOUSE IS CENTRALLY LOCATED, THE rooms are commodious, well ventilated and airy, and the tables will be supplied with the best the market affords.
Board and lodging, per week.....$7 00
Board and lodging, single rooms.....8 00
Single meals.....25
1677 P. CONLAN, Proprietor.

NOTICE TO TAX-PAYERS.
UNDER THE PROVISIONS OF THE REVE-nue and Assessment Act, the Legislature of this State, all assessments made this year will be at the rate of 1½ per cent. on the dollar. Notice is hereby given that I am now in my office prepared to receive assessment on all the real and personal property in the City and County of San Francisco.
I hereby request all owners and agents to call and form to me their assessments, as I will be able to do that all assessments of Real and Personal Property must be delivered to me under oath, as by the Act of April 1st, 1872.
LEVI BONNER,
Assessor City and County of San Francisco.
April 10th, 1872. ap13

CALIFORNIA BUILDING and LOAN SOCIETY,
In Bankruptcy.
NOTICE OF SECOND DIVIDEND.
UNDER AND BY VIRTUE OF OUR AUTHOR ity as Trustees in bankruptcy of the estate of the California Building and Loan Society, bankrupt, and by and with the advice and consent of the Committee of Creditors, we hereby declare a second dividend of twenty-five (25) per cent. of the assets of said bankrupt, payable on and after the first day of March, A. D. 1872, at the Bank of Pacific, No. 424 California street, San Francisco, to all creditors whose claims have been proved and allowed by Samuel J. Clarke, Jr., Esq., Register in Bankruptcy.
The third meeting of creditors of said Bankrupt will be held on the 23d day of March, A.D. 1872, at 11 o'clock, at the same place.
San Francisco, February 19, 1872.
JAMES B. KELLY,
ALEXANDER BOREING,
Trustees in Bankruptcy of said Bankrupt.
Gallagher & Pirrem, Attorneys for Trustees, assignee of Messrs. Mackay & Co.
Notice is hereby given that I have purchased the entire stock of the above Bankrupt, and will continue the business at the old stand, No. 424 California street, San Francisco, under the name of the California Building and Loan Society.
ap8 JAMES B. KELLY, Assignee.

SMALL FRUIT INSTRUCTOR.
SIX FORTY pages, price 25 cents, post-paid. Tells how to plant and grow all kinds of Small Fruit successfully; both for market and home garden. John J. Thomas (Horry Ward Beecher, Judge I. S. Harris, of Ill., and many others say it is one of the most complete and practical works they have ever seen. Address ap13 J. J. THOMAS, Fruit Farm, Union Springs, N. Y.

PAINTS, OILS, ETC.
WASON & MORRIS,
Successors to J. R. KELLY,
PLAIN AND DECORATIVE
HOUSE AND SIGN PAINTERS,
GILDING AND GLAZING,
Imitations of Wood and Marble.
Banners, Flags and Military Standards painted to order.
IMPORTERS AND DEALERS IN
PAINTS, OILS,
TURPENTINE, VARNISHES.
BRUSHES, GLASS, Etc.,
NO. 26 CALIFORNIA ST.,
Two doors below Davis street, San Francisco.

SULLIVAN, KELLY & CO.,
Northwest corner Pine and Front Sts.,
Where they offer for sale
THE LARGEST STOCK OF PAINTS,
OILS,
GLASS,
ETC., ETC., ON THE PACIFIC COAST,
AT THE LOWEST MARKET RATES.
101, 103 and 105 FRONT STREET,
and 110 PINE STREET.

DONNOLLY'S CALIFORNIA PREMIUM YEAST POWDER.
ANOTHER GREAT REDUCTION.
Only $16 per gross in lots to the trade
THIS SUPERIOR YEAST POWDER has no equal in the preparation of bread, cakes, etc.
USE DONNOLLY'S YEAST POWDER,
The best and cheapest ever offered to the public. Made fresh every day at the Pacific Pi Point st, San Francisco, Cal.
m9tf3 D. CALLAGHAN, Proprietor.

TROY BELLS.
Old Established Troy Bell Foundry,
TROY, N. Y. (Established 1812.)
A LARGE ASSORTMENT OF CHURCH, ACAD-emy Fire Alarm and other Bells constantly on hand, and made to order. Made of genuine Bell Metal (copper and tin.) Hung with Rotary Mounting, the best and most durable ever used. All Bells warranted satisfactory.
Large Illustrated Catalogues sent free upon application to JONES & CO., Troy, N. Y., ap27 Or 104 Dearborn street, Chicago, Ill.

EDUCATIONAL.

COLLEGE OF NOTRE DAME,
SAN JOSE, CALIFORNIA.
YOUNG LADIES' INSTITUTE.
THIS INSTITUTION, WHICH IS INCOR-porated by the laws of the State, is empowered to confer academical honors, with diplomas, the Twenty-first Annual Session will COMMENCE on August 11, 1871. The course of instruction embraces the following branches, viz:

TERMS:
Entrance, to be paid but once.....$10 00
Board and Tuition, per quarter.....50 00
Washing, per quarter.....10 00
Physicians' fees (unless it may be preferred to pay the bill to each physician) per quarter.....2 50
Piano, Vocal Music, Drawing and Painting (each).....10 00
Use of Library, per session.....1 00
Physical and Chemical Apparatus, per session.....2 00
Dancing and Fancy Needlework.....5 00
Pupils are not received to be under half a session in advance. Pupils will find it much to their advantage to be present at the opening of the session.

SAINT MARY'S COLLEGE,
SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.
Conducted by the Christian Brothers.
Offers every facility for acquiring a thorough Education, whether Classical, Scientific or Commercial.

Those who complete the Classical Course, for the Degree of A. B., the Scholastic, A. B. C., the special Master of Accounts.
The Christian Brothers have been established for convenience of those who wish to acquire a practical education in the shortest time possible. The proper care is bestowed on every pupil, and the Parents may rest assured that their children will receive a thorough education in Grammar, Composition and Rhetoric and the Commercial and Scientific Branches.

TERMS PER SCHOLASTIC YEAR.
(Payable half-yearly in advance.)
Board, Tuition, Washing, Bedding and Mending.....$250 00
Entrance Fee.....10 00
Physician's Fee and Medicines.....10 00
Vacation at College.....40 00
DAY PUPILS.
Quarter class.....$6 00
Junior class.....8 00
Music, vocal and instrumental, drawing and modern languages, extra charges. The two months of the scholastic year commence on the 16th of August and the 16th of January.
All communications regarding the College to be addressed to the Secretary, Rev. P. ANTHONY,
Very Rev. F. HENNEBERY,
6ct23 President.

SHAW'S
PECTORAL COUGH SYRUP,
For the Cure and Relief of all
PULMONARY COMPLAINTS,
For sale at SHAW'S DRUG STORE, corner Sutter and Powell streets, San Francisco.

C. DESMOND,
PRACTICAL HATTER,
No. 5 New Montgomery Street,
GRAND HOTEL BUILDING.
IS SELLING OFF HIS LARGE AND VARIED Stock of Hats and Caps at less than half its value, in order to make room for a large invoice now in transit. Those goods

Will and Must be Sold,
So bargains may be expected. You can assure your self of the truth of the statement by a personal examination. The above embraces every variety, from the FINEST SILK HAT to a 25 cent CAP.
All who have dealt with Desmond will vouch for the fact.
His Hats are fair when others fail,
They neither break nor tatter;
Of perfect shape and finest style
Those from DESMOND the Hatter.
C. DESMOND, 5 New Montgomery St.,
Under the Grand Hotel.

Opening Address of the Bishop of Versailles.

Members of the National Assembly
Received Holy Communion on Sunday in the Palace Chapel.

The example set by you in coming here ready to perform your Easter duty, inspires me with the following observations for you; and I feel that in so doing I am giving seeds to a soil fertile and well fitted to receive it.

In the first place you have just received God, who is light itself; and you know well how much you stand in need of light for the difficult and very arduous important functions which form part of your office, amid the darkness covering the earth, and the thick clouds of error now gathering.

You have just received the food of strength; and you know full well how much you need strength, superhuman strength, to grapple with the mountains of difficulties rising up before you.

You have just received the God of love, and you know full well also how fearful you are towards one's neighbor are needful to your unhappy times, when those who are already linked by the sacred profession of arms, feel incapacitated from performing the duties of their holy calling, if they will, let us hope, regenerate in these three respects, shedding the light of their virtues and planting in the virtues of strength and charity. You are gifts which you would fain give to the world's philosophy.

If religion were now-a-days what it was in former times, the sword would still be the place in human affairs belongs to it. In the fight, you would be the first to fall, as it is you who carried away general movement of faith; you would be the first to sound the communion and your courage in approaching the holy and kneeling down before it. But in these days, when the mouth full, when the table easily fulfills our longing on the desert,

18. Be thoughtful and attentive to the wants of those about you.

19. Converse on pleasant subjects with those sitting near you.

20. Do not say anything not intended for all present to hear.

21. Never leave the table before others, without asking the lady or gentleman who accompanied you to excuse you.

A CHEESE OMELET.—For a cheese omelet use the smallest of your frying-pans should be for this purpose. Remember that the ingredients ought to be spread over it thin, and observe that a cheese omelet is tried only when it is light. Two ounces of cheese is a small omelet. Beat up the eggs singly and well, and add the cheese grated and close. Regulate the quantity by the number of eggs used—three ounces go to three eggs, but only experience can tell. Before frying the ingredients, melt, in a small and perfectly clean pan, a piece of butter the size of a walnut for each egg and pressing enough of these holy days shall permit, write those horrid words adjuring as you value your sacred faith in that religion for which your fathers suffered and were stilled, and died—as you are the honor and hope for the liberty of Protestant country, to shun that illorganization as you would that which is to flee from it as from the face of a serpent. I now avoid all references in connection with or approval of the Incommune of Paris; against which hundred of a noble Archbishop, of eminent and of brave, grey-haired soldiers to leave. Enough for me, for you, Garibaldi is its prophet—its whose "Death to the Priests!" "Away with Property is robbery!" Young men good, I never advised you, knowingly to lie the wrong; I now feel called to use any and all the influence which possess, through your confidence in country, in my undying devotion to country and to you, to warn you against ing laid for that dear country's destruction, the ruin of its honor, and the its faith. Yours sincerely,

PATRICK LAVELLE.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE MONITOR---1872.
REDUCTION IN PRICE
FOUR DOLLARS A YEAR!
(Payable invariably in advance.)
INDUCEMENTS TO SUBSCRIBERS.
The following inducements are offered to
CLUBS.
To the person sending us $20 for a Club of 5, we shall give any number of the following books to the value of $5.
Holy Bible, in different styles of binding.....$1 to $3 00
Martorengbrae and Mitchell's History of Ireland, impartially illustrated.....$18 to $22 00
Our Lady of Lourdes, just published.....1 25
The Vendean Chiefs and its Dedications.....1 25
Life of Archbishop Hughes, his early life.....1 25
Life of Archbishop Hughes, his public life.....1 25
The Pope and Portraits of O'Neill and Cardinal McCloskey.....1 25
The Irish in America, by Maguire.....2 00
The Irish Abroad and at Home.....1 50
Lives of Robert and Thomas Addis Emmet.....1 50
Lives of Irish Martyrs and Heroes.....1 50
The Battle Fields of Ireland, 1688 to 1691.....1 50
Shakespeare's Plays and Poems, complete.....1 75
Shiel's Sketches of the Irish Bar, 1 vols.....2 00
Sketches of the Irish Bar, 2 vols.....3 00
The Irish Abroad and at Home, Ireland.....1 50
The Wild Irish Girl, by Lady Morgan.....1 50
Life of Napoleon.....1 50
The Freemasons.....1 50
Catholic Anecdotes, or the Catholicism in Examples.....2 50
Pocket Prayer Book Chaplet Manual.....1 00
Disappointed Ambition.....1 00
Florence M'Carthy.....1 00
Butler's Lives of the Saints, 4 vols.....$4 to 15 00
Poems by Rev. Abram J. Ryan, Poets.....1 50
Poems by Thomas D'Arcy M'Gee.....1 50
From the French, beautifully illustrated.....$4 to 24 00
Complete Works of Gerald Griffin, 10 vols.....$15 to 35 00
Complete Works of Gerald Griffin, 12 vols.....$18 to 35 00
Moore and Paul's Irish History.....1 50
Monks of the West, (Montalembert) 6 vols.....25 00
Father Prout's Reliques.....2 00
Mitchell's Jail Journal.....1 50
Mitchell's Life of Hamilton Rowan.....1 50
Irish Eloquence.....2 00
Any number of books to the value of $5.
Any number of books to the value of $10.
Any number of books to the value of $15.
Any number of books to the value of $20.
Any number of books, chromos or steel engravings, to the value of $25.
Any number of books, chromos or steel engravings, at the option of the club.
Club of 5—A Sewing Machine, Gold Watch or other presents to the value of $50.
Club of 10—A New Gold Watch, Sewing Machine or other articles to the value of $80.
Club of 15—A Gold Watch & Wilson, or any other Sewing Machine, to the value of $70, or $80.
Club of 20—A Gold Watch & Wilson, or other Sewing Machine, to the value of $80, or any other articles.
Club of 100—A beautiful Gold Watch and Chain, worth $150, or any other articles of equal value.
Or should the parties organizing Clubs prefer, we shall give them assisted the equivalent of the premiums in Gold Coin.
☞The money in all instances must accompany the names
SUBSCRIPTION RATES:
Mail Subscribers, per year.....$4 00
Three Months.....1 25
Clubs of 5 or more, per month of four weeks.....1 25
Single copies.....10
For Club rates, see above.
ADDITIONAL INDUCEMENTS.
Subscribers so preferring will be furnished
Godey's Lady's Magazine and The Monitor for $5 a year.
Peterson's Lady's Magazine and The Monitor for $5 a year.
Demorest's Illustrated Fashion Magazine and The Monitor for $5.50 a year.
The Catholic World and The Monitor for $7 a year.
LYONS & BARRY, Publishers,
523 Clay street, San Francisco.

J. O'KANE,
Manufacturer and Importer of
SADDLES & HARNESS
Pine Horse Clothing, etc., etc.,
No. 813 KEARNY STREET,.....
Between Washington and Jackson, up stairs.
Repairing done with promptness and dispatch. Orders promptly attended to. ma25-1f

TWELVE MUSIC BOOKS, WHICH CONSTITUTE A
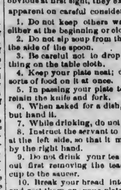
Complete Musical Library!
1200 or more Songs and Pieces for Pianoforte or Reed Organ. Worth from $100 to $500; sold in book form for $10!
THE MUSICAL TREASURE. Vocal and Instrumental. The most extensive. Very popular.
THE SILVER CHORD. Vocal. Large number of the best songs.
GEMS OF GERMAN SONG. Vocal. The very best German songs.
GEMS OF SACRED SONG. Vocal. A choice collection.
GEMS OF SCOTTISH SONG. Vocal. Selected from a large number. The best.
TREASURY OF GEMS. Vocal. Popular songs. More recent than Silver Chord.
OPERATIC ALBUM. Vocal. Comprises most of the favorites of standard Operas.
SHOWER OF PEARLS. Vocal. Completely filled with the best dances.
PEARLS AND RUBIES. Instrumental. In the same as Home Circle, vols. 3.
PIANIST'S ALBUM. Instrumental. Is the same as Home Circle, vols. 4.
HOME CIRCLE. Vols. 1 and 2. Instrumental.
The above list of twelve books is the whole set, which is often called "The Home Circle Series," all the books being of uniform binding and size, well filled, not with the most difficult or the most severely classical music, but with that which is genial, bright, popular, and fitted for the entertainment of the happy circle at home.
Price of each book, $2.50 in Boards; $3.00 in Cloth; and Full Gilt, $4.00. Sent, post-paid, for the above prices.
OLIVER DITSON & CO., Boston.
C. H. DITSON & CO., New York.

ST. MARY'S HOSPITAL,
CORNER FIRST AND BRYANT STS.
SAN FRANCISCO.
THIS INSTITUTION IS UNDER THE MAN agement of the Sisters of Mercy.
JAMES MURPHY, M. D.....Visiting Physician.
L. C. LANE, M. D.....Visiting Surgeon.
F. A. A. MELINGE, M. D.....Resident Physician.
TERMS:
Payable monthly in advance for board, medicine, attendance, etc.:
In the wards.....$10 per week.
In rooms with one person.....15 "
In private rooms.....20 "
Lavation and washing extra.
Confinement cases, $12 extra.
Money always refunded in case a patient leaves before the expiration of the month.
Recruited Seamen are not received on pay in advance. ap27-1y

QUITE AN ATTRACTION
—AT—
MRS. RIORDAN'S
MILLENARY EMPORIUM,
124 Kearny Street,
☞ One door from the corner of Sutter street. ☜
The latest assortment of EUROPEAN and NEW YORK STYLES—selling at the lowest figures. Ladies, please call and remember for yourselves. ap20

MEDICAL, ETC.

Ayer's
Hair Vigor,
For restoring to Gray Hair its natural Vitality and Color.



A dressing which is at once agreeable, healthy, and effectual for preserving the hair. It soon restores faded or gray hair to its original color, with the gloss and freshness of youth. Thin hair is thickened, falling hair checked, and baldness often, though not always, cured by its use. Nothing can restore the hair where the follicles are destroyed, or the glands atrophied and decayed; but such as remain can be saved by this application, and stimulated into activity, so that a new growth of hair is produced. Instead of defiling the hair with a p

TELEGRAPHIC!

Washington Matters.

New York, April 26.—The Tribune says editorially: "We regret that there is reason or the statement that the Administration has already abandoned its attitude on the Alabama question; that the Secretary of State has written to General Schenck in a pressing regret at the misunderstanding which has arisen concerning the claims for indirect damages, because we conceived we had the right to include them under the treaty; that the case cannot be amended or withdrawn, because the treaty contains no provision for amendment except by consent case; but that we expected an award would be made for them; that we do not wish to say we desire none may be made; and we hope her Majesty's Government will permit the arbitration to go forward."

WASHINGTON, April 26.—The Senate Committee on Territories have about concluded the consideration of the bill to prevent polygamy in Utah. It authorizes the Courts to proceed against Mormons who practice polygamy, and makes the fact of cohabitation and acknowledgment of marriage sufficient for conviction. The bill will shortly be reported to the Senate for the purpose of having it printed.

The tipsi land bill was laid before the Senate and read once. Cole objected to the second reading. Corbett called up the bill declaring the citizenship of persons born in the Territory of Oregon and now residing in the State of Oregon. Kelly explained that it was intended to apply to persons born under the British flag. Casserly objected to the bill on the ground that it was an armed claim of the United States to the Territory of Oregon, prior to the treaty with Great Britain, was unconstitutional.

WASHINGTON, April 27.—The alteration of the Postal Appropriation bill, as it now stands in the House, increasing the China Mail subsidy for steamers from some Pacific port,[1] instead of confining them to San Francisco, was faintly written in pencil, and all the other amendments were written in India ink. Several correspondents failed to discover the alteration in reading the amendment, which was regarded somewhere as it is believed to have been made subsequently. The story is unfounded that the Northern Pacific Railroad Company is engineering this trick; its promoters ignore all swindling, relying steadily on good faith and work solely. The California Representatives promise to fight this new dodge vigorously. Some think it was perpetrated for the purpose of distracting attention particularly from the Gen. Island knavery, and to enable the personal Representatives to seek to redeem themselves. Others answer that it is a Central Pacific company trick to defeat any increased subsidy unless Gen Island be secured.

The Senate has voted to-day, in the House, after smelling the San Francisco appeal of the Assessor, Sargent, in a song[2] stated he jestily himself by saying that he had favored the Gen Island proposition from personal considerations and considerations; that he believed it important for San Francisco; that the harbor should be crowded with fleets of commerce, man-of-wars and revenue cutters; that he would build a fine city, instead of staying a toll-gatherer on commerce as desired the Gen. Island.

CHICAGO, Pa) is here, working hard. San Francisco has been delinquent in failing to have an extension built to the East to connect the New York Press, which is largely in the monopoly interest, through the manipulations of railroads by shrewd Central Pacific agents. The question is misunderstood in the East and is confused. Our papers are systematically suppressed.

NEW YORK, April 27.—A Trust Washington says that the sensational disclosures most heavy recently, regarding the claims of the Government on the question of indirect claims, are utterly without authority and substantially without truth. The position of the Government is unchanged. The claims will not be withdrawn unless the United States can point involved in the

CATHOLIC ITEMS.

Eastern.

The Rev. Patrick A. Harnedi, died at the Episcopal residence, Albany, N. Y., on the morning of April 12th, after a few days illness. His death was caused by inflammation of the brain and pleuro-pneumonia.

At the bands of his Grace the Most Rev. John R. Purcell, on April 5th, the minor orders of Exorcist and Acolyte were conferred on Mr. Algernon Brown; sub-deaconship on Mr. Mathias Mueller; on Saturday, April 6th, deaconship on the same, and priesthood on the Rev. James Burns, all belonging to the Archdiocese of Cincinnati.

Died, April 14th, in the Convent of the Sisters of Charity of the House of Providence, Vancouver, W. T., Sister Mary Philomena, in the 26th year of her age. Sister Philomena has been afflicted with sickness for many months, during which she suffered much; yet, like a true Christian, she never complained, but suffered in silence and resignation to the will of God. May her soul rest in peace.

Very Rev. Father P. J. Ryan, was consecrated on sunday, April 14th, Bishop of Trichomia and coadjutor of Archbishop Kenrick of the diocese of St. Louis, at St. John's Catholic church, corner of Chesnut and Sixteenth streets, St. Louis. The church was beautifully decorated and densely crowded with spectators. The ceremonies, which were very impressive were performed by Archbishop Kenrick, assisted by Archbishop Lynch, of Toronto, and Bishop Wilmington, Delaware, raised to the holy order of priesthood, the following reverend gentlemen, dioceses of the Congregation of the Most Holy Redeemer: Rev. John B. Schaumann, Rev. Charles Joseph Kerr, Rev. Andrew Wynn, Rev. James Francis Ryan, Rev. Bernard Aloysius Liks, and Rev. George John Dunbolic. We congratulate the congregation on the noble addition to their number of priests. Rev. Joe. Martin Schwartz was raised to the deaconate, and thirty-two others, professed members of the Congregation St. R., received Tonsure and Minor Orders from this above-mentioned Rt. Rev. Prelate.

Foreign.

It is stated that the late Bishop Morris has left in MS. a collection of annals of the Catholic Church in England during his younger days; and they will be edited and published by one of the English Benedictine fathers.

LATE REV. JAMES BROWNE, P. P.—The remains of the above esteemed and reverend gentleman, who died on Tuesday, March 26th, were conveyed to their last resting place in the quaint old burying place of Ballintubber in county Kildare, adjacent to the abbey. The various thoroughfares leading to the cemetery were thronged to excess by the elite of the surrounding localities, together with a vast assemblage of his parishioners. The clergy of all the different orders were present.

The Sisters of Mercy, Enniscrone, county Clare, beg gratefully to acknowledge the receipt of the following letter and check for five pounds sterling, from the Most Noble the Princess Louise, Marchioness of Lorne, in reply to an appeal made in aid of their convent: "Her Royal Highness the Princess Louise desires Captain Campbell to enclose £5 to assist the Sisters of Mercy to procure some prize to encourage their pupils. Her Royal Highness would like to know what progress the boy who won the prize."

In a sermon recently preached on behalf of a struggling mission on Saffronhill, Archbishop Manning said: "I for one do not desire that the Catholic Church in England should ever depend on anything extraneous for its support. Gold is dangerous, and poverty keeps the heart pure—and I say this even of the clergy. Voluntaryism is perhaps required; for a priest is not able to earn wages. There is no peril in poverty, though I often wish we had something more, so as to open additional churches and schools, especially for our poor. Poverty is the test that keeps away corruption; and I hope that the Catholic Church in England will continue to be poor and pure."

THE INVASION.—A FREE PETITER.—See her pallid countenance, and short time ago the picture of ruddy health, the envy of the school and the pride of her parents. Now she is a spectacle for pity by her schoolmates, for her cheeks form and pleasing proportion carried cheerfulness to their ranks. Diligent, pure, patient exemplary, obedient and graceful at home, she was the bearer of all. But alas, we are grieved to say that this picture of health is now blanched by Consumption. The voice once so sweet, so musical, is now hollow, hoarse, husky and pierced by a hollow cough. Let us approach her bedside and look at her. Her eyes are sunken, the essence of the freshness and consumptive grasp. The hand once so beautiful, now bony and emaciated, shows bony softness, while the cheeks and sunken eyes are unnaturally prominent and red. The lips are brownish with repeated hemorrhages. Delirium is the last stage of consumption; the breath, heavy, virgatity, breath is unnaturally hot, the pulse 120, but by delirium cannot conceive proper the time, nearly blood with force. Soon will her voice be gone, yet in her mental delirium and friends gather around with words of cheer and encouragement, and depart with sentiments of pity and silent regret. When we have her? No! there na rebel! We can say this destroyer of our happiness, we can offer the loss of so bright a gem. Something more than human skill is required to stay the progress of the fatal disease. Let us pray for her, and ask God for sincere calls for aid, for she is hopeless. How to dispel the true consumption, and to restore the appetite and strength. Dispel a painful dags irongs the Peruvian Syrup, and it is purified, activated, nerved by its use, and the heart bounds with a new impulse, the nerves are strengthened by degrees; the color is restored, and recently a sound constitution is established. Let us advise all who are languishing, nervous and sensitive to the present season to procure this remedy.

DAIRY PRODUCE.

BUTTER—California firkin, 30@32½; Fresh roll, 35@37½; Eastern firkin, 30@32½; Eastern roll, 35@37½.

CHEESE—California, 14@16; Eastern, none in market.

EGGS—California, 18@20 per dozen.

HAMS—California at 14½@16c; Oregon, none in the market; Eastern, 15@16c.

BACON—California, at 14@15c; Oregon, 13½@15c; Eastern sugar-cured breasts, 14@15c.

LARD—California, 12½@13c; Oregon, none in the market; Eastern, in tin, 13½@15c; do in casks 13@13½c.

FRESH MEATS.

BEEF—For first quality, ugli cut, 9 lb; for second do, 6@8c.

VEAL—4@8½c lb.

MUTTON—4@8c lb.

LAMB—4@8c per lb.

PORK—Dressed, grain-fed, 9@9½c; on foot, grain-fed, 6@6½c.

POULTRY AND GAME.

DUCKS—Tame, 40@45 per dozen; Spring Chickens, $4@5; Roosters, $3 per dozen.

GEESE—Tame $4@5 per dozen.

GRASS—Tame $2@$3@3 dozen.

HARE—$1@1 50 per dozen; dressed 10c per lb.

RABBITS—$1@$1 50 per dozen.

TURKEYS—30c per lb.

VENISON—6@8c per lb.

Subscriptions Received.

Lakeport—Patrick Daly ..... $4 00
Michael Manelon ..... 4 00
Clarice—Mary Farrell ..... 4 00
Mayfield—Martin Conner ..... 4 00
Mrs. J. O'Brien ..... 4 00
Mrs. Conner ..... 4 00
Austin—Rev. Bernard Scannell ..... 4 00
Gilroy—Mrs. Mary Ann Hall ..... 4 00
Centerville—McCann & Wallace ..... 2 00
Fremont—Rev. Father Maguire ..... 2 00
Centerville—Charles McFadden ..... 2 00
Irvington—Mrs. Mary Ann ..... 2 00
Greenville—Henry O'Toole ..... 4 00
Mrs. Catherine Murphy ..... 4 00
Pacific Springs—Wm. Conway ..... 4 00
Valmore—E. Millard ..... 4 00
James Green ..... 4 00
Mrs. Lockwood ..... 4 00
Robert Mason ..... 2 00
Mrs. Mary Ann Hall ..... 4 00

REDUCTION IN GAS.

OFFICE OF THE SAN FRANCISCO GAS COMPANY, March 15, 1872.

Notice is hereby given that from and after the date the price of Gas will be reduced from Four Dollars and Seventy-Five cents ($4 75) to THREE DOLLARS AND FIFTY CENTS ($3 50) per thousand cubic feet.

JOS. O. EASTLAND, Secretary.

apl7

POLL TAX

Now Due,

AND PAYABLE AT THE

ASSESSOR'S OFFICE

OR TO A DEPUTY.

and

A. WALDTEUFEL.

IMPORTER AND DEALER IN

BOOKS, STATIONERY

AND

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS,

NOT MUSIC HALL.

FIRST STREET, ..... SAN JOSE.

AGENT FOR

STEINWAY & SONS' PIANOS,
CHICKERING & SONS' PIANOS,
BURDETT CELESTE ORGANS.

and

MASON & HAMLIN ORGANS.

Agent for the CATHOLIC PUBLICATION SOCIETY OF CATHOLIC WORLD.
YOUNG CATHOLIC.
BIBLIOGRAPHIA CATHOLICA AMERICANA.

NEW CATHOLIC BOOKS

Received once a week, both from England and the United States.

CHURCH ORNAMENTS,

Crucifixes, Rosaries, Scapulars, Water Pots, Sacred Pictures, Crosses, Chaplets, and Steel Engravings—all sold at

Prices to Defy Competition.

Orders from the East or Europe, in

French, Spanish, Italian and German

BOOKS

Imported in order, as well as Latin or any other language, at short notice, and but small commission charged.

Having correspondents on the Continent as well as in the Eastern States, who undertake to fill all wants to the ornament stamp, the engraved letter, and the name blown into the glass. Hostetter's Stomach Bitters is sold in bottles only.

Wholesale Market Report.

MONITOR OFFICE, SAN FRANCISCO, THURSDAY, May 2, 1872.

FLOUR—The demand for local consumption has been well maintained, with an improved inquiry for export, at advanced rates, since our last weekly review. We quote as follows: Extra, $5 75@6; family, and superfine, at $4@$5 12½ in sks $ 100 lbs.

WHEAT—The market has ruled firm, with a good demand, at unchanged prices. At the close we quote the range at $1 70@$1 90 ctls.

BARLEY—The demand has been only fair for this grain during the week under review, sales of ordinary coast to choice hay brewing at $1 37½@$1 60. Quotable at the close at $1 @$1 50 ctls.

OATS—The market has remained quiet, at unchanged rates, during the past week. Ordinary to choice sold at $1 45@$1 90 ctls, which is the extreme at the close.

HAY—The receipts have been fair during the past seven days, with the usual demand. Quotable at $13 @18 for ordinary wild oat to choice wheat & tun.

STRAW—Quotable at $3 @$4 50 per for cargo lots.

CORN—Market quiet at $1 @$1 05.

JOHN MEAL—Sales at $1@$1 10 @ 100 lbs from mill.

BRANS—We note a fair demand, and the following are the jobbing rates: Bays, $ 100@1 Hutter, $9 @ 10; Pea, $1 @$1 10; small White, $1 25@$1 60; Pink, $1 @$1 75 @ 100 lbs.

POTATOES—At the close we quote the range at $@$1 75 @ 100 lbs.

BRAN—Quotable at $18 @ 20 from mill.

MIDDLINGS—We quote feed at $21@$ 23 from mill.

ONIONS—We quote fair to choice at $1@$1 75 @ 100 lbs.

RYE—Quotable at $1 @ 1 10 @ 100 lbs.

BUCKWHEAT—Dull at $1 @ 1 25 @ 100 lbs.

OIL-CAKE MEAL—Selling at $30 @ 35 from mill.

Chile Beans, Red Kidney, Butter, Lima, Sugar, Split, Pea, Mexican, Blue Pod and Mustard, sgks. @ lb.

HONEY—Extracted, in kegs and comb, at $12 50@15, and Pulpit's, in 5-lb. cans, at $1 @ 1 25 @ dozen.

HIDES—We quote California dry 19½@19½c, and Oregon dry at 17½@18c @ lb.

WOOL—The receipts have been free and transactions in it pretty large during the week under review. There continues a struggle between buyer and seller, the former not being willing to accede to the demands of the latter. The Eastern markets are reported dull. Quotable at 30@35c for fine; 27@30c for fair, and 24@27c for coarse. Pulled, nothing will be arrived at for some days some understanding will be arrived at for spring clip prices, as stocks of wool are reported to be very low, and necessarily some months will be more salable, and consequently some months will be more salable, and necessarily some months will be more salable, and consequently some months will be more salable, and necessarily some months will be more salable, and consequently some months will be more salable

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

ENGLAND.

Asylums Wanted

At Marlborough assizes, the Irish Protestant, Mary Donovan, an Irish Protestant, was charged with begging with her two little boys under ten years of age. The case was adjourned as the School Board officer said he could find no vacancy for the children at present. The magistrate (Mr. Newton) remarked that there would be no difficulty in finding a school for Roman children of such a tender age. Catholic children of such a tender age. Welsh, the office keeper, said the organization of the Roman Catholics was to relieve those that were Roman Catholics. Had these children been Roman Catholics, they would have immediately received a commumication from Mr. Sheddon, secretary to the Roman Catholic Association, to the effect that the managers of certain schools in London were willing to receive the boys. Mr. Newton thought it was a hardship on Protestants that no schools for such children could be found. The prisoner would be committed for two months, and the children would be sent to the workhouse till it was ascertained if a school could not be found for them. This school could not be found for them. This is important independent testimony to the value and completeness of our industrial schools, and shows them to be worthy of support at large.—Reporter, April 13.

The Threatened Re-Popery Cry.

A glance at the subscription list of the Torbovne Defence Fund shows how some of the wealthy Protestants sympathisers are drawn from among the working-classes. As we remarked the other day, it is remarkable that almost as if people were willing to pay two or three shillings for the purchase of principle as a short cut to common sense and those concerned to it. "One who desires the claimant's food to be analyzed" pays half a crown for hinting a suspicion that the prisoner is to be poisoned with "Liebig's beef tea," while another Coleridge being Attorney-General may longer," and a contributor who thinks "that the Pope is not to be the true," pay 2s. for advertising their opinions. One man subscribes sixpence, and another a guinea, but the effort leaves his purse empty. Another is stirred by hysterical affections by sympathy for "the Wife of the Attorney-General." There are found subscribers who believe that "Judge Jeffreys and bigotry are coming in again," Perhaps the oddest contribution is from "a few young ladies at school who wish to have nothing to do with the claimant," and who back their sentiments to the extent of 15s. One is tempted to think that the few young ladies at school have to do with the case the better. That religious feeling should be worked up to such a pitch in these times is strange, and we are not surprised to find "a believer in eighty-five to seventy" putting 5s. to the list, and "a constant reader" 1s. to the account. The man of seven and sixpence, but that R. M. B., who believes the lastcomer to be a got it," "English style," may afford a five pound note in behalf of Protestantism, is rather more startling. Altogether, the list gives a curious revelation of the various drifts and currents of public opinion.—Echo.

The Lessons of Cosmos.

Dr. Hamilton Tabb, one of the physicians examined at the Old Bailey on Thursday, respecting the mental condition of O'Connor, on the question of the Queen, narrated a conversation he had with the prisoner relative to the outrage. The prisoner, who spoke freely on the subject, told him that a fortnight before the outrage the idea of shooting the Queen came into his head. He thought of it the whole day, but finally abandoned the notion on reflecting that it would not accomplish the liberation of the Fenian prisoners, in whose behalf he acted. He said he remained very restless and unwell during the next fortnight; and began quite determined to carry out his design and liberate the Fenians, he determined to draw up a paper, to cause her Majesty as she walked up the aisle of the Cathedral on Thanksgiving Day, to hold the pistol to her forehead and compel her to sign this paper. Dr. Tuke objected as to the difficulties about the aisle, and the people around and ask, and the people around him pen and ink, and how could he make her Majesty seizing him, to which he replied that there was no difficulty about how great a crime this was, he replied that his motive was good, and that it was a perfectly justifiable, and that even if killing the Queen would liberate the prisoners, he would be justified in doing so. He said he should think such a crime would be capable of justification. He had no enmity whatever against the Queen, but considered that Ireland had been most unjustly treated.

The International.

A long discussion on the International Society took place in the house of Commons last evening. The subject was introduced by Mr. Ballie Cochrane, who gave a full account of the history and principles of the institution, and stated that the order had been issued to burn Paris and massacre the hostages came from the Central Committee of the Association in London. He protested against this country being made the asylum for a society whose principles were opposed to morality and religion, and called on the Government to lend a more attentive ear to the representations of foreign governments with respect to it. Mr. Ewavick, and decidedly supported by Mr. Fawcett, Mr. Bruce declined to say that the Government intended to grant that it was a potent to Englishmen that it was a potent to Englishmen that it would be accepted by any considerable number of the English working men. He doubted the expediency of taking any active measures against the society, but would urge against the enlightenment of the working classes. The matter then dropped.—Cork Examiner, April 13.

FRANCE.

M. de Fazie.

A correspondent in Paris writes that on Good Friday M. de Fazie departed this life at the age of seventy years, after a rather sanguinary career, which he commenced at the age of seventeen as a stalwart Republican. His name of the public executioner was Heindrich, and its death was a welcome relief to the French, and its death unexpected, as he had only just returned from a protracted tour with his traveling guillotine improved and revolutionized by himself. Before the fall of the Empire he had executed several executioners in order to keep his hand in, but since the establishment of the Republic the guillotine concentrated action or economy the Republican Government office, and M. de Faria was named headsmen for all France. He built a new guillotine on improved principles, the old one having been burned in the Commune, and the new one was opposed to capital punishment, having to do duty in the provinces. Heindrich used to wash, in which he carried about La Mere Guillotine, and he always slept in the carriage with that lady by his military memory. M. de Faria was buried at the Church of Saint Louis de Saint Sacrement, being followed by M. Bogus, his private secretary, and the subordinates, the first assistant, three executioners of the provinces, and the subordinates, the entire company of the prison of La Roquette. Heindrich succeeded to the last of his duties. His family the office had the Saxons, he will be installed, and whose memoirs have been printed in part. It is supposed that M. de Fazie will succeed to the duties, and also to the emoluments of the office, which are set down at 12,000l. a year and perquisites.

M. Thiers and Queen Victoria

On Saturday night the correspondent of the Daily News wrote: The Queen is passing along the Strasbourg and Cherbourg lines to do everything in their power to make M. Thiers's incognito, and to spare him the annoyance of a Versailles reception. When the Imperial carriages were sent to different masters of stations where the Royal train was to stop, and refreshments. The Queen halts for a quarter of an hour at Villette, where the engine is to be watered. Nobody who is not connected with that station will be allowed to penetrate into it while the royal travelers are there. Notwithstanding the inclement weather, and the very early hour, two or three thousand of the folk will be gathered through Versailles, M. Thiers, as he himself said this morning, would have felt highly honored in being allowed to wait upon her Majesty. It is not true, as the Queen not giving him an opportunity to pay his respects to her. He (quite unnecessarily) has given to understand that he desires, above all things, to enjoy in traveling the ease and privacy of a person of less exalted station. He regardless that she avoided in 1858, when passing for a few hours at the British Embassy in Paris, to return a visit paid her in the course of her short stay in Paris incognito. The Queen, I heard this evening at Versailles, praises traveling in Germany and Belgium, for the simple reason that her Majesty's incognito is there likely to be respected in Paris than it would be in Brussels, where, if not "officiel," she would risk being annoyed with the kindness of relations with whom her Majesty is on affectionate terms.

A Frenchman on the Discoll Demonstrations in Manchester.

A special correspondent of the Times, writing from Paris, says: For the moment the matter by which the French press is also a great deal puzzled, and the Radical part it not a little disgusted, is the Conservative demonstration made by the workmen in Manchester on the occasion of Mr. Disraeli's visit to that town. That a working man can possibly be a Conservative is to them incredible; it is much more give to it than to accept the fact. Certainly they are a century behind the Conservatives in England, and looking forward with that practical common sense which is supposed to be the attribute of the British politician, to becoming himself the head of the Government. Even in the Debats, the most important Conservative organ in France, under ordinary circumstances in the most politically enlightened of French papers, gets confused, when it contemplates the strange anomaly, though its astonishment takes the form of a sneer at the British Conservative working man's notion of liberty. He takes out the horses of Mr. Disraeli's carriage, harnesses himself in their place, and drags him along the streets shouting, "Britons never, never will be slaves!" asks the Debats. One Frenchman who has had an interview with that lady by his military memory. M. de Faria was buried at the Church of Saint Louis de Saint Sacrement, being followed by M. Bogus, his private secretary

A WEEKLY CALENDAR.
FOR THE WEEK ENDING MAY 11.
May
12—Sunday—Sunday within the Octave of the Ascension.
13—Monday—St. Nereus, Achilleus, Domitilla and Pancratius, Martyrs.
14—Tuesday—Of the Octave. St. Boniface, Martyr.
15—Wednesday—Of the Octave of the Ascension.
16—Thursday—Ascension of our Lord.
17—Friday—St. Paschal Baylon, Confessor.
18—Saturday—Vigil of Pentecost.

THE MONITOR:
THE ONLY
Irish and Catholic Journal in California.
SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.
SATURDAY.....MAY 11, 1872.

THE CINCINNATI CONVENTION.

The Cincinnati Convention has terminated its labors with the nomination of Horace Greeley as President and B. Gratz Brown as Vice-President. Though these Liberal Republicans might have done better, and selected men more likely to lead the citizens successfully against corruption and centralization as embodied in the present administration, yet it must be admitted they have done pretty fairly. At least they have selected persons who bear a good reputation, and whose honesty of purpose [illegible] to suspicion. For this they deserve credit, and we willingly accord it to them. It remains now with the Democrats to make the Cincinnati platform a success or a failure—of this fact there scarcely can be a reasonable doubt. If they unite with the Liberal Republicans, endorse their nominees, and with them as leaders, attack radicalism boldly, Grant will never serve a second term as President of the United States.

The truth is already recognised by many of the ultra-republican papers, and they are doing their utmost to prevent any alliance between the Democrats and the Cincinnati men. Now the pressing question is not Democratic principles, or whether we will surrender a jot or tittle of our supposed rescuer. Are the Democrats prepared to wait until the nation becomes cognisant of all the facts of its peril, and escape, before making their influence felt? But in the meantime mischief may be done sufficient to impair the national prospects for half a century. American citizens should in this juncture imitate the self-sacrificing patriotism of the French people. Those who believe Thiers' government best, for the country are really few in number, nevertheless, an immense majority support it and warmly defend it from attack. Why? Because the one great thing which France has got to do is to get rid of the Germans by paying the indemnity, and all issues between parties are regarded as secondary to that. They wisely say: "Let us first clear our soil of the invaders; when that is done we may turn our attention to the demerits of M. Thiers' domestic policy." Similarly Democrats might very well exclaim, "Greeley is not exactly the man we should like for President, but as the chief thing is to oust Grant, and it can only be done under his leadership, we must offer him in the fight."

If, as has been repeated a thousand times, the sole pressing duty of Americans at this crisis is to drive out corruptionists and put honest men into office, prudence would dictate the acceptance of the Presidential nominee likely to arouse the least opposition, and likely to poll the most votes. If the forthcoming Democratic Convention ignore the Cincinnati candidates, and select nominees of their own, Greeley will undoubtedly withdraw, and the Republicans ready to support him will, to a man, fall back into the Grant party. We cannot see any cogent reason just now why he should not be accepted. He is universally acknowledged to be an honest man; he is a foe to carpet-baggery and corruption; he is in favor of a generous amnesty to the South; he will free Government from military influence; he will recognise as far as practicable States rights and check centralization; he will leave the tariff question to the decision of the Congressional elections. It would be folly to say that such a man ought not be upheld against Grant.

We know that, Democratic candidates or no Democratic candidates, Horace Greeley, if he stands his ground, will receive a very large number of Irish votes, every one of which will be a direct loss of course. Our countrymen will never forget the fact that he proved himself a warm friend to them with Ireland in her hour of need, and was ready to aid her in regaining her national independence.

A Solemn Requiem Mass will be said at St. Mary's Cathedral, on Monday at 10 o'clock, for the repose of the soul of Alice Theresa Tormey.

THE "ALABAMA" CLAIMS.

The action of our Government, with respect to the Alabama claims, from the time of the assembling of the so-called Joint High Commission for the framing of the Washington Treaty, down to the present moment when it is publicly confessed that the said treaty is not worth the paper upon which it is written, has not by any means been such as to call forth admiration or even respect from Americans who love their country. When the Washington Treaty was concluded—when congratulations were being showered upon all who took part in drawing it up—and when the British press declared that this important document inaugurated a new era in international policy—we knew that a great outcry was being intentionally made about a very small matter, and that there was no justification for the enthusiasm simulated by President Grant's flatterers.

We said so at the time, and declared emphatically that the Geneva Arbitration Conference, provided for in the treaty, would turn out an empty, if not a ludicrous farce. The question of the propriety of demanding compensation for damages occasioned indirectly by the Alabama and her consorts in piracy did not then arise, so our prophecy was not based on anything relating to them. But we were satisfied that, never, under any circumstances, would a new British Government, the embodiment of New England sentiment, go to war with Great Britain. Indeed, the radical newspapers acknowledged as much. In all real newspapers acknowledged as much. In dollars, from the "mother country;" in the same breath they assured their dear transatlantic cousins that they rescinded from the bare idea of using violence. They asked for the money in a nice affectionate way, and if it were refused—why it should do nothing to disturb the harmony and brotherly feeling that ought to prevail between children of the same race, speaking the same language. This was childish in the extreme, and yet the organs of the "party of great moral ideas" were preaching it to the people day after day.

English statesmen and politicians are not blind fools. They saw that the agitation about the Alabama claims was a mere ruse meant to throw dust in the eyes of certain American citizens who fancied that the Alabama, which fitted out the Confederate cruiser should be made pay for the mischief committed by her. We asserted that England would never pay one cent of the Alabama claims or of any other claims; that, in face of the repeated declarations of President Grant's newspapers that there was no intention of extorting payment by force, she would be exceedingly silly if she ever handed over a single cent. The time passed since we first gave expression to this opinion has only strengthened us in it, and we may repeat it to-day with a safe conscience. There is not the slightest necessity, however, in which Great Britain may pay some money, and would pay it very cheerfully to-morrow. It is this: she foreseeing in time of war of cargoes shipped in neutral ships, and hoisting a neutral, if the case, in all European quarrels, and kindly carry on the commerce of the combatants in her own vessels. So the establishment of this kind of inviolability would be worth millions and millions of dollars to her.

Now, if the Geneva Conference were to result in the definite settling of this question, she would regard America as a most precarious and tremendous advantage for her, and she would, in her generosity, make a present of ten or fifteen million dollars to the Yankee skippers who suffered from the Alabama. In this way, and only in this way, would England ever yield a dime. There was a prospect that the Conference would not settle this inviolability affair coming into view lately and, as in consequence thereof the Geneva meeting lost all interest for her, she resolved to prevent it. This is being done by means of the "consequential damages" issue. The consequential damages, and every argument on those points may be considered as having been suffered because of the presence of the Alabama on the high seas, though not actually wrought by the hands of her crew. They consist of such things as increased insurance rates, loss in depression of trade, injury by transfer of American shipping to the British flag, etc. They are perfectly fair and just, and have legal standing before all disputes. This is shown in our Courts every day of the year. If a man by an illegal act break his neighbor's leg, he is legally and equitably not only responsible for the expense of doctors' bills while the injured limb is being restored to soundness, but also for the loss of employment, etc., suffered by the victim while laid up. A momently reflection will convince any reasoning man that this principle is strictly just.

Yet England objects to having it applied in her case. She won't even allow the question as to whether any indirect damages were incurred at all to be entertained by the arbitrators. The only matter she wants to have decided is how many vessels and cargoes were burnt by the Alabama and what were they worth at the lowest figure. That amount she may hand over if the neutrality matter be satisfactorily arranged, but certainly not otherwise. The probabilities now are that the Washington Treaty and Geneva Conferences will all end in "a bottle of smoke." If they should, who will be the loser? Evidently not England.

ST. MARY'S HOSPITAL SOCIETY received a greater accession of members last month than during any one month since its establishment. Mr. Owen Breslin of Nortonville, Contra Costa county, sent in the names and subscriptions of thirty-nine new members during the month of April.

OAKLAND CATHOLIC FAIR.

The Fair in aid of the building fund of the new Catholic church, in Oakland, will be held in the building itself during the whole of next week, commencing on the 13th inst. and ending on the 18th inst. The church is now rapidly approaching completion, the entire upper portion being finished down to the arches supporting the clerestory. The roof is entirely of wood, the space between the principal rafters and the beams being filled in with open cusped panels, and the heavier timbers themselves covered with tracery and ornamented with battlements. The whole building is elaborately painted, the ceiling panels being of a deep celestine blue, spangled with stars, and bordered in the main roofs with bands of Gothic ornament in brilliant colors. The roof timbers, walls and cornices are ornamented with appropriate garlands. The roof itself is, we believe, entirely different from that of any other Catholic church on the Pacific coast, and is at once solid and elegant; and as a whole the interior, when completed, will be surpassed by none in California. A fine bell will be in attendance every evening, and will return on the 10:20 boat, thus affording San Francisco visitors an additional treat on their homeward voyage by moonlight. Father King's friends will, we have no doubt, form a numerous delegation every evening to the city of the Live Oaks, and we are equally certain that they or any one else could find no more agreeable and profitable mode of spending their leisure next week.

Publications Received.

THE "CATHOLIC REVIEW."—It affords us very much pleasure to welcome another new fellow-laborer into the field of Catholic literature. We have received two numbers of the Catholic Review recently started in Brooklyn, N. Y., and they have pleased us much. The paper is got up in right good style, and makes an excellent appearance. The reading matter is carefully selected, and the leading articles are sound and logical. We wish the Review a long and prosperous career, for we know it can do much service to the Catholic cause.

THE "IRISH SENTINEL."—The Irish Sentinel is the name of a periodical started in Quebec about three months ago. A few numbers have reached our office, and, judging from them, we are of opinion that the Sentinel will be a valuable and able contemporary. It is thoroughly Irish in sentiment and national in politics. If it does not degenerate into a mere revolutionary sheet, it will find a splendid career before it.

ROMAN RITUAL.—We have received from Kelly & Piet, Baltimore, a neatly gotten-up little volume containing excerpts from the Roman Ritual which clergymen will find extremely useful. The prayers and forms contained in it are very copious, and full of interesting matter. There are ever such ceremonies used at baptismals, burials, visiting the sick and dying, confirmations, consecrations, etc., are printed on good paper and in clear type. The volume is small, and can be carried in the pocket without inconvenience.

THE CATECHUMEN.—This is the first number of a series of little publications to be entitled "Little Catechism of Popular Devotions." It contains brief, but instructive, chapters on Scapulars; the Scapulars of the B. V. Mary; Indulgences and their Conditions; and Origin of the Five Scapulars. The price of the pamphlet is only ten cents, and it is from the press of the Cosmopolitan Printing Company, Clay street. The object of the author seems to be the extension of devotion to the holy Mother of God, and seeking to obtain the ear of the masses, his language is simple, yet clear, and thoroughly intelligible. We trust the Catechism of Popular Devotions will secure a wide circulation.

THE CATHOLIC WORLD.—The May number is not quite equal to the usual standard; nevertheless, it contains a large amount of good, wholesome reading. In particular, we would mention the translation of a sermon delivered in Vienna by Rev. Pere Bauer. We are indebted to Mr. H. C. Bateman, Catholic Bookseller, corner of Kearny and Sutter streets, for the May numbers.

JAMES CANAVAN, a well-known and respected citizen of San José, died in that city on Monday last, after a brief illness. Solemn Requiem Mass for the repose of his soul was celebrated in the Catholic church at which Rev. Father Blake preached a suitable sermon. The remains were interred in Santa Clara, and were followed to the grave by a very large number of friends in carriages, besides pedestrians from St. Joseph's Benevolent Society and the Ancient Order of Hibernians.

ST. JOSEPH'S SUNDAY SCHOOL PICNIC.—The Sunday School picnic from this church to Oakland, last Saturday, was a grand success in every particular. The steamer was furnished by Kohler's excellent band of 11 pieces. The crowning of the May Queen, the feature of the picnic, was a splendid affair, enjoyed by all. The May Pole dance, by the maids of her Majesty, was very well rendered indeed. In fact, everything was done to render the picnic what it was—a success. Next Sunday (to-morrow) the Clients of Mary will receive their usual monthly Communion at 8 o'clock Mass. The choir of the Society, assisted by protestants, will sing the Mass.

REV. FATHER CURRAN, the zealous and indefatigable pastor of Castroville and Salinas Valley, paid us a brief visit this week. Notwithstanding his arduous labors he is in the enjoyment of excellent health, and the happiness that beams in his countenance is infectious. He represents the prospects of the valley as all that could be desired.

CONFIRMATION and First Communion in the Cathedral on Pentecost Sunday, the 19th of May.

The Orphan Boys' Picnic near San Rafael.

Of those who sallied forth on May last to celebrate the old, old fête with true abandon and keen enjoyment, the orphan boys, under Father Birmingham's fostering care, were neither least nor last. Nearly three hundred strong, in new jackets, new hats, spotless linen, and shining boots, they marched with great eclat to their new band's patriotic airs. Bright little fellows they were—orderly to a degree—with glowing round brown faces and beaming happy eyes. There was nothing of the stereotyped orphan asylum look. Not an Oliver Twist was amongst them.

First came the musicians (trained from their own ranks, and handling their new instruments with the courage of veterans). Then came the larger boys, four deep, with military precision "stepping out." The The younger ones brought up the rear, jolly little fellows, laughing and mischievously as if warm mother sarms shielded them from life's ills. One burly chap of half a dozen summers had a long stick as a whole the interior, when completed, will be surpassed by none in California. A fine band will be in attendance every evening, and will return on the 10:20 boat, thus affording San Francisco visitors an additional treat on their homeward voyage by moonlight. Father King's friends will, we have no doubt, form a numerous delegation every evening to the city of the Live Oaks, and we are equally certain that they or any one else could find no more agreeable and profitable mode of spending their leisure next week.

Of course the meal was the thing. Long tables were spread with all the delicacies of the season, and the boys did ample justice to the bountiful repast. Then came the games, and the fun grew fast and furious. Foot races, sack races, jumping, wrestling, and all the other sports dear to the heart of a boy, were indulged in to the top of their bent. Then, while the shades of evening were falling, the boys, tired out, but happy as kings, were marshalled on board the steamer, and, with the band playing, and the flag flying, they steamed away for home. Father Birmingham's faithful assistants, that Catholics of every faith could find no more agreeable and profitable mode of spending their leisure next week.

MINING NEWS.

Placer mining has already commenced in Montana. The estimated gold yield for the year is from $12,000,000 to $15,000,000.

The Placer Herald says Mr. Moran has opened a very rich quartz ledge in his field. He has a patent for the land, and gyblinly a big fortune.

The Helena, M. T., Herald says: Miners and laborers of every class are very scarce; hundreds could find employment in this Territory at good wages.

The Napa Register, of May 4th, mentions the delivery at the depot of sixteen flasks of quicksilver from the Knoxville mine, and twenty flasks from the Redington.

The Nevada Transcript says a new survey is now being made for a ditch from the North Fork of the Yuba, in Sierra county, to French Corral, Nevada county. The distance is about fifty miles.

The Plumas National says that during the last three months reports of Plumas county mining property—quartz and gravel—have been made to outside capitalists to the amount of $1,233,000.

The San Diego Union says of the Owens' lead, in that county: "Tuesday last the mill of De Frene & Co., after a run of eleven days upon 150 tons of ore from the lead, cleaned up, the result being nine bars of bullion valued at $10,000; an average of $66 66 per ton.

The Grass Valley Union gives a very favorable account of mining operations in that vicinity. It mentions favorably the Knight & Gallagher, Eureka, Roberts and McCauly, Pleasure (gravel), etc. The Idaho Mill turned out $36,000 during the month of April.

The Amador Ledger of the 26th ult., describes a specimen of quartz gold ore "taken from a large, well shaped clean rock, and literally filled with heavy ribs of gold of a very fine quality. The whole weighs eight pounds and is estimated to contain four to four and a half pounds of pure gold.

The Nevada Transcript, of April 27th, says the mines at Brandy City, Sierra county, are turning out rich. Last season Clarke & Co., of Moore's Flat, purchased a gravel claim and two ditches, known as the Brandy City mines, for which they paid $72,000. Sixty days after commencement of work, this claim cleaned up $32,000.

The Amador Ledger says the mines in that section are developing well. The Sutter Creek and Lancha Plana districts are rich and the prospects for the coming season are given in every direction. A clerical sprinkling here and there from surrounding parishes. A few days of fine weather and the work is done. Then came the larger boys, four deep, with military precision "stepping out." The The younger ones brought up the rear, jolly little fellows, laughing and mischievously as if warm mother sarms shielded them from life's ills. One burly chap of half a dozen summers had a long stick as a whole the interior, when completed, will be surpassed by none in California. A fine band will be in attendance every evening, and will return on the 10:20 boat, thus affording San Francisco visitors an additional treat on their homeward voyage by moonlight. Father King's friends will, we have no doubt, form a numerous delegation every evening to the city of the Live Oaks, and we are equally certain that they or any one else could find no more agreeable and profitable mode of spending their leisure next week.

Of course the meal was the thing. Long tables were spread with all the delicacies of the season, and the boys did ample justice to the bountiful repast. Then came the games, and the fun grew fast and furious. Foot races, sack races, jumping, wrestling, and all the other sports dear to the heart of a boy, were indulged in to the top of their bent. Then, while the shades of evening were falling, the boys, tired out, but happy as kings, were marshalled on board the steamer, and, with the band playing, and the flag flying, they steamed away for home. Father Birmingham's faithful assistants, that Catholics of every faith could find no more agreeable and profitable mode of spending their leisure next week.

MISCELLANEOUS FOREIGN NEWS.

CHIEFLY CONFINED FROM CONTINENTAL JOURNALS.

A state banquet was given at the Quirinal in honor of the Prince and Princess of Wales.

M. Dupont, who presided at the banquet opened a very rich quartz ledge in his field. He has a patent for the land, and gyblinly a big fortune.

GARIBALDI.—In a letter to the Avenir Cartat, of Genoa, Garibaldi recommends the International "to watch that monarchical and clerical elements enter not among you."

A short time ago two carts, loaded apparently with old iron, drew up before the gates of Montreuil, Paris. Upon examination by customs authorities one contained 54 bombshells, and the other 11 dazzling armaments of war. The profession of poisoned the cars and their drivers.

The Archbishop of Palermo has placed the church of St. Dominic under an interdict, for having celebrated a funeral service for Mazzini, a proceeding which society regarded the Freethinkers. Mazzini died not to be reconciled with the Church, and his friends suppose our church are to be placed at their disposal to be buried.

During the last week the infidel press has been rallying the Holy Father for assisting himself from the august ceremony held in St. Peter's. In their morbid fret sies they outrage the head of the Church, and they unceasingly invoke his presence. They ridicule the august rites of the Church, and pray his Holiness to go the Pontifical duties.

The French Ministerial organ, the Republic, says the reception given by Thiers to the Bishops will assist in the solution of the question of the return of the Government to Paris. The majority in favor of the Holy See, while unsatisfied by any degree without producing any changes in the direction of the policy of Europe is only regard," would have an excellent effect both on France and the whole world. But those who "might have done much for the triumph of principle" have been stopped by some fear, "it is not known what fear." "Tis so," says the Bishop, "it is a mystery." Fourteen deputies of the Assembly have written to the Bishops to test against his views of the situation, stating that in the present critical circumstance imprudent words might have exposed the patriotism of Catholics to suspicion.

GERMAN SPEECH FRENCH.—Mulhouse has been somewhat startled through the action taken by the sub-prefect to the schoolmistresses of the city. It complains that since the introduction of the German tongue in the schools of the city certain ladies have persistently held right classes for the purpose of teaching children in French. Further, the method of teaching is chaotic and pupils can only be induced to attend the classes by the rewards in the way of sweetmeats. Thus on leaving school the children's ideas are confused and the mind stuffed with sweets, besides exhibiting a certain doubled repugnance to the German speech, where discipline is observed, and no demoralising influences practised. The Mulhousien gives the report in every detail, and says that it could hardly be got out of the jars, but threatened to turn into downright butter on the spot, and reflected equal credit on the cows of Marin county and the hearts of their owners.

Number has falsifying to-day for boys. They were free to fare regally and frolic to their hearts' content. [illegible] Filling to the brim with the good of the Lord's earth, in the fields, the flower-gemmed grass, the long shadows of the trees, the [illegible] downright butter on the spot, and reflected equal credit on the cows of Marin county and the hearts of their owners.

When a man proves too much for his side, he proves nothing. If the Globe proves anything at all here, it succeeds only in proving that Judaism is superior to Christianity—which they presented under the form of Catholicity or Protestantism. This is the inference to be drawn.

INDIANAPOLIS, May 8.—It is authoritatively announced that Senator Hendricks is not committed to the support of the Cincinnati nominees, but will be governed by the action of the Democratic National Convention.

PACIFIC COAST ITEMS.

SALT LAKE CITY, May 4.—Jno. Murphy has shipped 50,000 pounds of wool, 40,000 pounds, for 50 cents per pound.

The Sausalito Herald says a battery is to be erected by the Government on the bluff between old Saucilito and Lime Point.

Steven Durkee sold ten tons of crude bullion from Cerro Gordo, weighing thirty-five tons, were received to-day.

The opposing party of the San Diego Railroad, under Engineer Phelps, have arrived at San Bernardino, having completed the survey and permanently located the route from Los Angeles to Fort Yuma.

It is reported that Governor Stanford proposes to build the narrow gauge to Bloomfield, Sonoma county, if the people will pay $50,000 towards it, and that he will complete it within six weeks after the money is raised.

LOS ANGELES, May 2.—The Assessor has released the wool attachment at the San Pedro Railroad depot, to the value of nearly half a million dollars, and opened to furnish list of fishing of growers and amount shipped by each.

Judge A. H. Broyles, who has just returned to Yreka from holding a term of the District Court at Weaverville, says that there is more gold being taken out in that vicinity than has been before for several seasons. It is estimated that the mines of Trinity county will yield at least $1,000,000 this season.

ELKO, May 2.—Official information from the President of the Elko and White Pine Narrow-Gauge Railroad places the work of construction of that road beyond a doubt. The money to leave its being built is already placed at the disposal of the Company.

SALT LAKE CITY, May 2.—Brigham Young and a large party left this morning on an excursion yesterday, over the Utah Northern narrow-gauge railroad. The track is now laid for seven miles, and it is expected that the road will be completed to Logan by August next.

NEW YORK, May 8.—The Democratic National Executive Committee met this afternoon at the residence of Augustus Belmont. Eight States were unrepresented, including California and Oregon. A call was issued for the National Convention to be at Baltimore, July 9th, and inviting the cooperation of all conservative citizens.

PRESENTATION.—At the meeting of Division No. 4, A. O. H., held Friday evening, May 3, the retiring President, Daniel J. Sullivan, was presented with a valuable watch and chain. The present cost $100, The presentation was made by J. H. Gilmore,

VINDICATION.

One of the principal duties of this journal is to vindicate the Irish name, the Irish race, the land of Ireland, whenever, wherever, or by whom attacked or misrepresented. We care not.

Certain French writer of eminence, De [illegible] has well said that the history for three hundred years has been a conspiracy against truth, and we have had reason more than one occasion to endorse opinion. A city contemporary in its issue, has given a report of a lecture delivered at Munich by Dr. Dollinger on the English Reformation. Most of our know who this Dr. Dollinger is. was in his present position, consistently, we have nothing to do. It is to say that being a Catholic we be to be grossly wrong in his relation against the Church; but not being a priest, but merely devoted to religious questions, being a lay political journal, we do consider Dr. Dollinger to a religious authority, and we shall not be disposed to take a lay political journal, we do consider Dr. Dollinger to a religious authority, and we shall not be disposed to take as his statements, in matters [illegible] of the temporal, and in which he may be [illegible] as any other man, as some eminence. Had the gentleman been speaking of the English Reformation [illegible] himself to England, we have trespassed upon our space to [illegible] figure his speech at length in all its [illegible] and spoke of its [illegible] and tells untruths about Ireland, [illegible] to his Holiness to go to [illegible] to say to him. We will [illegible] the fact that he calls the struggle [illegible] against foreign rule in 1641, a with the remark that the use of [illegible] shows us that the Dr. has been [illegible] of English affairs for the last [illegible] and therefore a most fallacious authority. We put [illegible] with [illegible] upon such dicta, and we will take the opportunity [illegible] at the time as furnished [illegible] both on France and the whole world. But those who "might have done much for the triumph of principle" have been stopped by some fear, "it is not known what fear." "Tis so," says the Bishop, "it is a mystery." Fourteen deputies of the Assembly have written to the Bishops to test against his views of the situation, stating that in the present critical circumstance imprudent words might have exposed the patriotism of Catholics to suspicion.

GERMAN SPEECH FRENCH.

Mulhouse has been somewhat startled through the action taken by the sub-prefect to the schoolmistresses of the city. It complains that since the introduction of the German tongue in the schools of the city certain ladies have persistently held right classes for the purpose of teaching children in French. Further, the method of teaching is chaotic and pupils can only be induced to attend the classes by the rewards in the way of sweetmeats. Thus on leaving school the children's ideas are confused and the mind stuffed with sweets, besides exhibiting a certain doubled repugnance to the German speech, where discipline is observed, and no demoralising influences practised. The Mulhousien gives the report in every detail, and says that it could hardly be got out of the jars, but threatened to turn into downright butter on the spot, and reflected equal credit on the cows of Marin county and the hearts of their owners.

Number has falsifying to-day for boys. They were free to fare regally and frolic to their hearts' content. [illegible] Filling to the brim with the good of the Lord's earth, in the fields, the flower-gemmed grass, the long shadows of the trees, the [illegible] downright butter on the spot, and reflected equal credit on the cows of Marin county and the hearts of their owners.

When a man proves too much for his side, he proves nothing. If the Globe proves anything at all here, it succeeds only in proving that Judaism is superior to Christianity—which they presented under the form of Catholicity or Protestantism. This is the inference to be drawn.

INDIANAPOLIS, May 8.—It is authoritatively announced that Senator Hendricks is not committed to the support of the Cincinnati nominees, but will be governed by the action of the Democratic National Convention.

"Consequential Damages."

What insufferable blatherskites are the "Alabama" war men writing themselves down! When this great question came up, England was positively threatened by the "howling swells" comprising Grant & Co., and the editorial Bobbadils, their backers. To use the language of the New York monigerl journals that went furious on this Alabama business, "we now have England by the throat." Well, these dunghill roosters crowed most valiantly for many months. We were to "make" John Bull doubts, that and the other, or "we would take it out of his hide." We believe the columns of the New York Herald not very long ago discussed the possible appropriation of Canada by our windy Fatstaffs, who were to "do or die" in the prosecution of this settlement of the Alabama claims. Every journal in the country "went for" these claims and professed itself ready to enforce them, "consequential damages" and all, to the last extremity. But, lo! and alas! what a change has come over this boasting, windy crew of blatherskite politicians and journals! John Bull, without any excitement, sensation or perturbation, calmly and dignifiedly says: "Gentlemen, we cannot for a moment discuss the question of consequential damages, will not for a moment listen to it; you must abandon your notion of your claim in toto." Ah, ha! This is the chip on the shoulders of John Bull. He invites Brother Jonathan, or any one properly Grant's Administration, to knock that chip off by seeking to enforce the "consequential damages." What, however, is the attitude of Grant & Co., now that England has put her foot down? That fool will forward towards such fools. Cowards, because having demanded consequential damages, they dare not sustain their position. Fools, because they did not know that England could not be bullied into the payment of "consequential" claim. We see to-day not only a hasty and most disgraceful bolter-skelter, backing down from having said and sprung as it, but drop on a well-buttered iron pan, which must be hot in the oven. They may be made tender, and baked in buttered cups.

MUTTON SCOLLOPS.—Mince dressed mutton with very little fat, season lightly with pepper and salt, and put into scollop-shells about half-full. Fill up with bread crumbs with a little spoon, and brown in the oven.

MUTTON BROTH.—Take one pound of scrag of mutton, put to it three pints of water, two pints of water and a little salt; let it simmer gently for two hours; strain it through a sieve, and when cold carefully remove every particle of fat. It may be thickened with a little arrowroot or ground rice as required.

TEA CAKES.—Six teacupfuls of flour, two ounces of butter, two ounces of sugar, two tablespoonfuls of yeast, one ounce of caraway seeds: dissolve the butter in half pint of warm milk, mix the half an hour; then stir it lightly till well mixed; half fill your tins, and let them rise until quite full, then bake in a quick oven till done.

TO PICKLE MEAT IN ONE DAY.—Get a tub nearly full of rain or river water, and put two pounds of this water across it, and set the beef on them at about an inch from the water. Heap as much salt as will remain on the beef; let it remain twenty-four hours; then take the meat off and boil it, and you will find it as salty as if it had been in pickle for weeks—the water having drawn the salt completely through the beef.

Subscriptions Received.

| | |
|---|---|
| Salt Marsh (Sar.)—John O Doherty | $27 75 |
| Sacramento—P. Hopkins | 15 00 |
| Pine Grove—Patrick Dwyer | 10 00 |
| Yuba Valley—Thomas Ward | 5 00 |
| Valley Ford—Frederick Long | 5 00 |
| Centreville—Jas Hayden | 5 00 |
| Oakland—Rev. P. Crowley | 5 00 |
| Cottonwood—Rev. Thomas Casey | 5 00 |
| Santa Clara—Mrs. Thomas Rivers | 1 00 |
| Mrs. John Tobin | 1 00 |
| Austin—Rev. Father Kostverrets | 2 00 |
| Centreville—Jas. Hayden | 5 00 |
| Michael Sarry | 1 00 |

MARRIED.

MAGOHER-O'KANE.—At St. Patrick's church, in the city, May 8, by Rev. Father Gallagher, Michael Magher to Miss Alicia O'Kane, daughter of the late Mrs. James Donovan.

The ceremony was witnessed by a large number of friends of the bride and groom, who, when the ceremony was over, repaired to the residence of the bride's mother, and partook of a sumptuous supper, they can testify was done ample justice to, made ease in members of champagne, and hoped that should wife's cares ever press heavily upon them, fresh subjects would arise to remove their grief. Among those present we noticed Richard Tobin and his amiable lady, Mrs. Jane Sullivan and lady, Miss Nellie Sullivan, the Misses Regan, Miss Lizzie Hamilton, Michael, James and Arthur Hewlett, Mr. Wm. Cummings, Col. W. H. Cole, John F. Meagher, John O'Kane, E. J. Cahill and other prominent citizens. We tender our congratulations to Mr. and Mrs. Magher, and wish the happy pair their journey through life may be one of unalloyed happiness, and when their course on earth is run, and they stand on the bank of the undiscovered country, they can exclaim!

O Marriage! thou art true bliss of Paradise
That hath survived the Fall!

MURPHY-MCGRATH.—In this city, April 30, at St. Mary's Cathedral, by the Rev. Father Scanlan, Mr. Patrick Murphy to Miss Margaret McGrath, both of this city.

NOLAN-MCELEANY.—At Sonora, May 5, by Rev. J. S. McNally, Mr. James Nolan to Miss Catherine McEleany.

DIED.

HOARE.—In this city, May 3, John, beloved wife of M. H. Hoare, a native of county Roscommon, Ireland, aged 38 years.

TARPEY.—In this city, May 3, John Tarpey, a native of county Galway, Ireland, aged 36 years.

JORDON.—In this city, May 3, John Jordon, a native of Donaghmore, Parish Dunboyne, county Quivey, Ireland, aged 56 years and 10 months.

HUGHES.—In this city, May 4, Mrs. Rose E. Hughes, a native of Ireland, aged 50 years.

BYRNE.—In this city, May 4, Rose, wife of John Byrne, a native of Bandry, county Cork, Ireland, aged 40 years.

CLIFFERT.—In this city, May 4, Edward Cafferty, a native of Ireland, aged 47 years.

MCLAUGHLIN.—In this city, May 4, Michael Wallace, a native of the Parish of Kilderby, county Cork, Ireland, aged 32 years.

FITZPATRICK.—In this city, May 6, Catherine Fitzpatrick, daughter of John and Catherine Tormey Fitzpatrick, aged 2 years, 11 months and 16 days.

GARVEY.—In this city, May 7, at the residence of her daughter, Mrs. C. F. Hamilton, Mrs. Catherine Garvey, a native of Carrick-on-Suir, aged 67 years, 5 months and 7 days.

MURPHY.—In Sacramento, May 3, Denis, son of Denis and Eliza Murphy, aged 1 year and 8 months.

MCCARTY.—In Sacramento, May 3, William J. McCarty, a native of Ireland, aged 44 years.

MCNAMERY.—At Oakland, May 7, Catherine McMasonery, aged 44 years.

C. MOODY,
DRUGGIST and CHEMIST
Dealer in PURE DRUGS and MEDICINES, Toilet and Fancy Articles and Perfumery. Pure Wines and Liquors for Medical Use, Prescriptions carefully compounded.
606 and 608 KEARNY STREET,
my11 SAN FRANCISCO. tf

"GOD SAVE IRELAND!"

GRAND FESTIVAL AND PIC-NIC

OF THE

FENIAN BROTHERHOOD

TO TAKE PLACE AT

THE CITY GARDENS,

COR. OF FOLSOM AND TWELFTH STS.

ON

SUNDAY,.....MAY 12th, 1872,

Where a variety of Entertainments, Prizes, and

A GRAND BALL

WILL BE GIVEN.

TICKETS OR ADMISSION.....50 Cents.
Children.....Half Prices.

GET YOUR invitation with the price in a few days.

Bacon & Company
Formerly Towne & Bacon,
Have the largest office
5 Do the best work 5
More promptly
3 Than 3
Any other
6 Printing firm. 6
You can prove it
By giving them a Job
At the well known Office,
536 Clay Street

New Advertisements.

ROBERT FERRAL,
ATTORNEY-AT-LAW,
Rooms 30 and 36 Montgomery Block,
Corner of Montgomery and Washington sts.
my11 SAN FRANCISCO. tf

ST. MARY'S CATHEDRAL
FAIR!
A Fair to liquidate the debt of St. Mary's Cathedral will be held by the Catholic ladies of the city, at PLATT'S HALL,
COMMENCING ON THE 10th and Ending on the 19th instant.
my11

THE GRAND
CROWNING EXCURSION OF THE SEASON.
—THE—
MONTGOMERY GUARD,
OF THE
CAPT. CHAS. QUINN, Commanding,
WILL HOLD THEIR
Fourteenth Annual Excursion and Picnic
AT SAN RAFAEL,
ON SUNDAY,.....MAY 12, 1872.

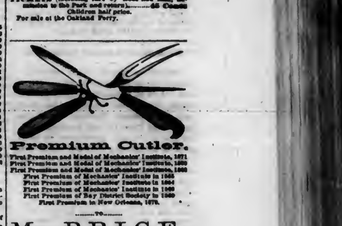
THIS COMMODIOUS STEAMER
Capt. C. Cora is engaged, and will leave Vallejo street wharf at 10 A.M. returning to the city at 7 P.M.
Tickets for the Round Trip.....$1
To be had at Lloyd, Lee's, Fenwick streets; Gagnon, Tautlan's, Third street; Regnault McNulty's, Second street; H. Seward's, Kearny street; E. F. Sargent's, Fifth street, or from any member of the Company, or at the gate on the morning of the excursion.

CAPTAIN BADGER'S
GRAND CENTRAL PARK,
OAKLAND.
These beautiful pleasure grounds are now open to the public.
Now is the season to visit
40 Minutes from San Francisco
By Boat and Rail—the safest and most pleasant Route.
Among the attractions are
A Magnificent Skating Pavilion and Ballroom,
With a floor surface of 10,000 feet. A BEAUTIFUL LAKE with Boats, Gondolas and Ornamental Barges, Shooting Galleries, Bowling Alleys, Quoits, Velocipedes, Hippodrome, Menagerie and Grounds for Games, Dancing and other Amusements. Badger's Celebrated Band will be in attendance.
GET Grand Promenade Concert on Saturday afternoon, commencing at 1 P.M.
TICKETS (including Boat by Boat and Rail, admission to the Park and Pavilion, and Dancing)—Children half price.
For sale at the Oakland Ferry.



Frederick Cutler,
Formerly of the Royal School of Mechanics' Institutes, 1859
First Premium and Medal of Mechanics' Institutes, 1860
First Premium and Medal of Mechanics' Institutes, 1861
First Premium of Mechanics' Institutes in 1862
First Premium of Mechanics' Institutes in 1863
First Premium of Mechanics' Institutes in 1869
First Premium in New Orleans, 1870

TO
M. PRICE,
FOR HOME-MADE CUTLERY,
815 KEARNY ST., bet. Pine & California,
SAN FRANCISCO.

MR. PRICE begs to inform the public, he has made to order good warranted Razors, which he can send by mail, postage paid to belong, orders promptly attended to. my11

ITALIAN UNITY.

There has lately been published in Paris a remarkable pamphlet, entitled «L'Italie Contemporaine,» at first appeared in the Messager Russe, and is written by a Russian who has studied Italian politics on the spot for eleven years. The writer is impartial, he says, and quotes chiefly from Italian authorities. He is not a Catholic, and so he cannot be considered prejudiced in favor of the Temporal Power of the Pope. He commences by saying that the vanity of Italy was never a national want, but simply an aspiration, an anti-Austrian democratic protest originally. The majority of the population in Italy were content, or at any rate indifferent, but allowed, as they still allow, a noisy minority to have its own way. An instance of this can be seen in the annexation of Naples: Cavour, in his famous dispatch to Admiral Persano, dated August 9th, Turin, writes, "And so as to make it appear that the revolutionary movement at Naples is spontaneous" and Garibaldi, as a Freemason in London, admitted that if it had not been for Admiral Mundy and the English Fleet, the Bourbons would still be on the throne of Naples. The people were derided for some time by these conquests, for they were nothing else; and the conquered provinces of Naples and Tuscany were ruined by being told, that when Italy was united, taxes would diminish and trade be trebled. But what is the actual state of things? The following financial statement will speak for itself:

Before 1859, Italy was divided into seven different states, with seven different courts, ministers, and diplomatic bodies. The annual expenses of all these governments was about 200 million francs per annum; and the taxes amounted to about the same sum. These seven states had together a debt of about two thousand five hundred millions. «Unification» (so called Italy), with the expenses of only one court, and ministry and diplomatic service, had a debt of seven thousand millions, and this, although there had come into the public treasury the sum of more than nine hundred millions in state property—from the sale of Church property, the tobacco monopoly, the alienation of the railways and other sources—and what has Italy received in return? The glory of Lissa and Custozza, and an army and navy disorganized, and in the administrative departments a chaos and demoralization without precedent.

That Rome should be the capital of Italy was even less desired by the majority in Italy than Italy should be united. In Rome itself there has never been more than a very small proportion in favor of such a step, and this minority is composed of: 1, A few of the nobility, who wish to play at politics; 2, the middle class, who wish to supplant the nobility; and 3, A few genuine Republicans, who desire to upset the throne of Italy in order more easily to overthrow Victor Emmanuel afterwards.

The author next proves this statement very fully, and proves his statement by referring to the opinions of Count Pasolini, Count Arrivabene, and Farini in 1870 from Rome, had to admit that all he had done was to assist invulnerably the ambitions of a few, and also unfairly maligned the Pope.

Well, the Jews ought to know their own religion best, yet we gravely suspect that there are not among them 100 who do not ridicule Bunsen's preface to Drummond's speeches. Surely the parable of Dives and Lazarus was based on traditional notions of hell in the Jewish Church. Yet the piece of the rich man was based, he could not pass away from it, the bosom could not pass to him, and he was "in torments." The Broad Church differs so widely from the Low Church, as the Low Church does from the High, and the three differ from each other more than the Eastern Churches do from the Western. The Church of England, therefore, is really not one Church, but three, Mr. Hardwicke's assertion to the other night, but the Prince of Wales himself—the native's hope—should prove a failing star. Not was he in the remotest concern [illegible] Royal Highness should sink from his pure Protestant height into the darkness of Popery. He was convinced that the visit which he paid the Pope had some dread significance, and that he meditated nothing less than a betrayal of himself or of the nation into the snares of Babylon. For this reason he believes that Mr. Newdegate has no cause for alarm. If Mr. Hardwicke's parliamentary friends are conscious with the Holy See, and the presence of a legate at the Court of St. James, it would hardly make use of the heir to the crown for such an embassy. Indeed the diplomatic corps and all the hangers on at the Court would be jealous of his Royal Highness if he assumed their functions and usurped their honors, to say nothing about pay—all ways a mean and trivial consideration. Mr. Newdegate is a country gentleman, a great dissent, wine country families, goes out with the hounds, and occasionally gives a dinner to the neighborhood of Pall Mall. He is not one of the great unwashed; he knows, or ought to know, what dogs, and no one member of society to another; and he might, therefore, or should have thought, that the speech produced that if the Prince of Wales were to visit Rome to ignore the Pope, he would be guilty of an unpardonable rudeness, and sacrifice for ever the able gentleman. We can Mr. Newdegate is blind to the fact that the Prince of Wales is a representative personage; that he is not the property of a man or a party, and born to reign over many millions of Catholics; that to insult the Pope would be to insult them, and to provoke their disaffection, distrust and dislike. Mr. Newdegate, therefore, must either be a fool or a hypocrite, or he must see that the Prince of Wales, when he visited Rome, was bound by all the rules of politeness and State policy, to do what he did, and that to have slighted the Holy Father, now that he is dethroned, and, in a manner, imprisoned in the midst of his enemies, would have been to add meanness to insult, and to derogate from the honor of England and the Royal family. The Ath[illegible] creed is in danger of falling out of the prayer book of the Church of England! Dr. Pusey has written a letter about it to the Guardian. It is addressed to the «Associates of the Catholic Union for Prayer." He calls attention to the "extreme gravity of the crisis" arising compared with which all the troubles which have been stirred up minds during the last twenty-three years are as nothing." Why does he hold on to a ship that is going down? Her rudder gone; her pilot flung overboard; dismasted; driven before the wind, with her timber stove in, and the devouring deep rushing into the hold!—Cath. Times, April 13.

The Bishop of Maxzoo on the New German Empire.

The Bishop of Maxzoo, Mgr. von Ketteler, has just published a little pamphlet in which he gives the reasons which indoced him to resign his seat in the Reichstag, and explaining the very fundamental principle upon which is founded the programme of the «Central Fraction" of the Assembly. Mgr. von Ketteler says three principles are:

First, the principle that religion, morality, and justice, are the only true fountains of the State, equally as of all society; Second, the principle that the Constitution of the German Empire ought to grant to each separate State the fullest independence, as regards the framing of laws and local self-government, which is compatible with the existence of the Imperial power. These principles with their legitimate consequences, were all to which the members of the «Central Fraction" were pledged. Mgr. von Ketteler clearly specified all the acts of hostility to the Empire as now constituted; but explains that his reasons for abstaining consisted in the fact that he believed that the main object of the Assembly was to draw the strings of a new constitution for the German Empire on the model of that of the North German Bund, modified by the recent understanding with the separate States. When, however, he found that no compact, Constitution or Bund at all, but that the existing Constitution of the North German Bund was to be considered as alienable by the legislature for accepting a seat in the Assembly ceased to exist; and he says "it would be impossible for me to continue to pay pastoral duties with those of a member of the Reichstag, except for a short time, and for special and purely temporal reasons." His Lordship declines in full a letter which he wrote to Bismarck on 21st of October, 1870, in which he expressed his satisfaction at the proclamation of the Empire, and his fervent hope that when the new Constitution was drawn up it might prove to be in accordance with those Christian principles which had made Prussia what she was. He especially trusted that the relations between Church and State would not be left uncertain, or for settlement by separate decrees, but that they would be established on a second basis. Finally, he hoped that the basis might be such as to secure religious liberty, leaving the unfortunate Sicilians to the tender mercies of the King of Naples. This was the pretext of upholding English influence led him to that quarrel with, and opposition upon, the Italian kingdom of Greece, which excited the execration of all nations, brought upon him and upon us a humiliating lecture from Count Nesselrode, and a great increase of Russian influence in the East of Europe; led to that breach of faith with the French Government which issued in the recall of the French Ambassador from London, and to such exasperation of feelings throughout France as probably would have led to war if their hands had not been full with the business of reorganizing their own Government after the revolution. And so we might go on with a succession of events in which the «influence of England" was put forth as an excuse for a policy of intervention, the principal effect of which was to irritate the Governments of Europe against us, and to betray the people who had trusted us.—Herald of Peace.

Clouds on the Horizon.

We are told that considerable disappointment and disquiet have been excited in Germany by the military organization at present in contemplation in France. It is added also that the movement has caused much surprise and dissatisfaction in England. Our readers may be inclined to smile, but we must tell them that this is certainly cool on the part of Germany and England. The first, having seized France in an unguarded moment, for which she waited—having succeeded in overwhelming the too confident valor which foolishly despised German perseverance and thereupon carried the flag triumphantly through France was born and bred, and he considers it his duty to exercise his functions now in power, that, as it is to the neglect of the Christian element in every Government which has been the cause of the present disturbances, more than to any other cause, that her fall is due —so, now that Germany is building to the same principle which represents the principles of the Revolution, her rulers have need to fear for her future. "Our arms have vanquished France," he says, "but French Revolutionary principles are everywhere rising up." "Before the anti-Christ does from the High, and the three differ from each other more than the Eastern Churches do from the Western. The Church of England, therefore, is really not one Church, but three, Mr. Hardwicke's assertion to the other night, but the Prince of Wales himself—the native's hope—should prove a failing star. Not was he in the remotest concern [illegible] Royal Highness should sink from his pure Protestant height into the darkness of Popery. He was convinced that the visit which he paid the Pope had some dread significance, and that he meditated nothing less than a betrayal of himself or of the nation into the snares of Babylon. For this reason he believes that Mr. Newdegate has no cause for alarm. If Mr. Hardwicke's parliamentary friends are conscious with the Holy See, and the presence of a legate at the Court of St. James, it would hardly make use of the heir to the crown for such an embassy. Indeed the diplomatic corps and all the hangers on at the Court would be jealous of his Royal Highness if he assumed their functions and usurped their honors, to say nothing about pay—all ways a mean and trivial consideration. Mr. Newdegate is a country gentleman, a great dissent, wine country families, goes out with the hounds, and occasionally gives a dinner to the neighborhood of Pall Mall. He is not one of the great unwashed; he knows, or ought to know, what dogs, and no one member of society to another; and he might, therefore, or should have thought, that the speech produced that if the Prince of Wales were to visit Rome to ignore the Pope, he would be guilty of an unpardonable rudeness, and sacrifice for ever the able gentleman. We can Mr. Newdegate is blind to the fact that the Prince of Wales is a representative personage; that he is not the property of a man or a party, and born to reign over many millions of Catholics; that to insult the Pope would be to insult them, and to provoke their disaffection, distrust and dislike. Mr. Newdegate, therefore, must either be a fool or a hypocrite, or he must see that the Prince of Wales, when he visited Rome, was bound by all the rules of politeness and State policy, to do what he did, and that to have slighted the Holy Father, now that he is dethroned, and, in a manner, imprisoned in the midst of his enemies, would have been to add meanness to insult, and to derogate from the honor of England and the Royal family. The Ath[illegible] creed is in danger of falling out of

"English Influence."

"English influence abroad" was one of the conjoining phrases with which Lord Palmerston so long deluded his countrymen; and the idea it embodies, if it can be said to embody any idea, formed the corner stone of that meddling and meddlesome policy by which, without in any appreciable degree affecting the current of European affairs, he made the name of England hated all over the world. No better way could be taken to bring into contempt this vile phrase than by tracing its effects when reduced to action by Lord Palmerston. We have not the time or space at present to enter very fully into the subject in its illustrative facts. In 1860 we had the influence of England to form the Quadruple Treaty, the only effect of which was to deliver Syria over to a much worse ruler than we had to depose, and to bring us to the very verge of a war with France, from which we were only saved probably by the timely succession of Lord Aberdeen to office. In 1849 he used the influence of England to pick another quarrel with Rome and to frustrate the consummation of the Spanish marriages, on which the events that immediately followed formed so bitter a practical comment. In 1846 he used the influence of England to encourage an insurrection in Sicily, and then withdrew his protection, leaving the unfortunate Sicilians to the tender mercies of the King of Naples. This was the pretext of upholding English influence led him to that quarrel with, and opposition upon, the Italian kingdom of Greece, which excited the execration of all nations, brought upon him and upon us a humiliating lecture from Count Nesselrode, and a great increase of Russian influence in the East of Europe; led to that breach of faith with the French Government which issued in the recall of the French Ambassador from London, and to such exasperation of feelings throughout France as probably

Clouds on the Horizon.

We are told that considerable disappointment and disquiet have been excited in Germany by the military organization at present in contemplation in France. It is added also that the movement has caused much surprise and dissatisfaction in England. Our readers may be inclined to smile, but we must tell them that this is certainly cool on the part of Germany and England. The first, having seized France in an unguarded moment, for which she waited—having succeeded in overwhelming the too confident valor which foolishly despised German perseverance and thereupon carried the flag triumphantly through France was born and bred, and he considers it his duty to exercise his functions now in power, that, as it is to the neglect of the Christian element in every Government which has been the cause of the present disturbances, more than to any other cause, that her fall is due —so, now that Germany is building to the same principle which represents the principles of the Revolution, her rulers have need to fear for her future. "Our arms have vanquished France," he says, "but French Revolutionary principles are everywhere rising up." "Before the anti-Christ does from the High, and the three differ from each other more than the Eastern Churches do from the Western. The Church of England, therefore, is really not one Church, but three, Mr. Hardwicke's assertion to the other night, but the Prince of Wales himself—the native's hope—should prove a failing star. Not was he in the remotest concern [illegible] Royal Highness should sink from his pure Protestant height into the darkness of Popery. He was convinced that the visit which he paid the Pope had some dread significance, and that he meditated nothing less than a betrayal of himself or of the nation into the snares of Babylon. For this reason he believes that Mr. Newdegate has no cause for alarm. If Mr. Hardwicke's parliamentary friends are conscious with the Holy See, and the presence of a legate at the Court of St. James, it would hardly make use of the heir to the crown for such an embassy. Indeed the diplomatic corps and all the hangers on at the Court would be jealous of his Royal Highness if he assumed their functions and usurped their honors, to say nothing about pay—all ways a mean and trivial consideration. Mr. Newdegate is a country gentleman, a great dissent, wine country families, goes out with the hounds, and occasionally gives a dinner to the neighborhood of Pall Mall. He is not one of the great unwashed; he knows, or ought to know, what dogs, and no one member of society to another; and he might, therefore, or should have thought, that the speech produced that if the Prince of Wales were to visit Rome to ignore the Pope, he would be guilty of an unpardonable rudeness, and sacrifice for ever the able gentleman. We can Mr. Newdegate is blind to the fact that the Prince of Wales is a representative personage; that he is not the property of a man or a party, and born to reign over many millions of Catholics; that to insult the Pope would be to insult them, and to provoke their disaffection, distrust and dislike. Mr. Newdegate, therefore, must either be a fool or a hypocrite, or he must see that the Prince of Wales, when he visited Rome, was bound by all the rules of politeness and State policy, to do what he did, and that to have slighted the Holy Father, now that he is dethroned, and, in a manner, imprisoned in the midst of his enemies, would have been to add meanness to insult, and to derogate from the honor of England and the Royal family. The Ath[illegible] creed is in danger of falling out of ### Sparks.

There has lately been published in Paris a remarkable pamphlet, entitled «L'Italie Contemporaine,» at first appeared in the Messager Russe, and is written by a Russian who has studied Italian politics on the spot for eleven years. The writer is impartial, he says, and quotes chiefly from Italian authorities. He is not a Catholic, and so he cannot be considered prejudiced in favor of the Temporal Power of the Pope. He commences by saying that the vanity of Italy was never a national want, but simply an aspiration, an anti-Austrian democratic protest originally. The majority of the population in Italy were content, or at any rate indifferent, but allowed, as they still allow, a noisy minority to have its own way. An instance of this can be seen in the annexation of Naples: Cavour, in his famous dispatch to Admiral Persano, dated August 9th, Turin, writes, "And so as to make it appear that the revolutionary movement at Naples is spontaneous" and Garibaldi, as a Freemason in London, admitted that if it had not been for Admiral Mundy and the English Fleet, the Bourbons would still be on the throne of Naples. The people were derided for some time by these conquests, for they were nothing else; and the conquered provinces of Naples and Tuscany were ruined by being told, that when Italy was united, taxes would diminish and trade be trebled. But what is the actual state of things? The following financial statement will speak for itself:

Before 1859, Italy was divided into seven different states, with seven different courts, ministers, and diplomatic bodies. The annual expenses of all these governments was about 200 million francs per annum; and the taxes amounted to about the same sum. These seven states had together a debt of about two thousand five hundred millions. «Unification» (so called Italy), with the expenses of only one court, and ministry and diplomatic service, had a debt of seven thousand millions, and this, although there had come into the public treasury the sum of more than nine hundred millions in state property—from the sale of Church property, the tobacco monopoly, the alienation of the railways and other sources—and what has Italy received in return? The glory of Lissa and Custozza, and an army and navy disorganized, and in the administrative departments a chaos and demoralization without precedent.

That Rome should be the capital of Italy was even less desired by the majority in Italy than Italy should be united. In Rome itself there has never been more than a very small proportion in favor of such a step, and this minority is composed of: 1, A few of the nobility, who wish to play at politics; 2, the middle class, who wish to supplant the nobility; and 3, A few genuine Republicans, who desire to upset the throne of Italy in order more easily to overthrow Victor Emmanuel afterwards.

The author next proves this statement very fully, and proves his statement by referring to the opinions of Count Pasolini, Count Arrivabene, and Farini in 1870 from Rome, had to admit that all he had done was to assist invulnerably the ambitions of a few, and also unfairly maligned the Pope.

Well, the Jews ought to know their own religion best, yet we gravely suspect that there are not among them 100 who do not ridicule Bunsen's preface to Drummond's speeches. Surely the parable of Dives and Lazarus was based on traditional notions of hell in the Jewish Church. Yet the piece of the rich man was based, he could not pass away from it, the bosom could not pass to him, and he was "in torments." The Broad Church differs so widely from the Low Church, as the Low Church does from the High, and the three differ from each other more than the Eastern Churches do from the Western. The Church of England, therefore, is really not one Church, but three, Mr. Hardwicke's assertion to the other night, but the Prince of Wales himself—the native's hope—should prove a failing star. Not was he in the remotest concern [illegible] Royal Highness should sink from his pure Protestant height into the darkness of Popery. He was convinced that the visit which he paid the Pope had some dread significance, and that he meditated nothing less than a betrayal of himself or of the nation into the snares of Babylon. For this reason he believes that Mr. Newdegate has no cause for alarm. If Mr. Hardwicke's parliamentary friends are conscious with the Holy See, and the presence of a legate at the Court of St. James, it would hardly make use of the heir to the crown for such an embassy. Indeed the diplomatic corps and all the hangers on at the Court would be jealous of his Royal Highness if he assumed their functions and usurped their honors, to say nothing about pay—all ways a mean and trivial consideration. Mr. Newdegate is a country gentleman, a great dissent, wine country families, goes out with the hounds, and occasionally gives a dinner to the neighborhood of Pall Mall. He is not one of the great unwashed; he knows, or ought to know, what dogs, and no one member of society to another; and he might, therefore, or should have thought, that the speech produced that if the Prince of Wales were to visit Rome to ignore the Pope, he would be guilty of an unpardonable rudeness, and sacrifice for ever the able gentleman. We can Mr. Newdegate is blind to the fact that the Prince of Wales is a representative personage; that he is not the property of a man or a party, and born to reign over many millions of Catholics; that to insult the Pope would be to insult them, and to provoke their disaffection, distrust and dislike. Mr. Newdegate, therefore, must either be a fool or a hypocrite, or he must see that the Prince of Wales, when he visited Rome, was bound by all the rules of politeness and State policy, to do what he did, and that to have slighted the Holy Father, now that he is dethroned, and, in a manner, imprisoned in the midst of his enemies, would have been to add meanness to insult, and to derogate from the honor of England and the Royal family. The Ath[illegible] creed is in danger of falling out of

Clouds on the Horizon.

We are told that considerable disappointment and disquiet have been excited in Germany by the military organization at present in contemplation in France. It is added also that the movement has caused much surprise and dissatisfaction in England. Our readers may be inclined to smile, but we must tell them that this is certainly cool on the part of Germany and England. The first, having seized France in an unguarded moment, for which she waited—having succeeded in overwhelming the too confident valor which foolishly despised German perseverance and thereupon carried the flag triumphantly through France was born and bred, and he considers it his duty to exercise his functions now in power, that, as it is to the neglect of the Christian element in every Government which has been the cause of the present disturbances, more than to any other cause, that her fall is due —so, now that Germany is building to the same principle which represents the principles of the Revolution, her rulers have need to fear for her future. "Our arms have vanquished France," he says, "but French Revolutionary principles are everywhere rising up." "Before the anti-Christ does from the High, and the three differ from each other more than the Eastern Churches do from the Western. The Church of England, therefore, is really not one Church, but three, Mr. Hardwicke's assertion to the other night, but the Prince of Wales himself—the native's hope—should prove a failing star. Not was he in the remotest concern [illegible] Royal Highness should sink from his pure Protestant height into the darkness of Popery. He was convinced that the visit which he paid the Pope had some dread significance, and that he meditated nothing less than a betrayal of himself or of the nation into the snares of Babylon. For this reason he believes that Mr. Newdegate has no cause for alarm. If Mr. Hardwicke's parliamentary friends are conscious with the Holy See, and the presence of a legate at the Court of St. James, it would hardly make use of the heir to the crown for such an embassy. Indeed the diplomatic corps and all the hangers on at the Court would be jealous of his Royal Highness if he assumed their functions and usurped their honors, to say nothing about pay—all ways a mean and trivial consideration. Mr. Newdegate is a country gentleman, a great dissent, wine country families, goes out with the hounds, and occasionally gives a dinner to the neighborhood of Pall Mall. He is not one of the great unwashed; he knows, or ought to know, what dogs, and no one member of society to another; and he might, therefore, or should have thought, that the speech produced that if the Prince of Wales were to visit Rome to ignore the Pope, he would be guilty of an unpardonable rudeness, and sacrifice for ever the able gentleman. We can Mr. Newdegate is blind to the fact that the Prince of Wales is a representative personage; that he is not the property of a man or a party, and born to reign over many millions of Catholics; that to insult the Pope would be to insult them, and to provoke their disaffection, distrust and dislike. Mr. Newdegate, therefore, must either be a fool or a hypocrite, or he must see that the Prince of Wales, when he visited Rome, was bound by all the rules of politeness and State policy, to do what he did, and that to have slighted the Holy Father, now that he is dethroned, and, in a manner, imprisoned in the midst of his enemies, would have been to add meanness to insult, and to derogate from the honor of England and the Royal family. The Ath[illegible] creed is in danger of falling out of

HOTELS.

Removal.

THE SECOND STREET HOUSE
Has Removed to 115 Second street,
Northeast corner of Minna. Purchased Lunch to let with all instant search, on the most reasonable terms. Call and examine.
oct29 Proprietor.

CENTRAL HOTEL,
615 AND 616 SANSOME STREET,
Between Broadway and Pacific.....San Francisco

THIS NEW, LARGE AND COMMODIOUS HOUSE, thoroughly renovated by the proprietor, M. FARRELL, late proprietor of the Brooklyn House. Where he will be happy to receive his numerous friends and the public in general. Thankful for past favors, he respectfully solicits a continuance of their future patronage.
There is a fire-proof safe in the House, where money and valuables can be kept at the risk of the proprietor.
The Central House Coach will be at each car depot and steamboat landing, to convey passengers to the House free of cost.
Price of board to suit the times.
Special landing for their friends in the States, or the interior, will please notify M. FARRELL, and he will attend to them on their arrival, and forward them to their friends with due care, and take very much trouble.
The strictest attention will be paid to the comfort of the patrons of this House.
MICHAEL FARRELL, Proprietor.

FRANKLIN HOTEL,
616 AND 618 PACIFIC STREET,
Between Sansome and Montgomery...San Francisco.
HUGH CUNRAN.....Proprietor.
Board, per week.....$7 00
Board and lodging, single room.....$8 00
Single Meals.....50 cents
Lodging, 50 cents.
Restaurant attached to the House.
Passengers and baggage conveyed to and from the House free of charge. Notice to the boats and cars.
A City Directory, and all the papers of the day.

RAILROAD HOUSE,
Corner of Sansome and Pacific streets, San Francisco.
IS NOW OPENED BY
P. CASSERLY,
(Late of the Tremont House; where he will be happy to meet his friends and the public in general.
The House is thoroughly renovated and fitted up in the latest improvements, and is now open for the reception of guests. Every single or in suite for families.
The strictest attention will be paid to the comfort and convenience of boarders.
Board and Lodging per week.....$5 to $7
Board by a fire-proof safe in the House, where money and valuables can be kept at the risk of the owner.
Self-Pay Coach to the House.
P. CASSERLY, Proprietor.

CITY HOTEL,
K street, between Third and Fourth,
Sacramento.
THIS HOUSE IS CENTRALLY LOCATED. THE rooms are commodious, well ventilated and handsomely furnished. Purchased Lunch to let with all instant search, on the most reasonable terms.
Board and lodging, per week.....$5 to $7 50
Board and lodging, per month.....$18 to $30
Single Meals.....50 cents
Lodging.....50 cents
P. CUNNAN, Proprietor.

CALIFORNIA BUILDING and LOAN SOCIETY,
In Bankruptcy.
NOTICE OF SECOND DIVIDEND.
NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN THAT A SECOND DIVIDEND OF TEN PER CENT. HAS BEEN DECLARED BY THE UNDERSIGNED, ASSIGNEE OF THE ESTATE OF THE CALIFORNIA BUILDING and Loan Society, adjudged bankrupt by the District Court of the United States for the District of California, on the petition of the Commissioner of Credits, on the 3d day of January, A. D. 1872, and that the same will be paid on demand, at my office, No. 27 City Hall, William Alvord, Assignee.
LEVI ROSENKER,
Assignee City and County of San Francisco.
April 10th, 1872. ap13

Thirty-Two large Double-Column Papers every Month for Only One Dollar a Year.

THE YOUNG CRUSADER,
AN ILLUSTRATED
CATHOLIC MONTHLY MAGAZINE
FOR CHOICE READING
AND
Good Pictures.
Read with interest by all, and with special delight and profit by the children of the Catholic Sunday School. The Crusader is now in its fourth year, and its success is due to the fact that the Sample Copies free to all who ask for them. Back Numbers always on hand.
Handsome Premiums are offered to those who get up Clubs.
A Liberal Discount to Sunday Schools.
Only a dollar (one year's subscription) by mail, addressed to the publisher,
REV. WILLIAM RYAN, Boston, Mass.

EBERHART & LACHMAN,
MANUFACTURERS OF
CALIFORNIA SPARKLING WINES.
SWEET AND DRY CHAMPAGNES,
Sparkling Hock and Catawba. Also, White and Claret Wine (all kinds) and all kinds of Brandies, Monopole, Madeira, Port, Sherry, Rock, Muscat, Vineyard, Riesling, Sweet and Dry Catawba, etc., Grape Brandies, 4 to 5 years old. All our Wines and Brandies are made exclusively from Mountain Grapes, principal depot, corner of First and Market streets, San Francisco.

NEVER USE THE KNIFE!
DR. KLINE & LINDLEY, 201 Arch st., Philadelphia; Dr. Dalton, 218 West 23d st., Cincinnati; Dr. Hunt, 187 Genesee, Utica, N. Y.; Dr. Mitchell, 81 Niagara st., Buffalo, N. Y.; Dr. Brumhall, 42 W. Court st., Rome, N. Y.; Dr. Kinsley, 3 Lowell st., Portland, Me.; Dr. Kendall, Franklin, Pa.; Dr. Dickey, of Jackson, Mich.; are making surgical operations for CANCERS, TUMORS AND ULCERS.
No Knife; no Caustic Medicines; no Blood; Pain or Risk. For particulars call on or address either of the above. ap20

POLL TAX
Now Due,
AND PAYABLE AT THE ASSESSOR'S OFFICE
OR TO A DEPUTY.
ap6

5000 AGENTS WANTED. Samples sent free by mail, with terms to clear from $5 to $10 a day. Two entirely new articles, saleable as flour. Address N. H. WHITE, Newark, New Jersey. ap27 1w

GROCERIES, WINES AND LIQUORS.

WILLIAM B. DOLAN,
145 Third Street.....San Francisco,
Importer and Dealer (Wholesale and Retail) in French Wines and Brandies,
—AND—
Irish Whiskey.
Imported direct from Ireland.

HE HAS ALSO ON HAND A LARGE AS-sortment of California Wines of every description, which he will dispose of, in bulk or in case, for the convenience of families.
All orders left at the store, 145 Third street, will be promptly attended to, and delivered free of charge in any part of the city. ly15

JOHN FLANAGAN & CO.,
Importers and Jobbers of
Fine Brandies, Wines, Liquors, etc.,
Fire proof Store, 324 First street, bet. Clay & Washington
San Francisco.

KELLY & EGAN,
IMPORTERS AND DEALERS IN
FINE WINES AND LIQUORS
No. 604 Battery street,
Near Jackson. San Francisco

E. Commined Co.
(Successors to P. Filsy & Co.)
WHOLESALE LIQUOR MERCHANTS
No. 605 Front street.
my6

A. P. HOTALING & CO.,
IMPORTERS AND DEALERS IN FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC
WINES AND LIQUORS
AGENTS FOR THE J. H. CUTTER
OLD BOURBON WHISKY,
C. P. HOORMAN & CO., DISTILLERS,
LOUISVILLE, KENTUCKY.

OWING TO THE DESERVED REPUTATION of this celebrated brand of Whisky, counterfeited in every form, at nearly every bar and store, regardless of the consequences, we have adopted a device to protect the public from imposition. Every bottle of the genuine will have a fac-simile of the signature of J. H. CUTTER, and the autographing of the name of the proprietors, C. P. HOORMAN & CO., DISTILLERS, on the back label. Without this none are genuine. Purchasers will please see that this is the only genuine Bourbon Whisky sold by us, and refuse to accept any substitute for the same on the part of dealers. Agents for the same on the Pacific Coast, A. P. HOTALING & CO., 313 and 315 Jackson street, San Francisco.
P. J. MCMAHON. DAN KEEFE.
McMAHON & KEEFFE
SALOON,
318 Bush Street,
Opposite the Alhambra Theatre, where they will be happy to see their former patrons and the general public. By family use they have bottled specially some of the finest Whiskies ever imported into this market, as mentioned a superior article of J. P. CUTTER'S celebrated make. Also, Hennessy's Brandy, imported for his use at an advanced price. Also, Kinahan's LL Whisky, Scotch Whisky, Jamison's Whisky, Cognac brandy, and also a superior brand of CALIFORNIA WINE. Also, Lager Beer, on draught, by the glass or in bottles. Give us a call.
P. J. MCMAHON & KEEFFE.

CITY SALOON,
K street, between Third and Fourth,
Sacramento.
(adjoining CITY HOTEL)
P. A. QUAID.....Proprietor.

PAINTS, OILS, ETC.

SULLIVAN, KELLY & CO.,
Northwest corner Pine and Front Sts.,
Where they offer for sale
THE LARGEST STOCK OF PAINTS,
OILS,
GLASS,
ETC., ETC., ON THE PACIFIC COAST,
AT THE LOWEST MARKET RATES.
101, 103 and 105 FRONT STREET,
and 110 PINE STREET. tf

DONNOLLY'S CALIFORNIA
PREMIUM
YEAST POWDER.
ANOTHER GREAT REDUCTION.
Only $16 per gross in lots to the trade
THIS SUPERIOR YEAST POWDER has to my equal in the market. Try it.
USE DONNOLLY'S YEAST POWDER.
The best and cheapest yeast offered to the public! Made fresh every day by the Factory, 121 Front st., San Francisco, Cal.
D. CALLAGHAN, Proprietor.

TROY BELLS.
Old Established Troy Bell Foundry,
TROY, N. Y. (Established 1825.)
A LARGE ASSORTMENT OF CHURCH, Academy, Factory, and other Bells constantly on hand, and made to order. Made of genuine Bell Metal (copper and tin). Have the Improved Mounting, the best and most durable ever used. All Bells warranted satisfactory.
Large Illustrated Catalogues sent free upon application. E. A. & G. H. MENEELY, Troy, N. Y., or 297 and 299 Broadway, New York City.

SMALL FRUIT INSTRUCTOR.
Now Ready.
Fifth four pages, price 25 cents, post-paid. Tells how to grow and grow all kinds of Small Fruit successfully. Also, how to grow Asparagus, Rhubarb, Horse Radish, Henry Ward Beecher, Judge J. S. Harris, of the, and others, say it is one of the most complete and practical books ever published. Sent Free List of Plants, Retail or Wholesale. Prices low. All applications addressed to or PURDY & HANCE, 865 Bush street, San Francisco.
A. M. PURDY, Palmyra, N.Y.
F. S.—Specimen copies of the Fruit Recorder and Cottage Gardener, a dollar monthly, A. M. Purdy, editor. Free to all applicants. It speaks for itself. To any one sending a subscription.
ap13

AVOID QUACKS.—A VICTIM OF EARLY indiscretion, causing nervous debility, premature decay, having tried in vain every advertised remedy, has discovered a simple means of self-cure, which he will send free to his fellow sufferers. J. H. REAVES, 78 Nassau street, New York. ap18 1y

EDUCATIONAL.

COLLEGE OF NOTRE DAME,
SAN JOSE, CALIFORNIA.
YOUNG LADIES' INSTITUTE.
THIS INSTITUTION, WHICH IS INCORporated according to the laws of the State, is prepared to confer academical honors, will open the Twenty-fifth Annual Session on MONDAY, August 11, 1871. The course of instruction embraces the branches of a thorough education.
TERMS:
Entrance, to be paid but once.....$10 00
Board and Tuition, per quarter.....50 00
Washing, per quarter.....10 00
Physicians' fees (unless it may be preferred to pay the bills in case of sickness) per quarter.....2 50
Piano, Vocal Music, Drawing and Painting, extra charges, but there is no extra charge for any of the French, Spanish or German Languages, nor for Bowing and Fancy Needle Work.
Payments are required to be made half-yearly, in advance, and no deduction will be made for pupils not to be present at the opening of the session.

SAINT MARY'S COLLEGE,
SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.
Conducted by the Christian Brothers.
Offers every facility for acquiring a thorough Education, whether Classical, Scientific or Commercial.
Those who complete the Classical Course receive the degree of A. B.; the Scientific, B. S.; the Commercial, Master of Accounts.
The Commercial Course has been established for the convenience of those who wish to acquire a knowledge of Book-keeping, and the Commercial Forms in use among business men.
While proper care is bestowed upon every pupil, special attention is given to those who require special attention. The Rudiments of Music are taught free of charge. Vocal and Instrumental Music are discussed and practiced in the Musical Academy.
TERMS PER SCHOLASTIC YEAR.
(Payable half-yearly in advance).
Board, Tuition, Washing and Mending of Linen.....$250 00
Entrance Fee, to be paid only once.....10 00
Physician's Fee.....5 00
Bed and Bedding.....20 00
Junior class.....
Senior class.....
Music, vocal and instrumental; drawing and painting, each.....
Languages, each.....
Graduation Fee.....
Studies will be resumed on the 1st of August.
REV. B. JUSTIN, Director.

DAY SCHOOLS
FOR Boys and Girls.
THE SISTERS OF MERCY HAVE JUST opened their Academy, Powell Street, between Bryant, where they intend to receive pupils of the following classes:
1. Boys' School is being prepared on Second street, between Bryant and Brannan streets.
2. Girls' School will be opened on the 15th of August, between Mission and Howard.
MARY E. RUSSELL,
Superior of Sisters of Mercy.
San Francisco, May 27, 1871.

ST. VINCENT'S COLLEGE,
LOS ANGELES, CAL.
DEGREES CONFERRED.
Rev. JAMES McGILL, C.M.

FRANCISCAN COLLEGE,
SANTA BARBARA.....CAL.
THE FIFTH SESSION OF THIS INSTITUTION will commence on the 15th of August next. Pupils will be received at any time during the session. Terms, including Bed and Bedding, Washing, Medical Attendance, Use of Library, Stationery, Text Books, and Tuition in the French, Spanish or German Languages, not for Boarding and Fancy Needle Work, $300 per annum. Payments are required to be made half-yearly, in advance, and no deduction will be made for pupils not to be present at the opening of the session.
TERMS.
Entrance Fee (to be paid but once).....$10
Washing, per quarter.....$12 50
Physicians' fees (unless it may be preferred to pay the bills in case of sickness) per quarter.....2 50
Piano, Vocal Music, Drawing and Painting, extra charges, but there is no extra charge for any of the French, Spanish or German Languages, nor for Bowing and Fancy Needle Work.
Payments are required to be made half-yearly, in advance, and no deduction will be made for pupils not to be present at the opening of the session.
REV. J. J. O'KEEFE,
President.

ST. JOSEPH'S COLLEGE,
Rohnerville, Humboldt County.
CONDUCTED BY THE FRIERS OF THE CONGREGATION OF THE HOLY CROSS.
THIS INSTITUTION IS SITUATED IN one of the most delightful and healthy parts of the State, combining all the advantages of the country with easy access to the city.
The course of instruction embraces all the branches of a thorough English education, the Languages, etc.
TERMS
(Invariably half-yearly in advance).
Board and Tuition, including Bed and Bedding, per annum.....$250 00
Washing, use of instrument, per month.....2 50
Doctor, per month.....1 00
Use of Library.....
Use of Piano.....
Use of Violin.....
Use of Guitar, per month.....
For further particulars apply to
BROTHERS OF CHARITY,
Santa Rosa.
ly26

ST. VINCENT'S COLLEGE,
LOS ANGELES, CAL.
DEGREES CONFERRED.
Rev. JAMES McGILL, C.M.

FRANCISCAN COLLEGE,
SANTA BARBARA.....CAL.
THE FIFTH SESSION OF THIS INSTITUTION will commence on the 15th of August next. Pupils will be received at any time during the session. Terms, including Bed and Bedding, Washing, Medical Attendance, Use of Library, Stationery, Text Books, and Tuition in the French, Spanish or German Languages, not for Boarding and Fancy Needle Work, $300 per annum. Payments are required to be made half-yearly, in advance, and no deduction will be made for pupils not to be present at the opening of the session.
TERMS.
Entrance Fee (to be paid but once).....$10
Washing, per quarter.....$12 50
Physicians' fees (unless it may be preferred to pay the bills in case of sickness) per quarter.....2 50
Piano, Vocal Music, Drawing and Painting, extra charges, but there is no extra charge for any of the French, Spanish or German Languages, nor for Bowing and Fancy Needle Work.
Payments are required to be made half-yearly, in advance, and no deduction will be made for pupils not to be present at the opening of the session.
REV. J. J. O'KEEFE,
President.

ST. JOSEP

THE MONSTER DIAMOND.

A Tale of the Penal Colony of West Australia.

BY JOHN BOYLE O'REILLY.

"I'll have it, I tell you! Curse you—there
The long knife glittered, was sheathed, and was bare
The angry swaggerer, and then, pitiful
And fading, he uttered a frightened yell!
"Oh, I'm done for! Oh, Christ! Oh, Lord! Oh, God!
And tried to put from him the hand he had grasped
And could not put from him. "Oh, Lord! Oh, God!
I'll have it, I will you, or leave you like Where is it?" The angry grew weak, but still His brave face confused with a desperate will
"Where is it?" he heard; and the red knife's drip
In his quivering hand, fell down on his feet.
"Will you give it?" "Never!" A curse—the knife
Was raised and buried

Then closed the life
Of Samuel Jones, where it—Number Ten"
On his Tribune's books, as of all the men
In the Western Penal, and where it must Wait for another to hear and trust.

He carried it with him in here the prize
In a pouch of leather; the starving eyes
Looked down on it, but the number's gleam
Was mimic and joy for the haunted dream.

So the years rolled on, while the murderer's mind
Was torn as a fiend's corse, from blood stained out,
A trap of escape from the blood stained out,
And the terrible image of the penal hell.

But this was a part of the diamond's curse,
The hell that was here; and the other hell
Till the passing wrecker in his fierce unrest
Would relish the quest as he lived, as the thirst
And seeking, career, with ache and ease,
Or method of crime and pleasure, or both
That was only a means—for he could not tell,
Till he reached the end, what he meant to sell
Of his wealth; so he lived for jewels and hate,
As he said, and he died for the one and the gem.

And then did he draw near the end of his race,
With a firm hand steadie and a keener head here,
And a piteous look, as if asking for grace
Of the falchioned form with both feet and hand
Was flung to his misery! shunned, sheltered,
Till the poor wretch seemed to be left to his curse,
And he thought that t'en death could bring nothing
Than this

Then the gaunt figure appeared in the diamond's (so)
His eyes, his very ghost and the ghost of his mate.

So he turned one day from the haunts of man,
And their frightened faces; an old man then
Was a stranger still with his face bowed and
And a lower ancient deep with the word—"Despair."
To the northern limits of Western Land
Where the sea-line bounds the sky, and the sand
Is the only home of the restless eyes,
And the only food the unresisting prize.

But this was hoard of his later days;
Years seemed in the West that he changed his ways,
And that with them he was to wash out his sin.
"I was mad by some malice who came to me
From the Pharaoh's ring that I wore on my hand
They had done I don't well how; but I was Made mad by the ring, and the deed that he made
Was done in a night when I was not myself
If the white man's blood; and no sea will wash
The stain from my hands, nor the haunting sight

Years passed, and a maddened-eyed creature stood
All a ruined hut in a Kimberley wood;
His hair was white, and his beard was black,
And an ant hill stood at the fallen door;
The sand was heaped on the sill of the room,
And the hearth was the home of the basilisk!—
But the wanderer stood on the threshold, for
He was the wreck—the last wreck—of a wreck, but a
Wreck that could sail in grey.
Where he had been he had been, and where he was
Had still on to pause when he ceased to pray.

At the luncheon hooked on the form, he saw
The world in a corner; he missed the view
What might well into the story, but in his touch
Was the pouch of leather, and the diamond's gleam
And he turned to this; on the paper's face
Was a picture of Jones, and of course a picture
Of the meagre records he contained his eyes;
"Twas a picture—a picture—a picture of—Hell!
And a fact from his hand on the drunken's skull!

—Port Jones (Gaffield Magazine).

TELEGRAPHIC!

Convention at Cincinnati.

Cincinnati, May 9.—The Liberal Republican Convention, the Address of the Committee and Resolutions to the People was substantially as follows:

The present administration has been guilty of a succession disregard of the laws and has acted as if the laws had no binding effect on those who govern. The President has used his powers and opportunities for personal ends; has kept unworthy and corrupt men in office; interfered with the local affairs of States and municipalities; he appointed to high offices men who gained his favor by valuable presents; has shown himself unequal to the tasks imposed upon him, and has been culpably careless of the responsibilities of his office. Partisans of the administration, assuming to be the Republican party, have never tried to rectify these wrongs, and have stood in the way of honest reform; have resorted to arbitrary measures, in conflict with law; have degraded themselves and the party by base sycophancy to dispense Executive patronage, and have striven to maintain themselves in power by unexampled means. Believing that an organization thus controlled cannot longer be of service to the best interests of the Republic, we have resolved to make an appeal to the sober judgment, conscience and patriotism of the American people.

New York, May 4.—August Belmont was interviewed yesterday on the result of the Cincinnati Convention. He said it may be policy to adopt the ticket. He believed Greeley would run well in the South, but still it is too soon to judge what is best to be done. He would not, at present, say what he best the Administration, not because he has anything against Grant, but don't like his ideas of government. The Philadelphia Convention must meet yet, and then the Democratic party must act wisely. In his opinion, the Liberal ticket will be withdrawn in September if the Democrats nominate a good ticket; meanwhile he thought the Democratic party should say or do nothing that might be turned against them when their nominations are made.

New York, May 7.—Ben. Wood stated, at a meeting last night, that Greeley told him he would remain in the field, whoever may be nominated at Philadelphia, but would withdraw from his position should the Democratic National Convention make an independent nomination.

Washington Matters.

New York Herald's Washington special says that at the Cabinet meeting the reply from the English Government in reference to the "negotiations principle of international law which Secretary Fish had brought himself to be willing to accept as a condition of our arrival, is so exceedingly satisfactory to this Government that probably there will be no backdown after all, and the position assumed by the President at first will be maintained.

The President has approved the supplementary bill to incorporate the Texas-Pacific railroad and the Kansas-Pacific railroad at a Cabinet meeting to-day. That it gave grounds for hope for a replacement of the entire subject satisfactorily to both countries. He bagged the House not to ask for the papers at present. Gladstone made a similar statement in the House of Commons, in response to Darnell's inquiries. There was an exciting debate in the House of Commons last night on the bill concerning the Irish Assemblies. Several Irish members took occasion to make speeches defensive of Home Rule, and the speeches of Messrs. Butt and Shaw opposed and denounced it as synonymous with Fenianism. Isaac Butt, member from Limerick, indignantly denied being a Fenian, though he was for Home Rule, and demanded a repeal of the Union. Mr. Sargent introduced such language from a minister. He wanted to know if Gladstone repudiated that of the American States, and for the Kingdom a legislature similar to that of the American Congress. A motion for a second reading was rejected by a vote of 227 to 15.

The reply of Secretary Fish to the note of Granville was handed to the latter yesterday by Mr. Schenck, and it is stated the negotiations for the settlement of the differences between England and America are now progressing satisfactorily.

PARIS, May 7.—Cissey, Minister of War, has informed the Commitee of the Assembly that the Government has decided to court-martial Bazaine. Cissey opposes the publication of the Report of the Committee on Capitulations, because if the correspondence therein between Bazaine and Prince Frederick Charles were published, it would prejudice the negotiations which were now progressing at Versailles.

LONDON, May 7.—It is rumored that several of the Kurile Islands in the North Pacific will be leased to the United States. These islands are twenty-five in number, and extend from Kamtschatka to Japan. The three southern most belong to Japan, the others to Russia.

At a reception at Windsor Castle, yesterday, by the Queen, several American ladies were present.

General John Hill, of the British Army, is dead.

Mr. Isaac Butt, member of Parliament for Limerick, has written a letter on "Home Rule." He asks for an Irish Assembly, in which home rulers shall be fully represented; approves the plan for fraternal union between Ireland and England, guaranteeing the authority of the Crown, and draws out lines for a Federal Union, which he says will be a satisfactory settlement of the relations of the two countries.

BERLIN, May 7.—Prince Bismarck is indisposed, and his physicians insist on absolute rest, or the consequence may be serious.

The new fortifications of Strasbourg are to cost seven millions sterling.

PARIS, May 7.—L'Union admits that the main body of the Carlists in Spain was surprised, and lost seven hundred men, and that Carlos fled to the mountains, but denies that he was pursued by the Government troops.

Telegraphic advices from Australia state that heavy floods, which caused terrible loss of life, have occurred at Melbourne. Four hundred persons were drowned and the growing crops were greatly damaged.

The Municipal Council of Paris has resolved to refurnish the Hotel de Ville, at a cost of 6,750,000 francs.

LONDON, May 8.—The Echo to-day has a very complimentary notice of the performance of the Atlantis beat crew of New York. The London journals all regard the crew as very able, and a great struggle is certain on the 10th June.

POTATO PUFF.—Take cold roast meat—beef or mutton, or veal and ham together—clear from gristle, cut small, and season with pepper and salt; cut pickles if liked; boil and mash some potatoes and make them into a paste with one egg and roll out, dredging with flour. Cut round with a saucer, put some of the seasoned meat with one half, and fold it over like a puff; fasten the sides nicely round, and fry it a light brown. This is a good method of cooking meat which has been cooked before.

Wholesale Market Report.

MONITOR OFFICE, SAN FRANCISCO, THURSDAY, May 9, 1872.

FLOUR—The demand for local consumption has continued good, with a fair inquiry for export, at unchanged rates, since our last weekly review. We quote as follows: Extra, $7 25 @ $7 50; family, do, $7 00 @ $7 25; shipping, $6 75 @ $7 00.

WHEAT—The market has ruled firm, with a good demand, at unchanged prices. At the close we quote the range as $1 80@$1 85 @ $1 90.

BARLEY—The demand has continued light for this grain during the week under review. Sales of ordinary coast at choice bay brewing at $1 20@$1 35. Quotable at the close at $1 20@$1 35 @ $1 40.

OATS—The market has remained quiet, at a decline in rates, during the past week. Ordinary to choice sold at $1 45@$1 60 @ $1 80, which is the range at the close.

RYE—The receipts have been fair during the past seven days, with a fair demand. Quotable at the close at $1@$1 10 for ordinary mild out to choice wheat.

STRAW—Quotable at $6@$8 50 @ ton for cargo lots.

CORN—Market quiet at $1 @ $1 05.

CORN MEAL—Sales at $1 @ $1 05 @ 100 lbs from mill.

BEANS—We note a fair demand, and the following are the jobbing rates: Bayo, $4 00; Sieva, $4; and small White, $3 50; Pink, $3 @ $3 50.

POTATOES—At the close we quote the range at 75c @ $1 @ 100 lbs.

ONIONS—Sales at $2 @ $2 50 @ 100 lbs.

MIDDLINGS—We quote feed at $24 @ $26 from mill.

HAY—Quotable at $13 @ $16 @ ton.

BUCKWHEAT—Quotable at $2 @ $2 50 @ 100 lbs.

SEEDS—We quote Flax at 5c, Canary, 6@7c; Alsike, 14@15c; and Mustard, 10@12c.

HONEY—We quote Los Angeles Comb at $12 50@15.

BEESWAX—We quote at 25@27c @ lb.

HIDES—We quote Salted, 12½@13c @ lb; and Dried at 15@16c @ lb.

TALLOW—Quotable at 6½@6 @ lb.

WOOL—There still continues a little in the market, sales being difficult to effect at prices lately ruling. The receipts are large, and as fast as consignments are accumulating. Shippers and buyers, however, have not materially changed position in the matter, and are largely nominal.

DAIRY PRODUCE.

BUTTER—California fresh, 30@33c; fresh roll, 30@35c; pickled, 20@22c; Oregon, fresh, 30@31c.

CHEESE—California, 14@16c; Eastern, none in the market.

EGGS—California, 20@25c @ dozen.

CURED MEATS.

HAMS—California at 16½@18c @ lb; Oregon, none in the market; Eastern at 18@19c; do in cases 16@18c.

BACON—California, 11½@13c @ lb; Oregon, none in the market; Eastern, in tcs, 11½@13c; do in cases 14@15c.

FRESH MEATS.

BEEF—Per first quality, 7@7½c @ lb; do second do, 6@6½c.

VEAL—Ai@11½c @ lb.

MUTTON—7@8c @ lb.

LAMB—10c @ lb.

PORK—Dressed, 8@9c.

POULTRY AND GAME.

TURKEYS—Live, at 20@21; Dressed, 25@30.

GEESE—Live, at $1 50@1 75 each.

DUCKS—Tame, $3@4 per dozen.

HENS—Live, $3@3 50 each.

RABBITS—Wild, 50c each.

QUAIL—Mountain, $1 50@1 75 doz.

GRAME—Deer, $1 @@2 each.

SNIPE—$1 @@2 per dozen.

How We Dump the Passengers.—Who does not remember the time when spring preparation was considered indispensable to summer health? He makes for my home, the doctor's—not that we recommend or esteem said jalap, must be administered. Then "spring medicines," the sarsaparilla and at the commencement of the summer solstice. As a preparation for an excursion, party of sojourn to some other weather, a course of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters is highly expedient. Its tonic and alterative properties heal three prominent properties: It removes, corrects and tones. Cut removes the cause of disease; it is composed exclusively of pure vegetable products, the medicinal principle of which is extracted by a process peculiar to Hostetter's Bitters alone. Correct, invigorates and regulates the stomach, liver, bowels and nerves in medical leadership. Hence, it is an absolutely safe medicine, and no traveler of the summer season should leave home without it either in person, or in the variety of its subjects, and the consequent necessity of its use. Sold by all Druggists and Dealers generally throughout the world.

In order to cure him, is forever opposed, and the only safe remedy is one that vegets the system, and the antagonists of disease, has taken its place. Hostetter's Bitters is an invigorant, and hence is the proper medicine for the feeble at the most trying season of the year.

Be sure that you obtain the genuine article, as there is an immense rush imitations in the market. Look at the ornamental stamp, the engraved label, and the bottle blown into the glass. Hostetter's Stomach Bitters is sold in bottles only.

Sewing Machines.—Wilcox, Gibbs and Wheeler are actually given away in comparison with former prices at Tucker & Co's. They are determined at whatever sacrifice they make so sell for any reasonable price offered that will pay the intrinsic value of the article purchased. Their stock is so large that it must be sold to make room for new goods just about to arrive.

CEMENT.—A cement of great value can be made by mixing ordinary glycerine with dry litharge, so as to make a tough paste. For uniting the joints of stone pipes, this preparation is excellent, as it offers great resistance to the action of water or heat.

MISCELLANEOUS.

INFORMATION WANTED—OF JOHN NEW, a native of Rockfort Bridge, county Wexford, Ireland. When last heard from, about five years ago, he was in San Francisco, Cal. Any information concerning him will be thankfully received by his brother, Richard New, at 164 Ninth Avenue, New York city, or at the office of the San Francisco MONITOR. m18-3t-10.

INFORMATION WANTED—OF MATILDA A. AND ELLEN MACLEEN, who came to California from Philadelphia in 1853. Any information of them will be gladly received by their sister, Bridget Donnelly. Please address MONITOR office.

INFORMATION WANTED — OF JOHN BRENNAN WHITE—a son of Patrick Brennan White and Mary Downer—a native of the parish of Ballymacoda, County Cork, Ireland. When last heard from was in the County Queens County, in January, 1870. Any information concerning him will be thankfully received by his sister CATHERINE, who has lately arrived from the East. Address to care of Patrick Harris, corner of 15th and Howard streets, San Francisco. ap26

INFORMATION WANTED—OF WILLIAM BARRY, a native of the Parish of Feval, county Cork, Ireland, about 31 years old. When last heard from was in Sacramento, California, in 1870. Any information of him will be thankfully received by his brother, James Barry, Trefle T. G., Iowa county, Iowa. m18

LAND for SALE IN LOS ANGELES.

THIRTEEN ACRES OF LAND IN THE City of Los Angeles, in full bearing orange trees. This property has a large frontage on the principal street of the city, is of superior quality and well adapted for the growing of Oranges and other tropical fruits. The land is watered from two fine springs, and has a never failing supply.

For further particulars apply to

JAMES GORMAN,
Los Angeles.

"TOUT POUR LA PATRIE."

THE FRENCH LADIES OF SAN FRANCISCO will give a GRAND NATIONAL FAIR

—AT—

UNION HALL,

HOWARD STREET,

TO CONTINUE SIX DAYS.

Commencing Monday, May 6, 1872,

FOR THE BENEFIT OF

THE FRENCH RANSOM FUND

A SERIES OF VARIED AND BRILLIANT entertainments will be offered EVERY EVENING, consisting of Choice Music, Instrumental and vocal; by Lady and Gentlemen amateurs and professional artists; Promenades Concertes, Tableaux Vivants, Military Drill Exhibitions, Parades, Dances, Refreshments, &c., &c., &c.

For further details, see Programmes.

The Hall has been tastefully decorated, and an effort will be spared to make this Fair the most brilliant of the season.

THE PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY

Will give a Grand Concert at Platt's Music Hall, on Wednesday evening, May 15th, 1872, under the immediate and special charge of a Committee of Gentlemen.

A detailed Programme of each evening's engagements will be duly published.

Prices of Admission ..... 50 Cents
Reserved Seats (not including Calico Ball)..... $1 00

THE FAIR WILL CONCLUDE WITH A

GRAND CALICO BALL,

SATURDAY NIGHT.....MAY 11.

Tickets (admitting a Gentleman and Lady)..... $2 50

STRAWBERRIES!

THE FINEST IN THE MARKET,

WITH RANCH CREAM!

—ALSO, THE—

FINEST CALF'S FOOT JELLY

FOR INVALIDS.

Fresh Oysters!

AND ALL THE DELICACIES OF THE SEASON,

AT JOB'S

317 KEARNY STREET,

ap20 Between Pine and Bush.

SCHOOL BOOKS, PRAYER BOOKS, TOY & JUVENILE BOOKS.

ALL THE TEXT BOOKS USED IN THE CATHOLIC and Public Schools of California can always be found at

RYAN'S OLD STAND,

No. 49 Fourth street, near Jessie.

Parents and guardians of limited means will find it to their interest to call early where any of the above can be had, as all goods sold at the lowest living rates. A discount of Prayer Books has been received from the publishers, to which attention is respectfully called.

☞ The MONITOR always on hand. ☜ m18

New and Important Publications.

THE LIFE, PROPHECIES & REVELATIONS

—OF THE—

VENERABLE MARY ANNE TAIGI.

Her recently supposed connection with the prophecy of the Secret of La Salette, and the life of the venerable woman a most seasonable book at the time.

VERONICA;

OR,

Devotions to the Holy Face of our Lord.

With prayers and indulgences.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL PRAYER AND HYMN BOOK, with 50 beautiful illustrations of the Mass; the Sacraments; Sacramentals, &c., &c., &c.

CATHOLIC VOICES and articles of every description for Ecclesiastical Fairs, &c., &c.

EUGENE CUMMISKEY, Publisher,
1627 Chestnut street, Philadelphia.

ELGIN WATCHES

Ask your Jeweler about them.

ap27-6m

DRY GOODS, ETC.

1872—SPRING ARRIVALS—1872

LANDERS, BYRNE & Co.

Have just opened and now offer for sale, their splendid stock of Spring

DRY GOODS,

Consisting in part of

PIQUES, in endless variety;
BRILLIANTES,
SATIN STRIPES, something new;
ORGANDIES, the latest out for wrappers;
CAMBRICS and LAWNS in all shades;
JAPANESE SILKS, brocaded and striped;
SUMMER SILKS, from $1 25 up;

BLACK SILKS

Of the very best makes, direct from Lyons;

And the World Renowned

IRISH POPLINS,

In all shades, direct from PIM BROS., Dublin.

IN OUR GENERAL

DRESS GOODS DEPARTMENT

Will be found a splendid line of Goods, from 25 cents upwards, suitable for sorts, specially adapted for the coming season.

HOSIERY, GLOVES, HANDK'FS, EMBROIDERIES, LACES, and SMALL WARES.

HOUSEKEEPING GOODS

Being a specialty with us, our patrons can always depend on finding this department well worthy of their confidence and trade.

☞ At the above stock of Goods were purchased at the lowest cash prices, before the late advance, our numerous patrons and friends will have the benefit of the best selected stock of goods in town at the very lowest prices.

LANDERS, BYRNE & Co.,
4 Third Street.

m18

FANCY AND STAPLE DRY GOODS!

J. HANIFIN,

350 THIRD ST., near HARRISON.

One Price Store.

BANKRUPT SALE!

—OF—

$40,000 WORTH

—OF—

DRY GOODS!

KENNEDY & DURR,

112 THIRD STREET,

Having purchased a

BANKRUPT STOCK of DRY GOODS

From the creditors of a late firm on Market street, at SIXTY PER CENT. below the original cost, we would call the attention of the public to the fact of

MARKING DOWN THESE GOODS

TO

One-Half their Present Value.

We now have this

MAGNIFICENT STOCK of GOODS

Ready for sale, to be disposed of

FOR CASH ONLY,

FOR THE BENEFIT of the CREDITORS.

☞ All parties indebted to Mr. BURKE will please call and settle up with us before cost of collection is added. &c.

All Goods are marked with Plain figures, and One Price Only.

Peddlers or country dealers need not seek to purchase of us at these Goods, as we wish to give our friends and the Ladies of San Francisco an opportunity of visiting Goods cheap.

Ladies in the country who wish to send orders by Express, will get Goods at the same price as if they were here, and all orders promptly attended to.

LIST OF PRICES:

4,100 yards Poplin, all new shades, at $1, $1 25 and $1 50.

4,310 yards Fancy French Silk at $1; worth $1 75.

2,000 yards Japanese Brocaded Silk, at 75, 87½ and $1 00.

3,137 pieces Fancy Dress Goods, 12½, 18, 20, 25 and 30c.

13,235 yards American Prints at 10c.

391 pieces Heavy Tweed at $1.

211 pairs Mission Blankets at $5 50.

500 pieces Alpaca at 30, 35, 37½, 50, 60 and 62c.

567 pieces Plaids at 18, 20, 25, 30, 35 and 37½c.

1,000 pieces Linen Lawn at 10, 12½, 15, 18 and 20c.

500 pieces Assorted Shirting at 10, 12½, 15c.

1,000 pieces Linen Lawn at 10, 12½, 15, 18 and 20c.

200 pieces Linen Flannel at 18, 19 and 20c.

316 pieces Brown Cotton, heavy make, at 12½ and 15c.

500 pieces Bleached Cotton at 12½ and 15c.

47 pieces 6-4 Table Linen, at 50, 60 and 75c.

40 dozen real Irish Linen Sheets at $5.

75 dozen Whitehouse Towels at 50, 75c and $1.

47 pieces Real Marseilles at 50 and 75c.

111 pieces White Flannel, one yard wide, at 60, 80 and 90c.

10 pieces 4-4 English prints at 15c.

30 pieces Heavy Gingham Stripes and Check at 20c.

500 Ruffled and Plaid Shawls at $2 75, $3 25 and $4 75.

Several large lots of Ladies' and Gentlemen's Merino Underwear at half price.

Kennedy & Durr

112 THIRD STREET.

BANKING.

LAND MORTGAGE UNION

OF CALIFORNIA.

OFFICE, 133 POST STREET, SAN FRANCISCO.

GUARANTEE CAPITAL.....$1,000,000

President.....J. B. [illegible]
DIRECTORS.
John Morton, John Rightmire,
Thomas R. Hayes, John M. Jackson,
S. G. Mathews, J. H. Fish,
Henry Kimball.

INVESTMENT CAPITAL.....$[illegible]

Investing Shares, $100 each. Entrance fee, $1 per share. Fortnightly subscription, $1 per share. Paid up shares, $47 50.

Interest allowed on fixed deposits from all persons.

Loans from 8 to 10 per cent. per annum.

jy18 JOHN T. CARTER, Secretary.

HIBERNIA SAVINGS AND LOAN SOCIETY

Office—Northeast corner of Montgomery and Sutter streets.

OFFICERS:

President.....M. D. SWEENY
Vice President.....C. D. O'SULLIVAN

TRUSTEES:

M. D. SWEENY, C. D. O'SULLIVAN, JOHN SULLIVAN, M. J. TOBIN, P. O'CONNOR, F. McAHAN, C. McNEAVE, Trustee, JOS. A. DONAHOE, PETER DONAHOE, EDWARD RUSH, Attorney.....RICHARD TOBIN.

Remittances from the country may be made by Wells, Fargo & Co.'s Express office, or any banking house. Letters by mail will be promptly attended to. The signature of the depositor must be given in full, and the number of his pass book be referred to in the letter, when deposits are made.

Deposits received from $1 upwards.

Deposits received on Saturday and Sunday, from 10 to 12 o'clock.

Office open from 10 o'clock A. M. to 3 P. M.

THE FAITHFUL ISLAND.

Then green and faithful island,
My eyes and cherish of Ireland,
Thou gem of earth and sea!
May every friend flourish like
And may ill luck o'ertake me
If I prove false to thee.

The same shines out in glory,
Thy flame is laid in story,
In immortal land of mine;
The seasons that are the rarest,
When summer and days are the fairest,
In all the world are thine.

And should I wish that ever
The hopes of thine might never
Be bright and fair as thine,
May I be noble perish,
Then from dust may I not cherish,
Or pity take on me.

As one who lost a treasure,
And then found another,
So now might see again:
I see nigh broken-hearted
What from dust was parted,
So bitter was the pain.

Sterling Lynch & Gessner's Pianos is one of the great pleasures in recommending them to our patrons, as they are of a very superior order, and are sold at the lowest living rates.

From Mrs. Jamie Sandifer, 132 West Thirty-second street, New York:]

MRS. JAMES SANDIFER says that a great pleasure in giving to the superior excellence of Sterling Lynch & Gessner's Pianos which she has purchased of this city. She has had one of them in her house for over seven years, and it stands as well in tone, harmony, touch, and power to-day as when it was first purchased.

[Extract of a letter from Mrs. Sandifer, dated Concert, Dingbadok, Ireland.]

I have much pleasure in recommending your Pianos to any person who may desire to purchase an instrument of the first class. Mine has been in use for seven years, and it stands as well in tone, touch, and power to-day as when it was first purchased. The tone improved very much after the first year, and I have found it to stand in tune well.

Yours truly,
JAMES SANDIFER.

Sterling Lynch & Gessner's Pianos are the only ones that have received the

HIGHEST PREMIUM

Ever awarded to any Piano in the State Fair, and the only ones that have received the

HIGHEST PREMIUM

Ever awarded to any Piano in the Mechanics' Fair, and the only ones that have received the

HIGHEST PREMIUM

Ever awarded to any Piano in the Industrial Exhibition, and the only ones that have received the

HIGHEST PREMIUM

Ever awarded to any Piano in the Mechanics' Institute Fair, and the only ones that have received the

HIGHEST PREMIUM

Ever awarded to any Piano in the Pacific Coast Agricultural Fair, and the only ones that have received the

HIGHEST PREMIUM

Ever awarded to any Piano in the Santa Clara Fair, and the only ones that have received the

HIGHEST PREMIUM

Ever awarded to any Piano in the Napa Fair, and the only ones that have received the

HIGHEST PREMIUM

Ever awarded to any Piano in the Sonoma Fair, and the only ones that have received the

HIGHEST PREMIUM

Ever awarded to any Piano in the Sacramento Fair, and the only ones that have received the

HIGHEST PREMIUM

Ever awarded to any Piano in the Stockton Fair, and the only ones that have received the

HIGHEST PREMIUM

Ever awarded to any Piano in the Los Angeles Fair, and the only ones that have received the

HIGHEST PREMIUM

Ever awarded to any Piano in the Santa Barbara Fair, and the only ones that have received the

HIGHEST PREMIUM

Ever awarded to any Piano in the Santa Cruz Fair, and the only ones that have received the

HIGHEST PREMIUM

Ever awarded to any Piano in the Monterey Fair, and the only ones that have received the

HIGHEST PREMIUM

Ever awarded to any Piano in the San Mateo

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

ENGLAND.

Marriage of the Marquis of Bute.

At the marriage of the Marquis of Bute, on Tuesday, at the Oratory, a company was present to sell off the list of whom would be like reading a breadth of pages from Debrett's "Peerage." The Royal dukes assisted at the service, and dukes great by connection with royalty; soldiers and statesmen; great names in science; great orators and leaders of high life, in a word, the cream of west-end society. The ceremony was peculiar in many respects. The nuptial rites were solemnized by the Archbishop of Westminster, the marriage register was attested by the Queen's cousin, the bridegroom was accompanied by Disraeli "in the shape of "Lothair" was visible in the flesh, his bestlink countenance beaming on vacancy, under the same roof with Monsignor Capel. After the marriage there was a Mass, and the newly-wedded couple partook of the Holy Sacrament, thus setting a healthy example to those beneath them in social position. It was remarked that while the Duke of Cambridge reverentially inclined his head at the elevation of the Host, and was the shaggy red locks of his grace of Argyll were lowered in deference to his neighbours, Arnat to God, the leader of the Opposition sat upright like an Egyptian mummy, stiff and immovable. He would not let for a moment under the shade of a shadow of the suspicion that he gave assent to the "gross mummeries of Popery." It is pleasant that we poor Catholics can manage to get on without him, as big as he undoubtedly is. The Holy Father sent his special benediction and a magnificent present to the bride, a rosary in the happy pair. May love, honor, and troops of friends attend Lord Ripon and his bride all the days of their lives, and may they be the best abode of love and charity, through his spirit of love, and may the lovely being who condescends to call herself "all the blood of all the Howards" justify the choice he has made.—London Universe, April 20.

A Loaded Head.

Towards the close of last week, a man was charged in the Lambeth police court, with unlawfully in possession of some sixty pounds of lead. The history of the criminal is highly instructive—indeed it would have supplied Dr. Johnson with a new text for a fifth sermon. He is the last of five of Edward Whalen. George II. was about as vain and opinionated a king as England was ever favored with, and to these accomplishments he added a weakness for statues of himself. He had appointed a sculptor to his childishness. Shortly after his death, some fervent admirer had the equestrian statue of the illustrious monarch cast in pure lead—the compliment was significant—and set it up on a triumphal arch immediately like a knight in the middle of Leicester square. The sculptor, the inventor, "regard the Republican movement as threatening!" Her Majesty laughed, "I Doctor, there is no Republican movement." The few persons who profess to be Republicans avow the profoundest attachment to their Queen. There are two or three men who want to be notorious; and to talk Republicanism is an easy and quick way to notoriety. The poor cobbler, who is the chief Republican, was obliged to sell his blanket. I was very sorry and wished to send him some money; but Mr. Gladstone begged of me not to do so promising that the cobbler should not be without the means of living." This episode about the cobbler and the blanket is quite charming; it is quite new to us. We have not heard of such a thing, and we are most anxious to learn all the details. How truly humane and charitable are Mr. Gladstone and his royal master to consider the poor cobbler. But since, to talk Republicanism, according to her Majesty, is no sign of treason, and not only to notoriety, but also to her Majesty's or nation's purse, it seems to us that when her Majesty's sentiments become known, there will be no lack of cobblers and other recruits to the Republican ranks. It pains us also to learn that Mr. Gladstone has not the entire approval of her Majesty. She said of him: "He is what Lord Melbourne called a hot-water statesman. His pleasure and offence were in proportion to the heat of the party fire. His fault towards me, if any, is excess of devotion. He never differs in opinion from his Sovereign, and his constant advice is, to do what I suggest to be done." Which is as much as to say his head is cracked, but a bad Minister.—Irishman, April 20.

Still Patriotic!

In "acquiring" Alsace and Lorraine, the Germans have obviously caught a Tartar, blessed with a temper of the most intractable description. The patriotic attachment of the people to France and their veneration for the tricolor are the despair of their conquerors. In spite of all the indulgences which Prince Bismarck thinks it wise and politic to shower on them, they resent his favors as impertinences, and his soldiers as intruders. The life of a German trooper in the two provinces is a life which only a man under sentence of death in a dungeon would consent to endure. Some few scraps have been made in consequence of the above-mentioned attack and murder, for it is necessary that the people in opposition should receive the diplomatic body; but we have as well be in for a full allotment of those cutthroats. We know what is to be expected from a government that, sworn before Europe to protect the persons and the honor of the Head of the Catholic world, allowed the sacred person, the very crest of Rome, night after night, the most unspeakable and impious ballads, of which the chorus always is:

Bendetta questa mano
Che ha firmato questo scempio!

(Blessed be the hand that shall assassinate Pius IX.). The only comfort in the presence of all this infamy is the Italian's certainty that Piedmont is digging its own dishonored grave—is sealing its own doom—is helping to bring down upon its worthless head a destruction that posterity shall pause and wonder at. During the late illuminations of the Coliseum the mob forbade any other music than "The Hymn of the Red Birds!" the ribaldry to have at length lost even their national good music taste. Under the gallery in which sat the most lead to Prince Bismarck's peace of mind, and the godly tranquility proverbially enjoyed by his pious master. Infuriating violent bands on two of the fairest provinces of France, they have even enslaved themselves, "and fallen on the other side," indeed. Who knows how or may yet have Europe to encounter one charged with the task of finding a peaceable solution of "The Alsatian Difficulty?"—Nation, April 20.

ITALY.

Musical and Theatrical.

There has been a good deal of newspaper criticism as to the originality of the epitaph which has been placed on Manzoni. It (translated) runs thus: "His body to the earth, his name to all time, his soul to heaven." The author is a Signor Guerzoni, who ought to know well the epitaph, for he drew up the will of Manzoni. Signor Maria degli Angeli, at Rome, which is to be the effect that "my body is given to earth, his name to the world and his soul to heaven." This forcibly reminds the Irish Catholic of the following epitaph on one of the ladies of O'Connell's death there in 1847: "The heart of O'Connell will be in Rome, his body in Ireland, and his soul in the mercy of God, its soul in heaven." This is certainly much better than the world burst of prosaic bravery for which Signor Guerzzi is responsible.

Roman Items.

Dolores, a Pontifical scenario, and three of the Pope's body guard, were assailed by a band of robbers on the road which intersects the other day by a crowd of the Piedmontese national guard. Deluca was the first to fall, and he died miserably and cruelly wounded. Perhaps at last the blindest of English Protestant will understand how the Pius IX. does not trust himself outside the Vatican, notwithstanding the oath of safeguard which they have pledged. Nothing should be observed. The Holy Father does not feel called upon to risk assassination in his own proper person except for some of the sublime motives of religion. When that time comes, if it is to come, when a great victim is called for, it will be found that Pio Nino has learnt correctly the full meaning of the Gospel text on the occupies. His moral and physical courage will astonish the Italians. Some few errors have been made in consequence of the above-mentioned attack and murder, for it is necessary that the people in opposition receive before the diplomatic body; but we have as well be in for a full allotment of those cutthroats. We know what is to be expected from a government that, sworn before Europe to protect the persons and the honor of the Head of the Catholic world, allowed the sacred person, the very crest of Rome, night after night, the most unspeakable and impious ballads, of which the chorus always is:

(Blessed be the hand that shall assassinate Pius IX.). The only comfort in the presence of all this infamy is the Italian's certainty that Piedmont is digging its own dishonored grave—is sealing its own doom—is helping to bring down upon its worthless head a destruction that posterity shall pause and wonder at. During the late illuminations of the Coliseum the mob forbade any other music than "The Hymn of the Red Birds!" the ribaldry to have at length lost even their national good music taste. Under the gallery in which sat the most lead to Prince Bismarck's peace of mind, and the godly tranquility proverbially enjoyed by his pious master. Infuriating violent bands on two of the fairest provinces of France, they have even enslaved themselves, "and fallen on the other side," indeed. Who knows how or may yet have Europe to encounter one charged with the task of finding a peaceable solution of "The Alsatian Difficulty?"—Nation, April 20.

GERMANY.

Queen Victoria Interviewed.

A German journalist has "interviewed" her Majesty Queen Victoria. Among other things, her Majesty was good enough to inform her interviewer that "there is no official control of the press in England," which is a half-truth. But her Majesty might have added that in that part of the United Kingdom called Scotland there is control of the press, and something more. She might have told the German that there is there expression and confirmation, as the consequence of the publication of anything of which the Ministers for ruling the country for England might disapprove. But, perhaps, her thought alone on this head appears from the fact that she does not regard Ireland as an integral portion of the United Kingdom, but a dependent dependency unworthy of notice. If that be her Majesty's views we will not be long conspicuously at odds. We will not be long conspicuously at odds. Will it be that the Masonian dagger that was hired to destroy his hair we will find its bloody sheath in his own guilty bosom? By the way, how singular that the Times' Rome correspondent has known nothing of all those late events; or is it the prudence of Printing House Square that has suppressed the communications of its agent? Jame's retirement from office is spoken of as probable, and Prince Napoleon his successor. This signifies nothing to us. Nobody can be found to accept the disgrace of becoming Minister of the Second Empire, a post vacant by the resignation of Prince Doria. Merely among the reasons who invest the Eternal City all will not refuse the consolation; but naturally the government hardly likes to appear to sink to low though why Piedmont and its monarch should affect suytning like rakish delicacy at this late hour of its very limited career is indeed difficult to comprehend. Rome under the Popes, so celebrated the world through for the abundance of its magnificent water, is to-day, through the blundering of the municipality, actually suffering from drought. The intellect of Piedmont (says Punch itself) has ruined the water to cease in flow from fountains and aqueducts that it was thought nothing could dry up. If such a calamity as this had happened under the pontiffs what a host of shallow fulminers would have sprung up to favor the poor deluded public with distribute against priestly rule, etc. We direct the attention our readers to the following telegram which has been published by the Havre agency for the purpose of contradicting the assertion of the Italian journals that Pius IX. had accepted the pension offered him by the Piedmontese Government:

The Pope will receive nothing from the Italian Government; he will accept the alms of the Catholic world as he is now receiving them.

For the victim to consent to take his support from the hand of the brigand who has despoiled him would be almost a sanction of the latter's villany.

IRISH INTELLIGENCE.

Death of a Political Prisoner.

The Freeman of Tuesday, April 16, says: We learn that Mr. Patrick Kearney, one of the political prisoners sent to Australia lately returned to his native city to recruit his health, inspired by the love of home and of his friends. His remains will be removed for interment in Glasnevin on Wednesday morning at 10 o'clock.

The Evening Telegraph of Wednesday, April 17, recorded his funeral and the circumstances of his last illness as follows:

On this day the remains of Patrick Kearney were interred in Glasnevin Cemetery in the presence of a large assemblage of men, who marched at his funeral to the number of about twelve hundred. The deceased was arrested in 1867, and tried under the following circumstances: He was a smith by trade, and was employed on searching his forge for arms. When doing so he reunited them, and struck Acting-Inspector Clifford of the R.I.C. a heavy blow with a sledge on the head. He was arrested and committed to Mountjoy Prison, from whence he was removed to Naas Jail, where he remained for a considerable time. After his release, he proceeded to America, and in consequence of declining health, he had to return home. After a painful and protracted illness, he expired on Sunday, at the residence of his mother, 23 Charles street. His funeral this morning was very solemn and impressive. The cortège, which was borne on the shoulders of the friends of the deceased, was decorated with wreaths of laurel. About twelve hundred men, principally of the working classes, marched after the remains, and each wore a green leaf in his hat. After the remains had been placed in the hearse in the sacristy. First came acolytes with burning torches, two and two, then the church, and lastly the bishop of the diocese. This prelate is vested in purple and with his mitre and pastoral staff before the altar, and then ascends the episcopal throne on the left or Gospel side of the altar. Monsignor Capel kneels to receive the bishop's blessing and to kiss his ring, and then appears for the last time in the pulpit. This evening his subject is the death of the just man, and it is full of reassurance to those who have voluntarily gone through the labors and sacrifices of the mission. The sermon lights have multiplied about the altar till the whole chancel is flooded with light. The sermon ended, the bishop exchanges his purple mozetta for a white one, and his mitre for a cap, assumes the crozier, which is typical of his pastoral office. Then the congregation rise, and the Eucharistic elements are exposed upon the altar, and a weaper of incense is swung from the crozier. The choir breaks forth with the Litany, and now the whole church bursts into light as the Host is raised by the consecrated hand. The effect of this is very striking. At a signal all rise, genuflect to the host, signify, as they are told, that they are "soldiers of Christ, prepared to fight—and, if need be, lay down their lives for the faith given them at baptism," and of elevation of the chalice, and then Monsignor Capel takes his place in the pulpit and preaches his sermon. The discourse is full of consolation to the pastor, for the vast crowd of wealthy and educated citizens who have assembled to pay the last tribute of honors through the church portals, to return, however, with unfailing punctuality to their homes. Two lights are on the altar, and the room is illuminated throughout by triple gas jets. The Rev. Canon Maguire delivers the funeral oration, and his matter is, in a strong, clear voice. This occupies about half an hour

WEEKLY CALENDAR.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING MAY 18.

May:
18—Sunday—Pentecost, or Whit-Sunday.
20—Monday—Whit-Monday.
21—Tuesday—Whit-Tuesday.
22—Wednesday—Ember day. Fast.
23—Thursday—Of the Octave.
24—Friday—Ember day. Fast.
25—Saturday—Ember day. Fast.

THE MONITOR:
THE ONLY
Irish and Catholic Journal in California.
SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.
SATURDAY.....MAY 18, 1872.

HORACE GREELEY'S NOMINATION.

Since the result of the Cincinnati Convention has been made public there has been a sufficient lapse of time to enable us to learn the opinion of most of our contemporaries respecting it. We are glad to find that a considerable majority approves the nomination of Horace Greeley, and are sparing their influence to secure a Democratic endorsement there of. If they succeed, as we hope they will, the defeat of Grant may be confidently expected; but if they fail, his reelection will be made inevitable. These are facts which only unreasoning headstrong men ignore, and a well man they should be widely known. This platform adopted by the Cincinnati Liberal Republicans differs so very little, if anything at all, from the pure Democratic programme that when success can be obtained upon it, it would be absurd pronounce objections to reject it.

The protectionist proclivities of Mr. Greeley should be no barrier to his adoption. For if he be elected President he will have little opportunity of carrying into practice his peculiar theories about commercial policy. In fact, as one of our Eastern contemporaries shrewdly remarks, he has at the present moment, in consequence of his position as editor of the New York Tribune, twenty times more influence in the contest between free trade and protection, than he could have were he seated in the White House. Moreover it has been agreed, prudently according to our judgment, to leave this matter to the decision of the Congressional elections. The choice of the people, and not the will of the next President, whoever he may be, must determine whether the sentimental policy is to be of protection or free-trade. We cannot discover where any great principle, one way or another, is involved in the question.

It does seem to us that, since Horace Greeley is universally admitted to be a thoroughly honest and honorable man, one who will not accept "a pronota," or make his relations and connections pendences of the nation, who will not use his position to secure personal aggrandizement, who will restrain plunderers and give real peace to the tortured South, who will restore and preserve freedom of election and honest, economical administration, we will see that the rights of all citizens are duly respected at home and abroad—it seems to us, taking these things into consideration, that he ought to be cheerfully accepted by the Democracy. We have several times said, and it can hardly be repeated too often, the principal duty now incumbent upon patriotic citizens is by all means to end that administration which has been characterized by corruption, dishonor and delpotism, and which has made the United States contemptible in the eyes of the world by a cowardly and vacillating foreign policy.

The man who says "No; we ought not support Greeley; we must have a clear grit Democratic nominee," convicts himself of hopeless partisanism, and proves that he prefers the triumph of a party to the welfare of his country. Indeed no one not a blind fanatic, not irremediably given over to party servility can argue in this fashion. But besides those fanatics, there are many shortsighted people who cry out: "The nomination of Greeley has split up the Republican party; there is now no section of Radicals fighting each other; let us take advantage of their dissension, nominate strong Democratic candidates, and gain a victory for which we shall have to thank no one but ourselves." They do not foresee that the concessions they demand would be followed, if not by the retirement of Greeley, at least by the return of the bulk of his supporters to the side of Grant.

A vast amount of fine logic has been expended to prove that the contest between Grant and Seymour was so close that a slight accession from Radicalism would render a Democratic victory beyond question. We have no desire to enter into a lengthy refutation of such arguments, and we shall content ourselves with expressing our strong conviction that if the issue placed before the nation be Republicanism against Democracy, Grant versus a Radical-save nominee, the former will carry the day. There are, we admit, people who think otherwise—who say that the country is so heartily sick of Grant any respectable opponent would easily beat him. It is pleasant to be sanguine, and we would have no objection to be so if we could be guaranteed against the inconvenience of disappointment.

But the experience of even the last couple of years has demonstrated how foolish it is to trust the rose-colored prophecies of visionaries. We have carefully studied the sentiments of all the Liberal journals which have fallen within our reach, and, having made due allowance for exaggeration on both sides, we have come to the conclusion that our choice for Presidential lies between Grant and Greeley, and that no man who may be nominated hereafter can disturb the alternative. If we do not support Greeley we must put up with Grant for four years longer. We trust the citizens of San Francisco will take these matters into serious consideration. They ought not commit the egregious folly of entering a fight wherein they must necessarily be beaten, and consequently they should avail themselves of the only prospect of victory which presents itself. Any other line of conduct, however heroic, would be simply suicidal.

THE EVILS OF INTEMPERANCE.

We print to day an admirable discourse delivered by the celebrated Dominican orator, Father Burke, before the Second annual Convention of the New Jersey Catholic Total Abstinence Union, which was held at Patterson, on Thursday, 25th April. Father Tom, as he is familiarly and affectionately called by his many friends, says nothing which is not well worth attention, nothing which should not be treated with respect; but we are of opinion that even his wonderful eloquence rarely touched a subject more important. The evils of intemperance are manifold and notorious. They affect both souls and all conditions in life; they cannot be concealed, for they are patent to the most superficial observer. Every individual, no matter how limited his circle of acquaintance, can instance one or more personally known to him whose intoxicating liquors make her a driven or are driving into the grave. And every man can mention at least one household from which domestic peace and comfort have been forever banished by the same abominable agencies. So the total of the misery and misfortune brought about simply and exclusively by drunkenness is easily appalling.

The persons who, from their calling or position, are brought very much into contact with suffering humanity—who are constantly compelled to look upon the dark side of life—are the best able to form a proper estimate of the amount of mischief thus wrought. But it is not merely domestic discord, public disrepute, poverty, wretchedness and untimely death that are to be placed to the account of the drink fiend; a considerable portion of the crime committed in this country must also be placed to its charge. It has been asserted by competent judges that if one could abolish intoxication, nearly nine-tenths of the criminality dealt with by our law courts would disappear at the same time. This needs like an exaggeration; nevertheless, we believe it to be a substantial fact. Let us read the details of the murders and manslaughters with which the daily papers teem, and we shall find in almost every case that the perpetrator was more or less under the influence of drink, and we shall also find that the crime was consummated either actually within the walls of a saloon, or, at all events, in its immediate vicinity. Other offenses, the connection of which with intoxication does not seem so direct, such as embezzlement, robbery, etc., would, if all the circumstances were known, be quite as clearly and logically traced to it.

If the ruin worked by drink were confined to individuals of the world—if a man could lose nothing more by it than domestic happiness, the respect of his neighbors, and all possible self-esteem—if his sufferings would certainly be bad enough, and philanthropists would be justified in devoting all their energies to the cause of temperance. But worse remains. Drink destroys soul as well as body, irrevocably ruins a man for both time and eternity. It is utterly impossible for the drunkard to work out his salvation as long as he indulges in his debased appetite. Every man who "takes too much now and then" expects to reform sometime, and return to sober habits. But there is this especial curse upon indulgence in strong liquor, that it possesses a diabolical fascination, and that of all the evil ways to which our nature is prone there is not one more difficult to abandon. Its advances are most insidious, and we are known to every one else a long time before their unhappy victim is conscious of their hold upon him. Thus a man becomes a confirmed drunkard, frequently found in his iniquity before he becomes aware of it. When he imagines he is all right and only forgets himself occasionally, when he would intelligently repel the advances of being an habitual inebriate, all his acquaintances know that he is so far advanced on the road to ruin that any attempts to warn him back would be utterly hopeless. There is no more deplorable object, no spectacle more capable of awakening disgust mingled with compassion than the sight of the slave to liquor.

It is no wonder, then, that good and holy men have banded together and commenced, or rather stimulated, the war against drunkenness. Just now Temperance Societies are more than usually active not only in America, but in Ireland also. And in both countries they are blessed, encouraged and directed by the priests of God's Church. We have seen it stated in several newspapers of good repute that Archbishop Purcell judges that if one could abolish intoxication, nearly nine-tenths of the criminality dealt with by our law courts would disappear at the same time. This needs like an exaggeration; nevertheless, we believe it to be a substantial fact. Let us read the details of the murders and manslaughters with which the daily papers teem, and we shall find in almost every case that the perpetrator was more or less under the influence of drink, and we shall also find that the crime was consummated either actually within the walls of a saloon, or, at all events, in its immediate vicinity. Other offenses, the connection of which with intoxication does not seem so direct, such as embezzlement, robbery, etc., would, if all the circumstances were known, be quite as clearly and logically traced to it.

If the ruin worked by drink were confined to individuals of the world—if a man could lose nothing more by it than domestic happiness, the respect of his neighbors, and all possible self-esteem—if his sufferings would certainly be bad enough, and philanthropists would be justified in devoting all their energies to the cause of temperance. But worse remains. Drink destroys soul as well as body, irrevocably ruins a man for both time and eternity. It is utterly impossible for the drunkard to work out his salvation as long as he indulges in his debased appetite. Every man who "takes too much now and then" expects to reform sometime, and return to sober habits. But there is this especial curse upon indulgence in strong liquor, that it possesses a diabolical fascination, and that of all the evil ways to which our nature is prone there is not one more difficult to abandon. Its advances are most insidious, and we are known to every one else a long time before their unhappy victim is conscious of their hold upon him. Thus a man becomes a confirmed drunkard, frequently found in his iniquity before he becomes aware of it. When he imagines he is all right and only forgets himself occasionally, when he would intelligently repel the advances of being an habitual inebriate, all his acquaintances know that he is so far advanced on the road to ruin that any attempts to warn him back would be utterly hopeless. There is no more deplorable object, no spectacle more capable of awakening disgust mingled with compassion than the sight of the slave to liquor.

It is no wonder, then, that good and holy men have banded together and commenced, or rather stimulated, the war against drunkenness. Just now Temperance Societies are more than usually active not only in America, but in Ireland also. And in both countries they are blessed, encouraged and directed by the priests of God's Church. We have seen it stated in several newspapers of good repute that Archbishop Purcell judges that if one could abolish intoxication, nearly nine-tenths of the criminality dealt with by our law courts would disappear at the same time. This needs like an exaggeration; nevertheless, we believe it to be a substantial fact. Let us read the details of the murders and manslaughters with which the daily papers teem, and we shall find in almost every case that the perpetrator was more or less under the influence of drink, and we shall also find that the crime was consummated either actually within the walls of a saloon, or, at all events, in its immediate vicinity. Other offenses, the connection of which with intoxication does not seem so direct, such as embezzlement, robbery, etc., would, if all the circumstances were known, be quite as clearly and logically traced to it.

If the ruin worked by drink were confined to individuals of the world—if a man could lose nothing more by it than domestic happiness, the respect of his neighbors, and all possible self-esteem—if his sufferings would certainly be bad enough, and philanthropists would be justified in devoting all their energies to the cause of temperance. But worse remains. Drink destroys soul as well as body, irrevocably ruins a man for both time and eternity. It is utterly impossible for the drunkard to work out his salvation as long as he indulges in his debased appetite. Every man who "takes too much now and then" expects to reform sometime, and return to sober habits. But there is this especial curse upon indulgence in strong liquor, that it possesses a diabolical fascination, and that of all the evil ways to which our nature is prone there is not one more difficult to abandon. Its advances are most insidious, and we are known to every one else a long time before their unhappy victim is conscious of their hold upon him. Thus a man becomes a confirmed drunkard, frequently found in his iniquity before he becomes aware of it. When he imagines he is all right and only forgets himself occasionally, when he would intelligently repel the advances of being an habitual inebriate, all his acquaintances know that he is so far advanced on the road to ruin that any attempts to warn him back would be utterly hopeless. There is no more deplorable object, no spectacle more capable of awakening disgust mingled with compassion than the sight of the slave to liquor.

The Irish-American Press on the Cincinnati Nominees.

From the N. Y. Irish Citizen, John Mitchel's paper.]

The nomination is made for President and Vice-President; and on the whole it is a good nomination, seeing the ways we cannot have Democrats pure and simple. Last week we expressed our preference for Horace Greeley among all those likely to be presented for nomination at Cincinnati; and now that he is nominated, we do earnestly exhort all our good Irish citizens to vote for him. It is true that Mr. Greeley has some quite peculiar ideas of his own; in which respect, as in all others, he differs widely from Grant, who has not an idea at all, nor even half an idea of his own. Mr. Greeley is a strong protectionist; but the platform adopted at Cincinnati leaves this question of protection or of free trade altogether open to be settled by the people hereafter. Indeed it signifies little whether Mr. Greeley be a protectionist or a free trader once he is elevated to the position of chief magistrate—as we trust he will be in the White House he cannot decree free trade nor protection; he can have no more influence on the determination of that question than he has now, nor half so much, for now he wields a potent political engine, the New York Tribune, but as President he must drop that, like a hot potato. The whole matter, then, of protection or free trade will have to be settled without the potent advocacy of Horace Greeley. And in fact we trust it will be considered disrespectful to our future President—as we trust he will be—to urge that one has arguments in favor of placing him in the White House is that he will be taken out of the Tribune office.

[From the Western Celt.]

It will not, however, be at variance with the principles above enunciated for us to the present time, to say a few words in favor of the nomination of Horace Greeley for the Presidency and B. Gratz Brown for the Vice-Presidency, are an inconsistent ticket. One of the most momentous questions of the day is that of protection or free trade. Greeley is a protectionist; Brown is a free-trader. This alone would render the ticket most considerably weaken the ticket. It is impossible to "blow hot and cold" in the same breath, and it is only a way to think that the Germans are too sensible, and are too deeply interested in the prosperity of this country to be led astray by empty howlings of the Grant party on a matter of finance or rather of no importance in the political contest. If they submit to the application of the protective policy, which is already making itself heard, and appealing to them for endorsement, they will be guilty of the grossest folly they could possibly commit. If defeat comes, the guilt will be justly charged to them and be at their door.

Equally foolish and calamitous will be the nomination of Brown as Vice-President. The only wise course open to it will be to unite under the leadership of Greeley in relieving the country from the horrors of a repetition of four years more of Grantism. There are strong signs in the political horizon, daily growing more clear and distinct, that the coalition will be cemented. Such an event will at once dispel all fear of defeat, and give us political redemption. It will be a refreshing change when we shall have in the field, when the fight waxes warm, and danger keeps of the Democrats wavering, overtures will be made to Greeley, a bargain agreed on, and Brown withdrawn from the contest.

But what a beggarly sight, to see men who have been in the highest and most influential positions in the Democratic Party going after that Cincinnati Convention of sore-heads and traitors! Going after it, abjectly begging a bone, and a crust, of it! The Convention treated Mr. Belmont and those connected with him, just right. These shoddy-Democrats begged leave to get on board and take their seats with the Radicals. The latter told them to lick away, but they would not have the Democratic-like leaders of the once "unterrified." Democracy.

And now, now, as is natural to traitors, failed of betraying the Democratic party into the hands of the scoundrels at the Cincinnati, there are some of them meditating and devising how to turn the Democratic Convention into a Greeley Republican Assemblage for the nomination of some other second-hand Radical.

Such a course, now, is considerable off the Democratic Convention, when it shall meet, better than its nominal leaders, and utter a voice that men who care for their country can hear and follow.

MISSIONS AT DOWNIEVILLE AND STOCKTON.—On last Sunday, May 12th, Rev. Father Hennebery opened a mission for the inhabitants of Downieville, Sierra county. It will conclude on to-morrow (Sunday), May 19th. Rev. Father O'Neill on to-morrow commences a mission at Stockton. On Tuesday he will be joined by Father Hennebery and the two missionary servants of God will then conduct the religious exercises to a close. The amount of good which is being effected by the holy missionaries is incalculable in these localities, and O'Neill, it would be impossible to estimate properly, and it will only be known when they are receiving their glorious reward in the skies. We shall give details of these interesting missions.

GLEESON'S HISTORY OF THE CATHOLIC CHURCH IN CALIFORNIA.—We think it right to notify all desirous of possessing Father Gleeson's admirable History of the Catholic Church in California that there are a few copies remaining yet unsold which may be secured by early application. Bancroft & Co. and M. Flood of Market street, as also the Rev. Father Gleeson himself, near Natoma street, have each a small number for disposal. When these are sold the work will be out of print, and only some lucky chance will put it in the power of any person to secure it.

DEATH OF REV. FATHER GRIFFIN.—Died in Chicopee, Massachusetts, on the 3d May, after a painful and protracted illness, Rev. John Griffin, formerly pastor of Marysville, Cal., as well as of San Leandro and other parishes in this State. During his residence on the Pacific coast, he endeared himself to all by his piety, zeal, self-sacrifice and spirit of benevolence. He bore his long sickness with the resignation of a true Christian, and his death will be deplored by a wide circle of friends. R.I.P.

Very Rev. Father Dalton, of Napa Valley, on last Friday week, slipped as he stepped out of the stage, and broke his leg. We are extremely glad to hear that he is rapidly recovering.

MISSION AT SAINT LAKE.—Rev. Father Burchard, S. J., has left San Francisco in order to give a mission in Salt Lake. He was accompanied by Rev. Father Walsh pastor of the latter place.

Lucrezia Borgia.

Richard Boyle Davey has an article in May number of the Galaxy, which educates the character of Donna Lucrezia Gia, Duchess of Ferrara, as that of a virtuous woman, and he maintains that no one can investigate the subject as he has without coming to the same conclusion. In his opening paragraph he says: "Nothing can be more unjust than the way with incredulity when I assure them that Lucrezia Borgia never poisoned or murdered any one, and more, was never accused of such crimes by any sane historian, or even by her worst enemies. He says that the character ascribed to Lucrezia Borgia was an invention of Victor Hugo. "In 1833 Victor Hugo produced his celebrated drama of Lucrezia . . . The subject of this tragedy is known lodged in the preface by the author himself, and was suggested to him by the invention of his own imagination; but the injury done to the memory of the historical Duchess of Ferrera by this drama is still further, and a thousand fold, more terrible in the hands of the opera. Terrible plot is the same." . . . In other words, the famous scene in the last act of Victor Hugo's tragedy, is distorted in the opera of Donizetti. Here is how Donizetti the cue for his opera, aside from the opera and drama he "To the reader of history she is, the most pure, honored and unsullied of Alexander VI., mistress in succession of her two brothers, Cæsar of Valentine and Francis, Duke of Gandia. If we have no other evidence than the fact that nothing respecting her career has been known to her with these crimes, we might be led to believe that she should prove 'pays for every' except to purchase or win the favor of the Wolf the Allenaccies have flagged; and the Lamb should prove 'pays for every' . . . Of the seven sacraments of the Church, which will go far to make up the list of the seven deadly sins. The following particulars, who composed the Cabinet of Ferdinand, Queen of Naples, in which they fulfilled their duty: James Prior, C. D. Sullivan, Jr., John Ryan, C. D. O'Sullivan, P. J. Sullivan, John Kelly, Jr., Charles Matter, Mrs. Ryan, Mrs. Kelly, Jr., Mrs. Matter, Mrs. Sullivan, Mrs. Sullivan, Jr., Mrs. Sullivan, Jr., Mrs. Sullivan, Jr.,

IMMUNITY OF MURDER IN ENGLAND.

When the intrigues which preceded the passing of the Coercion Acts for Ireland first began, like vermin, to rustle in the straw, as we took pains to make an investigation into the criminal condition of England. Had our efforts but been seconded, with half as much warmth by the so-called Irish Members as the Carcolonists displayed against their country, there might have been some chance that their nefarious schemes would have been defeated. For it was in our power to show, and we took care to expose it, so that none could plead ignorance, that a Coercion Act was infinitely more required in England than in Ireland.

Thus, we gave cases of the most hideous description, as any who refer to our past pages may discover. We proved that not only were there more grievous crimes per cent. of population in England, but that the circumstance attending their commission were beyond comparison more alarming and horrible.

In like manner cited there were persons who knew beforehand what crime was about to be committed. Some of them appeared as witnesses, related with barbarous coolness the circumstances of the case, mentioned their fore-knowledge of the wicked intention, and admitted their passive complicity.

To most one of these cases, nor to any other that we have observed, did the coroners or the judges declare themselves shocked at the conduct of the witnesses, or administer a rebuke to them for locking on while murder was being done, for not trying to prevent crime, to take place, or for allowing the perpetrator to escape without a single effort made to arrest them. No, the judges and juries seemed callous.

Again we proved, by English official statistics, that a far greater proportion of murderous criminals escaped punishment in England than in Ireland, that in Ireland, Fenian or Irish crimes were done in England, and every such criminal was mildly dealt with, and many of those arrested escaped all punishment.

Since then, however, all that has occurred only strengthens our case. The most atrocious criminals have only to plead Irish sympathy and they are trusted immunity from their deserved punishment. One Behan, a Fenian, has but best to pocket his numerous persons in Brighton, and to have a confectionist hanged for her crime was all the judged guilty—but not hanged. The plea that some of her ancestors had been insane, and had committed crime, came in to save the life of one of the seven English criminals convicted up to that time, of murder, have escaped the gallows.

That the appalling laxity and leniency of the authorities in England to English criminals is the deepest dye, has been breeding its Nemesis. The crimes are becoming more and more horrible, and the tenderness of the judiciary to the criminals has become so flagrant as to excite public attention in England, are exciting restless and alarmed.

Having temporarily ceased to ruminate on Ireland for which they cannot discover, that the Saxons are free to gaze at the horrors of England and the cause of the English, but truths they have hitherto concealed—but the world should know that the cause of the English intellect is more guilty hereby—perceived lest the world should know that the English people, their own English justiciaries were infinitely more deserving of coercion than Ireland.

Thus the London Telegraph with partial horror at the appalling brutality of British justice. It cries out:—

"Something more monstrous than has been exposed in British justice. Either the band over her eyes has slipped or her scales are out of balance. Either the hand or the sword (?) rightly used by the goddess has completely gone out of order. Various judgments—some who should be the highest—have delivered lately by the Criminal Court, have, in certain instances, to confound our sense of morality and proportion."

In plain English, it impeaches the judgments as immoral and partial—partial (we would add) to murderers!

That is not a bad beginning for a confession. It proceeds with the same reserved caution. It finds that notoriously protects properly more than persons—the vice of a trading manufacturer, the "poor but proper feminated woman" be caught purloining a farmhood woman" be caught purloining a farmhood to save her starving children from death, when the law-dispensers are energetic and devout.

"But," it says, "when a specimen comes up of the wife-beaters and woman-bullies who are so shamefully rife among us (in England), the leniency of justice (?) towards these scoundrels is so notorious that nobody can wonder if the profession grow frequently unchecked."

In plain English it impeaches the magistracy and judges and juries of England with partiality—notorious partiality to brutal criminals.

It truly declares that "almost any day's proceedings might illustrate this strange topsy-turviness of the law"—but herein it shows its baneful candour. For it is not the law, but the administration of the law, which screens the villain! The laws have been altered which hanged persons for small thefts, but the villain is still in their administrators that prompted greater severity towards offenders against property than against persons. Of late crimes can not be allotted off the judges to the law now. However, the evil result is the same, and

ST. JOSEPH, PATRON OF THE CHURCH.

BY MARIE.

Hail! Patron of the Church of God! receive thy fitting trust!
O thou on Love's evangel page forever named "the Just!"
Well didst thou watch beside the manger crib, the shrine of straw, where Love had deigned to hide,
And safely bloomed, in lowly home, beneath thy tender care,
The Rootbud of a royal race, and Israel's Lily fair.
Those were thy treasures, fivefold one; this was the charge confirmed
On thee, O foster-father blest! O guardian of the Word!
And now the mystic Spouse of Christ thy pure protection craves,
While round her rock-built home of Love the wintry tempest raves,
While, searching for her hidden Gem, the Herod lifeless flood
Has drenched Bethlehem with streams of martyr-blood,
Accept the trust, and guard again the treasures of thy God,
And safely guide the Spouse of Christ with lily-blooming rod.
Support her steps till at her glance Egyptian idols fall,
And led her bloomets safely shine by Nazareth's rest and toil;
Direct the wondrous work of Love, O builder, wise and strong!
Till 'neath his finished Temple fair the gathered nations throng!
And be his Eucharistic shrine the star-led monarchs bring
The precious myrrh, the golden vow, the prayerful offering,
Thou shalt the grand prophetic dream in fair fulfilment view,
And mighty on the earth shall be Jehovah's name and glory!
For Joseph, Patron of the Church, accepts his fitting trust—Rest, faithful hearts, your game are safe, protected by "the Just."
Safe is the Shepherd high enthroned on Truth's eternal rock,
And safe, in Joseph's potent care, the universal flock—
Safe as the ransomed vessel bound to the celestial shore,
While wrath | Safe as the ransomed vessel bound to the celestial shore,

WAS ST. PETER EVER AT ROME?

Our readers are, of course, aware that Protestants, and infidels of every imaginable hue, deny that the Pope should be regarded in any sense as the successor of Saint Peter, and maintain that the throne of the Apostle never raised the Eternal City. The inference is that he could not have been Bishop of Rome, and that the claim of the Sovereign Pontiff to represent him is that of an unfounded pretender. Very recently, Indeed, the delusion of these assertions took place at Rome, the Protestant side of the question being sustained by two Waldensian ministers, Messrs. Sciarailli and Pigotti; and the Catholic by the learned Canon Fabiani. The controversy was admirably conducted, and the palm of victory was awarded to the defender of Catholic doctrine. So thorough was the overthrow which Canon Fabiani gave his adversaries that a reporter belonging to an Italian revolutionary journal, bitterly opposed to Catholicity, was obliged to confess that he left the hall fully convinced that "the personage called Saint Peter" had really been in the ancient capital of the world, and had suffered martyrdom there. Notwithstanding the defeat of the Waldensians, an Anglican divine, Canon Trevor, had temerity enough to assert in their support, in the columns of the London Times and repeat their fallacies! But a crushing rejoinder awaited him. In the pages of the Westminster Gazette, the ablest Catholic periodical published in England, a champion well known to and much loved by the people of San Francisco, the Rev. Father O'Ferrall, S. J., some years ago a resident of this city, precisely as Father Fabiani had treated Messrs. Pgotti and Sciarelli. Our readers will, we feel sure, thank us for reproducing Father O'Ferrall's splendid letters. We are enabled to do so by the kindness of the reverend gentleman himself, who sent us copies of the papers containing them. They are too long for publication in the issue of To-Morrow, so we shall divide them into two parts, and give one each week.

"WAS ST. PETER EVER AT ROME?"

Such is the title prefixed to two letters which appeared in the Times of last year, under the respective dates of June 3d and June 8th, and such is the title, or theme, of a dissertation in progress in the Eternal City between two Waldensian ministers, Sciarelli and Pigotti, and a well-known Catholic divine—the Canonico Fabiani. Whether the learned Canon Trevor will assign the first of the above mentioned letters to the Times borrowed no inspiration from the Waldensian orators, or they from the Canon, it is perhaps unimportant to inquire; but their arguments, or attempts at arguments, bear the stamp of a common origin, and reflect little credit on their employers. Had the Times' correspondent of last June, or their Roman fellow-laborers of the present February, confined themselves to the task of questioning the precise date of St. Peter's arrival in Rome, and the length of his episcopate, they might, we may have thrown light on points of remote history, and their holiday lucubrations would have passed unnoticed. The worldly and orators I speak of have taken a wider field and essayed a bolder task. One of the Times' writers contends, if I rightly remember, that St. Peter never entered Rome, but lived and died in what Protestants are fond to call the proper field of the Petrine labors—Babylonia! The other leisy towards ourselves, while we prove that the Roman view of St. Peter's mission, episcopate, and death is alone tenable; and that the Babylonian or Neoteric theory, washing the same subjects, is utterly untenable—opposed to history and tradition, and unsustained by any sound principle of criticism. Our first witness shall be Ignatius, bishop and martyr, commonly believed to have had personal intercourse with the Apostles Peter and John. He was martyred in Rome, A.D. 107. Shortly before his martyrdom he addressed to the Christians in Rome a letter still extant, in the fifth section of this he says, "Encourage the wild beasts that they make themselves my tomb. . . . Pray to Christ that I may become a victim through your means. I do not command you as Peter and Paul did. They were Apostles: I am a condemned man." . . . The commands of Peter and Paul here referred to were manifestly no general commands put forth, v. g., in the Apostolical epistles; St. Peter had addressed no such epistle to the Romans; besides the words going before refer to an attempt on the part of the Roman converts to prevent the martyrdom of their teachers. St. Ignatius prays the Romans not to prevent his martyrdom, as St. Peter and Paul had commanded and practised. Such, then, was the command given to the Romans by Peter on the eve of his martyrdom shows, we presume, that he was not at that time in Babylonia, but in or near Rome. Papias, Bishop of Jerusalem, and a disciple of John the Apostle, or another John contemporary with the Apostle (see Eusebius, Hist. Eccl. L. 2, c. 15), states that "Clement, writing to the wards stream and current of antiquity, and the Romans consist of the mixed and heterogeneous, in the decline of life, he indicted his letter to Peter, probably for the Apostle's writings give no information on the subject, he closed his ear to about the time of the persecution by Nero.

We purpose, in this paper, to show that the first of these accounts is alone true, and cannot be rejected without impeaching all ancient church history. We shall next show further that the second Babylonian theory (or, as it may be called, the Light-hof Milman-Trevor theory) is opposed to all history, negatived by tradition, and devoid of any foundation in those writings whence its advocates seek to derive their support, viz., the Acts of St. Luke, Pauline Epistles, and the first Epistle of St. Peter.

We confess we are ashamed to be forced by moderate Protestants into a controversy, on a subject which their own intuitive Cave may be considered to have entirely set at rest. We will not, with that learned doctor, inquire if "the needless question-ing of a history so well attested" as that of St. Peter's residence at Rome and his death in that city "may not in time open a wide gap to shake the credit of all history." (See Cave Life of St. Peter, ad. fin.) Nor will we insinuate with the learned editor of Cave, that as "few passages in history are more strongly confirmed than that which relates to the residence of the Apostle Peter at Rome," he who denies that fact must be waning in "honesty and candor." (See Stebbing, Notes of Cave's Peter, prænm.) We prefer crediting Canon Trevor and his associates with these sterling qualities, and we ask the same measure of courtesy ourselves, while we prove that the Roman view of St. Peter's mission, episcopate, and death is alone tenable; and that the Babylonian or Neoteric theory, washing the same subjects, is utterly untenable—opposed to history and tradition, and unsustained by any sound principle of criticism. Our first witness shall be Ignatius, bishop and martyr, commonly believed to have had personal intercourse with the Apostles Peter and John. He was martyred in Rome, A.D. 107. Shortly before his martyrdom he addressed to the Christians in Rome a letter still extant. In the fifth section of this he says, "Encourage the wild beasts that they make themselves my tomb. . . . Pray to Christ that I may become a victim through your means. I do not command you as Peter and Paul did. They were Apostles: I am a condemned man." . . . The commands of Peter and Paul here referred to were manifestly no general commands put forth, v. g., in the Apostolical epistles; St. Peter had addressed no such epistle to the Romans; besides the words going before refer to an attempt on the part of the Roman converts to prevent the martyrdom of their teachers. St. Ignatius prays the Romans not to prevent his martyrdom, as St. Peter and Paul had commanded and practised. Such, then, was the command given to the Romans by Peter on the eve of his martyrdom shows, we presume, that he was not at that time in Babylonia, but in or near Rome. Papias, Bishop of Jerusalem, and a disciple of John the Apostle, or another John contemporary with the Apostle (see Eusebius, Hist. Eccl. L. 2, c. 15), states that "Clement, writing to the wards stream and current of antiquity, and the Romans consist of the mixed and heterogeneous, in the decline of life, he indicted his letter to Peter, probably for the Apostle's writings give no information on the subject, he closed his ear to about the time of the persecution by Nero.

We purpose, in this paper, to show that the first of these accounts is alone true, and cannot be rejected without impeaching all ancient church history. We shall next show further that the second Babylonian theory (or, as it may be called, the Light-hof Milman-Trevor theory) is opposed to all history, negatived by tradition, and devoid of any foundation in those writings whence its advocates seek to derive their support, viz., the Acts of St. Luke, Pauline Epistles, and the first Epistle of St. Peter.

We confess we are ashamed to be forced by moderate Protestants into a controversy, on a subject which their own intuitive Cave may be considered to have entirely set at rest. We will not, with that learned doctor, inquire if "the needless question-ing of a history so well attested" as that of St. Peter's residence at Rome and his death in that city "may not in time open a wide gap to shake the credit of all history." (See Cave Life of St. Peter, ad. fin.) Nor will we insinuate with the learned editor of Cave, that as "few passages in history are more strongly confirmed than that which relates to the residence of the Apostle Peter at Rome," he who denies that fact must be waning in "honesty and candor." (See Stebbing, Notes of Cave's Peter, prænm.) We prefer crediting Canon Trevor and his associates with these sterling qualities, and we ask the same measure of courtesy ourselves, and shall they, therefore, be precipitately discarded or condemned to the number of the false or fabulous? If this liberty be indulged, farewell Church history; nay, it is to be feared whether the sacred story will be long able to maintain its divine authority." The vanity, put forth of late, whether in London or on the banks of the Tiber, against the Roman residence of St. Peter, have added nothing to those combated, by Cave, yet as they are endorsed with the respectable names of Michaelis, in Germany, and Bloomfield; and Milman) in this country, it may be well to set briefly what they are worth.

The exceptions taken against the recorded Roman episcopate of the Apostle Peter are chiefly of a negative kind. In one in-tance only is the semblance of a positive argument put on.

It is urged that the omission in the Pauline epistles (and in the Acts) of any mention of St. Peter's presence in Rome, or of his having founded a church there, is a conclusive proof that the venerable Apostle never reached that city, at least until the date of the latest among the Apostolic epistles. "These notices," says the reverend correspondent of the Times, under date June 3d, "satisfy all Protestant critics that St. Peter had never been at Rome up to the writing of the second Epistle of St. Peter, A.D. 67-68." Even were this so, the Roman episcopate of St. Peter and his residence and martyrdom in Rome, might still be proof against all reasonable question. The Acts of the Apostles, it is well known, do not profess to be a complete history of the Apostles

WEEKLY CALENDAR.

FOR ST. MARY'S ENSUING WEEK:

May:
26—Sunday—Trinity Sunday.
27—Monday—St. Mary Magdalene de Pazzi, Virgin. St. John Baptist de la Salle.
28—Tuesday—St. Mary, Mother of Christians.
29—Wednesday—St. Maximin, Martyr.
30—Thursday—Corpus Christi. Rooting of obligation.
31—Friday—St. Angela Merici, Virgin. St. Petronilla, Virgin.
June:
1—Saturday—Of the Octave.

THE MONITOR:

THE ONLY

Irish and Catholic Journal in California.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

SATURDAY.....MAY 25, 1872.

THE STOCK EXCHANGE AGREEMENT.

During the past month or six weeks the stock market in San Francisco has experienced a series of rapid and violent changes. Towards the middle of April the prices of mining shares advanced to a most extravagant figure. There was nothing whatever to justify the rise. Save and except in one important mine, no great developments of ore were reported. Yet the value of pretty nearly every one of the hundred and fifty which are called on the Board, even as though it had become established as a source of unbounded wealth. Many people who had been fortunate to buy stocks when they were extremely low and had good sense enough to sell them when every one wanted to buy, no matter at what figure, managed to come out of their speculations considerably enriched. Stories of large fortunes gained in this way is an incredibly short space of time, were bruited about and religiously believed. Then, as a natural consequence, the gambling spirit seized upon a large portion of the community, and the desire for acquiring riches is one of the most powerful of all that agitate the human mind. Money was withdrawn from savings banks, where it was earning steady and fair interest, property was sold at a sacrifice, homesteads were mortgaged to their full value, capital was withdrawn from honorable trade, and business fraternity was pulled all in order to invest in mining stocks.

Probably not one out of every ten knew where the mine, the shares of which he or she bought, was located; and certainly not one out of every twenty had the slightest idea of its genuine value. But the fever was abroad, and few were cool enough to make inquiry into the bona fide merits of their investment. "Wild Cat" mines, that never payed a dividend or showed a likelihood of one, mines from which not an ounce of ore of any description had ever been dug, mines that nobody appeared to know anything about, were eagerly sought after, and the price of "shares" went up day after day. The brokers were making money almost as fast as they could count it, and were actually unable to fulfill all the commissions with which they were entrusted. The mining millennium was apparently at hand. Labor was to be abolished, hard work known no more, and everybody, young and old, gentle and simple, was to be made rich forever. Some of the city newspapers did their level best to fan the excitement. The mining millennium was approaching fast

The Eight-Hour Law in the Senate.

The following, which we copy from the Congressional Globe, will be highly interesting to workingmen. They can learn from it who are their friends, and who their foes at Washington. We call special attention to the remarks of Mr. Casserly. They reflect faithfully the broad, liberal and generous spirit of the man, and compare more then favorably with the utterances of Mr. Cole. The amendment of the Senate Committee to which reference is made, was to the effect that since the hours of labor had been reduced one-fifth, that is from ten to eight, the pay should be proportionately diminished. It seems that this Eight-Hour Law was differently interpreted in different localities. In some places the men got as much for their eight hours' work as they had been in the habit of receiving for ten; while in other places the pay was reduced. The proposition upon which the Senate debated was the principle of refunding the stoppage to the artisans who had suffered from it.

MR. WILSON.—Mr. President, this is a very simple proposition. There is a large body of men in the country desirous of reducing the hours of labor. I think the hours of labor during the last thirty or forty years have been reduced from ten hours a day on an average. Especially is this true among skilled laborers. * * *

MR. MORTON.—Mr. President, I was present when the eight-hour law was passed, and I remember very distinctly what was my understanding at the time, and I think what was the understanding of the Senate. It was that the period of labor should be reduced two hours a day without reducing the price. It was urged in the argument on that occasion that it was advisable to try the experiment in the Government workshops, so as to see whether there could be any loss in the actual amount of labor, or whether there would be. I think that was the understanding in the Senate is shown by the fact that the Senator from Ohio (Mr. Sherman) offered an amendment to the bill declaring that the pay should be reduced in the same proportion as the time, and that the amendment was voted down by quite a large majority. The amendment tested the understanding of the Senate upon the subject.

The Attorney-General, Mr. Evarts, however, gave an opinion that the law simply provided for reducing the time of labor, and authorized a reduction of price in the same proportion. That opinion, I think, was in direct conflict with the understanding of the Senate; but a subsequent Attorney-General under the present administration, I am informed, gave a different opinion to the President, and the President issued an order directing that the workmen in the Government workshops should receive the full price without a deduction on account of the reduction in time. But in the meantime there had been in several of the Government workshops, for instance at Springfield and at Rock Island, a reduction in the price in proportion to the diminution in time, while at the other arsenals and workshops the full price was paid. I understand the object of the Senator from Massachusetts is to obtain an equalization, and all these men on the arsenal level exactly. As most of the Government workmen have obtained the full price the object should. I believe that this is just on every principle, and that there should be an equality in the price paid.

It has been said that the experiment that was to be tried in the Government workshops has failed. I am not satisfied that it has failed. * * *

MR. CASSERLY.—I am in favor of striking out the amendment of the Senate committee. I am in favor of retaining the second section of the bill as it passed the Senate. But, sir, even if thus far it had not produced all the good results expected of it by its friends, are we therefore to say it has failed? It has hardly had a trial: and the trial always has been at the hands of its enemies. We all know that the reduction of the hours of labor from ten to twelve hours, made, if I remember correctly, by the administration of Martin Van Buren, did at first produce some trouble and some consequences that were not desirable. We also remember well that after a while the producing power of the American mechanic, the natural energies of free country, asserted themselves, and production went on, not at a diminished rate, but at an increased rate.

Whenever the question is fairly before the Senate, and the Senate is disposed to hear it discussed, it can be shown by the best experience, even under very adverse circumstances, that eight hours a day form precisely that period of daily labor which enables the human laborer to prolong for the greatest period of the average duration of life his productive capacity. It is not a question of to-day, nor of six months, nor of a year, nor of five years. The question is whether it is or is not in the interest of the State to have the productive energies of the laborer maintained for the greatest period of the average life of man.

I repeat, it is true according to the deductions of scientific men, who approach this great problem as a pure question of science, that eight hours are the hours of the human system, that eight hours are the proper number of the day's work; then I say it is in the highest interest of an enlightened State to adopt the eight-hour system, and so make it. We have to look to our own interests or to the importance of the question, and not to the opinion of a failed experiment, without half a trial, the efforts to ascertain whether, indeed, the deductions of science on this great subject and the promptings of humanity are alike delusive and false.

But, sir, these questions are not before the Senate now. Perhaps I should apologize for introducing them so incidentally. The simple question now is, whether we have reached that point where we can restore to the Government workmen throughout the country, by paying to such of them as have not had it the same rate of wages for their labor already paid to all the other workmen in the Government employment. If any differences can be shown between the workmen at Springfield and Rock Island, which were not removed their full wages by one-fifth, and those who did receive them, I am ready to consider it. None such has been suggested. I believe none such can be shown. On the contrary, I imagine that the world has not to show a body of skilled workmen superior or equal to the workmen in the Government shops at Springfield. The arms investigation which attracted so much attention, disclose the extraordinary fact, I might say the unparalleled fact, in the history of Government, that in your armory at Springfield you produce the finest arms of precision that have ever been manufactured from a single gun by a Government for less price than they can be made in the very best private workshops.

I will not delay this measure of justice and equality to our workmen by any further remarks. However Senators may differ as to the merits of the eight-hour system, they should not differ as to our placing all the Government workmen on the same footing as to their wages. That, I believe, is the object of the Senator from Massachusetts in the amendment, and no morning hour is necessary for. Who will refuse it? I repeat, let us settle the question amendment on Friday. Let us insert the House amendment in the bill, striking out from it the House proviso, which is a simple contradiction of all the rest of the section, and, indeed, nullifies it utterly. We have too long delayed this short act of justice. Let us perform it now observfully and generously.

MR. COLE.—I am one of those who believe that the laborer is worthy of his hire, and would be among the very last who would do me know that it sends to the Siberian mines those Poles who are guilty of the diabolical crime of wearing their beards in the fashion of their own country rather than in the Russian fashion? We know that it has forbidden the use of the Polish language in its schools; that it has made it a penal offense for a Polish clergyman to conduct public worship in the popular tongue, and that it has compelled the Polish journals to use the Russian language. We are aware that it has regulated the dress of the Poles with such minuteness that no man or woman dared to wear any article which may suggest the wearer's nationality; we know that free speech, free thought, free intercourse—everything that men hold most dear in this world—have been stamped out by the White Eagle of Russia and that a ruthless and remorseless military police watches with eagle eye in every town in Poland for the slightest manifestation of impatience of their restrictions, and for the smallest word that breathes a spark for liberty, and punishes such atrocious misdemeanors with the most horrible severity. Yes, this is now the Czar tres a poor Poland, who furnished us in the darkest hour of our struggle for Independence with a Kosciusko and a Pulaski. Again we tell General Sheridan not to accept at the hands of the Czar the decoration of the White Eagle of Russia. If he does, we will say to him, as Othello said to Iago, "Your reputation shall shake their heels. "Ah! my children," resumed the Pope, "the future has strange surprises in store for the world. Who, two years ago, would have imagined that we should see a Prussian army in France? I venture to say that your wisest heads thought it a thousand times more likely that the Pope would be at Malta than the Emperor Napoleon in London. And yet, you see, I have stripped Malta, Sardinia it is true; but God, who temporarily takes away dominions, can return it a hundred fold. Is the dynasty of the head of the Church less secure? I may be driven out for a time, but when you return to your grand-children come to make visits to Rome they will exclaim, how its temples are now by greater or less, see, as you do today, an end man, robed in white, pointing the way to heaven to the countless millions of human consciences. It is here not subjects near home, but we have hearts far away and everywhere." The Pope then referred to Ireland, and spoke in warm praise of the fidelity of the Irish race of that country. "You see, Prince," said he, "with persecution, does it does not make us worse Catholics. Your royal mother is now pursuing a different course from her predecessors towards that country, and you will find that good Catholics are always loyal subjects." He added that Ireland would require all the watchful energy of her devoted prelates, on whom he passed a high eulogy. "For," said he, "the world, not of Protestantism, but of anarchy and infidelity, is abroad, I fear, in the future." The conversation then was alluded to and the Pope and the Princess—the latter with great warmth—both agreed that no association tending to uproot religion and the ties of the family tie any chance of taking root in the island of the West. The audience was infinitely more protracted than the Sovereign Pontiff usually grants, and both sides seemed charmed with the interview, and the Prince was made to promise another visit before leaving Rome.

A recent decree of M. Thiers subjects all French citizens between the ages of twenty and forty to liability to military service, without the privilege of substitution, truly these fathers of children are enraged who have not less than four children dependent upon them.

HOTELS.

Removal.

THE SECOND STREET HOUSE

Has Removed to 113 Second street, Between Howard and Minna. Furnished Rooms to let with or without board, on the most reasonable terms. CHARLES MAHONEY, Proprietor.

CENTRAL HOTEL,

615 and 617 SACRAMENTO STREET,

Between Broadway and Pacific.....San Francisco

THIS NEW, LARGE AND COMMODIOUS Hotel has been thoroughly renovated by the undersigned, and is now open. M. FARRELL, late proprietor of the Brooklyn House, where he will be happy to receive his numerous friends and the public in general. Everything for first-class, he respectfully solicits a continuance of their former patronage.

There is a first-proof safe in the House, where money and valuables can be kept at the risk of the proprietor.

The Central House Coach will be at each car depot and steamboat landing, to convey passengers to the House free of charge.

Price of board, with the House.

Parties calling for their friends to the House, or who expect any, will please notify MICHAEL FARRELL, and he will attend to them on their arrival and forward them to their friends with due care, and thus save much trouble.

The strictest attention will be paid to the comfort of the patrons of this House.

1870-tf MICHAEL FARRELL, Proprietor.

FRANKLIN HOTEL,

615 AND 617 PACIFIC STREET,

Between Sacramento and Montgomery.....San Francisco.

HUGH CURRAN.....Proprietor.

Board, per week.....$4 00
Board and Lodging, single rooms.....5 00
Single Meals, 25 cents. Lodging, 25 cents.

Free Coach to and from the House.

Passengers and baggage conveyed to the House free of charge. Carriage in attendance.

A City Directory, and all the city papers taken.

RAILROAD HOUSE,

Corner of Sansome and Pacific streets, San Francisco.

IS NOW OPENED TO THE PUBLIC.

P. CARRLY,

(Late of the Tremont House) where he will be happy to receive his friends and the public in general.

The Railroad House is situated in the most central place, with Stewart, Sutter and other railroad cars passing the door every few minutes, and Omnibuses at every steamboat landing.

The best attention will be paid to the comfort and convenience of guests.

Board and Lodging per week.....$5 to $7

Board and Lodging per month.....$20 to $30

Every accommodation will be given to families. Horse, carriage and saddle animals can be kept at the risk of the proprietor.

Free Coach to the House.

mch8 P. CARRLY, Proprietor.

Thirty-Two large Double-Column Pages every Month for One Dollar a Year.

THE YOUNG CRUSADER,

AN ILLUSTRATED

CATHOLIC MONTHLY MAGAZINE

—FOR—

Choice Reading

—AND—

Good Pictures.

Read with interest by all, and with special delight and profit by the younger members of the family.

The Crusader is now in its fifth year, and has a circulation of 10,000 copies. Thought Copies Free to those who ask for them. Back Numbers always on hand.

Any Catholic Priest or Nun may get one free to those who get up Clubs.

Liberal Discount on Sunday Schools.

Send One Dollar (one Year's subscription) by mail, and address to

REV. WILLIAM BYRNE, Boston, Mass.

New and Important Publications.

THE LIFE, PROPHECIES & REVELATIONS

—OF THE—

VENERABLE MARY ANNE TAIGI.

Her recently supposed connection with the prophecy of the Holy Father. Also, a full account of this venerable woman a most entertaining book at this time.

VERONICA;

OR,

Devotions to the Holy Face of our Lord.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL PRAYER AND HYMN BOOK, with 48 beautiful illustrations of the Mass; the most perfect book of instruction that has not been brought to the attention of the Sunday-schools, and it is put out at a price within the reach of the Sunday-schools, and it is put out at a price within the reach of the Sunday-schools, and it is put out at a price within the reach

DISCOVERIES OF SCIENCE.

Oh! better than great men of science,
They've got me motivathered and vexed,
Not knowin', by steady appliance,
What figure they'll make of me next!
They say we're descended from monkeys—
They say that our fathers were apes!
Of course we're related to donkeys,
And sure that are longest in shapes;
But murther! to think that our daddy
Is proven to be, by this time,
Not Adam, nor warm-hearted Paddy,
But some dirty chimpanzee!

Then, where was their garden of Eden?
Let their jography answer me that.
With the cold boy himself in their readin'
They'll be makin' the serpent a cat!
Or else shall discover the apple
Was never an apple at all,
But only a kind, that is dapple,
Just to make a fine temperance bowl!
Of grape, that is gamin' with juleps,
The crature! who plack it expel.
That Eve was not up to his mess,
And that was the reason she fell.

We're a station or two above monkeys,
A station they're honored by me,
And Genesis tells us them donkeys
The father of man's pedigree;
Or sense that is strong I'm natisfied,
In spite of their science and fhun,
Nor bold with that great Homer, Bryant,
That monkeys descended from us.

Ooh! surely the world is advancin',
And bound with knowledge we swim!
Right in the sea we go preachin',
And the sharks have no secrets to tell.
And certain the next thing they'll mention,
To explode at once any-save full moon,
Some comethary's pop-eye to invasion
Will murther the man in the moon!
And surely as Satan live water,
Or kindred can sherbah a spite,
I'll not hang him up for manslaughter,
But for filthy cold blooey outright!

O'LYRE.

CATHOLIC ITEMS.

Eastern.

A new academy is being built for the Sisters of St. Joseph, St. Joseph's Valley, near Emmetsburg, Md. It is to cost $100,000.

Rev. John Wall, pastor of St. Agnes' Church, West Chester, Pennsylvania, departed this life on the 19th ult., in the 36th year of his age. He was a holy, energetic, and beloved pastor of souls, and his early loss is deeply felt.

Mr. Patrick Donahoe, of Boston, celebrated the fiftieth birthday of his Most Rev. Bishop Williams by the gift to his Catholic fellow-citizens of St. John's Hall, worth at least $50,000. Such an act speaks his own praise.

We regret to learn that Rev. Father Lynch of Waterbury, Conn., successor to Rt. Rev. Headbrooke, the new Bishop of Providence, was thrown from a carriage in that city on the 6th inst., and had his leg broken below the knee.

Sister Mary Marina Joyce of the order of Sisters of Mercy, died at the convent connected with the Academy of Mount St. Agnes, near Baltimore on the 23d ult., in the 25th year of her age, and the fourth of her religious profession. Deceased was a native of Fermoy, county Cork, Ireland; migrated to the United States in the year 1866, and up to the date of her entrance into religion, October, 1868, residing principally in Washington City, D. C.

Death of Father McMahon.—Father McMahon, a Catholic priest of considerable renown, died last week at Hadlock, died on the 27th ult. at Reynolds' Station, Ind., after a brief illness. Father McMahon will be remembered as the man who accompanied the first Fenian raid into Canada, and was captured after the battle of Ridgeway while attending to the wants of the dead and dying. He was kept in prison in Canada for a couple of years and finally released. The hardships to which he was there subjected resulted in the disease which ultimately caused his death.—Buffalo Courier.

Rev. E. F. Wadhams, for the past twenty-two years a priest in Albany Diocese, was consecrated Bishop of Ogdensburg at the Catholic Cathedral in Albany, on Sunday, May 5th, by the Most Rev. Archbishop McCloskey, of New York, assisted by Rt. Rev. Bishop J. J. Conroy and several other Bishops from various sections of the country and a number of deacons and sub-deacons. Rev. Clarence Walworth, Pastor of St. Mary's Church, delivered an eloquent and appropriate sermon.

On Monday evening, April 30th, in the beautiful Convent Chapel of Our Lady of Mercy, Manchester, N. H., Miss Mary Russell (in religion Sister Mary Clare), Miss Mary Sullivan (Sister Aloysius), Miss Rose Carroll (Sister Rose), Miss Margaret Harrison (Sister Monica), received the white veil from the hands of the Rt. Rev. Dr. Bacon. On the following morning, Miss Teresa McEntegart (in religion Sister Mary Helena), Miss Anne Sadlier (Sister Mary Gabriel), were admitted to the holy profession, and received the black veil. The both occasions the Bishop delivered a most instructive and eloquent sermon.

At the Convent of the Good Shepherd on Monday morning, May 6th, the following young ladies took the habit and were received into that order: Miss Mary Fitzpatrick, of Sterling, Ill., in religion, Sister Mary of St. Ignatius; Miss Kate Fitzpatrick, same place, in religion, Sister Mary of St. Regina, Miss Rose Moore, of Perry county, Ill., in religion, Sister Mary of St. Ignatius; Miss Anastatia Walsh, of New Orleans, in religion, Sister Mary of St. Camillus. Following made their vows: Sister Mary of Blessed John Berkmans, in the world, Miss Kate Cecilia Smith, Mt. Louis; Sister Mary of St. Bernard, in the world, Mary Ivers, of St. Paul, Minn.; Sister Mary of St. Margaret, in the world Bridget Morris, Rt. Rev. P. J. Ryan officiated, assisted by Rev. Father Bordenave, S. J. The ceremony was witnessed only by a few invited friends. The Bishop then delivered a very interesting and touching sermon.

On Wednesday evening, May 1, a very interesting sermonoy took place at the Convent of the Visitation, in Georgetown, D. C. The occasion being the Baptism of Mrs. ex-President Taylor's daughter and grandaughter, at present residing in Fayette street in that city. The beautiful ceremonies of the Roman Catholic Church were performed by the Rev. Father Healy, President of Georgetown College, and was witnessed by a large number of friends, among whom were several friends of the fallen question. It may be well to state that several of the members of the Taylor family have already embraced the Catholic faith within the last few years, and the reception into the church of the remaining portion of the family must be very gratifying to them, as well as to good Father Healy, who stood in the holy cause of religion has brought about this good work.

The Consecration of Rev. Dr. Curtis.—Dr. Curtis, recently rector of Mt. Calvary Protestant Church of New York, has been received into the Holy Catholic Church in England, whither he went two or three months ago, in order to consult with some of the eminent churchmen of Great Britain; such as Dr. Newman, the famous oratorian, upon the great truths of religion. Our contemporary, the Baltimore Gazette, says the step he has taken has "degraded" Dr. Curtis in the position of a layman. We never knew before that a layman's position was one of degradation either comparatively or positively. Of one thing we are quite sure, Bishop Whittingham can never degrade him from the high place he holds in the hearts of his former parishioners and of the entire Protestant community of Baltimore. They may differ from Dr. Curtis, but they esteem and love him still. We call his submission and conversion to the Faith with unfeigned joy.

Death of Rev. Theodrus Brogan.—The St. Jo (Mo.) Gazette has the following: Rev. Theddeus Brogan, pastor of the Catholic Church at Brookfield, was drowned on Tuesday last in a lagoon or creek, twenty miles north of Linneus, under the following circumstances: On Sunday evening last he was called to administer the last sacraments to one of his flock in a dying condition, who resided in Sullivan county. The journey to the place, thirty miles from Brookfield, could not be accomplished at night fall, especially as the night was dark and rainy and the creeks swollen. Next morning the priest was in a two-horse buggy, hired at the livery stable of Mr. Needles, of Brookfield. His performed the journey safe, attended to the dying Christian, at whose house he staid all night, and having said Mass and received the holy communion next morning, he set out on his journey homewards. During the night it had rained heavily, and the creeks and rivers were much fuller than on the previous day. While on the way he met a good old man on foot, traveling to Brookfield, whom he kindly took into his buggy, and gave him the reins to drive for him. After a short time they came to the lagoon or ravine, filled with water from Locust Creek. It was spanned by a temporary bridge on posts and without the two balustrade. The water was two feet over the bridge, and the driver having nothing to direct his course in guiding the horses drove them stubborn over the bridge, the priest and the horses

WAS ST. PETER EVER AT ROME?

THIRD LETTER.

The Babylonian theory as to St. Peter's apostolate and death appears to me not only extravagant but atrocious. It is at war with all probabilities of the case, with all history, with all criticism. In my last letter I had occasion to mention Dr. Cave as one of those writers to whose learned labors on the subject of St. Peter's arrival in Rome, Protestants of the present day might well differ. I called him foremost among his brethren; I believe him to have been so. On the question of the Babylonian residence devised of late years for St. Peter, I have to bring forward a Protestant critic and historian—Dr. Lardner—second to Dr. Cave alone in learning, and equal to him in honesty and candor. This authentic writer, in vol. III., ch. 17, of his works, after a brief sketch of the travels and labors of St. Peter, continues in these words: "As the foregoing is the most likely account of St. Peter's travels which I have been able to form, I do not see any reason to believe that he was ever in Chaldæa," and having cited Origen, Eusebius, Jerome, Ephrem Syrus, and Gregory Nazianzen, as testimonies to the fact of his preaching and martyrdom in Rome, he asks in a tone of just indignation: "Why do none of these writers take in Babylon or Pontus or Chaldæa, as the Apostle Peter's province? Once more," he continues, "I might make a collection of Christian writers who speak of Peter's having been at Rome, and why does not mention Babylon? We have not in ancient Christian writers any good assurance of his (St. Peter's) ever having been at Babylon." See Lardner's works, 1oc. cit. p. 545. (London: Ad. 1787.)

Besides the concurrent testimony of all the ancient church, from the martyr Ignatius (first successor of Evodius, A.D. 69) down to the last of the Fathers, we are in a position to prove the martyrdom of St. Peter at Rome from other and higher sources. The 31st chapter of St. John, v. 19, quadds a remarkable prophecy of our Lord relating to the time and manner of the death that awaited Peter. "Amen, amen, I say to thee, when thou shalt stretch forth thy hands, and another shall bind thee and lead thee whither thou wilt not." "This, he said," continues the Evangelist, "signifying by what kind of death he should glorify God."

(Gospel of St. John, xxi. 18, 19.) The short indication was clearly to our mind that of martyrdom. The Apostle St. John manifestly alludes to it as an event which had taken place in the time of his writing, and which was well and widely known to Christians as having glorified God. The solemn and almost mournful language in which the divinely-doomed Apostle alludes in his First Epistle (ch. v. 6) of this prophecy of his Lord, and its certain and near approaching fulfilment, seem to us to call for the attention of Christians on the event itself when it did occur, and "glorify" the Lord by His Servant. Dionysius of Corinth (A.D. 170) bears testimony to the same fact.

Besides the concurrent testimony of all the ancient church, from the martyr Ignatius (first successor of Evodius, A.D. 69) down to the last of the Fathers, we are in a position to prove the martyrdom of St. Peter at Rome from other and higher sources. The 31st chapter of St. John, v. 19, quadds a remarkable prophecy of our Lord relating to the time and manner of the death that awaited Peter. "Amen, amen, I say to thee, when thou shalt stretch forth thy hands, and another shall bind thee and lead thee whither thou wilt not." "This, he said," continues the Evangelist, "signifying by what kind of death he should glorify God."

(Gospel of St. John, xxi. 18, 19.) The short indication was clearly to our mind that of martyrdom. The Apostle St. John manifestly alludes to it as an event which had taken place in the time of his writing, and which was well and widely known to Christians as having glorified God. The solemn and almost mournful language in which the divinely-doomed Apostle alludes in his First Epistle (ch. v. 6) of this prophecy of his Lord, and its certain and near approaching fulfilment seem to us to call for the attention of Christians on the event itself when it did occur, and "glorify" the Lord by His Servant. Dionysius of Corinth (A.D. 170) bears testimony to the same fact.

* Justice does best feel to trouble bosoms,
And none can have abuse or blame
But strong suspicion.

Within the last few decades of years, the sites of Nineveh and Babylon have been explored by many an English traveler. Some of these, like Layard and Rev. Henry Seager, although not Christians, yet, like men of no neighborhood, and kept on record whatever ancient traditions they found current among the people. Layard, in one of those travelers record a single tradition of a single Church, village, or hamlet, as the legend to the effect that the chief of the Apostles founded a Church, or even preached that country.

The Patriarch of Nineveh, Boschen Benni, a native of the country he presides over, is now sojourning in this island. He denies that in any devotional or liturgical book of the country, or any popular usage of any sect or tribe inhabiting the neighborhood of Mosul or Bagdad, or any portion of those districts, there is to be found a single allusion to an Apostolate of Peter exercised in their country. On the contrary, most of their liturgical forms, and the usages were by Divine command to evangelize the city of Rome."—Mod St. Peter, according to our modern views, made Babylonia the field of his Apostolic labors, is it possible that no popular tradition to that effect should exist? To a candid inquirer of whatever religion, such absolute silence on such a point must appear utterly inconceivable with the assumption of Bloomfield, Milman, and our late friends, of a Chaldæan Apostolate of Peter. The monstrous hypothesis is backed up by assumptions equally unsupported and equally monstrous as itself. It is not true that Babylon was in Peter's time the head or chief city of the Jews of dispersion. Before that period the Jews of Babylon had moved to Seleucia, and the Jews of Nearda and Nisibis were the only spot in the Babylonian Satrapy where a colony of them. Josephus, who knew well the world around him, was not to be found. It is not that the enumeration "Pontus, Galatia, Cappadocia, Asia and Bithynia," at the head of the Apostle's letter is unnatural for one writing from the city of Rome. It is quite the contrary. An arc of a circle from left to right (the most natural of all lines) would pass from Pontus Romana to Bithinium, both frivolous and antiondad. Admitting them, there is no difficulty. If one separate in favor of application as a disproof of our established thesis. But unfortunately a gratuitous and false construction of dates has added to the paradogion of Scaricli and the assertion of the Babylonian residence of Peter. Eusebius and Foggini are sufficiently detailed to satisfy all candid inquirers, and reconcile the notices of 58, Luke and Paul with Peter's superintendence of the Roman Church during the last five-and-twenty years of his life. A more satisfactory chronology, however, the fruit of many years labor and of unrivaled learning, will be found in the pages of Xavier Patrizi monstrous perversion of Scripture and critical literature in the Collegio Romano. The scholar who looks into the commentaries of Father Patrizi on Scripture and on Acts Apostolorum, will find, with the solution of many other difficulties of biblical chronology, the difficulty of the twenty-five years of Peter's episcopate freed from all perplexity, and the truth of history established in the clearest and most satisfactory manner. Meantime, we address ourself to a few remarks in the paralogisms and blunders exhibited by the impugners of St. Peter's episcopate.

The first arrival of St. Peter at Rome took place, according to the general estimate of Catholic historians, in the beginning of the reign of the Emperor Claudius. Eusebius and Chronicle, as Rosenius and Arnoux have it, or more definitively in the second year, anno secundo, of the reign of Claudius, as St. Jerome, in his edition of the Chronicle of Eusebius, dates the event. The second year of the reign of Claudius, however, is not known, as in the common chronology, as corresponding to A.D. 42, or 43, or sometime 44, according to a complete or fractional year; is regarded, or the

* The writer has conversed much with Most Rev. Upper Shaldea, Archbishop of Mosul, on the above subject. The Babylonian theory quite startles the Syrian prelate. It was never heard of in his country. See his book, "Traditions of the Syrian Church."

† We say general, as the respected Prof. Christian Schoen, de Gen Peter in Rome at a later date. Cephalus supposes the reign in its end of January or beginning of February, 41 (Hermias, Rom. Eccl. p. 97).

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

GERMANY.

Labor and Capital at Berlin

A correspondent at Berlin writes: The dispute which has broken out here between the masters and employés is in some respects different from an ordinary strike. There are few towns where so strong a feeling of hostility between labor and capital prevails as at Berlin; the almost total want of suitable dwellings for the lower classes, and the great increase in the cost of the necessaries of life have made the position of the workmen exceptionally hard, while the contrast is the more imposed than ever by the rapid rise of fortunes among those who employ. This is partly caused by the mania of speculation which has lately invaded Berlin. Of the endless new companies, which now daily come into existence many are started by the proprietors of industrial undertakings, who invest a sharer representing a capital considerably in excess of the value of the property, and maintain the majority of them for themselves, thus securing a decisive vote in the board of directors. They then continue to manage the undertaking after having sold the most of their shares, and they remain also most as independent as before. This though nominally the masters do not interfere in the management, they expect their dividends, and as the annual value of the shares is less than the nominal value, the difference has to be made by reducing expenses. It is evident that under such a system the workmen cannot expect an increase of wages, and the well-known calculations which have formerly existed between employer and employed have disappeared. Strikes have consequently been incessant since public companies have become the order of the day, but this is not until the last week there has been any combined action of the masters against the men. The present conflict began about a fortnight ago. The journeyman carpenters employed in the construction of a monument in the Thiergarten to commemorate the German victories, had a dispute about wages at Easter, with their employer, and at length declared that they would stop work if he did not give way. Their demand was reported that this was the commencement of a general strike of the carpenters, but it did not take place, when ended in a victory for the men and the master carpenters had to accede to the demands of their men. The example was followed by the stone masons, and after a short struggle they also gained a victory. The carpenters who had struck were replaced by new men, but these naturally joined them after working a few hour followed the example of their predecessors. The masters then had recourse to the law, and if the men did not return to their work they would send a writ to the bailiffs to have them turned out. The men refused to yield, and the masters having carried out the threat, upwards of 2,000 men were thrown out of employment. The strike has now lasted a week, and neither side shows any disposition to make concessions. Some of the workmen on strike took employment at the Wahlalla Theatre, at which a meeting of workmen was held, addressing to the men's demands. It was asserted at this meeting that some of the masters were trying to separate from their colleagues, and it seems probable that this will be the case, as the loss caused by the strike has already caused heavy losses to the employers. As for the men they have numerous supporters. They are still at work subscribe half a thaler (1s 6d) ——— to the weekly fund for the strikers.

Society formed between the masters carpenters, so as to bring the whole force of the employers of Berlin against the men now on strike.

Cardinal Prince Hohenlohe and the German Empire.

COLOGNE, May 1.

The appointment of Cardinal Prince Hohenlohe as the representative of the German Empire at the Vatican is a serious blow to that section of the Liberal party who fondly hoped that Prince Bismarck had dug an impassible gulf between the Imperial Government and the Papacy.

To those, however, who, though personally disinterested in the matter, have carefully watched the course of the Chancellor in the ministry within the last few weeks to the Roman Question, the nomination can cause little or no surprise. It must have been decided, and the time chosen for it was the enormous vital power latent in the Catholic element in Germany that the hostile attitude of the Pope and the Curia since Prince Bismarck committed his tremendous blunder in the Falk laws has called forth. The best authority at Cathoicism in the debates in the "Parish Chamber" and "School Inspection Bill" would overthrow the whole fabric of the clerically established sufficiently demonstrate the fact that the Government was powerless to counteract the omin

WEEKLY CALENDAR.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING JUNE 1.

Sunday—Sunday within the Octave of Corpus Christi.
Monday—Of the Octave.
Tuesday—Of the Octave. Apostolic Confessor.
Wednesday—Of the Octave.
Thursday—Octave Day of Corpus Christi.
Friday—Sacred Heart of Jesus.
Saturday—St. Peter Celestine, Pope and C. onf.

THE MONITOR,

THE BEST

Irish and Catholic Journal in California.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

SATURDAY.....JUNE 1, 1872.

MR. HEMPHILL'S LECTURE.

Our efforts to secure space last week for Father Burke's great lecture on "O'Connell," prevented us unfortunately from becoming attention upon Mr. Hemphill's lecture on "Ireland and the Irish." We are consoled, however, by a conviction that nobody will accuse us of doing the latter gentleman any injustice, or of exhibiting undue preference for the discourse of the Dominican orator. We are rather of opinion that the warmest admirers of the pastor of Calvary Church will not venture to assert that the lecture was, as a literary treat, equal to that of Father Burke; and we are quite sure, moreover, that Mr. Hemphill's natural modesty will not allow him to make a complaint.

A large audience assembled in Pacific Hall, on the 22d May, to hear the long promised discourse, and we are afraid they departed therefrom somewhat disappointed. Those who expected to hear fierce denunciations of "Romanism" were disappointed, because, for once, Mr. Hemphill laid aside his controversial weapons. Those who expected to see edifying charity exhibited in the claim upon the Irish Celts were likewise disappointed, because a flatter or duller lecture was never delivered by any man pretending to taste and culture. In brief the lecture was a dead failure, a palpable fiasco.

Mr. Hemphill's remarks were confined to the Northern Irish, or the "Scotch Irish," as he frequently called them. This term is a hideous misnomer, and seems to have been framed to gratify those who did not like to be described as "Irish" pure and simple. Yet at the commencement of his discourse the lecturer castigated, heartily enough according to all appearance, the degeneracy and recreancy of those who were ashamed of their nationality and endeavored to conceal it. This certainly looks like a literary paradox not readily explained or justified. Mr. Hemphill entertained his audience with a large number of stories and anecdotes which were laughed at, and must, therefore, have been thought funny. Though the lecturer represented most of them as having occurred within his recollection, and to persons with whom he was acquainted, yet were they the most ancient of tales and redolent of the musk of antiquity. Several of them were borrowed, or copied verbatim, from the pages of Irish novelists, and the best and raciest owed its parentage to Samuel Lover, being found in his clever, though absurd, "Handy Andy."

Mr. Hemphill gave a portraiture of a hedge-schoolmaster who, he asserted, had been his own teacher at an early period of his scholastic career. We have no desire to impugn the reverend lecturer's veracity, but we must say that if the picture he drew was correct, the north of Ireland must get credit for producing characters so strange and absurd that they would not be acknowledged anywhere else, even as caricatures. The oldest living Irishman might search over his recollection without calling to mind any personage who could claim the honor of equalling Mr. Hemphill's famous tutor in absurdity. There are Irishmen, we regret to say, so deficient in self-respect, so lacking in pride of race, that they laugh at and enjoy, and accept as authentic, the vilest and most despicable caricatures of their national peculiarities. The conventional Irishman is always a lazy and usually drunk, ever hospitable and invariably ballet-ss, generally light-hearted and inevitably ragged. The Irish gentleman is represented as a lazy, obstinate fool; the Irish peasant as an unclean but contented serf. The most popular novel six, lover, Lever, Carleton and Mrs. S. C. Hall, have no apology which we have not as sufficient national spirit to resent the outrage.

The lecturer introduced Mr. Downey's story of Pope Adrian's Bull granting Ireland to Henry II., and declared the early Irish Church did not acknowledge the supremacy of the Pope. To deal with these assertions and expose their falsity would make this article too lengthy; so we have considered them apart in another column. He also read a portion of "The Deserted Village" in a manner that might well have made the bones of poor Oliver Goldsmith turn uneasily in the grave. We should wish to say a word or two in praise of the lecture, but we really are unable to find even a tolerable pretext for so doing—if the fact that he refrained from "exposing the errors of Rome" be not one. We, however, are quite willing to let it pass as such.

Dr. Scully.—The report of Father Burke's lecture arrived so late that we have been put to considerable inconvenience in the effort to insert it. We have been, indeed, impelled to omit many articles and communications of important nature. Chief among them is a letter from Rev. Father Gleeson on the Irish Question, and another concerning Pope Adrian's Bull, kindly handed to King Henry II. of England. It is a most interesting and valuable production. Asserting of mission duty exercised by the Christian Doctrine Society. We wish them success.

Sunday School Picnic.—St. Bridget's Sunday School will have their annual picnic on Wednesday next, June 5th, at Badger's Park, Oakland. The Catholics and their friends in the parish are assisting, making a success. The management is in the hands of a competent and energetic committee, who will leave nothing undone to contribute to the pleasure of the party. The profit, if any, will go towards the fund of the Christian Doctrine Society. We wish them success.

THE GALWAY ELECTION PETITION.

We have not troubled our readers with lengthy reports of the proceedings in the Galway Election Petition case, but have given details wherefrom a fair idea of the issues involved might be easily formed. We take it for granted, therefore, that every Irishman, interested in the affairs of his native land, knows that a petition against the return of Captain Philip Nolan, the Home Rule candidate for the county of Galway, was presented to the Government by the ill-fated aspirant to parliamentary honors, Mr. Trench, one of the notorious Clanricarde family. Formerly election disputes, had to be tried by a special committee of honorable members and the evidence was taken in London. This method has been discarded—ostensibly because it was expensive to the contestants, but really because it did not enable the British Government to get rid of undesirable Irish representatives as quickly as was thought necessary. So now the merits of a petitioner's case are tried by a judge who is also charged with the making or unmaking of members of Parliament.

The Galway case was a peculiar one in several respects. The struggle was substantially one of Home Rule against foreign rule, clergy against landlords, liberality against bigotry—in short, the Irish people against the British Government. The men of Galway did their duty fearlessly and enthusiastically, and returned Captain Nolan by a very large majority. This was more than the Clanricardes could stomach, and a petition was got up praying that the Home-Ruler be unseated, because his return had been carried by bribery and intimidation. Judge William Keogh was appointed to receive evidence for and against the petition, and to decide the case. It is reported that when any peculiarly nasty work is to be done—when bishops and priests are to be insulted—when a bad case is to be established and justice is to be denied—this great legal luminary is always the man selected by the Dublin Castle folk. He is nothing but a miserable, conscienceless creature of the Government with no reputation to lose, and therefore is specially suited to such work. His record, public and private, is bad. He committed perjury before a committee of the House of Commons, and was elevated to the bench by betraying the people; he signalised his accession thereunto by swindling his creditors, and ever since he has been the chief instrument of the British ministry in wronging, insulting and maligning his countrymen. His knows he is hated by the people, and hates back in return with all the venom of an utterly depraved and unprincipled heart.

But it is against the Catholic clergy, priests and bishops, secular and religious, that his hostility is most marked and remorseless. Indeed, he seems to hate them much at home—never so happy—as when he has an ecclesiastic in the witness-box, so long as he can browbeat and insult him without incurring even the risk of a retort. The great allegation of Mr. Trench was that the Catholic bishops and priests had prevented the people from voting for him and coerced them, by spiritual intimidation into voting for Captain Nolan, and, consequently, a great deal of the evidence would have reference to the conduct of those gentlemen. The opportunity for the display of Judge Keogh's peculiar talent was too good to be lost, and accordingly he was given the case for trial. He actually revelled and exulted in it. Not a day passed on which he had not a dozen pretexts for abusing and vilifying some ecclesiastical dignitary, and he always made the best of them. Even the Most Rev. Dr. Leahy—the "Lion of the tribe of Judah," as Daniel O'Connell called him, the Most Rev. Dr. McEvilly, Most Rev. Dr. Duggan, and upwards of twenty parish priests and curates had to come before him, and not one did he treat with the courtesy due to gentlemen, much less with the respect due to ministers of God.

The evidence went to show that the election was a very sharply contested one. The landlords used all their immense power to make the people vote, against their will, for Trench; while the clergy used their influence to make the people stand true to themselves and vote as their conscience directed. Exaggerated stories were told by those in the landlord interest, and tales of "clerical intimidation" were exceedingly rife; yet it does not appear that any priest did more than a patriotic man would be justified in doing under the actual circumstances. There can be no doubt whatever that the landlords were driving their unfortunate tenantry to the polls, and compelling them to violate their sense of right; whilst the priests simply bade them manfully resist this cruel intimidation, and vote as they thought proper. If neither landlord nor priest spoke a word, or used any influence whatever, Nolan's majority would certainly have been twice as large as it proved. Nevertheless, the case of the petitioner was held to be established, and Judge Keogh decided that Captain Nolan should lose his seat in Parliament.

This pronouncement, though contrary to all justice, is not by any means surprising, inasmuch as it was provided for the moment that individual was chosen to try the case. Yet, as the evidence was adduced, and the absurdity of most of the charges inconsistently proven, many persons imagined that even Judge Keogh would not be indecent enough to decide in favor of Trench. But his partisanship was too strong, his anxiety to serve the Government was too great, his prejudice against Catholic clergymen too intense, to allow him take abstract right or truth into account. He did his nasty work well, and earned further thanks and honor from the authorities in Dublin Castle. The telegraph merely informs us that he has disqualified Captain Nolan, since not whether the seat has been ruled to the petitioner, or whether there will be a new election.

POPE ADRIAN'S LI.

There is scarcely any ev nnected with Irish history which has been made the subject of so frequent quel bitter controversy as the alleged anting of dominion over Ireland to Hy.II., of England, by Nicholas Brakes, known as Pope Adrian the Fourth; to distrust and antagonistic pas have striven, and at the present day striving, to make capital out of id hand arguments upon it. One thing re- cognition of British rule over y alive land as legitimate, and insists u al- ance to the English monarch is ling conscience, because the Supremacy of the Catholic Church, more than seven hundred years ago, authorised Hoy I. to take possession of the country. In oder endeavors to wean us away im our faith, and destroy our attachment to the Holy See, by insidiously representing one of the Roman Pontiffs as deliberately so far as in him lay, selling the honor ur race to a foreign king for a paltry consideration. But the arguments a ich sides are fallacious, though at w plausible, and can command the credit of no intelligent, well-reasoning man.

In the first place we may remark that save and except as a matter of bitter criticism, inquiry into the authenticity and nature of the reputed Bull is absolutely worthless, and has not the slightest relevancy to the merits of the question of the compatibility with the idea that the Holy See is the supreme authority of Irish and British Christendom that it should be present to the mind of every Catholic. At the least, very strong presumptive proof of its being apocryphal. The evidence in favor of the document simply consists in its having been referred to by writers who in a now known it came there in an informal manner. It is described as being copied from the English archives, and does not pretend to be the transcript of any paper executed by Adrian. Documents quotes it, but he was a mere chronicler, and made little attempt at discrimination in the matter he made use of. From him most subsequent historians took their cue, accepting the Bull as genuine without further examination.

It is much to be regretted that no historian of any repute has thought it worth while to rigidly scrutinize this Bull and all the circumstances attending its first publication. The matter may be regarded as yet unsettled, but, so far as we can discover, the positive evidence goes to prove the document a forgery. Who did forge it is not easily found out, but it may have been a Norman; the first belonged to a subjugated race, and the second to its conquerors. There would be no sympathy between the two, and it is doing violence to all human probability to assume, for moment that an assumption can it possibly be, that Adrian granted a Bull for the sake of carrying favor with the Anglo-Norman King. Moreover, all authorities worthy of respect speak of the Pope as a most pious and conscientious ecclesiastic, incapable of doing such flagrant injustice.

Therefore, if the Bull was granted, it must have been for good cause known, and through unimpeachable motives. To meet this conclusion it is asserted that the Pope gave Ireland to Henry in order that he might restore tranquility and concord which had crept into the Church. From all that is known respecting this king's character, it may safely be asserted that a more unpromising reformer or protector of ecclesiastical discipline could hardly be selected at that period! In fact the idea of Henry's acting in such a capacity is ludicrous in the extreme, for his whole career is that of a violent, unprincipled and unconscientious man, who cared infinitely more about the gratification of his own vile instincts than about the welfare of the Church of God. Then again the pretext was entirely unfounded, as the condition of the Church in Ireland did not, by any means call for such interference. The truth is that the Irish Church was purer in its morals, and far more perfect in its discipline than the English Church at the same time. There are ample proofs of this statement, but we need only refer to those contained in the foundation of monasteries and seats of learning, the holding of synods and councils and the frequent communication between Ireland and Rome. These things do not show that the Irish Church was corrupt, but indicate very clearly that Adrian could not be ignorant of the true condition of affairs in Ireland, because Cardinal Paparo, who assisted at the Synod of Kells, must have been possessed of every requisite information on the subject, and the memory of St. Malachy's pious labors must have been fresh in his mind. These are arguments drawn only from the character of the men and the character of the times, but others still stronger remain.

The Bull is supposed to have been obtained from Adrian by John of Salisbury, a favorite of Henry, who was then a chaplain to the Archbishop of Canterbury, and subsequently Archbishop of Chartres, in France. If obtained at all, it was obtained in 1154 or '55. We are to believe that he brought the document home and carefully said nothing about it, and that his royal master preserved an equally unaccountable silence for a singularly long period of time. Twelve years afterwards Dermid McMorrough proceeds to France, where the English King then was, to request aid against the Irish chiefs who had expelled him from his territory. Henry receives him graciously, promises assistance, yet never breathes a word about the Bull. English subjects are empowered to help McMorrough and to proceed with him to Ireland, yet they are not told that their sovereign has any claim to the country. Reinforcements are sent, and the invasion assumes large proportions, still the Bull is never even mentioned. Finally, Henry himself returns to England and invades Ireland with a numerous army, evidently contemplating the subjugation of the entire country and the permanent possession. Now, Adrian's grant would simplify matters and make his task easy; yet, strange to say, he does not so much as allude to it. After some time, he summons the Irish bishops and priests to meet him at Cashel; they do so, and draw up a scheme for some desirable reforms in ecclesiastical discipline; but even to them the King says nothing of the Bull granting him sovereignty and authority over them! How can this be accounted for? He certainly could not have forgotten it; even if he did, there were plenty of men ready to remind him of it and induce him to turn it to account.

In 1176 affairs take a bad turn in Ireland, and the tide of fortune sets dead against the invaders; it seems probable that they will be completely driven out of the country; then, and not in it ore, is the Bull made public. Eighteen or twenty years after Adrian's death, Pope Alexander III., who is said to have confirmed Adrian's grant, addressed a letter to the Irish bishops and nation, and recites the people to fight bravely against the invaders! All this is totally incompatible with the idea that the Bull ever existed. Finally, Giraldus Cambrensis, who was present at one vigorous, daring and intelligent, may account naturally enough, perhaps for the intellectual powers exhibited by him during a generation, but, however accounted for, the superiority is there, and we hope it will always remain.

We had the pleasure last week, of being present in the hall of Santa Mary's college while the examination of some of the junior classes was being carried on, and were fairly surprised at the proficiency displayed by the boys who had hardly passed beyond the years of childhood. It was not the fact that they solved readily very complicated arithmetical problems, which struck us most, but the fact that they evidently understood the logic of the different processes through which they went in order to arrive at a solution; so that their operations were not mechanical, not mere copies of what they had seen their teacher do, but were guided by pure reason. We consider this even more worthy of note than the excellence attained by the older pupils, because of course the more matured reasoning faculty becomes, so much the more easily is scholarship attained. This brings us to remark that system of education which has been brought to perfection, or as near as possible to perfection, by Catholic priests and religious. It consists in developing and fostering the pupil's mental power, in teaching him how to teach himself, so to speak, and not merely forcing him to learn by heart a series of facts and formularies which he does not understand. The latter process, much in vogue at the present day among the advocates of so-called "common-sense-tarian," that is bull-dog, plan of education, may enable a child to make a very brilliant display for a while but it never can make him, in the true sense of the word, a scholar; because his supposed proficiency is a mere spasmodic effort of memory, which from its very nature is evanescent. The real and substantial difference between these two methods of treatment lies in this—Catholic instructors believe in God, in the immortality of the soul, in man's responsibility to a divine tribunal for his actions while on earth; they believe that the great end and aim of existence is the working out of eternal salvation in accordance with the precepts of revealed religion, and consequently they direct all their efforts to the development of that which is moral and spiritual in their youthful charges. Others, regarding them as little, if anything, removed from machines, merely perform their work in a mechanical manner without thought or reflection.

Governor Seymour, of New York, and Senator E. Church are out for Greeley. Ex-U. S. Attorney-General Black, and Secretary of the Navy, Welles, incline the same way.

Zach. Montgomery says he will vote for Grant in preference to Greeley. For counts, Trumbull, Schurz, Fenton, Jack Stratton, and say the Democracy will commit political suicide if they do not endorse the Cincinnati nominees.

A Greeley club has been organized in this city, of which Frank Pixley, John A. Wakefield, E. Church are out for Greeley, Mike Fennell and other prominent Republicans.

This is from the New Orleans Times: The two Confederate Senators who represented this State in the Senate down to the time of the Confederacy, met recently after a long period, and took a glass of wine to the health of Greeley.

Ex-Mayor McCoppin, member of the Democratic State Central Committee, offered a resolution at the last meeting that the Democracy endorse Horace Greeley. A majority of the Committee favored the resolution, but action was withdrawn by request before it was formally put.

The New York World, for some years the organ of wilder influences in the Democratic party, has been purchased by Grant's friends (sums say by Grant himself), and will support Grant. The new Democracy is, insists on the Baltimore Convention making straight nominations, and bolting otherwise.

The Lynchburg (Va.) Republican says: "The people of the South are warmly for Greeley and Brown. They see in that ticket the only possible ralallying point for the overthrow of the ballot-box stuffers in the government. Too cry of present relief almost irresistible in reference to the antagonisms of the past."

The "Executive Committee of the Labor Party of California" have issued an address to the people, in which they denounce the "clots" of candidates in the field for mayor, and wind up by declaring electors to vote for Davis and Parker; which means that Davis and Parker are still in the field, and that Greeley is.

Sargent says he doesn't want to run for Congress. Pierce has had enough. Coghlan, Stanford, Bidwell, Haggett, of Klamath, and Irwin, of Siskiyou, are not yet been heard from. The Republican nominee is Dr. Harris. The Democratic nominee is likely to be Nathan Porter, Democrat, J. W. Coffroth. In the Southern District Judge Sawyer, Democrat, Wilson, Democrat, are mentioned. In this city Hon. T. B. Ward and Wm. L. Piper are at present seeking the Democratic nomination. Sol. Sharp and others are spoken of as likely aspirants.

THE PATALOMA FAIR.

Following are the numbers that drew the principal premiums offered for the benefit of St. Vincent's School, Petaluma:

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Upon Cloth | 15 | Child's Sofa | 50 |
| Lamp Mat | 1 | Lady's Work Box | 1 |
| Quilt Rocks | 13 | Rocking Chair | 13 |
| Quilt | 13 | Saddle and Bridle | 13 |
| Quilt | 13 | Gentleman's Saddle | 13 |
| Pillow | 1 | Boy's Sofa | 1 |
| Sewing Machine | 22 | Child's Bed Closet | 13 |
| Sewing Machine | 22 | Gold and plate | 13 |
| Quilt | 13 | Gold and plate | 13 |

Following are the numbers which drew the Twenty Dollar Premiums:

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Lot Prize | | Switch | 37 |
| Lot | 22 | Quilt | 37 |
| Lot | 22 | Quilt | 37 |
| Lot | 22 | Quilt | 37 |
| Lot | 22 | Quilt | 37 |
| Lot | 22 | Quilt | 37 |
| Lot | 22 | Quilt | 37 |

Thanks & Kind Words Bountiful.—It affords us much pleasure to announce that S. F. Nee, has formed a copartnership for the buying and selling of Boots and Shoes, and has opened the store known these long-well-known long and honorably, and for so many years by Mr. Nee himself, and which have never abandoned themselves together. Mr. Nee's long experience in the business, and his ability to suit all, has been well known for years to the people of California as a first-class dealer. His unexceedingly well-selected stock of goods, and his unsurpassed prices, where he assures a handsome profit, will ensure him a large share of the public patronage. Mr. Nee's success in this country has it difficult to say more than to refer our readers to his advertisement, where he can be found whose confidence he has so long enjoyed. Success to him, and may he long continue to prosper. Such a firm should prosper, and without any fear of failure we recommend it to the confidence of our friends.

A Wanderful Art Made Bad.—Dan Rice, and his wife, and his son, and his daughter, and his son-in-law, and his daughter-in-law, and his grandchildren, and his brother, and his brother's wife, and his brother's children, and his sister, and his sister's children, and his cousins, and his cousins' children, and his uncles, and his aunts, and his nephews, and his nieces, and his relations by marriage, and his relations by blood to martyrdom for the last twenty years, have been in the habit of saying that Dan Rice was the greatest man that ever lived. Dan Rice is a great man, but he is not the only great man that ever lived. Dan Rice is a great man, but he is not the only great man that ever lived. Dan Rice is a great man, but he is not the only great

IRELAND AS SHE IS AND MUST BE.

What is to be free?
To breathe our native air
Beneath the weight of care
That comes of poverty!
To vassal from hour to hour
A nation's life beneath
The rule of power
That sets it breath into Death;
To live within a land
Cut by the boiling seas,
By nature's so rents hand
Made beautiful and grand,
Our earth an old command
The blighted brother's
Yet in this land, which
The will of Heaven has decreed
That wickedness may powered,
Be free to do right,
Do love, keep God's divine decree,
Condition, commandments,
Obey the Nazarene
On Europe's dare—a blot
Upon her page, where fame
Brightened all other's list!
A fragment of a stone,
Not one, which it should r.
This is not to be freed;
But want a finds, want
Is free to be a slave; great!
To fall in fall'n
Let none blame any
To servility
The fetish nation, or to break
The purpose they obtain
For it is true,
Till they have won amain
The Liberties they seek!

What it is not to be free?
To feel a people's pulse beat,
Like an imprisoned soul,
From the old Land wrongs, rights
They sought to realize
What from their hopes
Freedom's or England's abhor;
For Freedom breathes her air,
With crime about decree:
It is the Diseased Limb
Makes all the euthanize,
Not save the body sound
The plantation would still
The nation's life be spent;
Each provincial's life
Men bow disconcerted feet
As it's was small,
At last, from its Past,
Rising like a night's Past,
England, heart with brow ashes
Of wealth at her side,
We must have what we will
We are free! We are free!
Yet will it be false
Till it be free, by
Its liberty,
The Irish nation, or to break
The purpose they obtain
For it is true,
Till they have won amain
The Liberties they seek.

Would you know how we're to solve
Ireland's question and her wrong?
Simply the land's restore
To those who till it well!
Carelessly aren't together
To dash common path to see,
When it shows ownership
To make its destroyed brown free!
Such is our cry!
Wage with purpose widen duties
Tyrant from and tenantry
Right scant, and stonily,
It shall labor for its fiend,
Till the notes of battle flee
Like a wild bird's song
Yes, it is country's or is great;
It will be in Fate,
It soon have cry
To levery
The Irish Nation, or to break
The purpose they obtain
For it is true,
Till they have won amain
The Liberties they seek.

—Irishman.

Marshal Bazaine.

After a long silence Marshal Bazaine is at last to bring the conduct before the tribunal of the public. Speaking of the general causes which produced the disasters of France, he says: "The resources of France were not ready. The railways gave to contingencies of mobilization only about half. Tactics had to be very much modified to suit the modern rapid firearms. Those weapons are disadvantageous to a numerous army, and will cause the use of multiplied discussions on the subject of the arms for the infantry, cavalry, and for the artillery. The ideas suggested in these discussions might be good, but the result was to create confusion by the adoption of a marvellous froggly planned, having neither the consistence nor the time for the trials of battle-field, overturned the principles of tactics, without replacing them by principles which, though new, were firmly established. Our fortresses were in need of urgent improvements. The work had been commenced in great haste, and they were not finished when the war broke out." Marshal Bazaine thus explains the reason he gave up his army in Metz, instead of breaking the line: "Admitting a series of reverses for our arms, and the obligation of the Government to treat with Prussia, the possession of Metz, the presence of the army in the fortified camp which it occupied, would weigh heavily in the decisions in regard to intervention, and would probably secure to France the possession of Lorraine. It must not be forgotten, moreover, that the Army of the Rhine has ammunition only for a single combat, and that it is impossible to supply it from the resources of the fortress. To risk an engagement in order to pierce the enemy's lines—to undertake a march to release Paris, or any other point, would be to run the chance of losing, with the ammunition, only to be disarmed in the midst of the Prussians. Even if victory had fallen reluctantly upon us like a pack of hounds upon a stag, and would have compromised the fate of the country by remaining, on the contrary, within the lines that we occupy, we menace the army intent with all its means of action, we menace incessantly the communications of the enemy, which may meet with a check, and find itself obliged to beat a retreat and fall back upon its line of operations." Marshal Bazaine supports his opinion by the testimony of General Froment, Marshal Canrobert, General Ladmirault, Marshal Le Bœuf, and General Bourbaki.

ARE CATHOLICS NOW-COMERS?—The Catholic World, for the month of May, exposing the "Pictorial Blackguard," as Horace Greeley called Harper's Weekly, had the following remarkable paragraph:—

"We say quite as important as the coolness with which these scribes of the Messrs. Harper talk about receiving Catholics as thoroughly into the country as Protestants. When and how were these gentlemen constituted the dispensers of the hospitality of this free country? When and how did this country become a 'Protestant land?' At what period in the history of America were Catholics strangers here? Under somewhat similar provocation the great Montesquieu, from the tribune in the Chamber of Peers, told certain Frenchmen: 'We are the sons of the Crusaders, and we fear not the progeny of Voltaire.' And we Catholics of the United States, say to these gentlemen, who seek to inaugurate another Know-nothing campaign, that here 'in America we have not to slaughter and ravage the new-comers of yesterday. We come in the caravels of Columbus, we came with the Cartiers and the La Salles, the Brebeufs and Jacques, the Jolliets and the Marquettes, with the men whose blood of martyrdom has moistened the soil of New York, with the men whose bones had mingled with the savannas of the South and the prairies of the West long before Plymouth Rock was heard of. We came—not with the Russians of Georgia—but with the army of Rochambeau and the fleet of De Grasse, with the arms of Catholic France and the gold of Catholic Spain, to aid the American struggle for liberty. The largest fortune risked in signing our Declaration of Independence was a Catholic fortune."

Sectarianism on the Stump.

A meeting of the domestic servants of Dundee was held the other evening in Malloch's Hotel, to discuss the question of hours, holidays and wages. There was a large attendance. Strict silence was maintained for a considerable time, until at last they began to look to each other for some one to break the ice. A Servant—I think it is time we were making a beginning; we need not sit here like mummies. (Hear, hear.) Another—I vote for every second sabbath to ourselves. A Third—And a half-holiday weekly, or a whole one fortnightly. (Hear, hear.) A Speaker—I think the Sunday cooking is most disgusting. (Great applause.) A Member—They should have it all cooked Saturday night, and we will be willing to cook potatoes on Sunday. Another—That is they have cold meat. A voice—Of course; there must be no cooking of meat on Sunday. A Second—I vote for a rise of wages. (Hilarity, laughter and hear, hear.) Another—I second that. A Third—I beg to be excused. I'm a stranger here, and wasn't at last meeting; but I see by the newspapers that you had been speaking about the hours. The papers said from six to ten; do you all agree to that. I decidedly object. (Hear, hear.) A Speaker: I object to extra time. There is no one for extra time to servants. Let them make their breakfast and stick to it. I hope everyone will give into what they have been, and not joined in at meetings in their fine, flattering way! (Great laughter and applause.) A Second—There could be no objection to serve in extra parties and the like of that. A Third—we can't object to that. If missionary work gives them more acre liberty—(hear, hear)—it would be better both for mistresses and servants. Therefore I vote for the rise in house. Another—I really wonder why mistresses can think their servants have to do what they expect of them. I do believe they actually think we are not made of the same material. (Roars of laughter.) From six to ten! It's quite absurd. I don't know why anyone should complain in such a thing. It's very hard labor that servants have to do. You haven't a moment you can call your own. If anyone object to what I have said I shall be happy to hear it. I assure you I have not shot at all.

A reporter (in a whisper): You should go about your business in a regular way; and you should begin by taking one to the chair. Who is in the chair just now? A voice: I don't know. The chair is quite empty, sir; but we shall be happy to see you in it (great laughter). If anyone has anything to say we should take the chair. Now is the time. Another voice: Now or never. (Great laughter.) A Third: I propose that one in the corner for the chair. (Hear, hear.) A Fourth: She says if I take the chair she will speak. Now, I think she is the very one that should take the chair. (Hear, hear and applause.) The One Proposed: I am quite a stranger. I think some one who was at the last meeting should take the chair. I merely ran out of the house on an errand, and thought I would look up here and do all I could to help my fellow-servants. (Hilarity, and applause.) One of the servants was ultimately prevailed on to take the chair.

The Chairwoman on taking her seat was loudly applauded. She said—I suppose you all know what we have met for, and I think we are all of opinion that a union will be of great benefit. (Applause.) I was not at the last meeting, otherwise I would not have agreed to some of the things that I see in the papers. (Applause.) It is proper I say that we should have a free Sunday every fortnight, and a half-holiday every week. (Loud applause.) As for cooking on Sunday I don't see what use there is for that. (Laughter.)

Strong expressions were vented by nearly all about what is apparently considered one of the greatest grievances—being compelled to wear "this flag." "If we are," said one, "to wear one flag, let the mistress wear one flag, and if they won't uphold them let us not wear them." This sentiment met with approval. A servant here entered the room, and, apparently delighted at seeing such a large audience, exclaimed, "Hurrah! well done! Good for the servants!" The feeling which prompted the exclamation was evidently largely shared, and was reciprocated heartily.

The Chairwoman, when the interruption ceased, proceeded—In regard to the working hours, I quite object to what I saw in the papers, that they should be from six to ten. (Hear, hear.) A Member—They should have it all cooked Saturday night, and we will be willing to cook potatoes on Sunday. Another—That is they have cold meat. A voice—Of course; there must be no cooking of meat on Sunday. A Second—I vote for a rise of wages. (Hilarity, laughter and hear, hear.) Another—I second that. A Third—I beg to be excused. I'm a stranger here, and wasn't at last meeting; but I saw

REPUBLICANISM IN ENGLAND.

Mr. Charles Bradlaugh delivered an oration on the above subject in the Birmingham Town Hall on Tuesday evening, May 7th. Mr. McClelland presided, and the hall was about three-quarters filled. After a few preliminary remarks by the Chairman, who advocated the establishment of a Republic by means of moral suasion, Mr. Bradlaugh commenced his address, being greeted with enthusiastic cheering. The first point he sought to establish was the legality of the course which he was taking. Nothing, he said, would fall from his lips which the law did not justify him in uttering, and there was nothing in the Republican agitation which he advocated, which the law did not protect them in. It was said that to impeach the house of Brunswick was to go against the Constitution.

WHAT WAS THE CONSTITUTION OF ENGLAND? It was contained in no printed books other than the volumes of statutes, which were altered from time to time, as the wisdom of the nation saw fit. They were not, as in America, under a written constitution, outside which legislation was illegal; but the English Constitution was a creation of Parliament, which alone had the right to create it, as representing the sovereign majesty of the people. The doctrine was not his own merely, but they could find it in the writings of the best legists and the ablest jurists. His contention was that so long as they only sought to change the Government of the country, by the pure action of Parliament, so long they were within the bounds of legality. He contended that Parliament could put an end to its own existence, and that supposing the occupant of the throne to be incapable of fulfilling his or her duties—morally and physically incapable for example—Parliament had a right to say by whom those duties should be performed. Further, in case of a vacancy in the Throne it lay with Parliament to say who should fill it, or whether it should be filled at all. He contended that Parliament might enforce a monarch from listing upon the Throne if it saw fit; that Parliament had done so in time past; and that if it had no right to do so, then the House of Hanover had no right at all upon the Throne, for it was only by the exclusion of James II., with the legislation which came about in consequence, that the Brunswick family acceded to it. He quoted from Parliamentary history to show that the Duke of Colocel Luttrell, the Most Noble the Marquis of Lansdowne, Mr. Justice Forster, Lord Lonsdale, Wilkes, Fox and others were of opinion that the present Royal family had no hereditary right to the Throne. Mr. Justice Forster wished that all mankind might have their eyes opened to the important fact that people had not essential rights of their own, and that kings and princes had no rights whatever. As kings and princes they had no rights as kings and princes they might have privileges, and as servants of God they might have duties, but they could have no rights except as individual citizens, which they had to common with every other citizen of the State. When the right of the king became hostile to the liberty and right of the citizen; then the right of the king became a tyranny which it was the duty of every loyal citizen to put an end to. Their agitation was legal in so far as they sought to effect their end by Parliamentary means; as family came among the people of England, the national debt had increased from fifty millions to over eight hundred millions in England and a hundred and twenty millions in India.

THEIR TAXATION HAD INCREASED From about six millions to over seventy-two millions in England, and forty odd millions in India—while the land of the country, which, at least, as their sovereigns, they could have protected, had been reduced in two ways. In Great Britain it had been reduced by nearly seven million acres, having been stolen from the people by the hereditary aristocracy, and the whole of America had been riven away from them by the obstinacy and madness of one member of the House of Brunswick. During the time the family had reigned a huge pension list had been created, and the burden of it had been gradually put upon the shoulders of the people instead of being borne by the monarch. Moreover the greater number of recipients had large pensions, without having devoted their lives to the service of the country; and that while the agricultural districts were in a state of demoralization which was not equaled in the European world, and semi-starvation came into their great cities, even at a time when their wealth was boasted of throughout Christendom. He should show that either from want of interest or want of capacity, the members of the House of Brunswick had shown themselves incompetent of initiating or promoting wise legislation, and the consequence was, the government of the country had during the last one hundred and fifty years passed entirely into the hands of the Aristocracy, a Monarchy which had only recently been compelled to concede a little of their power.

George I. did not understand the English language, and could not sympathize with England. George II. was the last king it was possible in the country; George III. was insane (mad), and when sane his sanity was disastrous to the interests of the realm; George IV. was mostly drunk, except when he was insane; and William IV. was only remarkable for preventing reform until he nearly landed the country in a state of revolution. Again, the people had never been he had no right to say anything, except that during the last few months, during which time he had resided at Wellford, on the 21st of December, 1815, and commenced his studies at St. Peter's College, Wexford. In 1832 he went to Rome, where he joined the Order of St. Francis. He was appointed Bishop of Adelaide in 1856, and was consecrated at Melbourne, on the 5th of August of that year. He arrived in Adelaide shortly afterwards, and was solemnly installed in the Cathedral on the 10th September. Dual titles have also been bestowed with great zeal in the cause of religion.

On the morning of April 20th, an interesting scene was witnessed at the Ennis railway station upon the departure for New York of sisters of the Sisters of the Order of Mercy, to establish a convent at Newtown, United States. All the respectable Catholic ladies of the neighborhood assembled on the platform to bid them farewell. Hundreds of all classes assembled to demonstrate to them the respect in which they are held by the people, and their departure from a community to whom their good services in the cause of religion, charity and education rendered them so valuable. The trades of Ennis, through their banners, were present. Mr. Michael Considine, were not back-ward, the brass band having preceded the Sisters to the train, playing some favorite airs. The Sisters who left were—Mary Agnes (Miss Healy), Ennis; Mary Teresa (Miss Perry), Limerick; Mary Xavier, (Miss Mary Jane Kerin), Ennis; Mary Evangeline (Miss Kerin), Burren; Mary Agatha (Miss Boland), Tipperary; Mary Frances (Miss Fitzgerald), Limerick; Mary Cecilia (Miss Gegan), Corofin; Mary Ignatius (Miss Lean), Corofin; Mary Regina (Miss O'Shea), Kildysart; Sister Walberg (Miss O'Sea); Sister Euphrasia (Miss Crowe), Ruan Tie Rev. Mother and Mr. Macdermond companied them to Queenstown.

The thief who was fined for robbing Parsons' store in this town, was fined to have a quantity of Ayers Hair Vigor in hipoteuse. When asked why he wished to steal the article, he answered that he "wanted to restore his hair if he hadn't been a thief and bald too." If his intention was to restore his own, he could restore a few dozen more as well as he does their natural bony a bald and gray heads. If it could surely be, as they say it can be, truly invaluable.—Lewiston (Me.) Journal.

BOOTS AND SHOES.—R. Ireden, 325 Kearny st., between Pine and Bush, Occidental Block and Shoe dealer, has now on sale a full assortment of Ladies', Misses', Gentlemen's and Children's Boots and Shoes, of his own manufacture, and also a large stock which he is selling remarkably low for cash. Call and examine his stock before purchasing elsewhere.

Pimples on the Face, Eruption Blotches, Scrofulous diseases, and all sores arising from impure blood, are cured by Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery.

Hall's Vegetable Sicilian Hair Renewer does not color, but restores the hair to its natural color.

Wholesale Marke Report.

MONITOR OFFICE, May 31, 1872.
TUESDAY, May 31, 1872.

FLOUR—The demand for flat consumption has continued good, and a fair inquiry for export has existed, considerable quantities of sizes going forward per ship to New York. To-day as follows: Extra at $5 10@5 15; and superfine at 4@4 25; Oregon and Oregon brands—latter at 5 75@6 00 in sks @ 6 25 in bbls.

WHEAT—The market has been rather dull firm, without any movement of importance to-day, since our last weekly review. At the close of to-day's session 1 74@1 78 @ 1 80 @ 1 85.

BARLEY—The demand has continued light for this grain during the week under review, sale of ordinary feed at 1 00@1 05 @ 1 10.

OATS—The market has remained quiet, at advanced rates, and sales of good feed at $1 10@1 15; choice sold at $1 20@1 30 @ 1 35 in sks, and 1 40@1 45 @ 1 50 in bbls.

HAY—The receipts have been light during the past seven days, with a fair demand. Quotable at the close at 1 00@1 50 @ 1 75 for ordinary wild oat to choice wheat @ 2 00 @ 2 50.

STRAW—Quotable at 45@55 @ 75 @ 90 for cargo lots.

CORN—Market quiet at 1 10@1 15.

CORN MEAL—Sales at 1 75@1 75@ 1 90 @ 2 00 per 100 lbs.

BRANS—We note a fair demand and the following are the ruling rates: Bran, 1 00@1 05; Middlings, 1 40@1 45; Small White, 1 45@1 50; Flint, 1 40@1 50 lbs.

OILS—Linseed, raw, 1 00@1 05; boiled, 1 05@1 10; China wood, 1 00@1 05; Castor, 2 00@2 10; Sperm at 2 75@2 85; Lard, 1 75@1 85; Whale, 1 00@1 10; Neatsfoot, 1 50@1 60; Kerosene, 45@50 cts.

BEANS—Bayos at 3 00@3 25 lb.

POTATOES—Sweets at 1 75@2 25 lb.

ONIONS—Quiet at 2 00@2 50 lb.

BUCKWHEAT—Dull at 2 00@2 50 lb.

BUTTER—Quotable at 25@31 @ 37½ @ 50 lb for choice to fancy roll; 25@31 @ 37½ @ 50 lb for choice to fancy roll; 25@31 @ 37½ @ 50 lb for choice to fancy roll;

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

ENGLAND.

The Present Retrograde Movement towards Catholicism in England.

Mgr. Capel, commenced on Sunday evening, May 5, in the Westminster Pro-Cathedral, a course of sermons on the above-named subject. Having chosen for his text the words of our Lord, foretelling that there shall be one Fold and one Shepherd, the preacher proceeded to develop the meaning of the text. A considerable portion of the sermon (which was introductory to its nature) was devoted to pointing out the errors of the Puseyites. They speak, said the preacher, of receiving the Blessed Sacrament, and also of giving benediction with the two species. It is dishonest, said they, to imitate Catholics and yet not to do so. They talk of buying altar-breads at Burns' and Oates' because we do, as if the Real Presence was the result of their taking that course. They imitate the later works of the Catholic Church, and they take our books, mistranslate them, and then put them forth as the production of the Church of England. What they would spread genuine translations, but not as Church of England works. The preacher next spoke of some Protestants he knew who would not attend the Catholic Church in England, but did so regularly in France. If religion were to be geographically arranged, he would like to know what would be left uncreed when they reached the proposed tunnel between France and England. What has the real Church to do with the fact that these more externals? The High Church party claimed private judgment, but that is not Catholic doctrine. The tonsure does not make the monk. There were some who spoke of the High Church party as much worse as being conducted by Jesuits in disguise, but Catholics had nothing at all to do with it. The High Church party would perhaps welcome Catholics even more than genuine Protestants would. A Catholic was not a preacher, a father and a mother turn out their child for becoming a Catholic, and I know that letters are now being written. To such I say, be honest, and carry out your own ideas in their legitimate conclusion. If you wish for our Sacraments and our vows enter the Catholic Church. At first Mr. Posey and others held the hand of many in their hands, but the movement grew beyond their power. The hand of God alone could effect that change. The prayers of the Church, the kindness of England to the refugees, and, later still, to those suffering in France, would all bring down blessings on the sheeves. The preacher, in having spoken of the greatness of the Catholic Church, and of its duty as a priest to spread the Gospel, glanced at some of the results that had arisen from the movement towards Catholicity. It was a fact, for instance, that Catholics had been regularly attended to in England during the last twenty years. It was also a fact that religion was not now considered to mean a servant carrying a book behind one in state to church, but that it was something more practical, for all hours and all days. There was, however, no finish to the following of individuals. Many who shuddered at the infallibility of the Pope, believed in the infallibility of Mr. This or Father That. Let them fix their eyes on that Church whose safety not a few seemingly endangered

WEEKLY CALENDAR.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING JUNE 15, 1872.

Sunday—Third Sunday after Pentecost
9—Monday—St. Margaret, Queen of Scotland, widow
11—Tuesday—St. Barnabas, Apostle.
12—Wednesday—St. John of San Facundo, Conf. 8th.
13—Thursday—St. Anthony of Padua, Confessor.
14—Friday—St. Basil, Bishop Confessor and Doctor.
15—Saturday—St. John Nepomucene, Martyr. St. Vitus, Martyrs.

THE MONITOR:

THE ONLY

Irish and Catholic Journal in California.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

SATURDAY.....JUNE 8, 1872.

GREELEY AND "THE MONITOR."

We publish in another column a letter from a highly esteemed correspondent, who protests strongly against our supporting the Cincinnati nominations, and makes particular objection to our supporting Greeley as Presidential candidate. While we are prepared to admit that there is considerable force in some of our correspondent's allegations, we must insist that he has not made out his case, and has failed to prove that we should oppose the Liberal Republican nominees. Now what are the reasons for our antagonism to Grant? Firstly, that he is scouity, morally and intellectually unfit to be the Chief Magistrate of a great people. Mr. Corkery will, we imagine, agree with us that the election of such an individual must ever be a reproach to the good sense and dignity of the American people. General Grant entered the White House, comparatively speaking, a poor man, and he will leave it a millionaire. How he acquired his wealth we do not care to discuss just now. Secondly, he has shown himself utterly incapable of understanding republican principles of government, has favored centralization, and has, in fact, taken the first steps towards the establishments of a military despotism in the country. Thirdly, he has surrounded himself with a set of incapables, who are miserably incompetent to direct national affairs whether at home or abroad. It can hardly be denied that never, since the foundation of the Republic, did American statesmanship cut a sorrier figure in the eyes of the world than it does at the present day, and for this General Grant is to blame. Fourthly, the financial policy adopted and carried out by his Cabinet is oppressing the people, destroying trade, and squeezing the very life-blood out of the land, thus rendering inevitable, sooner or later, a period of exhaustion and prostration which cannot but have most deplorable results.

To any one these things as facts, as we believe our correspondent will, it must be evident that the welfare and perhaps the very existence of the United States as a nation depends upon our dispelling Grant and his following of all control over public affairs. Consequently the great thing to be done now is to defeat him, and put the Government into abler and honester hands. The question then naturally arises: How is this most devoutly to be wished for consummation to be effected? We should be very happy indeed if we could conscientiously say: By the nomination of genuine Democratic candidates. But we cannot say this because, of our firm conviction that any contest directly between the Democratic and Republican parties would end in the utter discomfiture of the former. Many persons think otherwise, and we know that elaborate arithmetical calculations have been made showing how very easy it would be to beat Grant if only certain and sundry contingencies occurred; but we put very little faith in these prophecies since we saw similar ones fall rather disastrously not long ago in our State. We regret that as much as our correspondent, but still we cannot shut our eyes to the real condition of affairs. It would be an excellent thing to defeat Grant by a Democratic candidate, but in the present circumstance of the country the great probability is that it could not be done. The only chance of overthrowing the actual administration lies in a union there with the Liberal Republicans and fighting in their company. There is no abandonment of principle implied in this. As long as these men contended for our platform they are substantially Democrats, no matter what they may call themselves, and it would be the height of absurdity on our part to refuse to coalesce with them, "Heavens, not men," ought be our motto, and instead of quarrelling about names we should fraternize with all who profess and act up to our cardinal principles. The Cincinnati programme is Democratic enough for us, who prefer even half a loaf to none at all, and any man adopting it will certainly not be regarded as an enemy.

Those are our reasons for advocating a Democratic endorsement of the Liberal Republican nominations. We now come to matters personal to Horace Greeley, whereon Mr. Corkery makes his main stand. The chief editor of the Tribune has always been looked upon as a faithful reflex of what is known as "the spirit of the age." Modern infidel philosophy, so far as he is capable of understanding it through the agency of his rather limited education, has taken hold of him. In his youthful days, that is to say when he was making his mark as a literary man, he got credit for being strongly inclined to Fourrierism, and favoring communism of the most profound type. But we think he must have outgrown all that, or, at all events, he must have seen by this time that such ideas are totally opposed to the genius of the American people, and can never be generally received here. Whether this be the case or not, whether he still clings to Fourrierism or has abandoned it, can have no perceptible effect upon his policy as President. In short, the private opinions of Mr. Greeley upon social matters are no concern of ours, since it is not likely that he will be so foolish as to intrude them upon us. The men who will form his Cabinet are not likely to share his peculiar ideas, and it is they who will give tone to the Government. So we may rest assured that Horace Greeley's communism, if such he have, will for a less misdemeanors to us than General Grant's —let us, for propriety's sake, say accidulvicious! Moreover, it must be remarked, that those charges against the Cincinnati nominee, which might have some weight if urged as reasons why we should support a better man, become of no moment whatever when his adversary is Grant. Is Greeley tainted with modern Liberalism? So is Grant: Is Greeley vague in his religious belief? So is Grant. The questions and answers might be multiplied ad infinitum.

We should be much obliged if any sane individual would tell us wherein General Grant can claim superiority as the representative of a great and free people over Horace Greeley. The sole issue now before the country is whether an administration, presided over by Greeley, and carrying into practice the principles laid down at Cincinnati, would not be preferable to that now directing the destinies of the country. We think it would, and so do the majority of our contemporaries. Of course we admit that there are many public men, and others belonging to the Democratic party, any one of whom we would rather have as President, and we should only be too happy if we could see a prospect of victory for the strict party platform. Singular as it may appear, we freely confess that when there is question of displacing Grant and remedying the disorders he has caused in the body politic, we had much rather concern with Greeley than fall with a better man. It is too late in the day for punctiliousness or Quixotism, and we must, like rational and patriotic men, take precautions to spoil the detriment republica capiat, and not be slow about it either.

DEATH OF CHARLES LEVER.

Charles Lever, the celebrated novelist, is dead. He expired at Trieste, on the 3d inst., in the straightened year of his age. For the last thirty years he resided constantly in Italy, rarely visiting England and never Ireland, so that all the public knew of him was as a contributor to some of the leading magazines. There are few conversant with the English language who have not read one or more of his works and been vastly amused therewith. His stories were supposed to be pictures of Irish character and custom, and, of course, they had to be laughable, for, according to all Anglo-Saxon critics, it is absolutely essential that people should be provoked to laughter by everything appertaining to our country. Indeed, it is generally considered to be the special mission of Irishmen to crack jokes and invent witticisms for the delectation of the great Anglo-Saxon race. We may dismiss somewhat to this, but it would be of no use, inasmuch as the verdict of the reading world would be dead against us, and we should be regarded as attempting to deny our own specialty.

Charles Lever was undoubtedly a clever man. He was thoroughly acquainted with our national temperament, and he possessed an humorous fund of genuine and racy humor. He was, we may say, born a novelist, and it became a second nature for him to write Irish stories. But, unfortunately, he had to write for his bread and he had his wares to the market in which he expected to sell. If our native land had been, in his youth, an independent nation —if the Irish had been an educated and self-respecting people—Lever would have produced novels true to life and sure of immortality. The great majority, however, of our countrymen who could afford to buy expensive novels were thoroughly anglicanized as well as intensely bigoted, and for them and the great Anglo-Saxons did he write. Accordingly, he professed nothing but caricatures. All were clever, and abounded in easy flowing humor; but, for all that, they were nothing better than vile libels. To please his English customers—to procure a ready sale for his books—Charles Lever had to attack everything which the true Irishman holds most sacred. Therefore, he seldom alluded to Catholicity unless to misrepresent it most villainously, or to our longing for independence unless to ridicule it. Of course, he had numerous number of priests and monks he describes as drunkards, gluttons and sensualists; all his nationalities—that is, Irishmen who desire the freedom of their country—are wild, half-brained youths, whom one must look upon with feelings of either pity or contempt.

The only respectable characters he portrayed were English or Anglo-Irish. In "The O'Donoghue" and "Tom Burke of Ours" he describes the troubled times of '98, and his account of the insurgents is one which a patriot would certainly not like to endorse. His bigotry is apparent in every one of his novels, but it shines forth conspicuously in "The Daltons," "Jack Hinton" and "A Day's Ride, a Life's Romance." From a careful examination of his works, one would come to the conclusion that the man was not naturally a bigot, for his libels upon Catholicity have, in their very grossness, a forced and artificial appearance, as if they were colored after great exertion. Evidently he disliked them, but they were necessary to secure a large sale of his books in England, and he had not sufficient manliness to prefer honorable poverty to profit. His long residence in Italy among a Catholic people had, it must be confessed, some effect upon his religious prejudices, and softened materially his animosity towards our faith. This is proved by the fact that several of his more recent novels, such as "Davenport Dunn," "Luttrell of Arran" and "One of Them," are less objectionable in this respect than those which preceded them. Yet, in his contributions to Blackwood's Magazine, under the pseudonym of "Cornelius O'Dowd," he showed that he retained enough of the old bitterness in him to vilify almost in the same paper the Fenians for rebelling against the British Government and Cardinal Cullen for denouncing them.

Charles Lever has now passed away, and his works will not live very long after him. Already they are more than half forgotten, for the cultivated Anglo-Saxon has grown tired of Irish eccentricities and requires something of a more exciting stimulant. The compounds of murder and adultery which the sensational writers of the present day administer, are much more to his taste. In less than twenty years' time it will be difficult to find any one caring to read even the best and ablest of Lever's works. The fact that they obtained any popularity at all in Ireland, or among Irishmen anywhere, is the reverse of creditable to our country men, since it proves them sadly wanting in self-respect and national pride. However, we are glad to say that "Charley O'Malley," "Handy Andy" and Carleton's earlier tales (written when he was under the patronage of Sir Harcourt Lees and striving to injure his Catholic education) are very little sought after by the rising generation. We have, it is true, no very prominent or famous Irish novelist; but far better none at all than those who would simply make us the laughing stock of the world!

CATHOLIC ITEMS.

ST. JOSEPH'S.—The Corpus Christi procession, last Sunday, at this church looked grand in every particular. Great credit is due the Rev. Pastor for his well-directed efforts to make it what it was, a success. At a meeting held prior to the procession it was resolved to build four altars, to be erected respectively at St. Joseph's, St. Aloysius' and St. Rose's. A trio of young ladies were appointed in charge of three—the other failing to the care of the Sisters of the adjacent convent. Framing is the church, the procession moved out and around the large lot opposite. The St. Mary's College Cadets acted as guard of honor. From Capt. Mullen, their Captain, we have obtained the following programme: Cross bearer, two acolytes, La Salle band, American flag, Montgomery Guard and Jackson Dragoons as escort; Temperance band, and members of the society, four abreast; St. Joseph's banner, male members of congregation, four abreast; Sunday School banner, boys of congregation, four abreast; little girls of congregation, four abreast, in white, bearing baskets of flowers, which they scattered beforethem; canopy, guarded by military; banner of Clients, followed by choir of society and female members, four abreast; banner of Rosary and Altar Societies, followed by members of these societies, four abreast; all female members of the congregation not belonging to any society; banner of the Rosary and Altar Societies, followed by members of these societies, four abreast; all female members of the congregation not belonging to any society; Edmund J. Mahoney, which drew forth well merited applause, a shower of bouquets and an encore. Master Mahoney seems to be himself a young patriot, not unwilling to "shoulder a pike," and by the "rising of the moon" to stand in the breach for freedom.

THE AGE OF PERICLES," An essay by Bartholomew P. Oliver, was next delivered, without the aid of manuscript. He is a very fine speaker, though very young. He took for his theme Greece in the days of Pericles. As a composition it was very creditable; and altho' brief, contained all the facts necessary to make it complete on the subject treated.

JOHN E. M'COURTNEY

Read a very able essay on "Tradition." It was a brief review of the Pagan and Christian testimony in favor of the existence of a Supreme Being and of a future existence. The traditions of the Indian races, the Chinese and other Pagan families, were brought to sustain these facts. He very eloquently contrasted the arguments deduced from tradition with the doctrines of materialists, skeptics and freethinkers of the present day, the doctrine that sets man down as a liberalized ape, and the tendency which places him on a level with brutes, to honor, slavery to liberty and death to life. The essay was very well delivered.

"THE CONFEDERATION OF KILKENNY"

Was the subject of an excellent essay by Robert P. Sullivan. Mr. Sullivan's delivery is excellent, his gestures graceful, and his general demeanor that of a promising orator. In manner and appearance he is determined, and the spark of patriotism which moulds the feelings of his country-men when treating of subjects like this, appeared to have due influence with Mr. Sullivan. This was promptly noticed by the audience, who strewed the platform with bouquets. After describing the battle of Benburb, he concluded as follows: "When we look back at that heroic struggle of six years, and consider the patience, the endurance, the fortitude and the Christian magnanimity of the Confederates for their cruel enemies in the hour of victory, we cannot help crying out, 'theirs was the sublimity of Christian forbearance.' Their bravery never was questioned, their honor never sullied, the justice of their cause acknowledged by the civilized world, and yet victory was deferred. Why? Only to await God's good time, when the triumph shall be the greater, its enjoyment the sweeter, and its perpetuation through all time the surer." The essay on

"INTEGRITY IN PUBLIC LIFE,"

By Mr. Charles Weber, was a well written and logical description of the qualities that should distinguish our public servants. In the course of his remarks, Mr. W. said: The relations of governments are to one another as those of individuals in society, hence a nation cannot be respected abroad unless her citizens are honorable and upright and noted for their integrity. . . . When the people lose their respect for, and confidence in, their governments, what rights, public or private, are secure? There is no guarantee. If national honor is lost, all is lost. A nation's honor is the common property of her citizens, and should be as carefully guarded. The official, therefore, who stains or violates it, should be branded as an infamous wretch, unfit and unworthy to enjoy a good government—a blessing he often helps to destroy.

"Lord, dismiss us with Thy blessing,
Hope springs eternal in the human breast;
Man never is, but always to be blessed."

So the dying dust from which he springs
Tells us our future and our mission.

It is incumbent on all the citizens of a commonwealth to look to its interests as to their own, and to be equally prompt in their censure. Of course, our country offered him a splendid field to treat of, and he did so ably. Mr. Lawlor is a finished orator, whose views are worthy of a statesman, and whose manner and appearance is very marked. He seems to possess all the ability to fire men's souls to noble deeds of patriotism, while his opinions of the duties of legislators and officials are such as every man would bow down before in utter and worship with the laws which should regulate both. Mr. Lawlor is one of the first graduates of the College, having obtained the degree of Bachelor of Science, and we have no doubt but he will in the future rank high in the community. [In our next issue we shall publish this interesting essay in extenso.]

The music was good throughout, the opening piece, as we have mentioned, having been creditably executed. The piano and violin duet by G. L. Carroll and Tobras and F. Hughes was well done, as was also the piano solo, "Silver Waves," by Thomas Reardan. M. McElroy and F. Camo sang a duet in good time and perfect unison, richly meriting the long applause they received. The "College Quickstep," performed by the entire band, numbering about sixty musicians, showed what the young musicians were capable of doing when they had received coolness and confidence in themselves. Equally meritorious was the "Pot pourri," rendered by the orchestra. Mr. Robert P. Sullivan sang a solo with considerable taste and precision, proving that he was gifted with what will be a magnificent bass voice. The selection from the "Daughter of the Regiment" was good; but the musical gem of the evening undoubtedly was Lambillotti's "Te Deum," which was most effectively rendered by the choir and orchestra. When the programme had been thus got through, the names of the young gentlemen who were to receive honors were called, and as they came forward the Rev. Archbishop and the clergy, who had now been provided with chairs on the platform, presented them with their respective diplomas and certificates. The following are the students who gained distinction:

Mr. J. Alphens Graves, B. A.; Mr. James Lawlor, B. S.

The following gentlement received their second certificates, which entitle them to graduate next year: Bartholomew P. Oliver, Charles M. Weber, Harry V. Reardan, James T. Murphy, William Sulpsey and John E. McCourtney.

The following received their first certificates which entitle them to graduate next year: Bartholomew P. Sullivan, Edmund J. Buckley, James B. King, Redmond J. Mahony, William B. O'Sullivan, Edward J. Kearny, Charles F. Reardan, Edward Hayes, George L. Carroll, John J. Donnelly, James W. Duffy, Herman A. Kellum and John L. Slattery.

The following gentlemen graduated in the Commercial Department: Edwin F. Murray, Edward Sweeney, Hugh McAvoy, Thomas P. Sullivan, Edward O'Connor, James Duffy and Herman A. Kellum.

The following gentlemen received certificates in this Department: William S. White, Henry Hoffman, James F. Cullen, Thomas C. Lyon, Constantine O'Beirne, John H. Connolly, Louis Kearny, Joseph Gilmore, Joseph T. Burns and James T. Kelly.

When the list had been exhausted and the students, ranged in the passages, the official recognition of their merits, had retired to their seats, the Rev. Father Ghirardelly delivered the subjoined address:

Father Ghirardelli's Address.

MAY HIS EMINENCE, CARDINAL LAVIGERIE, I am sure you will all join with me in congratulating the faculty and students of St. Mary's College for the very excellent address we have just listened to. The well selected music, executed in such a masterly manner, the intrinsic merit of the essays (certainly should more properly say speeches, as well as the masterly delivery, together with the easy and graceful manner in which they were rendered, all fully prove, already spoken volumes in favor of the scholars as well as of professors. But we must not let our pleasure overcome us, and forget that we are speaking with his right in the same presence of the Archbishop of San Francisco, and the learned clergy of this diocese, and the highest honors of secular learning, while from the

The Illustrious Washington, in his inaugural address, says: "There is no truth more essential to the guardianship of his immortal principles on his self-government, than that which ascribes to the Almighty the direction of mundane affairs."

The man thus trained will be adapted to become a statesman, and will be prepared to devote himself to the upbuilding of the institutions of his country, and to the defense of her rights. Such a man will be a true patriot, and will not only prove himself a good citizen, but a good Christian. All laws, social and political, are founded upon the principles of religion, and there are we to look for protection; their basis is the Christian religion, and the Christian alone. Now it is vain to seek elsewhere for the foundation of authority and of order than in the constitution of the universe, in the appointment of God, and in the Christian religion. Any plan which ignores the necessity of such a foundation must be false, and cannot be successful. Here it may be remarked that the Christian religion is the only religion which is the champion of liberty, which is the champion of the rights of man, which is the champion of the rights of conscience, which is the champion of the rights of nations, and which is the champion of the rights of individuals. Other religions have existed, but they have been religions of slavery, religions of despotism, religions of tyranny, religions of caste, religions of exclusiveness, religions of selfishness, religions of cruelty, religions of persecution, religions of bloodshed, religions of war, religions of conquest, religions of ambition, religions of avarice, religions of sensuality, religions of degradation, religions of ignorance, religions of superstition, religions of darkness, religions of death. Christianity is the only religion which is the champion of liberty, which is the champion of the rights of man, which is the champion of the rights of conscience, which is the champion of the rights of nations, which is the champion of the rights of individuals, which is the champion of the rights of women, which is the champion of the rights of children, which is the champion of the rights of the poor, which is the champion of the rights of the oppressed, which is the champion of the rights of the slave, which is the champion of the rights of the prisoner, which is the champion of the rights of the sick, which is the champion of the rights of the dying, which is the champion of the rights of the dead, which is the champion of the rights of the world, which is the champion of the rights of heaven, which is the champion of the rights of God. Christianity is the only religion which is the champion of the rights of God, and it is the only religion which is the champion of the rights of God because it is the only religion which is the champion of the rights of man. Christianity is the only religion which is the champion of the rights of man because it is the only religion which is the champion of the rights of God. Christianity

DARLING KATHLEEN.

I wonder if any wine ever was made
As red as the tips of my fancy?
I wonder if eyes ever so mocked
The dusk-delighted eyes of my darling Kathleen.
The bonniest maiden that ever was seen?

I wonder if incense e'er grew quite so brown,
Or had so bewitching a curl,
Or shone in the sunlight as golden and brown,
Over the dew of a true-hearted girl,
As shades the white brow of my darling Kathleen,
The bonniest maiden that ever was seen?

I wonder if ever a form more divine
Dispersed odd bewilders of love,
Or dowsed with space-spanning wiles through the air,
With magics of light as above,
As the ravishing form of my darling Kathleen,
The bonniest maiden that ever was seen?

I wonder if ever a womanly breast
Was purer or fairer in view,
Or covered a heart that was freer from guile,
Or beat with a passion more true,
Than the snowy-white breast of my darling Kathleen,
The bonniest maiden that ever was seen?

I wonder if ever a passion-dawned kiss
Was given by warm lips to man,
That seemed more a foretaste of heavenly bliss,
Or was more to be coveted than
A warm, loving kiss from the lips of Kathleen,
The bonniest maiden that ever was seen?

MISCELLANEOUS FOREIGN NEWS.

CHIEFLY COMPILED FROM CONTINENTAL JOURNALS

Cardinal Prince Hohenlohe, whose sensational article on German Envoys at the Vatican is so displeasing to the curia, had a long audience of the Emperor recently.

Father Hyacinthe's Old Catholic Committee at Rome has framed a programme. It demands ecclesiastical reform without discussion, and as a standard of doctrine it rejects the decrees of the Vatican Council, but will submit to legitimate authority when the Church. Father Hyacinthe leaves Rome to-day for Paris.

In connection with the recent visit of the Prince of Wales to his Holiness the Pope, there is a rumor in well informed circles that the English Prince in seeking the interview, simply allowed himself to be made use of by the Italian Government with a view to persuading the Holy Father to leave Rome.

During a recent interview his Majesty of Denmark has intimated to his Holiness that if the priests of Malabar were to take active part in the forthcoming elections, the Government and Victor Emmanuel himself would soon succumb. His Holiness replied: "I am not permitted to think as his Majesty Christian IX."

The Archbishop-formerly of St. Michael in the diocese of Vienna, has made proposals to all the dioceses throughout Austria to institute processions, to adopt prayers and days of fasting, that God, in His Divine mercy, may remit the sorrows of the Holy Father. The first of those processions will probably take place on the 2d of July, the feast of the Visitation. On the 15th of August numerous pilgrimages are to be made to the various shrines of our Lady.

On the 19th of May the popular vote on the revision of the Federal Constitution was taken. It is a well known fact that the projected constitution is contrary to the rights and liberties of the Church; as a consequence the advocates of these rights have a well-founded anxiety. The faithful of Switzerland have implored the Cabinet of all nations to make special intentions on that day in their Communions and on the Holy Sacrifice, that God will direct the Swiss people. French papers commend the appeal, and call upon all who are truly devoted to the interests of the Church to unite at the foot of her altars and beg the Holy Spirit to shield the Swiss people from which they were about to record.

We regret to have to record another act of execrable sacrilege committed in the Church of St. Pancratius. A band of robbers last one night got into the Church and going to the tabernacle broke open its outer marble case, forced the safe, tore out the Blessed Sacrament, and threw the sacred particles out into the mud. Nor were they content with this; they also entered the next convent and stole from it a chalice of great value. A gendarme on his evening rounds dragged a poor priest to the spot where one of their companions was lying insensible, and the latter was arrested and sent him to death for refusing to read the prayers of the Church over the disgusting object. It is fair to add that the murderers have been arrested.

Italian journals again ask why does not the Pope come out of his palace? The outcomes of the paper answer the question. Last Sunday afternoon there were in Rome a large stone at the head of a Franciscan friar who was passing in front of the Minerva's road just opposite the police-barrack. The guardians of the peace did not take the least trouble to punish so gross an outrage. Fortunately the stone just grazed, the head of the friar and struck the wall in violently as to cause an indentation in the plaster. The brave stone throwers, seeing they had missed their aim, and that the friar had begun to run after them to teach them a lesson in civility, fled precipitately, what the policemen laughed at the whole affair. If, however, the religious had dared to disband himself they would no doubt have arrested him. Long live the Piedmontese fashion of doing justice!

On Wednesday, May 8th, the Christian Brothers celebrated the anniversary of the birth of their founder, Jean Baptiste de la Salle. Rheims claims the honor of being his native place. The annals of the town, which name the year of his birth as 1651, speak of his early piety, and describe, even as a boy, his strong bias to afford instruction to the young. He first studied at the University of Rheims, and was afterwards the rival in his zeal of a contemporary of the great Fenelon. In 1703 the Bishop of Rheims ordained the Venerable de la Salle, and from that moment an inextinguishable desire to promote the education of youth filled the saint's mind. His labors were not always successful as they were praiseworthy, and in 1686, when the fruits of his onerous duties seemed to be considerably ripened he assumed the habit of the Christian Brothers, which they wear to this day, and took part in their labors. He died upon the 7th April, 1719, at Paris.

Pius IX.'s refusal to permit a prince of the Church to accept the office of Ambassador to the Holy See may not surprise the Catholic world. His Holiness will see, in this instance, make friends to himself of the mammon of unrighteousness. He is seriously angry with the new Empire of Germany, in which he recognizes the most formidable foe to his Church that modern times have begotten, and his rejection of his Serene Highness Cardinal Prince Hohenlohe as Ambassador at the Court of the Vatican—or rather his inhibition of the acceptance by that gentleman of an office conferred upon him by his legitimate sovereign—is nothing more than an answer to the gage of battle thrown down at his feet by the Prussian Diet when it passed the School Inspection bill. The Supreme Pontiff has seized the first opportunity for returning with interest the baffled "donn" him by his gigantic adversary, and it must be with no small degree of particular satisfaction that Pio Nono proves to the world that, though an "old, forsaken man," as he loves to describe himself, he can inflict with impunity such a humiliation on the greatest power in Europe as were it to come from any other potentate but himself, would have to be washed out in rivers of blood, or atoned for by the payment of milliards and the cession of provinces.

A serious injury may arise in the Catholic world through the marked attention the catacombs of Rome are experiencing at the hands of the mercenary Italian ministers. M. Rosa, formerly guardian of the Borgese gallery of art, at present a Senator and Inspector of antiquities, has been placed at the combined interests of the renowned archæologist, Rossi. Excepting an enviable adaptability for conspiracy, this Rosa has manifested extreme inaptness in whatever has been entrusted to his guidance; now, however, his imbecilities are to be humored at the expense of the Catacombs. The excavations in the Catacombs demand a consid erable outlay, and of necessity funds have been, in former years, established to meet the requirement. Hitherto, wherever a State emolument was to be had at any cost, M. Rossi has been an eager candidate, o tenably proving the benefits that would eventually redound to the State. In the guidance of cupidity Rosa has inspired the property owners immediately above the Catacombs with the notion that their claim to the revenues thereupon is inconteistible, and, consequently candidates nominated by same to the Cardinal Vicar. Many have acted upon this advice, anticipating no inquisition from such an eminent person. Trade is a momentous matter on more accounts than the letting the finances into the pockets of these men; besides the great archæological interest attached to the Catacombs, they are the sacred burial-places in the history of the Church. The tombs, chapels, fragments of ancient marbles and frescoes which have been discovered in subterranean Rome bear strong testimony against modern arrogant, potent means to introduce the sub-Alpine Government to countenance Rom's intrigues.

CATHOLIC ITEMS.

Emmons.

J. H. Miner, a convert who died in Dunkirk, N. Y., on Easter Sunday, left $40,000 to the diocese of Buffalo for charitable purposes.

His Grace the Archbishop of New York on May 9, confirmed in St. Michael's church 251 males and 241 females, of whom 110 were adults, and 39 were converts from different religious denominations.

Father Isaac Thomas, a Chippewa Indian missionary, has just returned from Europe in excellent health, bringing with him 3,000 francs collected in Europe, were to money for the various shrines of our Lady.

The Indianapolis Catholic Mirror announces the death of Brother Cornelius Paul at Rock Hill College, about ten o'clock on the night of the tenth of May, in the forty-fourth year of his age, from pulmonary complaints. He entered the order of the Christian Brothers in September, 1856.

The Aiken Catholic church was dedicated recently by Rt. Rev. I. Persico, Bishop of Savanna, assisted by several reverend gentlemen from Augusta and Charleston. Bishop Persico preached an able dedicatory sermon, which was listened to with attention by all in the large audience.

On Sunday, May 12, the Most Rev. Archbishop Purcell confirmed fifty-nine persons in the Church of St. Rose de Lima; on Thursday, 16th, one hundred and sixty-one at St. Augustine's, and the same afternoon one hundred and sixty-six at St. Mary's, Archbishop's.

Rt. Rev. P. J. Ryan administered the Sacrament of Confirmation on Sunday last, in St. John's church to about one hundred and fifty applicants, and in the afternoon at St. Lawrence O'Toole's church to one hundred and forty, four of whom are converts. —St. Louis Western Watchman, May 11.

Rev. Jr. Hall has been removed from Lodi to Lake Forest, and Father Maloney of Lake Forest takes charge of the mission at Lodi. Rev. J. Ryan, Gavin, formerly of St. Mary's, Chicago, is now at Rochelle, and Rev. Father Kilkenny of St. Paul's, Chicago, is at McHenry, Ill. Father Luby, from Rochelle, is stationed at the Cathedral.

On May 14, the Archbishop of New Orleans ador his Mass in the Convent chapel, received, for the first time, the veil and, a native of Ireland, in religion Sister Mary of St. Thérese. Before Mass at the same date and place, the Most Rev. Prelate administered clerical Tonsure to Mr. Michael Robinson, a professed religious of the congregation of Salvatorists.

How few the laborers in the vineyard and how great the labor is, we are reminded by a note in one of the New York papers, which tells us that in one parish in New York, containing a Catholic population of 17,000, there are but three priests; and in another, with a population approaching 30,000, there are but seven priests, and these are further charged with the care of the largest hospital in the city.

The Irish-American of the 25th of May says: "Father Burke is certainly one of the marvels of the age, in the amount of work he performs, the mental and bodily labor involved in his preaching and lecturing. Take last week, for instance, as a sample of what he undergoes. On Monday evening, the 13th, he delivered, at the Academy, the lecture on 'O'Connell.' On Tuesday evening, he preached at Staten Island, at Father Conran's church. On Wednesday evening he delivered the lecture in Jersey City, and the address to the Temperance men. On Thursday evening he lectured in Brooklyn on the same lecture on the 'Pope's Tiara.'" On the next (Friday) evening, he lectured in Albany, one hundred and fifty miles from New York. On Saturday evening he preached again in Staten Island, at Father Loser. On Sunday he preached three times; at the Dominican church at High Mass; at St. John's College, Brooklyn, in the afternoon; and at St. Andrew's, City Hall Place, in the evening.

RELIGIOUS RECEPTION.—At the convent of the Good Shepherd on Monday evening, May 6th, the following young ladies took the habit and were received into that order: Miss Mary Fitzpatrick, of Sterling, Ill., in religion Sister Mary of St. Helena; Miss Kate Fitzpatrick, same place, in religion Sister Mary of St. Ignatius; Miss Annette Walsh, of New Orleans, La., in religion Sister Mary of St. Camillus. The following made their first vows: Miss Mary of the Blessed John Berkmans, in the world Miss Kate Cecilia Smith, of St. Louis; Sister Mary of St. Bernard, in the world Mary Ivers, of St. Paul, Minn.; Sister Mary of St. Margaret, in the world Margaret Moore. Rt. Rev. P. J. Ryan officiated, assisted by Rev. Father Donnelly, S.J. The ceremony was witnessed only by a few select friends. The bishop delivered a very interesting and touching sermon on the occasion.

RELIGIOUS RECEPTION AND PROFESSION.—On the 26th of March, at the convent of Sisters of Mercy, Albany, New York, Leonard, of Ireland (in religion Sister M. Ambrose) was admitted to the white veil and habit of the order by the Rev. D. Colgan, assisted by the Rev. H. Hoffman.

April 16th, at the same convent, Miss Margaret Middleton, of Philadelphia (in religion Sister M. Bonaventure of the Immaculate Conception), received the black veil, received the black veil from the hands of the same venerable priest, assisted by the Rev. E. Sourin, S. J.

On the 13th of May, the Misses Louisa Wilson, of Fast Georgetown, and Miss Charlotte Moran, of Alexandria, Va., were clothed with the habit of novices of the order of the Order of Mercy in the same convent and by the same priest. Miss Wilson having young lady to enlisted in religion, Sister M. Gertrude, and the second Sister M. Innocent. The ceremony of clothing had for his assistant the Rev. G. Nymen.

Foreign.

We regret to announce the death of Very Rev. D. Canon Hogan, P.P., Ballincollig, which occurr d on the morning of the 15th ultimo.

The beautiful parish church of St. Mary, Carrigtwohill, was recently consecrated by Rt. Rev. D. Keane, Bishop of Roomey, assisted by a large number of clergy from the diocese of Cork and Cloyne.

The Very Rev. E. Rutledge, Lord Fortescue, late Provost of St. Ninian's Protestant Episcopalian Cathedral at Perth, has, together with Mrs. Fortescue, been received into the Catholic Church by the Hon. and Very Rev. Mgr. Stonor at Rome.

At the Convent of Mercy, Kilrush, Rt. Rev. Dr. Ryan, Bishop of Killaloe, received the solemn vows of three young ladies in the presence of a large number of their relatives and friends. The names of those professed being: Miss Mary Spain, Miss Catherine O'Donnell of Kilrush, and Miss O'Carroll of Limerick.

The Bishop of Kilkenny, presided over by Rt. Rev. Dr. Moran, the Coadjutor Bishop of Ossory, held a meeting in the Town Hall recently for the purpose of taking steps to provide a convent in the city for the nuns; also, an industrial school and a female refuge to be placed under their charge. The sum of £500 was subscribed at the meeting, including £50 from the Bishop.

The process has commenced at Rome of the beatification and canonization of the Venerable Emilie de Rodat. She is stated by the Bishop of Rodez, who announced this fact to his people, to have been born in 1787, at Druelle, near Rodez, and to have been the foundress of the Congregation of the Holy Family, and of 36 houses of the Order, devoted to the honor of the sacred name of Jesus, Mary and Joseph, to the Christian education of girls, and to the maintenance and direction of orphanages, asylums and refuges, and the care of the sick and of prisoners. The Venerable Mother died in repute of sanctity in 1852. There already exist in France 200 houses of her institute.

HOTELS.

Removal.

THE SECOND STREET HOUSE
Has Removed to 115 Second street,
Northeast corner of Minna. Furnished Rooms to let, with or without board, on the most reasonable terms. Call and examine.
M. O'NEIL,
Proprietor.
no7

CENTRAL HOTEL,
814 AND 816 SANSOME STREET,
Between Broadway and Pacific.....San Francisco

THIS NEW, LARGE AND COMMODIOUS HOTEL has been thoroughly renovated by the well known proprietor, M. FARRELL, late proprietor of the Brooklyn House, where he will be happy to receive his numerous friends and the public generally. Thankful for past favors, he respectfully solicits a continuance of their patronage.
Every attention will be paid to the House, where none but a first-class bar can be kept at the risk of the proprietor.
The Central House Omnibus will be at each car depot and steamboat landing, to convey passengers to the House free of charge.
Price of board to suit the times.
Parties sending for their Friends to the States, by the Central Pacific Railroad, can have Tickets sold them at the Central House.
Board per week.....$6 00
Single Meals, 25 cents. Lodging, 25 cents.
Every accommodation on reasonable terms.
Passengers and baggage conveyed to and from the Cars and Steamboats free of charge.
A City Directory, and all the city papers taken.
MICHAEL FARRELL, Proprietor.
jy1-6m

FRANKLIN HOTEL,
416 AND 418 PACIFIC STREET,
Between Sansome and Montgomery.....San Francisco.
HUGH CURRAN.....Proprietor.
Board, per week.....$5 00
Board and Lodging, single rooms.....$6 00
Single Meals, 25 cents. Lodging, 25 cents.
Passengers and baggage conveyed to and from the Steamboats free of charge.
Board and Lodging per week.....$5 to $6
There is a first-rate bar in the House, where none but the best liquors can be kept in the style of the proprietor.
Coach in the House.
P. CASSERLY, Proprietor.
Thirty-Two large Double-Column Papers every Month for One Dollar a Year.

THE YOUNG CRUSADER,
AN ILLUSTRATED
CATHOLIC MONTHLY MAGAZINE
FOR CHOICE READING
AND
Good Pictures.
Read with interest by all, and with special delight and profit by the younger members of the family.
The Crusader is now in its second year.
The First Number of Vol. II. is out of the press.
Sample Copies sent to all who apply.
Specimen pages always on hand.
Liberal terms to Agents are given to those who act as Clubs.
Liberal Discount to Sunday Schools.
Send One Dollar (one year's subscription) by mail, addressed to the REV. WILLIAM STRNE, Rector, Mass.

New and Important Publications.
THE LIFE, PROPHECIES & REVELATIONS
OF THE
VENERABLE MARY ANNE TAIGI.
Her recently supposed connection with the prophecy of the 3 days' darkness, is the subject of a most interesting book at this time.
VERONICA;
OR,
Devotions to the Holy Face of our Lord.
With prayers and Indulgences.
THE SUNDAY SCHOOL PRAYER AND HYMN BOOK, with 16 beautiful illustrations of the Mass; the most perfect book for children yet published.
THE CATHOLIC WORK BOOK, a library description, 48 lowest rates. Send for Cumminsky's classified list of Catholic Publications.
EUGENE CUMMINSKY, Publisher,
1937 (Terminus) street, Philadelphia.

ST. MARY'S HOSPITAL,
CORNER FIRST AND BRYANT STS.
SAN FRANCISCO.

THIS INSTITUTION IS UNDER THE MANAGEMENT of the Sisters of Mercy
JAMES MURPHY, M.D.....Visiting Physician.
L. C. LANE, M.D.....Visiting Surgeon.
F. A. A. BELINGE, M.D.....Resident Physician.
TERMS:
Payable monthly in advance for board, medicine, attendance, etc.:
In the wards.....$10 per week.
In private rooms.....$15 to $20 per week.
Incurable cases, and others, not admitted.
Contagious diseases, and those in case a patient leaves before the expiration of the week.
Subscribers' fees are not required to pay in advance.
jy1

ST. VINCENT'S INFIRMARY,
Conducted by the Sisters of Charity.

IS NOW OPEN TO RECEIVE A LIMITED number of patients. Applications to be made at the Infirmary, on Jessie street, on the corner of Jessie; or to the Presiding Sister, at the Family House, on Market street, between 4th and 5th. Daily, 720 Montgomery street, between Jackson and Pacific. Sundays, 911 Howard st. Terms: $7 50 per week, in advance.
apr20

WINNER'S NEW SCHOOLS
FOR THE
PIANO-FORTE, CABINET ORGAN, GUITAR, Cornet, Violin, Flute, Accordeon, Clarionet, Zither, Bass, Clarionet, Flute, Flageolet, cording but 75 cents each; for all what are needed for cheap and attractive.
Charming Song, THE GATES AJAR. Thomas, 60 cts.
The above books and piece sent, post-paid, on receipt of retail price.
OLIVER DITSON & CO., Boston.
C. H. DITSON & CO., New York.

SALMON.
SALMON IN BARRELS AND HALVES, New Mackerel and Herrings;
Herrings in Barrels and Halves;
Cured Shad, Pickled Salmon and Smoked Fish,
For sale by
A. J. GRIFFITH,
No. 212 Washington street, below Battery.

EBERHART & LACHMAN,
MANUFACTURERS OF
CALIFORNIA SPARKLING WINES.
SWEET AND DRY CHAMPAGNES, Sparkling Hock and Moselle, Sparkling Burgundy and Claret Wines (all kinds and all brands), Angelica, Muscatel, Madeira, Port, Sherry, Hock, Mount Vineyard, Mixed Wines, Brandy, Cognac Brandies, 1 to 3 years old. All our Wines and Brandies are made exclusively from Mountain Grapes. Principal depot, corner of First and Market streets, San Francisco.
5000 AGENTS WANTED. Samples sent free by mail, with terms in circ. from $5 to $10 a day. This entirely new article, saleable as flour. Address S. H. WHITE, Newark, New Jersey.
ap27-3m

GROCERIES, WINES AND LIQUORS.
WILLIAM B. DOLAN,
163 Third Street.....San Francisco,
Importer and Dealer, Wholesale and Retail, in French Wines and Brandies,
AND
Irish Whiskey,
Imported direct from Ireland.
HE HAS ALSO ON HAND A LARGE AS-sortment of California Wines of every description, which he will dispose of, in bulk or in case, for the lowest cash prices.
All orders left at the store, 163 Third street, will be promptly attended to, and delivered free of charge to any part of the city.
jy29

JOHN FLANAGAN & CO.,
Importers and Jobbers of
Fine Brandies, Wines, Liquors, etc.,
Fire-proof fronts, 421 Front street, bet. Clay & Washington
SAN FRANCISCO.
Pumps, Liquor in Bond, Free of Duty, Purchased for Port, Cases, etc., sold in quantities to suit the purchaser
Also, Gaelart in native California Wines and Brandies.
Call it

JOHN EGAN. JOHN EGAN
Kelly & Egan,
IMPORTERS AND DEALERS IN
FINE WINES AND LIQUORS
No. 604 Battery street,
Near Jackson. San Francisco

B. Commins & Co.
(Successors to P. Riley & Co.)
WHOLESALE LIQUOR MERCHANTS
my6 No. 505 Front Street.

A. P. HOTALING & CO.,
IMPORTERS AND DEALERS IN FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC
WINES AND LIQUORS.
AGENTS FOR THE J. R. CUTTER
OLD BOURBON WHISKY,
C. P. MOORMAN & CO., DISTILLERS,
LOUISVILLE, KENTUCKY.

OWING TO THE DESERVED REPUTATION of the celebrated brand of Whiskey, manufactured by persons here, at cheaper times, and are now, engaged in counterfeiting the imitations of the same, under the popular names of CUTTER, and the misrepresenting as to genuineness and age of the same, represented in these as the genuine article.
To guard, as far as possible the public against fraud and imposition, we notify the trade and consumers generally, that we are the only genuine brand of Cutter Whiskey, and that we are the sole Agents for the same on the Pacific Coast.
A. P. HOTALING & CO.,
421 Jackson street, San Francisco.
no11

PAINTS, OILS, ETC.
SULLIVAN, KELLY & CO.,
Northwest corner Pine and Front Sts.,
Where they offer for sale
THE LARGEST STOCK OF PAINTS,
OILS,
GLASS,
ETC., ETC., ON THE PACIFIC COAST,
AT THE LOWEST MARKET RATES.
101, 102 and 103 FRONT STREET,
and 110 PINE STREET.
ap6

Premium Stitcher.
First Premium and Medal of Mechanics' Institute, 1871
First Premium and Medal of Mechanics' Institute, 1872
First Premium and Medal of Mechanics' Institute, 1871
First Premium of Mechanics' Institute in 1865
First Premium of Mechanics' Institute in 1864
First Premium of Bay District Society in 1869
First Premium in New Orleans, 1870.
TO
M. PRICE,
FOR HOME-MADE CUTLERY,
STORE: 618 KEARNY ST., bet. Pine and California.
FACTORY, 16 GUY PLACE, COMMERCIAL STREET, SAN FRANCISCO.
Razors, Knives, Shears, etc., made to order and warranted. Particular attention paid to jobbing. Inaugural Cutlery polished equal to new. Cutlery sharpened promptly and cheaply.
my11

DAY SCHOOLS
THE SISTERS OF MERCY HAVE JUST completed a commodious School Building in connection with their Convent, in which the various branches of an English education.
The Rev. Father Scheerle is the principal teacher, and will be placed in charge of competent assistants. Both Schools will be opened on the 17th inst.
SISTER MARY B. RUSSELL,
Superior and Directress of Sisters of Mercy.
San Francisco, May 17, 1872.

ST. VINCENT'S SCHOOL
THIS INSTITUTION IS SITUATED IN 1st Barbara, a short distance from the cars, and combines all the advantages of a city and country. The grounds are extensive, and the building is large and commodious.
The course of instruction is thorough and complete, and has been prepared with a view to the best interests of the self-same thing which may slightly be mixed.
Also the special correspondents. Pleased reports are nicely apportioned and placed in the paper. They what is not required and they say what is. Like Turner's pictures there we decided that, as there were only eighteen left of those who had taken part in Napoleon's campaigns, it would be more dignified to show one glorious rage round the mutilated remains of the Emperor, "don't come too near, or we'll make up our minds to do the day" without doing something to remind our correspondents. Hence the fact that the Hotel des Invalides under the conical arcade of the first floor stands a very old friend whom I had not seen since 1855—the bronze statue of the Emperor, wearing the historical hat and the historical cloak.
The 1863 he was the admired and fashionable friend of Paris as he looked goodhumouredly down upon the ship from the height of the Column Vendome. In that long night. He was the idol of the nation happened to be writing a history of Cæsar, intending to illustrate the glorious career of the Roman Emperor, and in order to insure at least an indisputable physical likeness, the artist began in fresh coal was brought down to make room for a tall rival wearing the classical gown and laurels. The rejected statue was sent into exile in the Place de Courbevoie, where it remained almost forgotten until the siege began. Then some patriotic souls thought it a good opportunity to identify his person from the inclemency of the shells. Finally, when the German troops had got as far as Versailles, and when common laboring men, fearing that he might be carried off by the invading country as a trophy, hauled him down, tied a rope round his neck, and dropped him into the Seine, where he lay for days. It was only the other day that he was pulled out by the same men, and hauled over to the Government. Within a hundred yards of his ashes, Napoleon's statue could hardly be in a spot more suited to his fame and to his last wish. The chapel of the Invalides is a spot associated with flags taken in actions—Austrian, Russian, Prussian, Spanish, and even English bunting hangs in a form and numbered more than the whole Protestant press—
Never sit with hundred young-looking boys, decently kneel, repeating prayers for the repose of the dead. Twelve gigantic tapers are burning round a altar, where priests are intoning the prayers. There are a few women and civilians, but it is evidently for the soldiers that the place was meant, for the mass of the people.
The present leaching of the Church or history should re-form, with a knowledge of the Church's influence in the world, is a marvel to Catholics of to-day interpret according to their particular bias; the newspaper interprets the facts in question declaring them to be Napoleon's fault, but, really, it is the Napoleon cannons contravene his Master history appertaining to the Church's prejudice, party and press. The present teaching of history requires that people should be taught. To say what is not true is, we are not meant to inge-nument. "Modern thought" is something to their particular bias; but, really, it is the Church's prejudice, party and press. Slavery of opinion is worse than slavery of person, and the latter is the result of the self-same thing which may slightly be mixed.
Also the special correspondents. Pleased reports are nicely apportioned and placed in the paper. They what is not required and they say what is. Like Turner's pictures there we decided that, as there were only eighteen left of those who had taken part in Napoleon's campaigns, it would be more dignified to show one glorious rage round the mutilated remains of the Emperor, "don't come too near, or we'll make up our minds to do the day" without doing something to remind our correspondents. Hence the fact that the Hotel des Invalides under the conical arcade of the first floor stands a very old friend whom I had not seen since 1855—the bronze statue of the Emperor, wearing the historical hat and the historical cloak.
The 1863 he was the admired and fashionable friend of Paris as he looked goodhumouredly down upon the ship from the height of the Column Vendome. In that long night. He was the idol of the nation happened to be writing a history of Cæsar, intending to illustrate the glorious career of the Roman Emperor, and in order to insure at least an indisputable physical likeness, the artist began in fresh coal was brought down to make room for a tall rival wearing the classical gown and laurels. The rejected statue was sent into exile in the Place de Courbevoie, where it remained almost forgotten until the siege began. Then some patriotic souls thought it a good opportunity to identify his person from the inclemency of the shells. Finally, when the German troops had got as far as Versailles, and when common laboring men, fearing that he might be carried off by the invading country as a trophy, hauled him down, tied a rope round his neck, and dropped him into the Seine, where he lay for days. It was only the other day that he was pulled out by the same men, and hauled over to the Government. Within a hundred yards of his ashes, Napoleon's statue could hardly be in a spot more suited to his fame and to his last wish. The chapel of the Invalides is a spot associated with flags taken in actions—Austrian, Russian, Prussian, Spanish, and even English bunting hangs in a form and numbered more than the whole Protestant press—
Never sit with hundred young-looking boys, decently kneel, repeating prayers for the repose of the dead. Twelve gigantic tapers are burning round a altar, where priests are intoning the prayers. There are a few women and civilians, but it is evidently for the soldiers that the place was meant, for the mass of the people.
The present te

TELEGRAPHIC!

The crop reports from various parts of Illinois and Iowa show that the season is backward. The wheat crops in most localities are much lighter than usual.

WASHINGTON, June 1st.—The House rejected the bill to sell to actual settlers the surplus lands in Round Valley Reservation. Also the bill to make San Diego a port of entry.

The Senate Finance Committee reported additional appropriations of $160,000 for the machinery of the San Francisco Branch Mint. Also over $44,000 more for the Benicia Arsenal.

The members of the San Francisco Committee, despite Stewart's recent promises, have discovered the purpose of the Union Island advocates to call the bill from the table, if possible, before adjournment, and is try and pass it without reference to the House.

The bill for the erection of the Pavilion Marine Hospital was reported favorably by the Senate.

BOSTON, June 1st.—The San Francisco Committee authorize the announcement that negotiations here between Hager, Sneath and Hopkins, and the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company were concluded to-day, and satisfactory understanding consummated for joint cooperation in completing the Thirty-fifth Parallel Railroad. It only remains to advise with St. Louis, at which place the San Francisco delegation will meet June 10th, to complete the business. Sneath, Hopkins, Hager, McMinn, Phelps, Aldrich, Otis, and Upton are expected to participate in that meeting.

NEW YORK, June 3.—Jas. Gordon Bennett died of cold age. His lower limbs had been paralyzed for several months, and he was fully impressed with the idea that he could not long survive. His estate is said to amount to ten millions. The Herald, with the building and real estate connected with it, he leaves to his son, and the will provides that he is never to sell it, but that it must remain in the family. His Fifth avenue mansion he left to his wife, and his Washington Heights property to his daughter Jannette.

The Irish National Band, numbering forty musicians, will participate in the Boston Jubilee.

Sumner offered a resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution, providing for the election of the President directly by the people, and abolishing the Vice-Presidency.

WASHINGTON, May 30th.—It is known from official sources that the Treaty of Washington is in peril. The telegrams from London give no hope of adjustment, as it is said that Great Britain requires the unequivocal withdrawal of the indirect claims, and the President and Senate are determined to make no further concessions.

The London Times asserts that there never has been any genuine agreement between England and America relative to the indirect claims. It concludes: "It is time that we must consider the failure of the arbitration inevitable. We may thank the American Senate for this. Had it accepted the supplemental article without amendment, our position would have been awkward."

THIERS, June 5.—Charles Lever, the Irish novelist, died here to-day, aged sixty-six.

Sumner and Schurz Denounce the Administration.

WASHINGTON, June 1.—The speech of Sumner in the Senate yesterday was over four hours in delivery. It was almost devoted to an elaborate arraignment of President Grant, officially and personally, couched in language always severe, and often bitter.

He accused the President of being a gift-taker; a monopolist; a soldier in pleasure-seeking time with fast horses or in traveling around the country and loitering at the seaside resorts. He referred in severe terms to the San Domingo annexation scheme, repeating the arguments used by him in former speeches. He declared that his government was a personal one; that it thought to coerce the Senators and Representatives of the people to adopt, regardless of the principles of the Republican party which elected it. He charged the efforts to secure General Grant, that they tended directly to the disruption of the Republican party; because the sense of the candidate had become the sign for discord, and this disruption to accept the Executive decision of unduly ratified by persisting in his candidature. He asserted that the President had surrounded himself with a corrupting of personal followers; that he engaged constantly in personal quarrels, unconscious that the President has no right to quarrel with anybody; that he makes personal objects a matter of pursuit, so that instead of a beneficent presence he is a bad example through whom Republicanism suffers constantly and the people learn wrong.

He referred to the President's military education and career, and argued that a successful soldier is rarely changed to a successful civilian, citing numerous cases from history in support of his proposition, notably that of General Andrew Jackson. Frederick the Great and Marlborough. Referring to the President's political history he repeated that he never voted but once in his life, and then for Buchanan. He detailed a conversation which he (Sumner) had with Secretary Stanton in December, 1869, shortly before his death, in that month, in which he said he knew the President better than anyone in the country could know him, and that he knew he could not govern the country.

Reviewing the acts of his administration, Sumner began with his nomination for the Cabinet, in which he said the general disappointment was only equalled by general wonder. He said that all traditions, usages and propriety were discarded, and the just expectations of the people were not met, or sought. The offices of the country, he said, were similarly disposed of, and in this connection he referred to the Custom House question of the President.

Alluding to our foreign relations, Sumner said that he felt bound to say that never before has the management been so wasting in ability and so absolutely without character, and declared that in all directions there was one unvarying mediocrity.

Aside from the personalities of the speech, which were marked and bitter, almost every part of the President's public private and public — were criticised. The speech was much the same as those heretofore made by the Senator on the San Domingo Question, Civil Service Reform, and on the Ames Investigation.

He concluded as follows: I await the determination of the National Convention of delegates from my own much honored Commonwealth, with whom I rejoice to act. With sadness do I say, with the earnest hope that the Convention will bring the Republican party into its ancient harmony, and save it especially from the suicidal folly of an issue on the personal pretensions of one man.

At the conlusion of Sumner's speech SCHURZ

Obtained the floor, and was proceeding to review the majority report of the French Arms Committee, when Ferry, of Connecticut, moved to adjourn, saying it was not in accordance with courtesy and the usages of the Senate to compel the Senator to proceed with his speech at so late an hour. The motion was lost—yeas, 19; nays, 24.

Ferry then moved for a recess until 7:30 P. M.

Sumner said that the object of the motion was to put on Schurz an indignity not usually offered to a Senator.

Conkling said that after what had occurred the question of courtesy was not applicable.

Schurz assumed that it was a dangerous sign of the times to see the lawyers of that Committee acquiescing in a soldier's construction of the law. The sanctity of the law had never been trifled with more wantonly in any constitutional government. He repelled the imputation of the majority report, that either he or Sumner had been instigated by personal motives in their action urging the investigation. Reviewing the circumstances attending the sales, he said they were conducted under the most indefensible violations of the law. Referring to the removal of Sumner from the head of the Committee on Foreign Relations, he said no reason whatever to this day had been given for it except that at Gilmer Sumner had refused to reply to a remark of the Secretary of State, and to this time it was not known whether the question was, "Duck or partridge." It was the President's will that caused that degradation of the Senator from Massachusetts, and the Senate the day the deed was done lay in pitiable prostration at the feet of the President. He claimed also as an action of the majority of the Senate in the San Domingo matter that sanction was given in instance of the subserviency to the President. He rejoiced at the spirit of reform which was sweeping over the country, and the effort which was being made to shake off the fetters which were now binding the country, and he hoped for a union of all the forces that ought to be brought together to secure a victory over the corrupt power which now ruled the country.

Consecration to the Priesthood.

St. Joseph's Seminary, at Troy, N. Y., was on Sunday, May 26, the scene of a solemn ceremony of an unusually impressive character, by which the Catholic Church confers the high dignity of priesthood on those whom she has chosen to minister at her altars. Those who are to be elevated severally to the priesthood, deaconate and sub-deaconship received at the hands of Rt. Rev. Francis McNierny, lately made Coadjutor-Bishop of the Diocese of Albany, the several orders which they were deemed fitted to receive. The chapel of the seminary was filled at seven a. m. by the friends of the ecclesiastical students, who came in large numbers to witness the ceremonies; and promptly at eight o'clock the seminarians advanced in solemn procession through the great hall, bearing in their hands lighted tapers and clothed in long white albs that covered their whole body and gave them an almost supernatural appearance. The celebrant Bishop followed, attended by Rev. Fathers Poniesmi and Fires, who acted respectively as Archdeacon and Master of Ceremonies; and on entering the sanctuary the Bishop and those while alba that covered their whole body the young neophytes knelt reverently within the body of the chapel, but removed from the altar.

THE CANDIDATES FOR SUB DEACONSHIP,

By which they are required to make the promise of perpetual chastity, were first admonished of the importance of the step about to be taken, and exhorted to withdraw if any obstacle or doubt intervened; but none withdrew, and they were severally of the Archdiocese of Nashville, Tenn.

The ordination of

THE CANDIDATES FOR THE PRIESTHOOD

Was very interesting. After a public profession of faith, in the words of the Apostle's Creed, and of obedience to the Bishop and his successors, the power of absolution was granted and the final benediction given to the newly ordained priests. On the previous day tonsure and minors had been conferred as follows: Wm. J. Foy, Connellius V. Mahoney, Michael Newman and John J. Riordan of the Archdiocese of New York; James Walsh, of the Diocese of Albany; James Chittick and John McNulty of the Diocese of Boston; Thos. O'Neill, of the Diocese of Portland; John J. Donnelly and Michael J. Madden of the Diocese of Rochester; Thos. Plunkett of the Diocese of Ogdensburg.

WERE PROMOTED TO TONSURE,

John J. Corr, Daniel T. Cronin, Wm. J. Hogan, John W. Morris, Michael Newman and Wm. Ward, of the Archdiocese of New York; John J. Crowley, John Hyland, Jas. A. Kelly, Thos. H. Leonard and Francis McGuire, of the Diocese of Albany; John B. Galvin, Mathew McDonald, Thos. H. E. Power and James N. Supple, of the Diocese of Boston; Andrew J. Brennan, Charles Dreer and Wm. Morrow, of the Diocese of Rochester; John A. McMahon, of the Diocese of Hartford; Daniel J. O'Sullivan, of the Diocese of Springfield; Wm. Rossiter, of the Diocese of Ogdensburg.

MARSHAL BAZAINE.—The following is the concluding portion of the judgment of the Court of Inquiry, in the case of Marshal Bazaine:

"We are of opinion that Marshal Bazaine caused the the loss of an army of 150,000 men and of the stronghold, Metz; that the responsibility rests solely on him, and that he did not as commander-in chief do everything his duty as a soldier dictated. We blame Marshal Bazaine for having entered into relations with the enemy which ended in a capitulation not authorized by the laws of war, that essentially ironic and intriguant have been unknown to the Marshal, which he should have repelled the first overtures that were made to him, and which he should have at once broken off. Instead of doing so he allowed the enemy to deceive him, and himself to be deceived by the artful and perfidious Bismarck, who, by the most contemptible means, succeeded in making the Marshal believe that the Government of the National Defense was composed of factious men, who were only desirous of the prolongation of the war for their own personal interests. Finally, we blame Marshal Bazaine for having surrendered the whole material of war in his possession, which he should have destroyed. We blame him for not paying attention, while negotiating the capitulation, to conditions for the amelioration of his soldiers' position, and for failing to stipulate in favor of the sick and wounded; all of which provisions of exception and favor he might have obtained. We blame him for having delivered to the enemy the flags which he might and should have destroyed, and for having in this way added to the humiliation of gallant soldiers, whose honor he ought to have preserved."

Wholesale Market Report.

MONITOR OFFICE, SAN FRANCISCO, TUESDAY, June 4, 1872.

FLOUR—The demand for local consumption has continued good, and a fair inquiry for export, has existed, principally for Chili. Sales are as follows: EXTRA at $4 50@$4 62½, and superfine, at $4@$4 12½; interior and trade grades.—EXTRA at $3 75@$4 00 in sks & 100 lbs.

WHEAT—The market has been quiet but firm, at a slight decline in prices, since our last weekly review. At the close we quote the range at $1 90@$1 95 in sks & 100 lbs.

BARLEY—The demand has continued fair for this grain during the week under review. Sales of ordinary feed were made at about $1 40@$1 45 in sks. Quoted at the close at $1 40@$1 50 in sks & 100 lbs.

OATS—The market has remained quiet, at unchanged rates, during the past week. Ordinary to choice sold at $1 60@$1 80 in sks & 100 lbs, which is the range at the close.

HAY—The receipts have been fair during the past seven days, with a fair demand. Quotable at the range at $@$ for ordinary mild and to choice per ½ ton.

STRAW—Quotable at $@$ 50 ½ ton for cargo lots

CORN—Market quiet at $1 80@$1 90.

CORN MEAL—Sales at $@$ 3 75 @ 100 lbs from store.

BRANS—We note a fair demand, and the following are the latest prices: Bran, $@$ 17 ½ ton, and mixed, $@$ 18; Pitts, $@ 16 @ 16 lbs.

POTATOES—Are in better demand; but the range is $@$ 50 and $@ 1 12½ for new @ 100 lbs.

ONIONS—Quoted at $@ 3 50 from store.

MIDDLINGS—We quote feed at $2 12½ @ ton from the mill.

BUCKWHEAT—Dull at $@ 3 00 @ lbs.

RYE—Scarce at $@ 2 25 @ 100 lbs.

SEEDS—We quote Flax at 3c, Canary, 3@4c; Alsike, 12½@15c; Timothy, 10@12½c.

HONEY—Is quoted at 12½@15c in comb, and Pointe's, in tins, each, at $1 @ dozen.

HIDES—We quote California dry 11½@13½c, and salted at 9½@10½c.

TALLOW—Quotable at 6½@6¾ @ lb.

WOOL—The demand continues to be inactive state. We quote good shipping grades at 34@41c; extra, 42@43c. Spring is totally neglected.

DAIRY PRODUCE.

BUTTER—California, choice, 30@31c; fresh roll, 27½@27½; pickled, 19@20c; Eastern grain, 26@27½c. Oregon and Washington, 25@27½c; Canterville, 21½c.

CHEESE—California, 10@10½ @ dozen.

EGGS—California, 18@19c @ dozen.

CURED MEATS.

HAMS—California at 13½@13½c @ ℔; Oregon, none in the market; Eastern, 14½@15½c.

BACON—California, at 11@11½c @ ℔; Oregon, 10½ @11; Eastern, sweet-cured, 12½@13½c; do canvassed, 13½@13½c.

LARD—California, 12½@13½c @ ℔; Oregon, none in the market; Eastern, in tcs, 11½@12c; do in cases, 12½@13c.

FRESH MEATS.

BEEF—For first quality, 6½@7c @ ℔; for second do, 5@6; third do 4@5 @ ℔.

VEAL—5@6½ @ ℔.

MUTTON—4½@5½ @ ℔.

LAMB—5@6½ @ ℔.

PORK—Dressed, grain-fed, 7½@8½c on foot, grain fed, 5@6c @ ℔.

POULTRY AND GAME.

TURKEYS—Live, young, 20@22½c; spring CHICKENS, 1883; Hens, 1883; @ dozen.

DUCKS—Tame, $@$; wild, $@$ @ dozen.

GEESE—Tame at $@$ @ dozen.

PIGEONS—Tame, $@$; Grouse, $@$ @ dozen.

Retail Prices of Poultry and Game.

HENS—Large, $@$ @ dozen.

CHICKENS—Large, $@ each.

DUCKS—Tame, $@ @ each.

HARE—$@ each.

RABBITS—$@ each.

PIGEONS—Tame, $@ $@ @ doz.

MESSRS WRAY HE SAYS.—Though "confirmations strong as proofs of Holy Writ," and as numerous as the sands on the sea shore, were produced to prove that Dr. Pierce, the proprietor of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy, is a rascal and means what he says when he declares that he will not be bullied out of his just rights, and that the "Catarrh Remedy" of the Old and World is the most perfectly formed man living. Will make his first appearance on the

WEDNESDAY EVENING, MAY 29,

Thirtieth Entertainment given the greatest enthusiasm in the manner of any monumental that has ever been placed before any audience, and has been applied out of the world. The Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy is to be, in every respect, superior to any and all other performers extant.

Third Week—GRAND CHANGE OF PROGRAMME.

The press pronounce Little Chrysolite first class worker, and the general verdict of all was, "The best thing we have ever seen." The performance are all first class, amongst whom is

THE GREAT SAYTHORN'S FAMILY!

You no number, who have been for a number of years as a unchanged line here Artists in the profession.

Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy is for sale by druggists. Price, $1 00. Beware of imitations. Their failing being perfect, they have no superiors, no equals.

Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy is for sale by druggists at the close at 1 each 50 @ 100 lbs.

THE BIGGEST SHOW ON EARTH!

We perform all we advertise the programme is a each performance being literally carried out.

$2 No increase in prices.

MATINEE—WEDNESDAY AND SATURDAY.

RARE CHANCE FOR AGENTS!

AGENTS, we will pay you $30 per week to cash, if you will engage with us at once. Everything furnished and expenses paid. Address

P. A. ELLIS & CO.,
Charlotte, Mich.

jel-1w

SALESMEN WANTED.

MESSRS. HAMDIN & HART, Springfield, Ill., dealers in Pianos, Organs, and manufacturers of the "Victor" Music Box, wish to employ 1,500 agents to sell their celebrated Music Box. The "Victor" is conceded by all to be the SIMPLEST and most perfect instrument of its kind in use. This fact is proved by the very large demand for the instrument, over 3,000 having been sold during the past year. We manufacture two styles of cases, Rosewood and Walnut; both are mounted in Silver, and will suit the taste for style. The "Victor" plays sixteen tunes, and is warranted for five years.

A large commission will be allowed Agents who engage in the sale of this instrument. The business is particularly recommended to Lady Agents, being pleasant and profitable. To those who wish to act as agents in the sale of our "Victor Music Box," we will send a sample box, with terms to agents, and a liberal offer for packing extra organs. Complete printed instructions, rate of commission, terms, etc., will be sent with the instruments, or upon application by letter, enclosing a cent stamp. Write name, county and State plainly. Address

HAMDIN & HART,
Springfield, Ill.

my28-1y

Publishers who copy this notice in the editorial columns of their paper, will receive one of our "Victor Music Boxes" free, upon receipt of copy of the paper containing the notice.

HAMDIN & HART.

A PITIFUL CONDITION.—It is a sad thing to pass through life only half alive. Yet there are thousands whose habitual condition is one of languor and debility. They complain of no specific disease; they suffer no positive pain; but they have no relish for anything which affords mental or sensual pleasure. In other cases out of 100 this state of lassitude and torpor arises from a morbid stomach. Indigestion destroys the appetite, and fails to supply the blood with the nutriment it requires. Hostetter's Stomach Bitters supplies the deficiency, and by a due and regular assimilation of food with the blood, revives, refreshes, and invigorates the whole system.

Now, what does common sense suggest under these circumstances? Of course, the use of something that is reasoning and strengthening; not merely for an hour or a day, but steadily and perseveringly, for a length of time that ever (as it assuredly would do) if an ordinary alterative medicine were employed. Hostetter's Stomach Bitters possesses this PECULIAR AND DESIRABLE OBJECT to be accomplished: The power to give tone, firmness and vigor to the nervous system of a quarter of a century, is surely sufficient to entitle it to the confidence of the public as a course of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters. In most cases instances of the most inveterate dyspepsia and of shorter duration; at the same time, if fighting with the system-up by recuperating the fountain-head of digestion and assimilation, the great organ upon which all the other organs depend for their nutriment and support. By thoroughly purifying the blood of the vitiated vegetable toxic and invigorator have been known, in the case of the writer of this notice, to have effected a complete change in the whole system, and to have supplied the capacity to digest what it receives. Persons who smell the remedy before they taste it, and refuse to let the material of disease and malaria, home and abroad, have been restored to health and vigorous existence by the use of the watery palestum with which they have heretofore been imperfectly nourished.

MISCELLANEOUS.

INFORMATION WANTED—Of the whereabouts of ALBERT B. FREEMAN, who, when last heard from, was residing in Virginia City, Nev. He is the son of Reuben Freeman, working on the Pioneer Stage Line, and is supposed to be driving stage from Birmingham, of San Rafael, Marin county, Cal., he will hear of something to his advantage. Address

ROBERT PIDDOCK,
San Francisco.

INFORMATION WANTED—Of JOHN WHITE and MARY WHITE, natives of the parish of Ballyhea, County Cork, Ireland, about 21 years old. When last heard from he was in Somerville, Contra Costa county, in the employ of Mr. Ayer. Any information concerning them will be thankfully received by the undersigned, or by their brother, who has just arrived from the East. Address, care of Wells, Fargo & Co., 61 Montgomery street, San Francisco.

my29

INFORMATION WANTED—Of WILLIAM and JOHN HEALY, natives of Ballyhea, County Cork, Ireland, about 21 years old. When last heard from they were in Virginia City, Nevada. Any information of him will be thankfully received by his brother, James Harry, Valley P. O., Lassen county, Iowa.

my24

A CATHOLIC YOUNG LADY,

Of good knowledge of Music and French (the latter preferred), wishes to obtain a situation as governess in a comfortable home by applying at THIS MONITOR office.

my11-

C. MOODY,

DRUGGIST and CHEMIST

Dealer in PURE DRUGS and MEDICINES, Toilet and Fancy Articles and Perfumery, Paris Wines and Liquors for Medical Use,

Nos. 900 and 902 KEARSY STREET.

my11 SAN FRANCISCO. tf

SULLIVAN, FRATINGER & CO.,

14 Montgomery Street.

Have just received a large assortment of

CHILDREN'S

BRAIDED PIQUE SUITS

WITH OVERSKIRTS,

Which they are selling at the following prices for children:

| | |
|---|---|
| 3 YEARS OLD | $ 4 50 |
| 4 YEARS OLD | 4 75 |
| 5 YEARS OLD | 5 00 |
| 6 YEARS OLD | 5 25 |
| 7 YEARS OLD | 5 50 |

ALSO, A HANDSOME LINE OF

Chili ron's Linen Dresses and Suits,

Which they offer at prices ranging from $1 50 and upwards.

my25

THE GREAT

SAN FRANCISCO CIRCUS

AND

ROMAN HIPPODROME,

ON JACKSON STREET LOT.

THE MANAGEMENT OF THIS ORIGINAL ESTABLISHMENT has, with very great care and expense, inaugurated in the Grand Show of 1872, with the intention of traveling from the Pacific to the Atlantic Slope, and to complete in friendly rivalry for the palm of superiority with any Circus they may meet.

ENGAGEMENT OF JEM MACE,

Champion of England and America, who has, in his line, no superior living. Also, the Great Leaper, and the Academy of Horses, the Great Acrobatic Troupe, the Performers of Roman and Grecian Statuary, accompanied by the Gymnasts of the Old and New World to be the most perfectly formed man living. Will make his first appearance on the

WEDNESDAY EVENING, MAY 29,

This Grand Entertainment gives the greatest satisfaction to the patrons of any monumental that has ever been placed before any audience, and has been applied out of the world. The Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy is to be, in every respect, superior to any and all other performers extant.

Third Week—GRAND CHANGE OF PROGRAMME.

The press pronounce Little Chrysolite first class worker, and the general verdict of all was, "The best thing we have ever seen." The performers are all first class, amongst whom is

THE GREAT SAYTHORN'S FAMILY!

You no number, who have been for a number of years as a unchanged line here Artists in the profession.

Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy is for sale by druggists. Price, $1 00. Beware of imitations. Their failing being perfect, they have no superiors, no equals.

Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy is for sale by druggists at the close at 1 each 50 @ 100 lbs.

THE BIGGEST SHOW ON EARTH!

We perform all we advertise the programme is a each performance being literally carried out.

$2 No increase in prices.

MATINEE—WEDNESDAY AND SATURDAY.

RARE CHANCE FOR AGENTS!

AGENTS, we will pay you $30 per week to cash, if you will engage with us at once. Everything furnished and expenses paid. Address

P. A. ELLIS & CO.,
Charlotte, Mich.

jel-1w

HARRIS' IMPROVED SEWING MACHINES.

Warranted for Five Years.

Will Sew from Fine Muslin to Heavy Cloth.

SELLING ONE DAY ONLY.

Price, $15.00. Cash or Installments.

HARRIS' MANUFACTURING CO., 21 Broadway, N. Y., or Jamestown, N. Y. Price $15.00.

DRY GOODS, ETC.

KERBY, BYRNE & CO.,

NO. 7

Montgomery St.,

DAVIS.....

THE BEST SELECTED STOCK

OF.....

DRY GOODS

ON.....

THE PACIFIC COAST,

AND ARE SHOWING

NEW GOODS FROM NEW YORK

DAILY.

Buyers will find it to their advantage to examine our

STOCK OF DRY GOODS.

Which comprises every variety and class of goods in our line, and al

Prices which Defy Competition.

KERBY, BYRNE & CO.

No. 7 MONTGOMERY STREET.

INSURANCE.

JULIUS KOBBE, General Agent, 310 CALIFORNIA ST., SAN FRANCISCO.

THE

GERMANIA

LIFE INSURANCE CO.

Is the ONLY Company issuing ABSOLUTE and NON-FORFEITABLE and UNCONTESTABLE Policies.

No Applications for paid up Policies received. Limitation of time.

BANKING.

HIBERNIA SAVINGS

AND

LOAN SOCIETY

Office—Northeast corner of Montgomery and Sutter streets.

OFFICERS:

President.....M. D. SWEENY
Vice-President.....C. D. O'BRIEN
Treasurer.....FRANCIS J. KELLY
Attorney.....RICHARD TOBIN

Remittances from the country may be made by Wells, Fargo & Co.'s Express office, or by any responsible banking house; but the Society will not be responsible for the safe delivery of remittances by mail or express. Deposits received from $1 upwards. Interest on deposits, from 6 to 8 per cent. per annum. Loans made on approved real estate security. Drafts on Europe, Atlantic States, and British Columbia, bought and sold. Gold dust received for coinage or bullion. Exchange on the principal cities of the United States and Europe for sale. Collections made on favorable terms. Current rates allowed on deposits subject to check at sight. Special deposits received, for which certificates are issued, bearing no interest. Office hours from 10 o'clock a. m. to 3 o'clock p. m. Saturdays, from 10 o'clock a. m. to 12 o'clock m.

JOS. A. DONAHOE, San Francisco.
F. MARAN, New York.

DONOHOE, KELLY & CO.

SAN FRANCISCO.

EUGENE KELLY & CO.

NEW YORK

BANKERS.

EXCHANGE ON

NEW YORK, LONDON, AN BANK OF IRELAND.....DU

Payable at all the BANKING HOUSES AND IN EVERY COUNTY TOWN IN IR

SCHOOL BOOKS, PRAYER BOOKS, TOY & JUVENILE BOOKS.

ALL THE TEXT BOOKS USED IN the Public and Public Schools of California for sale by

RYAN'S OLD STA

No. 10 Fourth street, near Mo

Parents and guardians of limited means will find it to their advantage to trade where no additional charge is made for the selection of books. Catholic Prayer Books for sale. Orders promptly attended to. Catalogues furnished gratis.

my25 The MONITOR always on hand.

The Celebrated Trotting Sti

GLADIATOR

BY GEN. M. PATCHEN JR.

Will serve a limited number of Mares, at his Stables, on Folsom street, between Fifth and Sixth, the farm of P. H. LENNON, one mile south of the Mission Dolores, at the low price of $50 the season.

Mares for the Season, $20, in U. S. coin.

DESCRIPTION:

GLADIATOR, is a dark bay horse, 16 hands high, star and snip, with small hind feet, white hind legs, and is a handsome horse. He is 7 years old, has a fine mane and tail

IRISH NATIONAL MUSIC.

Closing Lecture of Father Burke.

(Concluded from last week.)

HOW PAREE IT WITH THOSE HARPS

During the long protracted agony of national woe? They still animated the hopes of the nation; they still made their the pulse of the nation vibrate apace to the vibration of their glorious harps. Spenser, the English poet, reproached them, because they sang only of love. Alas! they had scarcely any other field. The time of national glory—of national prosperity—was gone. They were the voice of an oppressed and down-trodden people; therefore did the Irish bard answer:

"Oh! blame me not, if to the lay of love
Wherein my pleasure ling'ringly is given,
My heart beats most, and, in happier hours,
His most might have burned with a bolder flame.
The spring which now languishes loose o'er the lyre,
Might have lent a proud bow to the warrior's dart;
And the lip which now breathes but the song of love,
Might have poured the full tide of a patriot's heart."

Yet they did not content themselves, these bards, with merely animating the then fighting people, and rousing the national heart and courage. They did more. In the days of battle and danger, when they sounded the tocsin for the war and for the fight, then the bards that could speak awakened, and did awaken, the tenderest strains of song, were foremost in the battle-field, fighting for Erin. It is more than probable that this which is embodied in the poet's verse:

"The minstrel boy, to the war is gone,
In the ranks of death you'll find him;
His father's sword he has girded on,
And his wild harp slung behind him.
'Land of song!' said the warrior bard,
'Though all the world betrays thee,
One sword, at least, thy rights shall guard,
One faithful harp shall praise thee.'"

"The minstrel fell, but the foeman's chain
Could not bind his captive soul;
For the harp he loved sat'sfied his strain,
And it lingered bright and free;
For it told not of a soldier's fame,
They sought vain to dim the minstrel's name,
They could not make the song a slave."

"Then sleep in peace, thou bard of fire!
Thou gav'st thy country her noblest dower,
When thou didst strike her chords of lyre
With a hand as free as her own harp's wire,
And her own heart beat to their power."

Three hundred years ago, that mild and holy name, Ireland, was held sacred at times led occasion to mention before, at the sound of whose name rose before you the gallant and chivalrous, the high-minded, with his blood-shot, inflamed eyes, rocking with rage, and his hand unsheathed for a threat, to grasp a sanfeur and extinguish a life; and his huge frame scarcely able to move—well, his name is History VIII.—one of the first laws that he made was, that every harper, and

EVERY MINSTREL IN IRELAND SHOULD BE PUT TO DEATH.

It was so like him. He was so fond of killing people—especially women. Every good-looking lady in England, in his time, was dreadfully afraid of him, and if you wished a lady to faint, or to put up her hands to see if her head was on her shoulders, you had only to say, "I hear the King is a great admirer of yours." Then, and even before his time, from the days that the German invader first set foot on the soil of Ireland—we have the testimony of history for it) we have the decree of the English monarchs for it—the Irish bards and minstrels—Irish to their heart's core—were in the habit of combining the English camp, and playing their National Irish airs. The English knew that these bards, and minstrels that they had under their care—were in the habit of playing their Irish airs. The English knew that these bards, and minstrels that they had under their care—were in the habit of playing their National

WEEKLY CALENDAR.

FOR THE WEEK BEGINS JUNE 16.

Sunday—Fifth Sunday after Pentecost.
M.—Monday—Nativity of St. John Baptist.
T.—Tuesday—St. William, Abbot.
W.—Wednesday—St. John and Paul, Martyrs.
Th.—Thursday—Of the octave of St. John.
F.—Friday—St. Irenæus, Bishop and Martyr. Vigil
Sat.—Saturday—St. Peter and Paul, Apostles.

THE MONITOR:

THE ONLY

Irish and Catholic Journal in California.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

SATURDAY.....JUNE 22, 1872.

LABOR QUESTIONS AND THEIR SOLUTION.

There are some people who think that the International Society is destined to attain immense strength and exercise vast influence throughout the United States. The gloomy forebodings of such persons are to be found in the pages of several religious journals—a few Catholic among the number—and certainly they are by no means pleasant to read. For our part, we do not at all share in these apprehensions, and we are far more amused than terrified by the predictions. It seems to us that the International is entirely unsuited to the national temperament of the American people, and therefore can never become thoroughly domiciled here. It may not actually die out, at least for a considerable space of time, but in these and similar diagnoses do not come to pass, be confined to a miserable clique of foreigners incapable of comprehending our free institutions, or appreciating that rational and just liberty which it proclaims to obtain.

The condition of the workingman is, admittedly, not what it ought to be, and it must be improved. The pay of the toiler, in all branches of trade, is entirely too small; the capitalist or employer gets more than his proper share of the profits. Consequently, a readjustment of remuneration has to be brought about somehow or another. The great object of the capitalist is to make money out of his investment, and therefore he has a direct interest in keeping the pay of the laborer at as low a figure as possible. There is really nothing to complain of in this, because it belongs to the natural order of things and cannot be changed by any device. The matter to be deplored is that the desire of amassing great wealth has, and that rapidly, in order to make a grand display in society, and procure all the luxuries which are the overgrowth of an exuberant civilization, has so completely taken possession of the capitalists' soul that he is grasping and unconscientious, and keeps to himself an unfair percentage of the proceeds of industry.

It is no use attempting to correct this by law. Any decree saying, "This shall be the payment for so much work," would be impracticable; inasmuch as, to be just towards all parties, the amount would have to be varied according to the fluctuations of trade. Besides, it would be tyranny of the grossest kind, incompatible altogether with republican freedom. It could not be enforced, that which every citizen should be at liberty to settle for himself—namely, how much or how little money he will give for whatever work he wants performed. It would be worse still to attempt to correct this error by coercion, because that would really destroy the harmony of society, make progress impossible, and bring the world back to barbarism. Trade must be left free: a bargain must remain voluntary on both sides. There are inconveniences, we know, attaching to the plan, but they are as such as compared with the evils inseparable from a departure from it. The real cause of most of the trades difficulties, out of which the International is endeavoring to make capital, springs from a very old cause. They are occasioned by the mischievous plan of reckoning work by a constantly varying unit. The ten-hours and eight-hours movements were simply efforts to define what was the proper duration of a working day, and where men were paid by the day the dispute was a most important one. But if an hour were made the basis of remuneration, all these disputes would vanish, and the only cause of difference left would be that of price. This, we confess, is a thing not easy to arrange.

It would be difficult to lay down in a way which would meet the approval of both parties what ought to be the share of profit allowed to the individual who supplies the money to build a factory, erect machinery, buy supplies of raw material, and establishes a business, and what ought to be the share allotted to the toilers who turn out the manifold articles. The interests of the parties are diametrically opposed, for the more one gets the less the other has to receive, and for this reason an entirely satisfactory settlement is absolutely impossible. Modern theorists have exercised all their ingenuity in devising plans for the solution of this great social problem, but not one of them has even gone near succeeding. Communism is nothing more than a wild endeavor to settle it by the abrupt expedient of depriving all individuals of capital and vesting it in the State or community. Then, when all would be workers, and all remunerated alike, no injustice, the theorists imagine, would be inflicted on any one. The process of robbing a man of his property, taking it out of his control, and handing it over to the people at large represented to the government, is, of course, assumed to be perfectly justifiable and a violation of no right. In theory, and merely written on paper, this plan may appear very fine and very philanthropic; but in practice it would be the largest fraud upon human nature that the world ever witnessed.

The truth is that only Christian philosophy—the philosophy of the Gospel—gives any solution of this problem. "Do unto others as you would wish they should do unto you," is the maxim which, if carried out in the proper spirit, would solve all the questions that vex society. These trade difficulties could not arise in a thoroughly Christian community, as they are the natural product of a state of society which is essentially secularistan and wholly given over to materialism. It is to be remarked that when religion exercised more direct influence over the domestic economy of nations than it does now, these quarrels between labor and capital were hardly apparent. Socialism and anti-Catholics may depreciate what they call the "dark ages" as much as they like, but it is an indisputable fact that in mediæval times the position of the artisan was much better than it is now. The "trade-guilds," of which our trades benefit societies are only poor imitations, at one and the same time took good care of the artisan and ennobled his art. The very circumstance that to-day, in the nineteenth century, notwithstanding all our boasted progress, we can not equal the workmanship of the middle ages in sculpture, painting, architecture, or, in short, in any of those branches of handicraft that are allied with high art, proves this incontestably. A return, therefore, to Christian principles, an abandonment of that godless civilization which the Pope has so eloquently denounced, are the only means left us of solving the great industrial questions now agitating the world and threatening disruption of the social fabric. Progress, as understood by most of our modern philosophers, will only make matters worse, aggravate the difficulties in the way of amicable settlement, and ultimately render inevitable the utter destruction of the civilization and social organization to which we boast so loudly and so frequently.

American common sense and firmness of purpose may, and most probably will, keep International principles in check here until the renovation of the religious instinct among the European populations overcomes and destroys them in the old world. Still, common sense and firmness upon them and seeking their destruction. of purpose are very restricted qualities for religion and conscience, and they may fail when most needed. Do what we will, our destinies are linked with those of our older brethren in Europe, and if they be not able to subdue the monster which threatens to desolate their fields and cities, we certainly shall not come off unscathed. Christianity, warm, earnest and practical, is, thus, the only safeguard of peoples and governments, as it contains the only principles by which they can guide themselves through the dangers created by atheism and materialism.

THE CHURCH AND THE REVOLUTION.

For nearly a century the Church has been combatting Revolution. She has stood alone in the terrible contest, became the civil power, far from supporting her, aided and abetted her assailant. The end is not yet come, and, humanly speaking, it will most result in a glorious triumph for faith, much bloodshed and commotion will assuredly afflict the world before peace is restored. Freedom, in social matters, is to exhibit the irreligious tendencies of the age that the conduct of governments towards Catholicity, ever since Voltaire and his followers conjured up the spirit of modern revolution. They have striven their best most to hamper its action, to restrict its liberty, to bind it and fetter it with despotic laws, to make it a mere appendage of the State, or else to destroy it altogether. Every revolt against the authority of the Church has been applauded and encouraged as a struggle for freedom. Principles which menaced her existence and denied her divine mission, have been industriously propagated by government organs, and received recognition from kings, princes and statesmen. The man who smote the Spouse of Christ, and who maltreated Christ's Vicar, has been universally hailed as a hero and a patriot, whose memory should be held in honored remembrance for ever.

So it has come to pass that the Church has not among the European governments a single one on whom she can safely depend for support. This espalls on of religion from civil polity is finally proving itself a master stroke of state craft; the crushing of the "spiritual power" is exultantly proclaimed as a brilliant victory gained for human liberty. Secularism, materialism, and atheistical infidelity, are the terms now accepted as the basis of society and the principles of civil government. Naturally enough the Church, which remained faithful to the teachings of its Divine Founder, and clung to revealed religion as the only guide for man's conscience, has been denounced as "unprogressive," as "hostile to science," as "opposed to civilization," and leading to keep the world in mental thraldom. Justice has been persistently denied her; she has been among all peoples insulted, calumniated and persecuted. Governments have flung off allegiance to the great Teacher of Truth; the masses, educated and uneducated, were not slow in following their example, and soon proceeded to even greater extremes. Secret societies were established, in which the worship of the Most High was formally and expressly forbidden, and homage to the Evil One was actually made part of the ceremonies. This is horrible, almost passes credence indeed; and yet it is a fact proved by the most conclusive evidence. In every great city newspapers were published with the object of propagating pernicious doctrines or libelling Catholicity, and the Sovereign Pontiff, as the representative of faith and authority, was constantly and venomously assailed.

The governments, if they did not openly applaud this, at least tacitly encouraged it. Religion was an obstacle in the way of the establishment of that particular form of, does and suggestions shamelessly put, garnished with time-worn slanders, and connected with clap-trap appeals to American liberty, patriotism and love of freedom, artfully contrived to earn applause and "bring down the house" at the right time.

Some of the stories which she retailed were absolutely astonishing for their recklessness mendacity, and could not have received any persons but those totally ignorant of the nature of conventual institutions, and willing to believe the most infamous calumnies. As a sample we shall merely state that she informed her hearers nuns were compelled to regard disobedience to their superiors as a crime scarce than murder, and that they were bound to even do what they knew to be sinful when commanded by those in authority over them! She also declared that priests could only consecrate the Host at a particular period during the celebration of Mass, and at no other time whatever! This was stated in order to put point on an old fiction about a priest giving unconsecrated particles to communicants, and afterwards justifying about the clever "trick" he had thus played upon his dupes.

It has been our exceedingly unpleasant duty more than once to listen to apostate and unbelievers scoffing at the Blessed Sacrament, and jeering at the doctrine of Transubstantiation, but we must candidly acknowledge that Miss Edith O'Gorman immeasurably surpassed any one we ever heard in the line of blasphemous ribaldry. Her language was enough to thrill any respectable person with horror. Then, of course, she rehashed the stale, old ancient stories about nuns falling in love with priests and priests falling in love with nuns, which have been the material whence all attacks upon conventual life have been coined ever since lascivi business first reared its head against the sanctity of religious chastity. To give them vividness and verisimilitude she bestowed upon the localities and actors American names; nevertheless as regards the vast audience with which Exter Hall and Hotywell street literature could easily recognize them in their new dress.

The Escaped Nun's account of herself and her career is the most complete condemnation that any human being could ever invent. She makes herself out a most depraved and abandoned character, and we suppose she thinks so! no injustice. She entered the Convent, a Protestant in heart, though professing the Catholic faith; she did not believe in the Real Presence, because she was too "enlightened;" she was the victim of the artful wiles of the priests; she was too "independent;" she was not to be reconciled to the Sacrament with all outward appearances of devotion; she submitted for a lengthened period to the grossest humiliations and severest penances, and yet she was not humbled by merely opening the door; she was, according to her own version, drugged, fully outraged and despoiled of her virginity, and yet was quite ignorant of criminal intimacy with her fellow-creatures! Hence the Paris correspondent of the London Times, the chief support and defender of irreligion, now exclaims that there are two opposing forces on the Continent are no longer Revolution and Catholicity, but Revolution and Civil Society. This is as much as to confess that the secret societies seek not only to overthrow the Church, but also Christian civilization and every vestige of legitimate authority. At last they begin to comprehend the true state of affairs! Now, indeed, they must acknowledge that Catholicity in opposing and combatting Revolution, was not only defending itself but fighting also on behalf of order and progress, although kings and governments know the truth, they lack the courage to take sides with the Church, and so hasten on its victory. They prefer temporize, to spend nobly with the revolutionists and try to exact terms. They are arguing with an infuriated multitude of fanatics, and cannot by any human possibility succeed. Their pretexts are grown powerful and headstrong, and must have their own way, even if they have to shed oceans of blood. Too Church cannot perish, it will survive the mad rage of the revolutionists; but let kings and governments themselves where will they and their privileges be when peace and harmony come again? And Christian brotherhood is restored to the nations!

THE "ESCAPED NUN."

Mrs. Professor Auffrey, alias Edith O'Gorman, alias the "Escaped Nun," has paid our city a visit, and treated the public to two lectures on "Convent Life." She has been rather more fortunate in San Francisco than in at least one other place, for not only did she get a hall in which to deliver her address, but she also drew a large audience to hear her. Platt's Hall was thronged on Tuesday evening last with men and women, who thought it a good investment to pay the small sum of fifty cents each for the gratification of prurient curiosity about the imaginary "mysteries of convents." The men were all smiles, as if they expected to hear something "risqué" the women, the greater part of whom belonged evidently to the "Free-love" faction, tried to look severe, but did not succeed. None young girls, who if they had been blessed with modesty, would have stopped away, and a few Bible children whose parents thought, no doubt, to teach them virtue by bringing them to hear tales of profligacy and debauchery, were also present.

We shall not shock our readers by intruding upon them even a brief summary of all the nonsense, falsehood and blasphemy contained in the two lectures delivered by the "Escaped Nun" to her audience during a lecture which lasted nearly two hours. In reality her discourse was nothing more than a repetition of what has been said at least a hundred times before by men and women whose untruthfulness was clearly demonstrated. It abounded with gross animalisms, immoral innuendoes that this "scientific" combination of and Latin words, which "Modern Science" has enriched, as an element on and medium of and for "Science." It is a substitute for the Apostles' Creed. A "Science" teaches (1) as that another is transubstantiverous, and what "Science" teaches, the disciples say always occurs "remarkable facts." "The destroyer of teaches "Science," is "turbulvorous," says the literary disciple, "trash-beating." After that we have the explanation of foraminiferous, the reptiliferous, and lamelliferous part, as taught by "Science." It is clear, therefore, that this human vention teaches nothing but what men able to make it teach by their own explation of it. Whether used or abused, ern or modern, virtuous or vicious, the progeny of human understanding human ambition, and can know noth but what its parents teach it. "He's own son, Mr. Churchwell."—Ave Mar

THE CHRISTIAN BROTHERS' SCHOOL.

Last week we published a card from Grace the Archbishop in reference to collection for the Building Fund for proposed great Central Schools which to be under the management of the Christian Brothers. It now becomes our pleasant duty to inform our readers that the nations from all classes, rich and have been truly generous and liberal, we stated some time ago, we believ sonable list has been secured, and w will be commenced in a very short time we hope our subscribers who are now in arrears will endeavor to pay up their liabilities. For some time past the remittances to our office have not been any fair proportion to the amount we have a right to expect. However, as times were dull, we knew the reason and made no comment. We speak out our mind now as the second quarter of 1872 is fast drawing to a close, and we trust all our friends will speak the notice.

A GRAND CONCERT will be given in the Pavilion, Hayes' Park on next Thursday evening, 27th inst., for the benefit of the Church of the Holy Cross. Several professional artists of high standing and acquaintance of decided ability have volunteered for the occasion. In addition to the concert, which will be first class, a lecture is promised by a well-known gentleman, whose name we are not permitted to give, but who is acknowledged to be one of our most accomplished speakers.

PUBLIC DOCUMENTS.—We have to return thanks to Senator Cassserly for copies of the following speeches: of Hon. James L. Alcorn, of Mississippi on the "Extension of the Ku Klux Act;" of the Hon. Francis P. Blair, of Missouri, on the same subject of the Hon. Charles Sumner, on "Republicanism vs. Grantism." The three speeches are admirable, and more than usually interesting at the present time.

What is Science.

In the whole catalogue of words composing the English dictionary there is no another word so unintelligently nor so flippantly abused as the term "Science." Literally it means knowledge, but by usage it has come to be applied to any thing and mark for imposing the incomprehensible verbiage of superficial pedants on contemptuous ignoramuses. Pedantry by reason of its conceit, and ignorance by reason of its blindness, will never accept a plain commonsense truth. Every little creature who has learned to write its name thinks itself qualified to instruct the world, and forthwith sets out with an article or an essay wherein it gives a "scientific" display of its daring impudence committed in the creation of the universe, and learnedly points out how much better the Creator would have acted if He had acted any way but the one in which He chose to act. What a pity it is that this beautiful world of ours was created before "science" was consulted as to its general plan and special details! Wouldn't everything be lovely and perfect! No wonder darwin and his friend "ere ark" are indignant that instead of resorting to primordial cells, said in His omnipotence: Let us make man like to Ourselves!

"Science," which is also an alias for gross materialism, is simply religious infidelity in disguise, and is essentially opposed to religion and truth. It claims to be progressive, and so it is in the line of the gamutics which a no supposedly throws down, it turns over on its back like a whipped cur and yelps in pleasure because one is forced in sincere contempt to pass on and leave it there. In the same way it treats the Bible. It is the very type of inequality, and yet the first act of "science," when in want of sufficient force from pedantry and ignorance, is it ostracize every intelligent opponent with its sic-nonsense. It is of course by reason of its inequality that it is grandiloquently called "Modern Thought," as cowardly and pusillanimous: for while it attempts to supplant truth and facts by its own peculiar theories, it is more than afraid of any manly opposition, and whenever attacked fall back for assistance and protection on the ridiculous and factious remissionlance she bestowed upon the localities and actors American names; nevertheless as regards the vast audience with which Exter Hall and Holywell street literature could easily recognize them in their new dress.

The Escaped Nun's account of herself and her career is the most complete condemnation that any human being could ever invent. She makes herself out a most depraved and abandoned character, and we suppose she thinks so! no injustice. She entered the Convent, a Protestant in heart, though professing the Catholic faith; she did not believe in the Real Presence, because she was too "enlightened;" she was the victim of the artful wiles of the priests; she was too "independent;" she was not to be reconciled to the Sacrament with all outward appearances of devotion; she submitted for a lengthened period to the grossest humiliations and severest penances, and yet she was not humbled by merely opening the door; she was, according to her own version, drugged, fully outraged and despoiled of her virginity, and yet was quite ignorant of criminal intimacy with her fellow-creatures! Hence the Paris correspondent of the London Times, the chief support and defender of irreligion, now exclaims that there are two opposing forces on the Continent are no longer Revolution and Catholicity, but Revolution and Civil Society. This is as much as to confess that the secret societies seek not only to overthrow the Church, but also Christian civilization and every vestige of legitimate authority. At last they begin to comprehend the true state of affairs! Now, indeed, they must acknowledge that Catholicity in opposing and combatting Revolution, was not only defending itself but fighting also on behalf of order and progress, although kings and governments know the truth, they lack the courage to take sides with the Church, and so hasten on its victory. They prefer temporize, to spend nobly with the revolutionists and try to exact terms. They are arguing with an infuriated multitude of fanatics, and cannot by any human possibility succeed. Their pretexts are grown powerful and headstrong, and must have their own way, even if they have to shed oceans of blood. Too Church cannot perish, it will survive the mad rage of the revolutionists; but let kings and governments themselves where will they and their privileges be when peace and harmony come again? And Christian brotherhood is restored to the nations!

(Concluded from page 1.)

Forbes has been continued down—down to the the year before last. A record of Ireland, that was drawn a record years ago, at the beginning of the century, still remains out of the scab- and has not been stretched down to end of the 19th century. Did anybody hear the like of it? And yet, here we are, in Ireland, in the year of grace as it has for—this, on the morning of October, or as Hugh O'Neil was at the field of Benburb, or as Patrick Sarsfield was in the trenches at Limerick, or as Robert Emmet was in the dock at Green (Concluded next week.

POLITICAL NOTES.

We are to have a primary for the Congressional Convention in this city on the 15th inst.

Ex-General John C. Breckinridge of Kentucky, is a Greeley candidate for Congress.

George H. Pendleton has written a letter recommending Mr. Greeley's nomination at Baltimore.

Ex-President Johnson announces that he is an anti-Greeley man and in favor of a straight-out nomination at Baltimore.

Col. F. J. C. Rowen of Los Angeles, will be the Democratic candidate for Congressional nomination from the Southern District.

The Jefferson Democratic General Committee of Brooklyn have passed resolutions favoring a straight Democratic nomination at Baltimore.

A conference of Illinois Democratic editors at Peoria, on Wednesday of last week, resolved not to support Greeley without reference to the action of the Baltimore convention, were defeated.

John T. Doyle's name has been mentioned in connection with the Congressional nomination in the Napa district, but Sparr are the more prominent candidates.

The Democratic Congressional delegation of Ohio is composed of: S. A. Bishop, Democrat; D. Jones, Ledgy; Wm. M. Lovell, Thomas Bailey, Samuel Blythe, B.B. Bailey, M. Sawford, J. Wm. Christopher, John Trimble, John S. Fitzgerald, F. Fine and E. Miller.

The States that have so far sent delegates to Baltimore are solid for Greeley. Pledged to support or known to be in favor of Greeley are South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Maryland, Missouri, Indiana, Vermont, Nebraska, Kansas, and Maine, thus distributed: Greeley 140, Grant 90, not including the fabulous 350 for Grant, which "Boss" Shepherd and his colleagues have manufactured out of very ancient data. Of the remaining States, Illinois and Wisconsin are supposed to be for Grant, but to the barbarous ages of paganism, and for knowledge to the dark periods of a supposed order of brutes and monstrous phantoms? Tois is not progress; it is trifling with human nature, and adding insult to the adoration of low materialism the precious stones that disfigure the face of the soul. Take the "Science" of Botany for instance, and I am sure if the beautiful flowers could speak they would tell us that they were not always designated, many of them, by such names and in such a way as to put to shame. The "Science" of Geology, as taught, though it ought to be the means of enlightening the world about its origin in combination of Greek epithets which seem to have been invented for the express purpose of abutting out all knowledge of that kind. The "Science" of Astronomy is of the rant phrases in "Science illustrates the star that;" "Science teaches us and so," and "Science proves that," and "Science" is Insomnitheferous, and what "Science" teaches, the disciples say always occurs "remarkable facts." "The destroyer of teaches "Science," is "turbulvorous," says the literary disciple, "trash-beating." After that we have the explanation of foraminiferous, the reptiliferous, and lamelliferous part, as taught by "Science." It is clear, therefore, that this human vention teaches nothing but what men able to make it teach by their own explation of it. Whether used or abused, ern or modern, virtuous or vicious, the progeny of human understanding human ambition, and can know noth but what its parents teach it. "He's own son, Mr. Churchwell."—Ave Mar

THE CHRISTIAN BROTHERS' SCHOOL.

Last week we published a card from Grace the Archbishop in reference to collection for the Building Fund for proposed great Central Schools which to be under the management of the Christian Brothers. It now becomes our pleasant duty to inform our readers that the nations from all classes, rich and have been truly generous and liberal, we stated some time ago, we believ sonable list has been secured, and w will be commenced in a very short time we hope our subscribers who are now in arrears will endeavor to pay up their liabilities. For some time past the remittances to our office have not been any fair proportion to the amount we have a right to expect. However, as times were dull, we knew the reason and made no comment. We speak out our mind now as the second quarter of 1872 is fast drawing to a close, and we trust all our friends will speak the notice.

A GRAND CONCERT will be given in the Pavilion, Hayes' Park on next Thursday evening, 27th inst., for the benefit of the Church of the Holy Cross. Several professional artists of high standing and acquaintance of decided ability have volunteered for the occasion. In addition to the concert, which will be first class, a lecture is promised by a well-known gentleman, whose name we are not permitted to give, but who is acknowledged to be one of our most accomplished speakers.

PUBLIC DOCUMENTS.—We have to return thanks to Senator Cassserly for copies of the following speeches: of Hon. James L. Alcorn, of Mississippi on the "Extension of the Ku Klux Act;" of the Hon. Francis P. Blair, of Missouri, on the same subject of the Hon. Charles Sumner, on "Republicanism vs. Grantism." The three speeches are admirable, and more than usually interesting at the present time.

PACIFIC COAST ITEMS.

The workmen in the sugar refineries have joined the New York strikers.

From Missouri, Kansas, Illinois, Iowa and Nebraska short wheat crops are reported.

A summary of the British argument under the Washington treaty has been filed, under protest, before the Geneva Board of Arbitration.

The Peace Jubilee opened Monday at Boston with peals of artillery and ringing of bells, in honor of the anniversary of Bunker Hill.

The report of the Department of Agriculture shows an increase of the area planted in cotton of nearly 13 per cent. over last year. The cotton-crop prospects are reported nearly up to the full average.

The cotton crop of Kern county is said to be very promising.

A $14,500 Catholic-house is to be erected this season at Modesto.

John Baker of Gold Hill has challenged Jem Mace to a prize fight.

A savings and loan bank is about to be established in Watsonville.

A new bed of bituminous coal has been discovered near Nanaimo, Vancouver Island.

The Virginia Enterprise of Sunday says the Gould tunnel is now in a distance of 2,922 feet.

Santa Clara has just obtained a city charter and now sets up as a real city, with 2,500 population.

The North Pacific Coast Railroad Company propose to relinquish the $160,000 subsidy voted them by the people of Marin county, in favor of a grant of 250,000 acres of land to aid them in their enterprise.

Immense beds of peat have been discovered in Los Angeles county, between Los Angeles and Wilmington, and a large force of men are being dried and ice by the ocean.

Two-thirds of the salt used in this city is manufactured at Alameda; one-fifth is imported from the Gulf of California; and the remainder comes from Los Angeles, San Diego, and from Turk's Island.

An association of Eastern and European capitalists are negotiating for the purchase of the old sections of land which each may fail to locate. The Company is claiming deeds will not be decided at the early part of August.

The Democratic County Committee of Santa Clara is composed of: S. A. Bishop, Democrat; D. Jones, Ledgy; Wm. M. Lovell, Thomas Bailey, Samuel Blythe, B.B. Bailey, M. Sawford, J. Wm. Christopher, John Trimble, John S. Fitzgerald, F. Fine and E. Miller.

The Jackson Dragoons, Company B, First Battalion Cavalry, N. Guard, Captain, assembled at their armory on Friday evening, 14th inst., for the purpose of distributing the prizes won at their target shoot.

The Ancient Order of Hibernians will hold their Annual General Picnic on Thursday next, 27th June, at Woodward's Gardens. The "Hibernians" always give their friends a pleasant time on these occasions, and we are confident that they will be true to their ancient fame on Thursday next.

The Black Diamond Coal Company have commenced sinking a new shaft or incline, in the centre of the town of Nortonville. The work will probably necessitate the removal of several stores and dwelling houses from the immediate vicinity.

MISCELLANEOUS FOREIGN NEWS.

(SPECIALLY COMPILED FROM CONTINENTAL EXCHANGES.)

Garibaldi has aged terribly of late. He now can walk only with the help of crutches; his fingers are distorted by rheumatism, and he looks as if he never would be able to leave his residence, except in a litter. He is still cheerful in spite of his crippled state, and his face has preserved its fresh color and genial expression.

The Archconfraternity of St. Michael, of Vienna, took the initiative to celebrate the Pope's eightieth birthday. On the eve of the day a general Communion and solemn service was held at Vienna to implore God to prolong the days of the venerable chief of the Church, that he might outlive evil days, and behold the triumph of religion.

"The Catholic Union for the advancement of good works in Italy" was founded in Florence in 1870 by the Count Edward Crotti di Costigliole. Other societies in a great number of dioceses have since that time been established, all looking to the one in Florence as a centre. It has been determined to hold a general congress in some city not yet named. Cardinal Trevisanato, Patriarch of Venice, will be the President of the first "Catholic Congress of Italy," and his Eminence has written to the Holy Father imploring his blessing upon it, to which his Holiness has sent a reply. "The Association of Catholic Youth" has already about fifty branches.

Under the law establishing civil marriages in Italy (says a correspondent) there is no necessity for any previous religious ceremony. The result in the centre and south of Italy, where the influence of the clergy is still enormous, is that many couples dispense altogether with the civil ceremony. In the north, where the religious influences are purely religious. Hence the inconvenience lately referred to by Dr. Dollinger. A new penal code, to be brought before Parliament during the current year, imposes a heavy fine on the betrothed pair, as well as upon any clergyman who bestows the nuptial benediction on couples who have not previously been joined together by the municipal magistrate.

The present religious feeling which is taking deep root in Austria, must give extreme consolation to the Holy Father. Whether upon the occasion of the Fronleichnag or Brack you have occasion to visit any way diminish the authority of the Holy See, or tend to promote discord in the Church. SPRINGFIELD, Bishop."

The Princess Orsini presented to the Holy Father, recently, the Sisters of Via Crucis and the Sisters of St. Vincent de Paul, whose special vocation is the care of the sick. The audience was accompanied by the rev. curé of St. Angelo, together with a number of priests and directors of different sodalities. As soon his Holiness presented himself in the Consistory Hall where the deputation awaited him, on his appearance the whole assembly knelt to receive the Holy Father's benediction. Madam Carlotta Siccoli read, in the name of her companions, a touching address recalling the life which embraced the Church, and the absolute necessity of all to be united in the Church's cause. Mdlle. Alessandri then recited a beautiful poem, the sentiments of which vividly moved the Pontiff. In reply his Holiness said: "My dear children, I have heard with extreme pleasure what you have just read, and I also know from experience the good which you have performed. At the ascension of our Lord two angels reproached the astounding spectators with standing fifty long years in heaven. This was a circumstance that would naturally arrest the attention of those who witnessed the ascension. Yet these angels demanded, 'Why do you remain looking toward heaven?' as if to inquire 'Why do you thus lose your time idly?' You will see by this, my dear children, that you must not remain idle even in beholding the marvelous dispositions of heaven. Yes, in your own humble sphere you will require your attention, some poor sick creature requires your care, some wayward member of your family needs charitable correction. Persevere in the exercises of prayer and in giving good example at all times and on all occasions, and do not merit the reproach, 'Why stand you looking towards heaven?' Bless you, dear children, and all the objects of devotion you bear about you." When his Holiness retired he was greeted with the acclamation of "Long live Pius the Ninth," "Long live the Pontiff of the Immaculate Conception."

A Washington special says that the Supplemental Article adopted by the Senate constitutes the following:—It confirms that the President has with the advice and consent of the Senate, consented to the establishment of a new instance of international law for the guidance of both nations, to the effect that neither of the contending Powers shall be held responsible for the acts of its subjects or agents, other than as claim on the part of the United States with respect to indirect damages as aforesaid before the Tribunal of Arbitration at Geneva."

THE MILITARY.

Wolfe Tone Guard.

The Wolfe Tone Guard, Company C, Third Regiment, Lieut. Col. Burke commanding, on Tuesday evening, 18th inst., at their armory, for the purpose of distributing prizes won at their target excursion a large number of festival guests were present. The prizes awarded were as follows:

First prize, company medal, gift of Remington rifle, gift of Sullivan, Keogh & Co., won by D. W. Hutchinson; second, silver medal, gift of E. J. Crowley, won by C. Fitzgerald; third, set of carvers gift of M. Price, won by P. Meagher; fourth, gilt cast cane, gift of M. Walsh, won by Sergeant E. J. O'Neill; fifth, gold pencil, gift of J. O'Donahue, won by Sergeant J. Hogan; sixth, order for a pair of boots, gift of Stewart Bunny, won by Private Collins; seventh, order for a pair of boots, gift of Sergeant Bunny, won by Private Collins; eighth, order for a pair of boots, gift of Lieut. Sullivan, won by Private Collins; ninth, order for a pair of boots, gift of Sergeant J. Masterson, won by Private Collins; tenth, copy of New York Constitution, gift of John O'Brien, won by Thomas Sullivan; seventh, order for a hat, gift of the Chief Deputy Surveyor, Stretch, won by M. J. O'Brien; twelfth, order for a pair of boots, gift of E. Broderick, won by David Barry; thirteenth, order for a hat, gift of C. Jacobs, won by John Coleman; fourteenth, order for a pair of boots, gaiters, won by Joseph Collins; fifteenth, order for a pair of boots, gaiters, gift of F. Doherty, won by Michael Collins; sixteenth, pair of shoes, gift of J. H. Dupont, won by Private Collins; seventeenth, order for a pair of boots, gaiters, gift of Sergeant Collins; eighteenth, pair of gaiters, gift of D. O'Brien, won by Private Collins; nineteenth, pair of gaiters, gift of J. Wm. O'Brien; twentieth, pair of gaiters, gift of J. O'Brien, won by Wm. O'Brien; twenty-first, pair of gaiters, gift of J. O'Brien, won by Wm. O'Brien; twenty-second, pair of gaiters, gift of Richard McQuade, won by D. Cassin; twenty-third, case of Champagne, gift of Gray & Co., won by S. J. Thompson; twenty-third, case of wine, gift of Gray & Co., won by Lieut. Low; twenty-fourth, order for boots, gift cease, won by Peter McNally; twenty-fifth, gold pencil, gift of Lieut. Low, won by Private Carbrone, Adjutant Taussig, Charles Alpers, Lieut. Low and Sergeant Hogan.

After the distribution the members of the Company sat down to partake of a collation.

Col. Wakes stated that the Wolfe Tone Guard has a good, drilled, disciplined band attached to the Brigade.

The Jackson Dragoons.

The Jackson Dragoons, Company B, First Battalion Cavalry, N. Guard, Captain, assembled at their armory on Friday evening, 14th inst., for the purpose of distributing the prizes won at their target shoot.

First prize, company medal, gift of Peter Donahue, won by Private Phillips; second, order for boots, gift of Phillips; second order for boots for $20 prize, gift of Sergeant Bunny, won by Private Collins; third, order for a pair of boots, gift of Sergeant Bunny, gift of Company, won by Jas. Gilpin; fifth, leathercovered flask, gift of Lieut. Low, won by Lieut. Low; fourth, gold locket, gift of Lieut. Low; sixth, gold pencil, gift of Lieut. Low, won by Sergeant Bunny; seventh, silver-mounted pistol flask, gift of M. Sawyer, proprietor of City Gardens, won by Sergeant Bunny; eighth, order for a hat, gift of W. Tucker, won by Sergeant John O'Brien; ninth, a Badger, gift as order for a ten dollar pair of boots, gift of Lieut. Sullivan, won by Lieut. Sullivan; tenth, $10, gift of Wm. Bunny, won by Private Alpers; eleventh, order for a pair of boots, gift of Lieut. Sullivan, won by Lieut. Sullivan; twelfth, order for silver cases, gift of Waugenheim & Co., won by Private Alpers; thirteenth, order for a pair of boots, gift of J. O. Eldridge, won by Jas. O'Brien; twenty-fourth, order for a pair of boots, gift of P. Murray, won by Corporal O'Brien.

COMPANY B CASINO.

First prize, a hat, gift of D. Sweeney, won by private Henry; eight long cigars, second prize, gift of Mr. Cafferata, won by Sergeant Bunny, light cigars, third prize, gift of Mr. Cafferata, won by Private Wm. Jas. Bunny; fourth, one pair fancy slippers, gift of Sergeant Bunny and Private Alpers, won by Corporal Collins.

Fourth twenty o'clock, after the prizes had been distributed, the Company and invited guests repaired to the armory, when refreshments were served.

The Company are to have a target excursion to Shell Mound Park, Alameda, on Sunday, 23d inst., when the following prizes will be shot for:

First prize, silver watch and chain and company gold medal, gift of Capt. R. Lowe; second prize, gold locket, and presented by Col. Wakes; 3d, silver mounted pistol, gift of Lieut. Low; 4th, gold pencil, gift of Lieut. Low; 5th, order for a pair of boots, gift of Sergeant Bunny; 6th, order for a pair of boots, gift of Sergeant Bunny; 7th, order for a pair of boots, gift of Lieut. Sullivan; 8th, order for a pair of boots, gift of Lieut. Sullivan; 9th, order for a pair of boots, gift of Sergeant J. Masterson; 10th, order for a pair of boots, gift of Sergeant J. Masterson; 11th, copy of New York Constitution, gift of John O'Brien, won by Thomas Sullivan; seventh, order for a hat, gift of the Chief Deputy Surveyor, Stretch, won by M. J. O'Brien; twelfth, order for a pair of boots, gift of E. Broderick, won by David Barry; thirteenth, order for a hat, gift of C. Jacobs, won by John Coleman; fourteenth, order for a pair of boots, gaiters, won by Joseph Collins; fifteenth, order for a pair of boots, gaiters, gift of F. Doherty, won by Michael Collins; sixteenth, pair of shoes, gift of J. H. Dupont, won by Private Collins; seventeenth, order for a pair of boots, gaiters, gift of Sergeant Collins; eighteenth, pair of gaiters, gift of D. O'Brien, won by Private Collins; nineteenth, pair of gaiters, gift of J. O'Brien, won by Wm. O'Brien; twentieth, pair of gaiters, gift of J. Wm. O'Brien, won by Wm. O'Brien; twenty-first, pair of gaiters, gift of Richard McQuade, won by D. Cassin; twenty-second, case of Champagne, gift of Gray & Co., won by S. J. Thompson; twenty-third, case of wine, gift of Gray & Co., won by Lieut. Low; twenty-fourth, order for boots, gift cease, won by Peter McNally; twenty-fifth, gold pencil, gift of Lieut. Low, won by Private Carbrone, Adjutant Taussig, Charles Alpers, Lieut. Low and Sergeant Hogan.

After the distribution the members of the Company sat down to partake of a collation.

Col. Wakes stated that the Wolfe Tone Guard has a good, drilled, disciplined band attached to the Brigade.

The Jackson Dragoons.

The Jackson Dragoons, Company B, First Battalion Cavalry, N. Guard, Captain, assembled at their armory on Friday evening, 14th inst., for the purpose of distributing the prizes won at their target shoot.

First prize, company medal, gift of Peter Donahue, won by Private Phillips; second, order for boots, gift of Phillips; second order for boots for $20 prize, gift of Sergeant Bunny, won by Private Collins; third, order for a pair of boots, gift of Sergeant Bunny, gift of Company, won by Jas. Gilpin; fifth, leather-covered flask, gift of Lieut. Low, won by Lieut. Low; fourth, gold locket, gift of Lieut. Low; sixth, gold pencil, gift of Lieut. Low, won by Sergeant Bunny; seventh, silver-mounted pistol flask, gift of M. Sawyer, proprietor of City Gardens, won by Sergeant Bunny; eighth, order for a hat, gift of W. Tucker, won by Sergeant John O'Brien; ninth, a Badger, gift as order for a ten dollar pair of boots, gift of Lieut. Sullivan, won by Lieut. Sullivan; tenth, $10, gift of Wm. Bunny, won by Private Alpers; eleventh, order for a pair of boots, gift of Lieut. Sulliv

Mutilation of Witnesses in England.

No authoritative censure whatever has fallen upon the judge who displayed such leniency to a wife-murderer as to sentence him to but three months' imprisonment, although, as a London paper has remarked, the instances are numerous of the extraordinary "favor" which men accused of murder receive in England at the hands of their judges, so censure falls. No blame of any kind, from any person or journal whatever, is laid upon those individuals who knew of the murderous intention—nose upon those who refused to hearken to the appeals of the victim for protection—none on those who were passive accomplices in the deeds of death!

Indeed, so intense appears the sympathy with criminals in London, that it is a matter of great danger for a witness to appear to give evidence, even against thieves. Apparently there is a well-known system of intimidation of witnesses.

The cases are not a few in which a person who has charged another of a crime disappears when the case is called on. Reasons for such conduct may be found in what happened to Susan Scallgrove (Times, April 19), who had the audacity to give evidence against a criminal.

Mrs. Scallgrove, according to the statement of the Times, was subpœned as a witness for the prosecution of a man named Harris, for a daring wood robbery from the person, in broad daylight, which was tried at the Surrey sessions, and convicted, principally on her evidence. But the prisoner's friends did all in their power, by threats and intimidation, to prevent her appearing in the witness-box!

Did they cease even then? Not at all. "They even had the audacity to continue their menaces within the precincts of the court." The police apparently overlooked this intimation, but it came so terrible that the chairman could not avoid remarking "that terror-stricken was the manner in which Mrs. Scallgrove gave her evidence." He had the court cleared, and invited the police to apprehend the intimidators, but they could notone nobody, and poor Mrs. Scallgrove had been so terrified (in court) that she would not give their names.

So great is the terrorism employed in England against witnesses, that the chairman was obliged to have this poor woman conveyed home by a guard of police-men. Even there it did not end. They were ordered to "hold themselves in readiness to produce her, if any attempt should be afterwards made upon her." With all due precaution, the guard of constables protected her to her home. When she went there they "enticed Mrs. Scallgrove on so account to leave her house that evening."

This was in England which makes Coercion laws for Ireland!

However, after some time, the crowd of terrorists dispersed, the streets resumed their usual appearance. Mrs. Scallgrove required to provision her needs, and her husband was a cripple, unable to go out. What happened? We shall let the great organ of English arrogance tell this characteristic incident of English civilization:

"She had not proceeded many yards when she was closely assailed from behind; her right eyeball was completely smashed; and her nostrils were torn from her back. The poor woman's agony was keenly realized by herself, as the mutilated eye was the injured eye which should be removed, as the inflammation was extending to the sound eye."

Again, in that populous English street, not a single hand was raised to aid the poor English criminal. Nor does even one of the English papers censure this sympathetic conduct on the part of the friends among their readers. By their silence they encourage crime as much as the actual perpetrators by their brutal callousness to such horrid acts of barbarity.

Such facts, taken in conjunction with those published last week, plainly prove the urgent need of a Coercion Act for England and her press.—Irishman.

The Christian Brothers.

The official statistics of the Institute of the Christian Brothers, published for the year ending December 31, 1871, contain information of its exact state in every province of the vast spiritual empire which centers in its Superior-General at Paris. In every country where the Christian Brothers teach, or have taught, the Catholic people cannot but be interested in their progress; in no country have their untiring and devoted services earned for them a stronger title to the love and gratitude of Catholics than here, where they have labored with only our religion itself, and growing strong with the increasing strength. Of the many who have learned to read with much interest some of the chief items in the statistical table which follows before us. The Christian Brothers, or, more formally, the Brothers of the Christian Schools, have their establishments now in every department of France, in England, Austria, Prussia, Belgium, Italy, Switzerland, Spain, Portugal, Egypt, Algeria, Cochin-China, the West Indies, the United States, Canada, South America, and various other parts of the world. Their numbers throughout the world, at the close of the year 1871, were 8,817 Brothers, living in 1,180 establishments, teaching 2,065 schools, or 6,983 classes, containing a total of 378,468 pupils of all grades and ages, of whom 306,975 were children. They are strongest in France, where the number of Brothers is 7,764, establishments 918, schools 1,727, children 267,231, total pupils 299,946; of these the city of Paris has 754 Brothers, 86 establishments, 78 schools, and 23,103 pupils, the largest number in any one city in the world. In the United States there are 818 Brothers, 80 establishments, 87 schools, 19,071 children, and total number of pupils 22,511. Canada has 218 Brothers, 24 establishments, 27 schools, and 10,695 pupils of all ages. Next to France and the United States, in its stake is most numerous is Belgium. It has there 662 Brothers, 61 establishments, 83 schools, 19,409 children, 23,554 pupils of all grades. We have selected but a few of the most important from the long table of statistics, but we deem them sufficient, even though easily comparable by remarks on its school and college systems, to convey to Jews of the immense development which the Institute of De La Salle has attained within two centuries after the death of its founder.

BURGLARIES.

MILFORD.—A tornado yesterday in this section uprooted houses, uprooted trees, and killed a quantity of stock.

BINGHAMTON, June 13.—There was a terrible storm of wind and rain here yesterday afternoon. Robinson's menagerie circus tent blew down while crowded with people; the cages with the animals were overturned, and the crowd was terribly frightened, but nobody was seriously injured. The lightning struck the Congregational Church, the Fourth Ward school house and four other buildings, and a number of unfinished buildings were thrown down.

At Rawlinsville, the lightning struck the school house and killed a little girl named Morritt and stunned several others.

A Contrast—Germany and France.

The two great European combatant powers, France and Germany, or more properly Prussia, previous to the late great struggle presented many features of antagonism, and it has been naively found, that such antagonism was much more deeply seated than was supposed.

Since the termination of the struggle, that seed of disaffection for France, the developments in respects of those countries, are in still more marked opposition, and in opposition the reverse of all reasonable probability. Germany achieved a great triumph, acquired territory, incited enormous contributions and consolidated an Empire. For Kaiser William, and his Chancellor Bismarck, all seemed to go was merry as a marriage bell." The great business seemed to be, the distribution of the prizes of war, and the conferring of honors and dignities. Then there was only the assimilation of the Franco-German provinces of Alsace and Lorraine, of course they would return with but little wonderful development, and that which most needs explanation, is the devoted attachment of Alsace and Lorraine, notwithstanding the blood and tears which bars for a century been shed in France, and all those religious ties which unite Alsace and Lorraine would if they could, repudiate Germany, and remain attached to France.

What a study this for William Ewart Gladstone, and for Statesmen of every nation, and of all time. Those provinces were acquired by force of arms within a couple of months. They are there, however, to-day less thoroughly French, and we trust will yet be so in fact. What can the secret be? Is it Frank Overthrow?

Is Ireland, where English rule has been so long and so well established, where the Irish language is almost extinct, yet what is the feeling amongst the most tranquil of the Irish masses with regard to all rule, but what is expressed by Moore's lines:

"Oh, could for an instant be riven,
The vision of years that are fled,
Methinks I should see, through my tears,
The gleam of my sword by my side."

The contrast between Germany and France does not end here. The ruling powers of Germany, that is the Kaiser William and his astute Chancellor, lost no time in indicating their hostility to the Catholic Church. The ruling powers of France, on the contrary, at the moment of President, lost no time in professing devotion to the Catholic Church, and in expressing indignation at the outrages heaped on the Holy Father. M. Thiers has not hesitated to express his belief that the Italian Government in course by the conviction that it will consolidate a tower of strength for France. Many excellent persons considered that M. Thiers ought not only have spoken, but have acted. We recing that M. Thiers during the Empire repeatedly maintained the same policy, give him credit for perfect sincerity in now expressing it and we, also good political strategy in abstaining from precipitate action.

Quiet in harmony with this is the latest expression by Thiers at an interview under no circumstances to resign again, but to devote the residue of his life to the founding on a solid basis, the French Republic. Upon the various points on which he might differ with the Assembly, compulsory instruction, taxes, &c., he would draw, he would make remonstrance, and he should not despair. Thus as to the question of Church and State, he is also explicit. He says:

"The question of Church and State? There will be the great pretension. The meeting Republican chamber will perhaps ask of me to suppress the budget. I will never consent to that. It would be to injure the clergy, to compromise it and not assist in consolidating a war of religion."

We have no fear of any new assembly in France. It may be republican, but as the Catholics there have not been apathetic, we may expect that the great majority will be Catholic, and will take care of the rights of the Church.—Western Watchman, June 8th.

Anglican Charity.

The relations between Bishops and clergy in the Anglican Establishment would appear to be not always of a charitable or edifying character, and "our good friends the Ritualists," seem to be among those who regard the Episcopal Bench with the least amount of reverence. At the opening of the new schools of St. Mary Magdalene's, Munster square, on a board well known in "developed" circles, Mr. Stuart, the incumbent, amid cheers and laughter, detailed in the speech now with the "Right Reverend Fathers in God" in saying that a reverend assistant. He said his rubrics experience of the right reverend bench was when he was ordained at Durham by Dr. Maltby. It struck him that as he was going to be ordained deacon he ought not to wear black, like those who are already ministers of the Church; so he donned a suit of the sobriest grey he could get. Strangely enough, another gentleman adopted the same course, and for his pains roused the disapprobation of the Bishop, who got in a passion with him and used language which, of course, must 'be right coming from a Bishop.' He was ordained and the Bishop's chapiain remarked, 'I think, my Lord, Mr. Stuart's dress is open to the same objection.' So it was, and the Bishop made use of some very strong language. Ha (Mr. Stuart) seemed to like saying. The next day he went into the Bishop's study, where his Lordship gave him what was called a 'gobbling' from one who now it was that he had appeared before him in an improper dress. After thinking a moment he was to say, he answered, 'Why, the fact is, my Lord, my clothes had not returned from the tailor's which is perfectly true. 'Do you mean to sell me, sir,' the Bishop answered, 'that you have got no other clothes but those you stand up in?' that was a Bishop to love."

And Mr. Stuart evidently did love him accordingly. Of the present occupant of the See of London the Rev. gentleman was also complimentary. He had to preach before the Queen last year, and was sent to Mr. Tait to consult with him. But of the eccentric Primate of all England, the incumbent of St. Mary Magdalene's did not express himself in flattering opinion, for he tells us that he "generally used to entertain the hope that he (Dr. Tait) might be translated to another sphere, say Timbuctoo or Abyssinia: and sometimes he used to wish he (Dr. Tait) were dead. When he was in the Bishop's house once, he installed him in such a manner that he (Mr. Stuart) took up his hat and left. Simplicity he was now translated to another sphere."

These Anglican priests, while exacting the uttermost obedience and reverence from the faithful, yet seem to draw the line when and where they please as to the obedience and respect that they themselves owe to their diocesans; and an edifying example they present as model "Catholic" priests.

Patriotism.

The Bishop of Little Rock, Ark., Most Rev. Dr. Fitzgerald, on being asked to dressed some of his fellow-countrymen on the question of patriotism, a question so dear to all Irishmen. What he says comes sounds itself to the Americans as very thoughtful man. "What is Patriotism?" asks the Bishop; "Loving one's country. Then what but love one's country? The inanimate clay, the rocks, the waters, etc., of which its surface is composed; or our fellow-citizens? No! Then what? The men who, like Hector Barack and his friends, who had picked him up more dead than alive upon their return from the festivities. The baron so far recovered from the attack that he was able to travel to Musselrilugen on Lake Constance; but the shock to his system was so great and internal injuries were so severe that he succumbed a few days after. Herr Barack asserts that one of the two professors who committed this heroic action boasted of it to him and his friends before their return on the fatal evening, fully believing that it was a Frenchman with the least amount of reverence. At the opening of the new schools of St. Mary Magdalene's, Munster square, on a board well known in "developed" circles, Mr. Stuart, the incumbent, amid cheers and laughter, detailed in the speech now with the "Right Reverend Fathers in God" in saying that a reverend assistant. He said his rubrics experience of the right reverend bench was when he was ordained at Durham by Dr. Maltby. It struck him that as he was going to be ordained deacon he ought not to wear black, like those who are already ministers of the Church; so he donned a suit of the sobriest grey he could get. Strangely enough, another gentleman adopted the same course, and for his pains roused the disapprobation of the Bishop, who got in a passion with him and used language which, of course, must 'be right coming from a Bishop.' He was ordained and the Bishop's chapiain remarked, 'I think, my Lord, Mr. Stuart's dress is open to the same objection.' So it was, and the Bishop made use of some very strong language. Ha (Mr. Stuart) seemed to like saying. The next day he went into the Bishop's study, where his Lordship gave him what was called a 'gobbling' from one who now it was that he had appeared before him in an improper dress. After thinking a moment he was to say, he answered, 'Why, the fact is, my Lord, my clothes had not returned from the tailor's which is perfectly true. 'Do you mean to sell me, sir,' the Bishop answered, 'that you have got no other clothes but those you stand up in?' that was a Bishop to love."

And Mr. Stuart evidently did love him accordingly. Of the present occupant of the See of London the Rev. gentleman was also complimentary. He had to preach before the Queen last year, and was sent to Mr. Tait to consult with him. But of the eccentric Primate of all England, the incumbent of St. Mary Magdalene's did not express himself in flattering opinion, for he tells us that he "generally used to entertain the hope that he (Dr. Tait) might be translated to another sphere, say Timbuctoo or Abyssinia: and sometimes he used to wish he (Dr. Tait) were dead. When he was in the Bishop's house once, he installed him in such a manner that he (Mr. Stuart) took up his hat and left. Simplicity he was now translated to another sphere."

These Anglican priests, while exacting the uttermost obedience and reverence from the faithful, yet seem to draw the line when and where they please as to the obedience and respect that they themselves owe to their diocesans; and an edifying example they present as model "Catholic" priests.

Curious Story.

The inauguration of the Strasburg University does not seem to have been characterized by such unmixed harmony as some accounts would have us believe. Indeed, Mally excellent persons considered that M. Thiers ought not only have spoken, but have acted. We recing that M. Thiers during the Empire repeatedly maintained the same policy, give him credit for perfect sincerity in now expressing it and we, also good political strategy in abstaining from precipitate action.

Quiet in harmony with this is the latest expression by Thiers at an interview under no circumstances to resign again, but to devote the residue of his life to the founding on a solid basis, the French Republic. Upon the various points on which he might differ with the Assembly, compulsory instruction, taxes, &c., he would draw, he would make remonstrance, and he should not despair. Thus as to the question of Church and State, he is also explicit. He says:

"The question of Church and State? There will be the great pretension. The meeting Republican chamber will perhaps ask of me to suppress the budget. I will never consent to that. It would be to injure the clergy, to compromise it and not assist in consolidating a war of religion."

We have no fear of any new assembly in France. It may be republican, but as the Catholics there have not been apathetic, we

French View of the Supplemental Treaty.

Mr. John Lemoine, writing in the Journal des Debats, after reciting the explanations the English Ministry concerning the proposed Supplemental Treaty in respect to indirect claims says:

I must not be forgotten that the Convention only bind the two States which sign it, and can in no way constitute a real international principle. This article of the immense extent of their commerce, and who have not signed the Treaty of Washington, is provided for the abolition of privateering. The Americans know perfectly well what they are about. If they sign the English proposition they will decide to themselves for having made a mistake, while they will really establish establishment of a principle from which they will derive all possible advantage. It might, therefore, be supposed that the affair is concluded, and yet it is not. Application is complicated in America by questions of personal pride, and by the feeling of Presidential election. We have on previous occasions explained that the relative power in the United States has not yet in England the right to consider it, and that the sanction of the Senate is necessary to any arrangement. It was against which rejected the first Treaty, adopted in Lord Palmerston's time, as it had been by Mr. Fish's present Cabinet. The Senate appears to be composed of a second Treaty. President Grant accepted the English proposition, since it was Lord Clarendon's, but declared that failing but certain that the Senate will reject it. Presidential elections are coming on, and we should not be surprised, if Lord Granville's speech should reach the Senate before the vote of the Senate has been given, if it produced the reverse of a contrary effect. The feeling of the whole of the Americans have been guilty, and that they have had no mistake in the matter, and will be satisfied to pay for those before leaving the state.

Leap from the Irish Mail.

A few mornings ago an Irish gentleman named Ferguson, left London for Dublin in first-class compartment of the Irish limited mail. All went well until after Rugby was passed, which took place about half-an o'clock, when it appeared that Mr. Ferguson was fast asleep. After the train had proceeded some time, however, he was awoke by a strange sensation, forty feet he seems to have jumped up suddenly, opened the door, and sprung out. Strain, popularly known as the "Wild Goose," on account of the terrific speed which it ordinarily travels, was flying at the rate of about fifty miles an hour at the time Mr. Ferguson did so. Up on or twelve feet down the embankment, and then rolled down to the bottom of the ravine into a water pit. As might naturally be expected, he was most seriously shaken, but fortunately he had no bones broken. His right arm was rendered useless face severely cut and mangled, in which he had several locks of hair torn out, and was greatly bruised about the body. To add to the discomforts of his position, he found himself in a lonely part of the country, the night pitch dark and the rain pouring in torrents, while the rising the water some time, he got out and attempted to ascend the steep sides of the canal, but his strength failed from the loss of blood and general weakness. Ultimately he succeeded, and proceeded in a way across the fields to a farmhouse, where he begged for a cup of water "for God's sake." The unfortunate man's appearance and the strange circumstances apparently surrounding the application for the loan of water, caused the farmer's wife to refuse to grant the request, and then crawled away to a neighboring cabin, and aroused an old woman. She kindly received him, and, on learning who he was, sent her husband, who had the good fortune to meet with a police-constable named Smith, who procured him some refreshments and conveyed him in a cart to Rugby. Ferguson's wounds and bleeding, and the skin with water from the brook and from the sides, he presented a pitiful spectacle. Mrs. Bird, landlady of the Kendall Inn, at once had a warm bed prepared for him, and Mr. Ferguson removed as while messengers were dispatched for King and Dr. Buckman. These gentlemen, on arriving, found the injuries he severe were the injuries that they advised Mr. Ferguson should be removed to the Birmingham General Hospital. His wife, however, removed him to London by special train, and placed him under the best medical treatment. Mr. Ferguson was unable to assign the cause which led him to jump out of the carriage, but he is of opinion that he had been asleep, and either leaned out under some somnambulic influence, or, suddenly waking up, leapt from the carriage before he was aware what he was doing.

Governor Hoffman has signed the bill creating the "City of Yonkers." The charter includes all the town north of Mount Vernon, Pelham, Eastchester, and Westchester, formerly attending easterly to the Bronx River; a few hundred feet north of Woodlawn Cemetery. The City Government will be composed of a mayor, city judge, and six Aldermen from each of four wards.

Boston, June 13.—During a terrible thunderstorm last night Hugh Graham was killed by lightning; in Lexington, Mrs. Perry and Mrs. O'Brien, and in Waltham Eva Ballinaston.

GROCERIES, WINES AND LIQUORS.

WILLIAM B. DOLAN,
185 Third Street.....San Francisco.
Importer and Dealer; Wholesale and Retail, in French Wines and Brandies,
AND
Irish Whiskey,
Imported direct from Ireland.
HE HAS ALSO ON HAND A LARGE ASSORTMENT of California Wines of every description, which he will dispose of, in bulk or in cases, on the convenience of families.
All orders left at the Store, 185 Third street, will be promptly attended to, and delivered free of charge in any part of the city. 1719

JOHN FLANAGAN & CO.,
Importers and Jobbers of
Fine Brandies, Wines, Liquors, etc.
Fire-proof Store, 421 Front street, bet. Clay & Washington
SAN FRANCISCO.
Foreign Liquors in bond. Fine Brandies, Holland Gin Port, Claret, &c., sold in quantities to suit the purchaser. Also, Goshen in native California Wines and Brandies. 1716

M. H. KELLY. JOHN EGAN.
Kelly & Egan,
IMPORTERS AND DEALERS IN
FINE WINES AND LIQUORS
No. 604 Battery street,
Near Jackson. SAN FRANCISCO.

H. Commins & Co.
(Successors to P. Riley & Co.)
WHOLESALE LIQUOR MERCHANTS
myl No. 808 Front Street.

A. P. HOTALING & CO.,
IMPORTERS AND DEALERS IN FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC
WINES AND LIQUORS.
AGENTS, FOR THE J. H. CUTTER
OLD BOURBON WHISKY,
C. P. MOORMAN & CO., DISTILLERS,
LOUISVILLE, KENTUCKY.

BANKING.

HIBERNIA SAVINGS
AND
LOAN SOCIETY
Office—Northeast corner of Montgomery and Market streets.

DIRECTORS:
President.....M. D. SWEENY.
Vice-President.....C. D. O'SULLIVAN
TRUSTEES:
M. D. SWEENY, C. D. O'SULLIVAN,
JOHN SULLIVAN, M. MAHONEY,
D. J. TOBIN. GUSTAVE TOUCHARD,
JAMES PHELAN,
PETER DONAHUE.
Treasurer.....EDWARD MARTIN
Attorney.....RICHARD TOBIN

Remittances from the country may be sent through Wells, Fargo & Co.'s Express office, or any reliable banking house; but the Society will not be responsible for their safe delivery. The signature of the depositor should be required in the pass-book. Pass-books for same will be delivered in the agent by whom the deposit is made.
Deposits received from $5 to $2,000.
Open from 10 A.M. to 3 P.M.

JOS. A. DONAHOE, San Francisco. EUGENE KELLY New York.

DONOHOE, KELLY & Co.
SAN FRANCISCO.
EUGENE KELLY & Co.,
NEW YORK
BANKERS.
EXCHANGE ON
NEW YORK, LONDON, AND
BANK OF IRELAND.....DUBLIN.
Payable at all the Branches,
AND IN EVERY COUNTY TOWN IN IRELAND.

HOTELS.

Removal.
THE SECOND STREET HOUSE
Has Removed to 119 Second street,
Nearly opposite Harrison. Persons in visiting or wishing board, on the most reasonable terms M. CURRIE, ad Proprietor.

CENTRAL HOTEL,
614 AND 616 SANSOME STREET,
Between Broadway and Pacific.....San Francisco.
THIS NEW, LARGE AND COMMODIOUS Hotel has been thoroughly renovated by the well known proprietor, M. FARRELL, late proprietor of the Shipping House, where he will be pleased to see his numerous friends and the public in general. Thankful for past favors, he respectfully solicits a continuance of their future patronage.
There is a fire-proof safe in the House, where money and valuables can be left for safe keeping.
The Central House Omnibus will be at each car depot and steamboat landing, to convey passengers to the House free of charge.
Price of board as with the House.
Parties sending for their friends to the States, in Europe can put it with some comfort MARTIN FARRELL, and he will attend to them on their arrival, and forward them to their friends with the care, and that were much trouble.
Every attention will be paid to the comfort of the visitors of this House.
MICHAEL FARRELL, Proprietor.

FRANKLIN HOTEL,
614 AND 616 PACIFIC STREET,
Between Sansome and Montgomery.....San Francisco.
NEW CONRAD.....Proprietor.
Board, per week.....$4 00
Board and lodging, single rooms.....5 00
Single Meals, 25 cents. Lodging, 15 cents.
Family accommodations on reasonable rates.
Passengers and baggage conveyed to the House free of charge. Every attention paid to guests. Attic lavatory, and all the city papers taken.

RAILROAD HOUSE,
Corner of Sansome and Pacific streets, San Francisco,
IS NOW OPENED BY
P. CASSERLY,
Late of the Tremont House; where he will be happy to receive his friends and the public in general.
